Reversible Error: Although an alternate juror was present for only a short time during jury deliberations, the court was not at liberty to make exceptions to the rule that the alternate is not to join the jury in deliberation, based on time, actual harm, or the fact that the person was an alternate juror, given the solemnity associated with the jury system and the possibility of a loss of faith in that system. Highway Comm'n v. Dunks, 166 M 239, 531 P2d 1316 (1975), distinguished in St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Judgment on Special Verdict 838

GENERAL

Jury Question Concerning Amount of Damages in Injury Case — Use of Special Verdict Form Not Abuse of Discretion: Ele alleged that he was injured in a motor vehicle accident for which Ehnes admitted liability. In the pretrial order, Ehnes agreed that the sole issue of fact at trial was the amount of Ele's accident-related injury and damage claims. The first question on the District Court's verdict form stated that Ehnes had admitted responsibility for the accident and asked if Ele was injured as a result. The jury said no and returned the verdict. Ele contended that the verdict form was inconsistent with instructions on negligence because it did not ask if Ehnes' conduct was the cause of damages. Ele also asserted that the verdict form should not have included the question of whether he was injured because the amount of injury was the only question for trial. The Supreme Court considered whether the District Court abused its discretion and decided that it did not. Causation was in fact the first issue posed in the instruction, and inclusion of that issue did not conflict with the pretrial order. The use of the term "accident-related" in the pretrial order confirmed that the issue remaining for trial was not merely the amount of Ele's damages, but the amount of damages caused by and related to the accident. Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003).

Special Verdict Form in Subdivision Case Upheld Against Claim It Was Confusing and Biased Against Defendant: A special verdict form presented the issues fairly and submitted the ultimate questions of fact clearly. It was not confusing and did not present the plaintiff's theories in a biased manner. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in the use of the form. The form had asked whether the city acted arbitrarily or capriciously when it did not timely act on an application for preliminary plat approval, when it used the wrong regulations to approve the application subject to conditions that included unlawful conditions, when it approved a subdivision improvements agreement subject to conditions, and when it denied the application and failed to issue written findings explaining the denial. Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

Inconsistencies in Answers on Special Verdict Form — Reversal Not Warranted: Defendants contended that internally inconsistent answers on a special verdict form required a reversal of the verdict. Upon review, the Supreme Court found that evidence introduced at trial qualified questions of breach of covenant that had led to the inconsistent answers and that the defendants' counterclaims included several separate theories. Any inconsistencies in the jury's verdict were insufficient to warrant reversal. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 269 M 150, 887 P2d 260, 51 St. Rep. 1530 (1994).

Court Discretion in Use of Special Verdict Form: Defendant contended an abuse of discretion by a trial court that opted to use a simple general verdict form rather than the form proposed by defendant, which the court declined as being too argumentative and confusing. The use of a special verdict form is discretionary with the court. In this case, the court did not abuse its discretion because the general verdict form, in combination with the court's instructions, adequately presented all relevant issues to the jury without the danger of confusion that could have been caused by the use of defendant's form. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Offset for Advanced Wage Benefits Proper Even Though No Apportionment Between General Damages and Wage Loss in Jury Verdict: At the close of trial, Burlington Northern objected to a verdict form that would have itemized the nature of the damages awarded by the jury. The lower court refused to grant the railroad an offset against the judgment for advanced wage benefits paid to the plaintiff. On appeal, plaintiff's attorney argued that the offset should not be granted because the form of the verdict made it impossible to determine what, if any, amounts were awarded by the jury for wage loss. The Supreme Court held that, by logical deduction, some of the award was for wage loss and remanded the case to the lower court for a determination of the amount of offsets to which Burlington Northern was entitled. Cottrell v. Burlington N. RR Co., 261 M 296, 863 P2d 381, 50 St. Rep. 1323 (1993).

Court Amending Special Verdict Not Error: The jury returned a special verdict, finding that the defendant had breached a car purchase contract and that the plaintiff had acted reasonably in repossessing and reselling the vehicle. The verdict awarded the plaintiff only $22 for the notice of sale publication costs. The lower court amended the verdict to include court costs, attorney fees, and the balance due under the contract. The Supreme Court held that amending the verdict was not error because once the jury decided that the plaintiff had acted in a commercially reasonable manner, a judgment for any deficiency followed as a matter of law. Sportco, Inc. v. Thompson, 247 M 379, 806 P2d 1039, 48 St. Rep. 236 (1991).

Error to Allow Jury to Consider Claim Unsupported by Law or Fact: In rejecting plaintiff's argument that requiring a general verdict form is within the discretion of the trial court pursuant to this rule, the Supreme Court held that it is error for a trial court to allow a jury to consider a claim unsupported by either law or facts; it may allow only those claims supported by the evidence to go to the jury. If different theories of the same case are placed before a jury, it is impossible to know upon which the general verdict is made to depend. R.H. Grover, Inc. v. Flynn Ins. Co., 238 M 278, 777 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 1266 (1989).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Instructions on Equity Claims Refused: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The rule that a party is entitled to jury instructions adaptable to his theory of the case is not absolute. The instructions must be supported by credible evidence. Plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. The District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on estoppel and laches or to include those issues in the special verdict form for the jury. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Conflict Between Special Verdict Form and Jury Instructions — Damage Award Justified: Defendant contended the special verdict form was inherently contradictory with jury instructions in allowing the jury to fix a verdict based on a breach of contract when the court had instructed the jury on the tort measure of damages. The Supreme Court found no merit in the issue because: (1) instructions on breach of contract damages were withdrawn by defendant during settlement of instructions; (2) instructions given were substantially modified to include the essential elements for breach of contract damages; and (3) no harm was done because damages were clearly ascertainable and would have been the same in any event. Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Special Interrogatories on Tort and Breach of Contract Claims — Award Under Each Theory Unclear — Remand: A District Court judgment on a special verdict based on jury findings of damages, both for breach of contract and for tort, was remanded because the special interrogatories did not state which acts were to be considered under each theory; therefore, the verdict on tort claims was unclear as to which damages were cumulative to contract damages and which were alternative. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986).

Special Verdict Form Disregarding Conflict of Evidence — Fatally Deficient: A special verdict form that presented the issue of breach of contract in terms that adopted defendants' view of substantial disputed facts rather than leaving the factual determination of the nature of the agreement to the jury was found fatally inadequate and was subject to remand and a new trial. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986).

Conflicting Special Verdicts — New Trial Ordered: After becoming stuck in a snowdrift on the highway, the plaintiff got out of his vehicle to shovel it out, leaving his son in the vehicle. Plaintiff was injured and his son was killed when their vehicle was struck by defendant's truck. The jury found that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries but not the son's death. Because two conflicting verdicts were reached from the same evidence, a new trial was required. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982).

Refusal to Allow Special Verdict — No Error on Review Where No Prejudice Shown: Error was not found in the lower court's refusal to allow jury to return a general verdict where special findings and verdict could not have prejudiced the complaining party. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Objection Must Be Specific — Motion for Special Verdict Must Be Made: When party never specifically objected to submission of adversary's proposed verdict to jury and did not move for special verdict, Supreme Court would not consider alleged errors on appeal. Kirby v. Kelley, 161 M 66, 504 P2d 683 (1972).

Discretion of Court: The court may in its discretion submit to the jury a particular question of fact, and require them to find upon it; but it is not bound to do so. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937); Poor v. Madison River Power Co., 41 M 236, 108 P 645 (1910); Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co., 38 M 143, 99 P 142 (1909). See also Michalsky v. Centennial Brewing Co., 48 M 1, 134 P 307 (1913).

Separation of Awards: Where in an action by a number of plaintiffs to recover on an injunction bond they in their prayer asked for judgment in a lump sum and but one judgment was recoverable, trial court did not err in refusing to submit the defendant surety company's proposed special verdict requiring the jury to set out the separate amounts awarded to each plaintiff. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937).

Indecisive Verdict: A verdict is bad which is not responsive to and decisive upon every material issue submitted to the jury. Hickey v. Breen, 40 M 368, 106 P 881 (1910); Hamilton v. Murray, 29 M 80, 74 P 75 (1903); McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899). See also Olcott v. Gebo, 54 M 35, 166 P 300 (1917); Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Special Verdict as Recommended Procedure: The practice of more frequently instructing juries to find upon particular questions of fact is recommended; thereby, the necessity for granting new trials would be greatly diminished, and much unnecessary expense and delay be avoided. O'Meara v. McDermott, 40 M 38, 104 P 1049 (1909).

Divorce Proceedings: Special findings may be properly submitted to and passed upon by the jury in a divorce suit. Morrison v. Morrison, 14 M 8, 35 P 1 (1894).

JUDGMENT ON SPECIAL VERDICT

Proposed Special Verdict Preserves Objection for Appeal: The defendant did not specifically object to the plaintiff's special verdict form that did not require the jury to find that either party had breached the contract. The Supreme Court held that the defendant's proposed special verdict form had contained a reference to a breach of contract and that this was sufficient to preserve the defendant's right to appeal the verdict form submitted to the jury. Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767, 47 St. Rep. 850 (1990).

Adequacy of Special Verdict — Standard Applied: In determining the adequacy of a special verdict form, the Supreme Court applied a three-part standard as outlined in Kinjerski v. Lamey, 194 M 38, 635 P2d 566, 38 St. Rep. 1703 (1981). The instructions must: (1) when read as a whole and in conjunction with the general charge adequately present the contested issues to the jury; (2) fairly submit the issues to the jury; and (3) clearly submit to the jury the ultimate questions of fact. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988). The Kinjerski standard was applied in Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), and Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999). Story was followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994), and Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Amending Special Verdict Form Several Hours After Jury Deliberations Began — Error: After several hours of deliberation, the jury returned with questions. In response to those questions, it was error for the court to amend the special verdict forms to include a determination by the jury as to whether a party acted willfully or wantonly. Although the instruction would not have been error if given at the proper time, the late inclusion denied the party the right to argue his case and properly present it before the jury. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Negligence Special Verdict Form — Harmless Error on Strict Liability Instruction: Plaintiff contended that it was error for the trial court to give a particular instruction as he contended it was an incomplete and misleading statement of the law of strict liability. The Supreme Court held that any alleged error was harmless because the plaintiff did not object to a special verdict form that required the jury to decide the case on negligence alone. Kleinsasser v. Superior Derrick Serv., Inc., 218 M 371, 708 P2d 586, 42 St. Rep. 1662 (1985). See also Drilcon, Inc. v. Roil Energy Corp., Inc., 230 M 166, 749 P2d 1058, 45 St. Rep. 114 (1988).

Manner of Determining Judgment: A special verdict should find all the facts which are necessary to enable the court to determine by the consideration of the pleadings and the verdict alone which party is by law entitled to a judgment, without reference to the evidence. Kinjerski v. Lamey, 194 M 38, 635 P2d 566, 38 St. Rep. 1703 (1981), distinguished in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988); Coburn Cattle Co. v. Small, 35 M 288, 88 P 953 (1907), distinguished in Glick v. Knoll, 136 M 176, 346 P2d 987 (1959).

Judgment Conditioned on Special Verdict: Since the District Court is authorized in all cases to direct the jury to find a special verdict in writing upon all or any of the issues in a case, it may properly predicate its judgment upon such a verdict. Tannhauser v. Shea, 88 M 562, 295 P 268 (1930).

Court's Duty to Render Judgment: When the court has submitted special findings and the jury has rendered a special verdict, it then becomes the duty of the court to render the proper judgment. McDonald v. Klenze, 52 M 142, 157 P 175 (1916).

Verdict Insufficient to Warrant Judgment: A special verdict is insufficient to warrant judgment, where such verdict fails to find all the facts necessary to enable the court to determine by a consideration of the pleadings and the verdict alone which party is by law entitled to a judgment, without reference to the evidence. Coburn Cattle Co. v. Small, 35 M 288, 88 P 953 (1907).

General 839
Correction of Verdict 840
Inconsistent Verdict and Findings 841

GENERAL

Interrogatories — Discretion of Court: A submission of interrogatories to the jury is within the sound discretion of the District Court and a refusal to submit such interrogatories cannot be predicated as error unless it is a clear abuse of discretion. Teesdale v. Anschutz Drilling Co., 138 M 427, 357 P2d 4 (1960).

Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Improper: It is not permissible in this state to move for a judgment non obstante veredicto in a law case. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Verdict Accepted — New Trial as Remedy: After a case has been submitted to the jury and a verdict returned, accepted, and filed at the direction of the court and the jury discharged from the case, the only way to reach the verdict, if insufficient or against the law, is by a timely and proper motion for a new trial. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Separation of Awards — Joint Tortfeasors: In the absence of statute authorizing a jury to apportion compensatory damages against joint tortfeasors, damages must be assessed in one sum against those found liable. But where the jury in its verdict finds a lump sum and then attempts to divide it among certain of the defendants, the division should be stricken out as surplusage and judgment entered for the lump sum, or the verdict should be sent back to the jury with instruction to correct it. The jury may apportion exemplary damages between joint tortfeasors if actual damages have been assessed. Bowman v. Lewis, 110 M 435, 102 P2d 1 (1940), overruled in part in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d at 426 (1949).

General Verdict Finding on Issues: A general verdict in favor of a party is a finding on every material fact properly submitted to the jury for its consideration. The universal rule being that where the verdict finds the issues in favor of a particular party, such finding necessarily includes all issues raised by the pleadings. Gilmore v. Mulvihill, 109 M 601, 98 P2d 335 (1940).

Claim and Delivery — General Verdict Sufficient: A general verdict alone is sufficient in an action in claim and delivery if the issues warrant it. Dalke v. Pancoast, 63 M 524, 208 P 589 (1922).

Sufficient Verdict — Power of Court to Strike: After a verdict which was neither informal nor insufficient had been received and recorded, the trial court had no power to order it stricken from the files and direct the jury to return another, its authority over it being limited to setting it aside upon proper motion for a new trial. Lish v. Martin, 55 M 582, 179 P 826 (1919).

Interrogatories as Recommended Procedure: The submission of special interrogatories to the jury is a matter addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. The observance of the practice, rather than constituting error, is to be commended as tending to promote justice. Rairden v. Hedrick, 46 M 510, 129 P 498 (1913).

Incomplete Verdict — Judgment Improper: A verdict is bad if it varies from the issues in a substantial matter, or if it finds only a part of that which is in issue. Whether the jury finds a general or a special verdict, it is their duty to decide the very point in issue; and, although the court in which the cause is tried may give form to a general finding, so as to make it harmonize with the issue, yet if it appears to that court, or to the appellate court, that the finding is different from the issue, or is confined to a part only of the matter in issue, no judgment can be rendered upon the verdict. Hickey v. Breen, 40 M 368, 106 P 881 (1910); Hamilton v. Murray, 29 M 80, 74 P 75 (1903).

Chance Verdict — Requirement of Amendment Improper: Where, upon the polling of the jury in a personal injury case, the court inquires whether the verdict for the plaintiff has been reached by chance and several of the jurors answering in the affirmative, the court then directs them to retire and find a verdict by "deliberation and reasoning", and to exclude the element of chance, the action of the court is unauthorized. The verdict returned should have been received, subject to be set aside only upon application under 25-11-102. Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1908).

Forcible Detainer — Required Findings: In forcible detainer a verdict is defective which fails to find that defendant detained the property. McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899).

Discharge of Jury: When a verdict is rendered and recorded, and the jury discharged, the jury is functus officio. Prior to that time the verdict is in the control of the jury in some respects, but after those events the province of the jury is exhausted. Morris v. Burke, 15 M 214, 38 P 1065 (1895); In re Thompson, 9 M 381, 23 P 933 (1890).

Debt Admitted — Amount of Award Admitted: A verdict in favor of plaintiff is sufficient without stating the amount awarded, where the answer admitted the indebtedness and amount thereof, and the only denial was that the debt was not yet due. Josephi v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1893).

CORRECTION OF VERDICT

Verdict for Both Parties: Where the court in its original instruction told the jury it could find but one verdict and the jury returned with a verdict for the plaintiff and also one for the defendant for a lesser amount, the court was correct in sending the jury back for further deliberation and requiring but one verdict. Baranko v. Grenz, 127 M 18, 256 P2d 1074 (1953).

Two Defendants — Unclear Verdict: Where two defendants were charged with larceny, but only one was tried and the verdict found the defendant "in the above entitled cause" guilty without naming him, the court did not err in sending the jury back to the jury room for a correction of their verdict in this regard. St. v. Semmens, 105 M 113, 71 P2d 913 (1937).

Change in Substance Improper: The plain purpose of permitting the correction of verdicts is to prevent the receipt of informal or insufficient verdicts. It does not extend to matters going to the substance that do not appear upon their face. If a verdict covers the issue and is complete on its face, the court must receive it. Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1908). See also State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

Existing Principles Declared: The statute permitting correction of verdicts is to some extent rather a declaration of existing principles than the introduction of any wholly new principles or doctrine. Morris v. Burke, 15 M 214, 38 P 1065 (1895).

Insufficient Damages — Remedy: The practice of permitting correction of verdicts is to prevent irregular, informal, and insufficient verdicts from being received and recorded, and is not to be extended so far as to authorize the court to refuse to receive a verdict for the plaintiff for a sum less than that claimed by him on the ground that, under the evidence, if the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict at all it must be for the full amount claimed. The proper remedy in the latter case is to have the verdict set aside on motion for a new trial. Morris v. Burke, 15 M 214, 38 P 1065 (1895). See also State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

INCONSISTENT VERDICT AND FINDINGS

Findings Authorized and Controlling: The trial court is authorized in any case, in its discretion, to instruct the jury to find upon particular questions of fact, though they are required to render a general verdict. The trial court is required, when a special finding is inconsistent with the general verdict, to recognize the finding as controlling, and to give judgment accordingly. Johnson v. Butte Alex Scott Copper Co., 51 M 126, 149 P 717 (1915).

Special Findings Inconsistent — Defendant Entitled to Judgment: Where, in an action for injuries from a premature explosion of dynamite alleged to be due to using stronger explosives than proper or customary, without warning plaintiff, the jury returned a general verdict for plaintiff and found specially that plaintiff had been warned, that he knew the stronger powder was used, and that the use of such powder was proper, the special findings were inconsistent with the general verdict, and the defendant was entitled to judgment upon such findings. Johnson v. Butte Alex Scott Copper Co., 51 M 126, 149 P 717 (1915).

Personal Injury — Special Finding Controlling: Special findings in a personal injury case control the general verdict. Mitchell v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 37 M 575, 97 P 1033 (1908).

Special Finding Controlling: The court may not set aside a special finding and enter judgment on the general verdict, but must enter judgment on the special finding, leaving it to the defeated party to pursue his remedy by a motion for a new trial. Martin v. Butte, 34 M 281, 86 P 264 (1906).

Case Notes

No Duty of Volunteer Fire Department to Direct Traffic During "Boot Drive" Fundraiser: The Laurel Volunteer Fire Department sponsored a Fourth of July fireworks display for the benefit of the community, which included a "boot drive" fundraiser to help raise money for the display. The fundraiser entailed fire department personnel standing near the edge of the road while holding a cowboy boot and inviting people driving by to contribute by throwing money or checks into the boot. Two fire department personnel conducted a boot drive at an interstate highway exit ramp on the night of July 4, 1994. Jacobs and Coates exited the freeway and got in line behind a string of slow-moving vehicles, slowly advancing and then stopping each time that a vehicle went through the stop sign. Bruce exited the freeway behind Jacobs and Coates but did not notice the line of cars until it was too late to avoid a collision. Jacobs and Coates were injured and sued the fire department, claiming that the boot drive caused traffic to build up on the exit ramp and that as the sponsors of the fireworks display, the fire department owed a duty to warn people about and manage the traffic. The District Court granted the fire department's motion in limine and dismissed the action as a matter of law, concluding that no causation existed between the accident and the boot drive. Jacobs and Coates appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Citing Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35 (1998), the court noted that a judicial determination of duty involves various policy considerations, including: (1) the moral blame attributable to the defendant's conduct; (2) the prevention of future harm; (3) the extent of the burden placed on the defendant; (4) the consequences to the public of imposing that duty; and (5) the availability of insurance for the risk involved. Although a duty may have been owed by the fire department to ensure safe passage at the event itself, the fire department had no duty to ensure that every spectator arrived safely at the event. The fire department did not spill anything or block traffic on the freeway, nor did it create a hazardous condition for travelers coming to and from fire department property. Thus, after evaluating the factors regarding duty, the Supreme Court found no duty owed by the fire department to regulate traffic on or around the interstate highway. Further, in order to sustain a negligence claim, Jacobs and Coates needed to prove not only negligence on the part of the fire department but also a causal relationship between that negligence and the injury. Here, Jacobs and Coates offered no evidence of a causal connection between the accident and the boot drive. Neither of them saw fire department personnel at the off ramp or soliciting donations prior to the accident, no witness testified to any negligent behavior by the fire department personnel who conducted the boot drive, and Jacobs and Coates did not even produce a witness who saw the boot drive at all during that evening. Dismissal as a matter of law was therefore proper. Jacobs v. Laurel Volunteer Fire Dept., 2001 MT 98, 305 M 225, 26 P3d 730 (2001).

Evidence of Sex Discrimination Warranting Submission to Jury — Directed Verdict Improper: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. At the close of Allison's case in chief, the court granted the town's motion for a directed verdict on the sex discrimination claim, but declined a similar motion on the age discrimination claim. The court allowed submission of both the age discrimination and disability claims to the jury, which returned a verdict against Allison on both claims. On appeal, Allison argued that the jury should also have been allowed to decide the sex discrimination claim. Motions for directed verdict are properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence to warrant submission to the jury when the evidence is considered in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Here, Allison produced evidence, although minimal, in support of the sex discrimination claim, so the directed verdict on that issue was incorrectly granted. The case was remanded for trial on the sex discrimination claim. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000).

Appeal of Order Granting or Denying Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law — Standard of Review: The Supreme Court standard of review of appeals from District Court orders granting or denying motions for judgment as a matter of law is identical to that of the District Court. Judgment as a matter of law is properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence that would justify submitting an issue to a jury. All evidence and any legitimate inferences that might be drawn from the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998). Hydro Flame was followed in Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Time of Discovery of Injury Because of Childhood Sexual Abuse as Jury Question — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Substantial conflicts in the evidence existed regarding the time at which plaintiff discovered that her mental disorders were connected to sexual abuse that she experienced as a child. It is within the province of the jury to resolve conflicting evidence; therefore, the District Court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict based on the time bar in 27-2-216. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Good Cause — Sufficient Evidence of Wrongful Discharge to Preclude Directed Verdict: Evidence that employee was performing a job satisfactorily when discharged provided a possible motive for termination for other than good cause, warranting submission of a wrongful discharge claim to the jury and precluding a directed verdict. Guertin v. Moody's Market, Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994), following Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303 (1986).

Inducement to Purchase Property Based on Promise of Road Improvements — Directed Verdict Improper:

Following a trial subsequent to Dew, infra., the District Court determined that defendant did fraudulently induce plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property and further awarded monetary damages to each plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended, among other things, that the trial court erred in admitting, without first requiring plaintiffs to prove intent to defraud, parol evidence that defendant orally promised to improve the road and also erred in determining that defendant intended to defraud plaintiffs by inducing them to enter into contracts for deed. However, defendant waived the right to appeal the parol evidence question by failing to object at trial, and substantial evidence that defendant had no intention to perform the promises to improve the road was sufficient to prove defendant's intent to defraud. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993).

Plaintiffs claimed they were fraudulently induced to enter contracts to purchase land when seller orally promised to improve access roads to county grade. The District Court granted defendants a directed verdict, relying on Kelly v. Ellis, 39 M 597, 104 P 873 (1909), in holding that when there was no allegation of failure to keep all promises made in the written agreement, the statute of frauds precluded admission of evidence of an oral promise directly related to the contents of the contract. However, plaintiffs relied on a certificate of survey that showed county grade easements, a letter from defendants' attorney agreeing to hold a title insurance company harmless from any claims arising from purchasers' access problems, and the representation by a realtor that roads would be upgraded to county road standards. These representations constituted a conflict in evidence precluding directed verdict, and the District Court erred in taking from the jury the issue of whether plaintiffs were fraudulently induced to enter the contracts. Dew v. Dower, 237 M 476, 774 P2d 989, 46 St. Rep. 981 (1989), following Majers v. Shining Mtn., 230 M 373, 750 P2d 449, 45 St. Rep. 283 (1988), Majers v. Shining Mtn., 219 M 366, 711 P2d 1375, 43 St. Rep. 16 (1986), Dodds v. Gibson Prod. Co., 181 M 373, 593 P2d 1022 (1979), and Goggans v. Winkley, 154 M 451, 465 P2d 326 (1970).

Evidence of Fraud — Support for Jury Verdict: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, there was sufficient evidence to support submitting the issue of the seller's fraud to the jury and to support the jury's verdict against the seller. The trial court did not err in denying the seller's motion for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Sale of Real Estate — Motion Improperly Denied: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the plaintiff purchasers relied upon the realtor's representations concerning the property because he held himself out as an experienced investment analyst. The realtor did not try to confirm the seller's representations concerning the property. The purchasers provided sufficient evidence of the realtor's negligence and constructive fraud to require that the issues be presented to the jury. The trial court erred in granting a directed verdict as to the realtor. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Evidence of Jury Issues — No Directed Verdict: An insurer contended District Court Judge erred in not granting its motion for directed verdict so as to relieve it from extracontractual damages and for liability on its implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. A motion for directed verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury. Had the insurer relied on admissible circumstantial evidence and promptly denied the claim, the Supreme Court would have been constrained to hold that the insured was not entitled to extracontractual or punitive damages. However, the court found at least eight elements in the handling of the claim that made a jury issue of whether the insurer breached its duty of fair dealing. Noting that the jury had been properly instructed on the issue of good faith, no error was found in denying the motion for directed verdict. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986), followed in Head v. Cent. Reserve Life of N. America Ins. Co., 256 M 188, 845 P2d 735, 50 St. Rep. 20 (1993).

Advisory Committee Note

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: Fed. R. Civ. P. 50, as amended 1963.

Explanation of change: The practice, after the court has granted a motion for a directed verdict, of requiring the jury to express assent to a verdict they did not reach by their own deliberations serves no useful purpose and may give offense to members of the jury.

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendments conform the rule to the 1991 amendments of the Federal Rule.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: In (1) after "court may" inserted "determine the issue against that party and may",substituted "with respect to a claim or defense" for "on any claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third party claim", and after "maintained" inserted "or defeated"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective June 7, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Substituted present text concerning judgment as a matter of law for former text that read: "A party who moves for a directed verdict at the close of the evidence offered by an opponent may offer evidence in the event that the motion is not granted, without having reserved the right so to do and to the same extent as if the motion had not been made. A motion for a directed verdict which is not granted is not a waiver of trial by jury even though all parties to the action have moved for directed verdicts. A motion for a directed verdict shall state the specific grounds therefor. The order of the court granting a motion for a directed verdict is effective without any assent of the jury."

Amendment — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of this rule in 1967 inserting the last sentence made the rule identical to the Federal Rule, as amended in 1963. As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule.

GENERAL

Failure to Instruct Jury on Greater Duty of Care in Situation of Greater Danger — Reversible Error: The Schuffs were injured while riding in Jackson's boat when Jackson failed to negotiate a submerged rock formation that he knew was there. Jackson admitted error during operation of the boat but maintained that his conduct nevertheless conformed to that of an ordinary prudent boater under the same or similar circumstances. The jury found that Jackson was not negligent, and the Schuffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed. The fact that Jackson admitted error did not establish negligence per se. Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that Jackson was operating the boat in a manner consistent with other ordinarily prudent boaters under the same circumstances. Further, the Schuffs failed to timely object to Jackson's interjection of the defenses of unavoidable accident and assumption of risk, so motion for a new trial was properly denied on those grounds. However, the Supreme Court found that the jury instructions did not include information regarding the possible greater duty of care in situations in which the danger is known to be greater or on Jackson's statutory duty not to operate the boat at a speed greater than would permit stopping the boat within an assured clear distance. Failure to properly instruct the jury was prejudicial error, so the case was remanded for a new trial. Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002), followed in Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004).

No Complete Absence of Credible Evidence to Support Jury Award of Damages in Wrongful Discharge Case — Denial of Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law Proper: A jury awarded Casiano damages for wrongful discharge from employment. Defendant employer moved for judgment as a matter of law or a new trial on grounds that the damage award was based on the assumption that Casiano would have remained employed for 4 years had he not been wrongfully discharged, while uncontroverted evidence at trial showed that Casiano would have been laid off with all other hourly employees at the end of a particular construction project. Casiano asserted that contradictory evidence was presented regarding whether employment would have continued after the project was completed. In its order, the District Court agreed with defendant, but nevertheless denied the motion because it could not be said that there was a complete absence of credible evidence to support the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court agreed and affirmed. Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002).

Erroneous Conclusion That Elements of Malicious Prosecution by State Not Established — Judgment as Matter of Law Improper: Plaintiffs were cited by the state for various water quality violations related to their public swimming pools, drinking water, and discharge from a sewage lagoon. The charges were ultimately dropped, and both plaintiffs filed separate actions that were settled, except for plaintiffs' malicious prosecution claims against the state, which were joined for trial by jury. At the close of plaintiffs' case, the state's motion for judgment as a matter of law was granted, so plaintiffs appealed. As set out in Orser v. St., 178 M 126, 582 P2d 1227 (1978), in a civil action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must introduce sufficient proof of the following elements: (1) a judicial proceeding has been commenced and prosecuted against the plaintiff; (2) the defendant was responsible for litigating, prosecuting, or continuing the proceeding; (3) there is lack of probable cause for the defendant's acts; (4) the defendant was actuated by malice; (5) the proceeding terminated in favor of the plaintiff; and (6) the plaintiff suffered damages. Here, the District Court found that plaintiffs had not met their burden of proof regarding elements three, four, and five. The Supreme Court examined each of those elements—lack of probable cause, malice, and favorable termination of the underlying suit—and concluded that the elements were met, warranting reversal for trial on the merits. Judgment as a matter of law averts trial by jury and is proper only in rare cases when undisputed evidence admits of only one conclusion. Although the proceedings to date in this case did not demonstrate guilt or innocence, plaintiffs nevertheless made out a prima facie case that warranted jury determination. Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), following McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979), Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126 (1982), and Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995).

Sufficient Evidence That Damages Not Result of State Negligence to Submit Case to Jury — Judgment as Matter of Law Not Appropriate: Pula sued in federal court, alleging negligence against the city of Chinook, Blaine County, three Chinook police officers, the County Sheriff, and the state, related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. All the claims were settled except the claim against the state, which was dismissed and subsequently refiled in state District Court. At trial, Pula moved for judgment as a matter of law, contending that the state presented no admissible evidence to counter the claims of duty, breach, causation, and damages. The District Court denied the motion and sent the case to the jury. The jury found that the state was negligent, but that its negligence was not the cause of Pula's injuries. Pula appealed the denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The state presented substantial evidence that the damages suffered by Pula were not the result of the state's negligent acts or omissions, and the evidence was sufficient to submit the case to the jury, so judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002).

Termination of Employment for Legitimate Business Reasons Insufficient Basis for Judgment as Matter of Law: As set out in Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), a motion for judgment as a matter of law may be granted only if it appears that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate references that can be drawn from the evidence, and there is a complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to a jury. In this case, an employer maintained that its employee was terminated for legitimate business reasons and evidence existed to support that contention, but that did not constitute a sufficient basis for judgment as a matter of law in light of other evidence submitted by the employee tending to show that the termination was not for legitimate business reasons. Denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law was proper. Braulick v. Hathaway Meats, Inc., 1999 MT 57, 294 M 1, 980 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 241 (1999).

Agricultural Lease — Failure to Pay Lease Price for Grain Produced — No Evidence of Conversion — Judgment as Matter of Law Properly Granted: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens under an agricultural lease. The lease required Stephens to pay the Schumachers $40,000 plus one-third of the proceeds of the sale of a crop if the value of the crop exceeded $120,000. For 1993, Stephens paid the Schumachers the required $40,000 but contended that no additional money was due to the Schumachers because one-third of the total crop receipts was less than the $43,000 (the lease price plus an additional $3,000 advance for the 1994 crop year) that Stephens had already paid. The Schumachers sued, alleging conversion and breach of contract and contending that Stephens actually grew more grain than he claimed. The District Court granted Stephens' motion for judgment as a matter of law on the conversion claims. The Supreme Court reviewed the record, including Federal Crop Insurance reports, testimony by others who had been on the property, reports on the amount of grain in the grain bins used by Stephens, testimony by the Schumachers' neighbors, and other testimony, and found that the quantum of evidence showing that the actual amount of grain produced was, as Stephens claimed, overwhelming and would have required the jury to engage in speculation if it were to hold otherwise. The Supreme Court said that even considering the evidence in the light most favorable to the Schumachers, the jury would have had to go beyond reasonable and legitimate inferences to find in the Schumachers' favor and that the Schumachers did not present any evidence that Stephens produced any additional grain, that he exercised any dominion or control over any additional grain, or that the Schumachers were damaged by that unauthorized dominion. For these reasons, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment as a matter of law granted by the District Court. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Absence of Proof of Open Range or Fenced Highway — Directed Verdict Improper: Indendi hit a horse on Highway 84, killing the animal, sustaining personal injuries, and totaling her vehicle. She alleged negligence on the part of the horse owner as well as violations of fencing and livestock herding laws and open-range exceptions. The horse owner counterclaimed for loss of the horse. The District Court directed a verdict in favor of the horse owner. A directed verdict may be granted only when it appears that the nonmoving party cannot recover on any view of the evidence, including the legitimate inferences drawn from that evidence. Absent proof that the land was open range and that Highway 84 was a fenced highway, it was improper for the court to direct a verdict premised on the horse owner's satisfaction of the duty exclusion in 60-7-202(2). Indendi v. Workman, 272 M 64, 899 P2d 1085, 52 St. Rep. 644 (1995), following Ambrogini v. Todd, 197 M 111, 642 P2d 1013 (1982).

Civil Rights Action for Deprivation of Medical Attention — Directed Verdict Properly Given: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for causing Joshua's death by failing to give medical attention. Buhr claimed that the county had adopted a "hands-off" policy that evidenced indifference to the health and welfare of persons, such as Joshua, in the custody of the county detention center. The District Court directed a verdict against Joshua's estate. Citing Canton v. Harris, 489 US 378 (1989), the Supreme Court held that there was insufficient evidence that the county had adopted a policy of indifference to the constitutional rights of Joshua and persons like him. The evidence at trial showed that the "hands-off" policy did not mean that the county was deliberately indifferent to the medical needs of persons held in a soft cell because the policy did not mean that medical attention would not be summoned when it was needed. The directed verdict was therefore properly granted. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Civil Rights Action for Excessive Use of Force — Directed Verdict Properly Given: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for excessive use of force in placing Joshua in the county detention facility. Buhr claimed that the county had adopted a policy requiring a report on excessive use of force and that the policy did not define "excessive force". Buhr alleged that it was this policy that led to the violation of Joshua's constitutional rights. The District Court directed a verdict against Joshua's estate. Citing Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 US 808 (1985), the Supreme Court held that there was insufficient evidence that the county had adopted a policy of indifference to the constitutional rights of Joshua and persons like him. The evidence at trial was of only one alleged incident involving excessive force, and under Tuttle, one incident is insufficient to demonstrate a policy of official indifference by the county. The directed verdict was therefore properly granted. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Good Cause — Sufficient Evidence of Wrongful Discharge to Preclude Directed Verdict: Evidence that employee was performing a job satisfactorily when discharged provided a possible motive for termination for other than good cause, warranting submission of a wrongful discharge claim to the jury and precluding a directed verdict. Guertin v. Moody's Market, Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994), following Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303 (1986).

Standard of Review of Directed Verdict: In reviewing a directed verdict, the Supreme Court considers only the evidence introduced by the party against whom the directed verdict is granted. If that evidence, when viewed in a light most favorable to the party, tends to establish the case made by the party's pleading, the court will reverse the directed verdict. The test commonly used to determine if the evidence is legally sufficient to withdraw cases and issues from the jury is whether reasonable persons could draw different conclusions from the evidence.

Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993), followed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996). See also Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160 (1986), and Hauck v. Seright, 1998 MT 198, 290 M 309, 964 P2d 749, 55 St. Rep. 838 (1998).

Evidence of Negligence in County Jail Sufficient — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied — Jury Verdict Upheld: The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence showing that the county breached its duty owed to Moralli, a prisoner in the Lake County jail, who slipped on a wet floor and injured her back. There was also sufficient evidence of causation and damages. Because there was sufficient evidence in the record from which the jury could make the findings that it did, the jury's verdict is also binding upon the court. Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Refusal to Give Jury Instructions Not Error in Light of Directed Verdict: The lower court entered a directed verdict finding one of the defendants in a personal injury case not liable. Buskirk's attorney alleged that the trial court erred in not submitting certain jury instructions pertaining to the individual found not liable by the directed verdict. The Supreme Court held that it was not error to refuse to give the instructions in light of the directed verdict. Buskirk v. Nelson, 250 M 92, 818 P2d 375, 48 St. Rep. 864 (1991).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict: When reviewing the denial of a motion for directed verdict, only substantial evidence in the record supporting the jury's finding is required. The conviction cannot be overturned if evidence, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, would allow a rational trier of fact to find essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are exclusively within the province of the jury. St. v. Laverdure, 241 M 135, 785 P2d 718, 47 St. Rep. 142 (1990), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), and in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992). The Nelson standard was applied in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Question of Contributory Negligence in Automobile Accident — Directed Verdict Inappropriate: Relying on the holding in Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), that the defense of contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part is available to a defendant who has violated a traffic statute, the Supreme Court reversed the grant of a directed verdict in favor of plaintiff because reasonable persons could differ as to conclusions drawn from the evidence relating to the accident. The question should have been submitted to the jury and was inappropriate for a directed verdict. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989), followed in Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996). Ryan was followed in Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Evidence of Fraud — Support for Jury Verdict: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, there was sufficient evidence to support submitting the issue of the seller's fraud to the jury and to support the jury's verdict against the seller. The trial court did not err in denying the seller's motion for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Sale of Real Estate — Motion Improperly Denied: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the plaintiff purchasers relied upon the realtor's representations concerning the property because he held himself out as an experienced investment analyst. The realtor did not try to confirm the seller's representations concerning the property. The purchasers provided sufficient evidence of the realtor's negligence and constructive fraud to require that the issues be presented to the jury. The trial court erred in granting a directed verdict as to the realtor. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Questions of Fraud Precluding Directed Verdict and Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict: Because questions of actual or constructive fraud existed requiring submission of facts to the jury, the District Court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for directed verdict and defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Fire Caused by Poorly Maintained Outside Power Line — No Directed Verdict: Plaintiff brought an action against the power company for negligently inspecting and maintaining a power line to a building, resulting in a fire that destroyed the building. A directed verdict after the close of plaintiff's case was properly denied when an expert testified that the power line caused the fire, a person who rented part of the building stated that on the day of the fire she saw a loose wire, and photographs showed that other power lines in the area appeared to be poorly maintained. Stout v. Mont. Power Co., 234 M 303, 762 P2d 875, 45 St. Rep. 1926 (1988).

Evidence of Jury Issues — No Directed Verdict: An insurer contended District Court Judge erred in not granting its motion for directed verdict so as to relieve it from extracontractual damages and for liability on its implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. A motion for directed verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury. Had the insurer relied on admissible circumstantial evidence and promptly denied the claim, the Supreme Court would have been constrained to hold that the insured was not entitled to extracontractual or punative damages. However, the court found at least eight elements in the handling of the claim that made a jury issue of whether the insurer breached its duty of fair dealing. Noting that the jury had been properly instructed on the issue of good faith, no error was found in denying the motion for directed verdict. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

False Representation as Actual Fraud — No Directed Verdict: Defendants contended that plaintiffs' evidence was insufficient to establish a false representation or justifiable reliance on the representation and that therefore defendants' motions for a directed verdict were improperly denied. The Supreme Court noted that a prospectus given to plaintiff, McGregor, contained financial statements which would be misleading to someone not knowledgeable in accounting and that a jury could find that false representations were made on this evidence. The court found that McGregor adequately investigated the business and reasonably relied on defendants' representations. The Supreme Court found no error in the District Court's failure to direct a verdict for defendants on the claim of actual fraud. McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986).

Defendants' Obstruction of Easement Unreasonable — Counterclaim for Damages Stricken: After concluding that the defendants' obstruction were an unreasonable interference with a right-of-way easement granted to plaintiffs, the District Court properly withdrew from the jury's consideration the defendants' counterclaim for damages. The standard of review for removal of an issue from jury consideration is the same as that of a directed verdict, as stated in Dahl v. Petroleum Geophysical Co., 38 St. Rep. 1474 (1981); i.e., an issue should not be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusions from the facts advanced by the moving party follow necessarily, as a matter of law, that recovery cannot be had under any view which can be drawn reasonably from the facts which the evidence tends to establish. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Evidence — When Sufficient to Support Verdict: Plaintiff appealed from jury verdict in favor of defendant, alleging the evidence did not support the verdict. The Supreme Court held that in order to overturn the verdict on the basis of insufficient evidence, it must find plaintiff entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to warrant submitting the case to a jury. Here the court found credible evidence supporting a verdict either way and considered itself without power to set aside the decision of the trier of fact as a matter of law. The District Court properly denied plaintiff's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gunlock v. W. Equip. Co., 219 M 112, 710 P2d 714, 42 St. Rep. 1882 (1985), followed in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

When Properly Granted — General Tests:

In considering a motion for a directed verdict or for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the District Court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the opposing party and deny the motion if a prima facie case is made. A judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot be granted if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Like any form of directed verdict, it rests on a finding that the case of the opposing party is unsupported in some necessary particular. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985), followed in Barrows v. Barrows, 256 M 78, 844 P2d 119, 49 St. Rep. 1145 (1992), and in Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993).

A motion for a directed verdict or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury, and all inferences must be considered in the light most favorable to the opposing party. This compels a trial court to exercise the greatest self-restraint in interfering with the constitutionally mandated processes of jury decision. Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319, 39 St. Rep. 1565 (1982). See also Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989), Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993), and Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Conflicting Evidence on Cause of Death — Motion Properly Denied: In a medical malpractice action, the plaintiff moved for a directed verdict on the basis that the defendant's negligence was the legal cause of the decedent's death. However, because there was conflicting evidence on the issue of cause of death, the trial court correctly denied the plaintiff's motion. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985).

Possible Differing Conclusions — No Directed Verdict: Plaintiff applied to defendant for health coverage for himself and his family. He met with an agent who filled out the application, which was signed by both parties. Plaintiff was not given a copy of the application or contract and was not advised that the application was part of the contract. The application was accepted. The family contracted medical bills which defendant declined to pay, claiming that the bills stemmed from "preexisting conditions" not covered by the contract. Defendant then unilaterally canceled the contract, claiming plaintiff had misrepresented his family's health in the application, and plaintiff filed suit. Defendant moved for a directed verdict on the issues of actual and constructive fraud and the fact of bad faith, which motion was denied. If the representations that induced the plaintiff to enter the contract were false, he would have a case in fraud. If the contract was breached, a cause of action may sound in the tort, although it arises out of a breach of contract, if the defaulting party by breaching the contract also breaches the duty to act in good faith owed to the other party independently of the contract. The evidence viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs indicated reasonable men could differ as to the conclusions drawn from the evidence. Therefore, the directed verdict was properly denied. Weber v. Blue Cross of Mont., 196 M 454, 643 P2d 198, 39 St. Rep. 245 (1982).

Probable Cause in Malicious Prosecution Action: Lack of probable cause, an essential element of a malicious prosecution action, is a fact question for the jury's determination when the evidence is conflicting and is a question of law for the court only when the evidence is undisputed and allows only one conclusion on the issue; and a directed verdict is error when the evidence, including reasonable inferences, is susceptible to different conclusions by reasonable men when viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the directed verdict. Reece v. Pierce Flooring, 194 M 91, 634 P2d 640, 38 St. Rep. 1655 (1981).

Grounds for Granting Motion for Directed Verdict — Invasion of Privacy Action: Where respondent telephone company conducted a recording on a party line for a period of 6 days for the alleged purpose of protecting the quality of its services, the District Court erred in granting a motion for a directed verdict filed by respondent at the close of appellant's case. Considering the nature and extent of the recording and comparing it to recordings in other cases in which the recordings are allowed only in limited circumstances, namely, where telephone fraud is at issue, reasonable men could draw different conclusions as to whether the recording could be classified in such a way as to be allowable under the federal statute; thus the directed verdict should not have been granted. Sistok v. NW. Tel. Sys., Inc., 189 M 82, 615 P2d 176 (1980), citing Lawlor v. Flathead County, 177 M 508, 582 P2d 751 (1978).

Actual and Constructive Fraud — Motion Properly Denied: When applying the standard for ruling on a motion for directed verdict, the Supreme Court concluded that the evidence presented was entitled to jury consideration and therefore the directed verdict was properly denied. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978).

Motion to Dismiss in Jury Trial — Treated as Motion for Directed Verdict: When a motion to dismiss was inadvertently granted in a jury trial, but both parties recognized the error and treated it as a motion for directed verdict, then the Supreme Court utilized rules for granting a motion for directed verdict in its review. In this case the District Court erred since the evidence clearly presents questions of fact and precludes judgment as a matter of law. Sant v. Baril, 173 M 14, 566 P2d 48 (1977).

Contract Action — Motion Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff construction company completed construction of a sanitary sewer system and sewage lagoon for the defendant city and subsequently brought an action to enforce payments under the contract, the court properly denied the defendant's motion for a directed verdict, as the evidence of the nonmoving party was substantial enough to sustain the jury's verdict. Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976).

Jury Question — Intersection Collision: The law does not favor directed verdicts. A case presenting facts showing the defendant was speeding, that he had been drinking, and that he did not see the plaintiff's vehicle until immediately before a collision with the plaintiff's car which had turned onto the street in which the defendant was driving, was a proper one for presentation to a jury since there was sufficient evidence to find the defendant's conduct was the proximate cause of the collision. Sweet v. Edmonds, 171 M 106, 555 P2d 504 (1976), followed in Spinler v. Allen, 1999 MT 160, 295 M 139, 983 P2d 348, 56 St. Rep. 632 (1999).

Negligence of Rodeo Company — Motion Properly Denied: Although rodeo company was the owner of dangerous animals, it was not an insurer, and trial court correctly denied directed verdict against rodeo on issue of liability where show was produced in facilities erected and maintained by county. Ross v. Golden St. Rodeo Co., 165 M 337, 530 P2d 1166 (1974).

Breach of Employment Contract: Statement by office secretary of local union to its executive officer that latter had been removed from office was not the type of information which would lead a prudent person to believe she had been discharged, and local union was entitled to directed verdict in officer's action for breach of employment contract where there was no evidence that officer had in fact been discharged, she was not subject to discharge at will and she had never talked to anyone in authority to confirm her discharge. Hannifin v. Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n, 162 M 170, 511 P2d 982 (1973).

Motions — Directed Verdict — New Trial — Relationship: Motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict raise the same question. They both question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict. Appeal will be accepted based upon insufficiency of the evidence notwithstanding failure to move for a new trial if motion was made for directed verdict. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

Directed Verdict Reversed — Undue Influence: Court erred in directing verdict. There were many factual issues regarding alleged undue influence upon testator, and plaintiffs should have had an opportunity to place the issues before the jury. Hall v. Milkovich, 158 M 438, 492 P2d 1388 (1972).

Motion Viewed in Light Most Favorable to Party Directed Against: The court must view motions for directed verdict and for new trials in light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is directed. Dieruf v. Gallaher, 156 M 440, 481 P2d 322 (1971).

Both Parties Moving for Directed Verdict — Effect: The old rule that jury trial was waived when both parties moved for a directed verdict without requesting a particular factual issue be determined by a jury was abolished by this rule. Court erred in directing verdict in view of the fact situation at the time of the motions. Borgmann v. Diehl, 155 M 458, 473 P2d 529 (1970).

Burden of Proof: Denial of a motion for a directed verdict will not be presumed error. The moving party must show that error was committed. Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969); Laughnan v. Sorenson, 139 M 531, 366 P2d 433 (1961); Bouma v. Bynum Irrigation District, 139 M 360, 364 P2d 47 (1961).

Attractive Nuisance — Motion Improperly Denied: Verdict for plaintiff based upon attractive nuisance theory was reversed. Directed verdict for defendant should have been granted. Gagnier v. Curran Constr. Co., 151 M 468, 443 P2d 894 (1968).

Circumstances Under Which Motion Should Be Granted: Denial of motion for directed verdict, made by lessor of destroyed building in suit by lessee claiming that premises were repairable, was cause for reversal where, viewing evidence most favorable to plaintiff lessee and considering as proven everything which evidence tended to prove, reasonable man could come to no other conclusion but that building involved was destroyed. Solich v. Hale, 150 M 358, 435 P2d 883 (1967).

Res Ipsa Case — Motion Improperly Granted at End of Plaintiff's Case: Court erred in granting plaintiff's motion for directed verdict before defendant had opportunity to present his case, where defendant was precluded from offering evidence to rebut presumption of negligence raised by plaintiff's case in chief based on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, notwithstanding fact that plaintiff had examined all witnesses to accident during his case in chief. Baker v. Rental Serv. Co., 150 M 166, 432 P2d 624 (1967).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Peery v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. See State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial.

Weighing of Evidence Improper: On motion for directed verdict the court may not pass upon the weight and sufficiency of the evidence where it is in sharp conflict upon a vital issue and there is nothing inherently improbable or unbelievable in plaintiff's testimony. Durocher v. Myers, 84 M 225, 274 P 1062 (1929).

MOTION PROPERLY GRANTED

Dismissal of Counterclaims by Summary Judgment Proper When All Prior Claims Resolved by Memorandum of Understanding: Defendant filed several counterclaims stemming from an agricultural lease. The District Court held that the underlying dispute regarding the parties' obligations applicable to the lease was settled by a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU), and dismissed the counterclaims as a matter of law. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The MOU was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories, and the District Court did not err in summarily dismissing the counterclaims. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

No Duty of Volunteer Fire Department to Direct Traffic During "Boot Drive" Fundraiser: The Laurel Volunteer Fire Department sponsored a Fourth of July fireworks display for the benefit of the community, which included a "boot drive" fundraiser to help raise money for the display. The fundraiser entailed fire department personnel standing near the edge of the road while holding a cowboy boot and inviting people driving by to contribute by throwing money or checks into the boot. Two fire department personnel conducted a boot drive at an interstate highway exit ramp on the night of July 4, 1994. Jacobs and Coates exited the freeway and got in line behind a string of slow-moving vehicles, slowly advancing and then stopping each time that a vehicle went through the stop sign. Bruce exited the freeway behind Jacobs and Coates but did not notice the line of cars until it was too late to avoid a collision. Jacobs and Coates were injured and sued the fire department, claiming that the boot drive caused traffic to build up on the exit ramp and that as the sponsors of the fireworks display, the fire department owed a duty to warn people about and manage the traffic. The District Court granted the fire department's motion in limine and dismissed the action as a matter of law, concluding that no causation existed between the accident and the boot drive. Jacobs and Coates appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Citing Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35 (1998), the court noted that a judicial determination of duty involves various policy considerations, including: (1) the moral blame attributable to the defendant's conduct; (2) the prevention of future harm; (3) the extent of the burden placed on the defendant; (4) the consequences to the public of imposing that duty; and (5) the availability of insurance for the risk involved. Although a duty may have been owed by the fire department to ensure safe passage at the event itself, the fire department had no duty to ensure that every spectator arrived safely at the event. The fire department did not spill anything or block traffic on the freeway, nor did it create a hazardous condition for travelers coming to and from fire department property. Thus, after evaluating the factors regarding duty, the Supreme Court found no duty owed by the fire department to regulate traffic on or around the interstate highway. Further, in order to sustain a negligence claim, Jacobs and Coates needed to prove not only negligence on the part of the fire department but also a causal relationship between that negligence and the injury. Here, Jacobs and Coates offered no evidence of a causal connection between the accident and the boot drive. Neither of them saw fire department personnel at the off ramp or soliciting donations prior to the accident, no witness testified to any negligent behavior by the fire department personnel who conducted the boot drive, and Jacobs and Coates did not even produce a witness who saw the boot drive at all during that evening. Dismissal as a matter of law was therefore proper. Jacobs v. Laurel Volunteer Fire Dept., 2001 MT 98, 305 M 225, 26 P3d 730 (2001).

Business Retaliation — Lack of Evidence as to Emotional Distress of Minor Child: David, his wife Susan, their minor child, and the parties' defunct business sued Pierce Flooring and others for damages stemming from criminal acts taken against the plaintiffs' competing business. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for a directed verdict against the plaintiffs' minor child on the issue of emotional distress. The Supreme Court, after reviewing the record, held that the motion was correctly granted because there was no evidence that the child suffered any emotional distress from the actions taken against her parents. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Wrongful Discharge — Directed Verdict Proper as to Alleged Civil Rights Violations: Tyner sued the county for wrongful discharge and alleged violation of Tyner's civil rights. Tyner claimed that he was fired because he had run against one of the County Commissioners in the recent election and because he had criticized the handling of a county contract. The District Court granted a directed verdict on the alleged civil rights violations. The Supreme Court held that the directed verdict was proper because Tyner failed to link these activities to the discharge. Tyner v. Park County, 271 M 355, 897 P2d 202, 52 St. Rep. 507 (1995).

Dismissal of Breach of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Claims and Claims for Emotional Damages: The District Court properly directed verdict on claims of breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and for damages for emotional distress upon finding no evidence to support the claims of breach and upon failure of plaintiffs to establish a legally protected interest sufficient to warrant damages. Semenza v. Leitzke, 232 M 15, 754 P2d 509, 45 St. Rep. 829 (1988).

Expert Testimony Required in Legal Malpractice Case — Directed Verdict Proper: An attorney's standard of care depends on the skill and care ordinarily exercised by attorneys—a criteria that rarely falls within the common knowledge of lay persons. Therefore, expert testimony is required in a legal malpractice case. Absent such testimony, a directed verdict was proper. Carlson v. Morton, 229 M 234, 745 P2d 1133, 44 St. Rep. 1929 (1987), followed in Brown v. Small, 251 M 414, 825 P2d 1209, 49 St. Rep. 98 (1992), and Moore v. Does 1 to 25, 271 M 162, 895 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 399 (1995). See also Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335, 46 St. Rep. 151 (1989).

Plaintiff Not Negligent as a Matter of Law: A directed verdict was proper when no evidence was presented at the trial to prove that the defendant breached any duty which caused the damages complained of by the plaintiff. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Directed Verdict in a Res Ipsa Case: It is proper for a District Court to grant a motion for a directed verdict in a res ipsa case if the inference of negligence is so strong that persons of reasonable minds could not reach differing conclusions as to the negligence of the defendant. Helmke v. Goff, 182 M 494, 597 P2d 1131 (1979).

Proof of Manufacturer Defect: The court did not err in granting defendants' motion for directed verdict when plaintiff failed to prove that the defect that caused an engine fire existed when the vehicle left the hands of the defendants, which existence is a necessary element in breach of implied warranty of merchantability, strict liability, and res ipsa loquitur legal theories. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Jeep Corp. & Am. Motors Sales, 175 M 69, 572 P2d 204 (1977).

Improper Signaling: No basis exists for finding defendant negligent when plaintiff gave improper signal for maneuver which was a failure to yield right-of-way. Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly granted. Slagsvold v. Johnson, 168 M 490, 544 P2d 442 (1975).

Inaccurate Exhibits — Failure of Proof: In action for breach of contract, an exhibit of 123 pages of inaccurate information about all the deliveries made by the plaintiff was insufficient proof without supporting testimony, and directed verdict for defendant was proper. LaVelle v. Kenneally, 165 M 418, 529 P2d 788 (1974).

Negligence Action — Directed Verdict for Defendant Ordered: Notwithstanding jury verdict for plaintiff, directed verdict for defendant was ordered because plaintiff failed to set forth prima facie case proving negligence. Rogers v. Hilger Chevrolet Co., 155 M 1, 465 P2d 834 (1970); Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969); Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969).

Directed Verdict for Defendant Upheld — Negligence: Plaintiff failed to set forth prima facie case proving negligence. Therefore, court properly directed verdict for defendant. Jackson v. Dingwall Co., 145 M 127, 399 P2d 236 (1965).

Personal Injury — Failure of Prima Facie Case: Trial court properly granted directed verdict for defendant, employer and ranch foreman, where plaintiff, a ranch hand, was injured while riding atop a bobsled loaded with hay, since plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie case that tipping of bobsled was due to negligence. Jackson v. Dingwall Co., 145 M 127, 399 P2d 236 (1965).

MOTION PROPERLY DENIED

Judgment as Matter of Law Denied — Sufficient Evidence Presented to Support Jury Verdict: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. In the first Deonier case, Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622 (2000), the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's summary judgment in favor of Revere that held that there had not been a breach of fiduciary duty and remanded the case back to the lower court for a jury trial on the issue of liability and damages. The jury found for Deonier and awarded her $150,000 in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $375,000. The trial court denied Revere's motion for judgment as a matter of law that it had not breached its fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that Deonier had presented evidence that Revere knew it would assert the Forman defense and that such an action might lead to pecuniary damages for its agents, and therefore there existed a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find that a breach of fiduciary duty had occurred. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Awarding Punitive Damages for Breach of Fiduciary Duty by Insurer in Dealings With Its Agent: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. Revere argued that punitive damages were inappropriate as a matter of law because it was entitled to assert any defense, including the Forman defense, that had a reasonable basis in the law. Deonier countered by pointing out that she had introduced evidence that by 1994 when Revere first used the Forman defense in Montana, it knew that its selling agents had been sued in at least 20% of the previous lawsuits and the company nevertheless refused to inform its agents of the risk of pecuniary loss if Revere decided to assert that defense. The Supreme Court held that based on the evidence alone, it could conclude that there was a complete absence of any evidence that would justify submitting the issue of punitive damages to the jury and therefore the lower court did not err in denying the motion for judgment as a matter of law on punitive damages. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Rule 50(b). Renewal of motion for judgment after trial; alternative motion for new trial.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

COMMISSION NOTES

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: Fed. R. Civ. P. 50, as amended 1963.

Explanation of change: A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict will not lie unless it was preceded by a motion for a directed verdict made at the close of all the evidence.

This departs from the federal amendment in providing that the time limit for making a motion for judgment n.o.v. is 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment, rather than 10 days after entry of judgment as provided in the federal amendment. This is consistent with the provisions of Rules 59(b) (time for motion for a new trial) and 52(b) (time for motion to amend findings by the court).

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 21, 1969, AMENDMENT

Explanation of change: A housekeeping change to conform with superseding section 93-5606, R. C. M. 1947 [superseded by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P.], by the amendment of Rule 59.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendments conform the rule to the 1991 amendments of the Federal Rule.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: In first sentence substituted "judgment as a matter of law" for "directed verdict"; at beginning of second sentence inserted "Such a motion may be renewed by service and filing" and at end deleted "a party who has moved for a directed verdict may move to have the verdict and any judgment entered thereon set aside and to have judgment entered in accordance with the party's motion for a directed verdict; or if a verdict was not returned such party, within 10 days after the jury has been discharged, may move for judgment in accordance with the party's motion for a directed verdict"; in third sentence, near beginning after "new trial", inserted "under Rule 59", after "joined with" substituted "a renewal of the motion for judgment as a matter of law" for "this motion", and near end substituted "requested" for "prayed for"; in fourth and fifth sentences, after "court may", inserted "in disposing of the renewed motion" and substituted "as a matter of law" for "as if the requested verdict had been directed"; and made minor changes in style.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The above commission note refers to the Federal Rule as it stood before a 1963 amendment thereof. The 1963 amendment changed the time specified in the second sentence of subdivision (b) for a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict from 10 days after reception of verdict to 10 days after entry of judgment. The 1963 amendment of the Federal Rule also added new subdivisions (c) and (d) to clarify and expedite the procedure for new trial or entry of judgment following the disposition of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and appellate proceedings thereon.

The amendment of September 7, 1965, added the second paragraph.

The amendment of September 29, 1967, substituted the present heading for "Reservation of decision on motion" and, in the second sentence of the first paragraph, substituted "Not later than 10 ... judgment" for "Within 10 days after the reception of a verdict".

The amendment of May 21, 1969, in the second paragraph, substituted "Rule 59 ... for new trial" for "Section 93-5606 of the 1947 Revised Codes of Montana in the case of motions for new trial".

As of May 1, 1990, the rule was identical to the Federal Rule, except that the second sentence of the Montana Rule measures "10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment" while the Federal Rule measures from time of entry of judgment, and the second paragraph of the Montana Rule regarding Rule 59 hearing and determination times does not appear in the Federal Rule.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

Preservation of Right to Argue Sufficient Evidence of Negligence on Appeal From Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found for the plaintiffs. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that the domestic violence statutes did not trigger mandatory legal duties upon the Sheriff regarding arrest and seizure. On appeal, the Sheriff argued that because plaintiffs did not specifically appeal from the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violations of the arrest and weapon seizure provisions of the domestic violence law were negligence per se, plaintiffs could not argue on appeal that evidence that the statutes were violated supported the verdict. The Supreme Court examined the definitions of common-law negligence and negligence per se, noting that the jury was given the full panoply of instructions on common-law negligence and that despite the fact that negligence per se instructions were not given, plaintiffs nevertheless argued that violation of the statutes was evidence of negligence. Pursuant to Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329 (1986), even if a violation of a statute does not constitute negligence per se, the violation may nonetheless be considered as evidence of negligence. Because plaintiffs appealed from the judgment as a matter of law, they preserved their right to argue on appeal that the jury had before it sufficient evidence of negligence. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Substantial Evidence of Legal Duty of Sheriff to Protect Domestic Violence Victim to Preclude Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found the Sheriff negligent and awarded plaintiffs $358,000. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that no special relationship existed between the victim and the Sheriff under the domestic violence statutes that would trigger a legal duty upon the Sheriff to protect the victim. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that judgment as a matter of law may be granted only when it appears as a matter of law that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate inferences drawn from the evidence. Here, viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that the Sheriff was negligent in failing to comply with the mandatory notice provisions of the domestic violence law to preclude judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court was reversed. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Failure to Follow Uniform Building Code as Negligence Per Se — Denial of Judgment N.O.V. Reversed: Rosauers Supermarket undertook remodeling for which ALSC was the architect. As a change order to the remodeling, Rosauers asked that a walk-in freezer be removed and that the access door to a walkway over the freezer be closed off. Unknown to Rosauers and its employee, Pierce, the door was never closed off even though the freezer was removed. Pierce was injured when he fell through a false ceiling after stepping off the walkway, assuming that the freezer was still in place and that it would support him. After a jury verdict finding no negligence on the part of ALSC, Pierce moved for judgment N.O.V., which was denied by virtue of the fact that the District Court failed to grant the motion within 45 days. The Supreme Court found that ALSC had knowledge of the change order and knew that without the access door being blocked, the door and walkway would leave an unsafe condition after the freezer was removed. Citing Herbst v. Miller, 252 M 503, 830 P2d 1268 (1992), the Supreme Court also found that failure to place a guardrail around the walkway in accordance with the Uniform Building Code caused an unsafe condition in violation of the code, which constituted negligence per se on the part of ALSC. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it denied Pierce's motion for judgment N.O.V. by failing to grant the motion with 45 days. Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Denial of Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict on Issue of Negligence When Dispute in Evidence Exists: The District Court properly denied various summary judgment motions and directed verdict motions because a dispute as to the evidence existed that necessarily forced the court to submit the case to the jury. The evidence was substantial enough for the jury to have resolved the conflict in the manner in which it did. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Ample Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Judgment N.O.V. Improper:

The District Court did not err in denying motions for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict when the facts rose to the level of substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict and when the evidence established a reasonable basis for which an honest difference of opinion could arise under the circumstances presented. Hash v. St., 247 M 497, 807 P2d 1363, 48 St. Rep. 277 (1991).

Because there was substantial credible evidence on which the jury could have rendered its verdict, the District Court should have deferred to that verdict. It should not have set aside the verdict solely because it chose to believe testimony different from that believed by the jury. Wilkerson v. School District, 216 M 203, 700 P2d 617, 42 St. Rep. 745 (1985).

Judgment N.O.V. Reversed — Jury Finding of Breach of Fiduciary Duty Possible: The lower court set aside an award against the bank on the basis that the facts did not support the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court ruled that the fact that the bank required the plaintiffs to hire a contractor who owed the bank money could support a finding of breach of the bank's fiduciary duty. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 245 M 394, 798 P2d 523, 47 St. Rep. 1646 (1990).

Criteria for Granting:

A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be granted only if it appears that the nonmoving party cannot recover upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate inferences to be drawn from it. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), followed in Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), and in Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993). See also Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994), Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998), and Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002).

In considering a motion for a directed verdict or for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the District Court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the opposing party and deny the motion if a prima facie case is made. A judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot be granted if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Like any form of directed verdict, it rests on a finding that the case of the opposing party is unsupported in some necessary particular. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985), followed in Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989), Wiberg v. 17 Bar, Inc., 241 M 490, 788 P2d 292, 47 St. Rep. 429 (1990), Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), and in Barrows v. Barrows, 256 M 78, 844 P2d 119, 49 St. Rep. 1145 (1992). See also Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

A motion for a directed verdict or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury, and all inferences must be considered in the light most favorable to the opposing party. This compels a trial court to exercise the greatest self-restraint in interfering with the constitutionally mandated processes of jury decision. Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319, 39 St. Rep. 1565 (1982), followed in Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), and Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996). See also Walters v. Getter, 232 M 196, 755 P2d 574, 45 St. Rep. 986 (1988), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998), Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), and Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002).

The question involved in whether a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper is not whether there was sufficient evidence to support the court's order. A motion for such judgment may be granted only when, without weighing the credibility of the evidence, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the proper judgment. Yetter v. Kennedy, 175 M 1, 571 P2d 1152 (1977).

Evidence of Fraud — Support for Jury Verdict: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, there was sufficient evidence to support submitting the issue of the seller's fraud to the jury and to support the jury's verdict against the seller. The trial court did not err in denying the seller's motion for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Questions of Fraud Precluding Directed Verdict and Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict: Because questions of actual or constructive fraud existed requiring submission of facts to the jury, the District Court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for directed verdict and defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Motion Denied — Intentional Trespass Due to Flooding: The lower court's refusal to grant a motion on grounds that sufficient evidence existed for the jury's conclusion that defendants' dam was not the cause of flood damage to plaintiffs' property was affirmed on appeal. Guenther v. Finley, 236 M 422, 769 P2d 717, 46 St. Rep. 477 (1989).

Power Company Liable for Poorly Maintained Outside Wire That Caused Fire That Destroyed Building: In an action against the power company for negligently inspecting and maintaining a power line to a building, resulting in a fire that destroyed the building, substantial evidence existed to support the jury verdict and to deny a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Two tenants testified that just before the fire their lights flickered and their radio was making static, the two tenants and another person witnessed arcing, a tenant and fireman witnessed a loose wire, an expert testified that the fire was caused by the wire, and pictures appeared to show that other power lines in the area were poorly maintained. Stout v. Mont. Power Co., 234 M 303, 762 P2d 875, 45 St. Rep. 1926 (1988).

Evidence — When Sufficient to Support Verdict: Plaintiff appealed from jury verdict in favor of defendant, alleging the evidence did not support the verdict. The Supreme Court held that in order to overturn the verdict on the basis of insufficient evidence, it must find plaintiff entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to warrant submitting the case to a jury. Here the court found credible evidence supporting a verdict either way and considered itself without power to set aside the decision of the trier of fact as a matter of law. The District Court properly denied plaintiff's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gunlock v. W. Equip. Co., 219 M 112, 710 P2d 714, 42 St. Rep. 1882 (1985), followed in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Motor Vehicle Negligence:

The trial court properly granted motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, since defendant is guilty of negligence as a matter of law for failure to keep a proper lookout. At the time defendant "rear ended" plaintiff, the road was dry and the weather clear and sunny. No contributory negligence was alleged or proved. The only reasonable conclusion is that defendant negligently failed to keep a proper lookout. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Court erred in not granting directed verdict in favor of plaintiff on defendant's counterclaim. Smith v. Babcock, 157 M 81, 482 P2d 1014 (1971).

Motion for Summary Judgment Treated as Motion Under This Rule: When a defendant at the close of trial and after submission of all evidence moved under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., for summary judgment on its counterclaim, the Supreme Court held that the proper procedure would have been to make the motion under this rule but that since the questions to be answered are the same under either motion, the motion made would be considered the equivalent of a motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court further ruled that on the basis of the record, the defendant was entitled to judgment on its counterclaim. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposition of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Motion Denied — Sufficiency of Evidence: There was sufficient evidence of a violation of the Federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. §2, to submit the issue to the jury. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Factual Disputes for Jury: Since the jury decided that plaintiff was covered by the group insurance policy purchased by employer from defendant and the evidence did not show lack of coverage as a matter of law, the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied. Standish v. Business Men's Assurance Co., 172 M 264, 563 P2d 552 (1977).

District Court's Discretion — Motion Improperly Granted: It was error for the District Court not to set aside the verdict for the defendant upon plaintiff's motion for new trial or judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Rule 50(b), where defendant's conduct consisted of a breach of duty established by statute apparently conclusive as to the issue of negligence and could not be overlooked by a jury where there was insufficient evidence to support the verdict for defendant. Erickson v. Perrett, 169 M 167, 545 P2d 1074 (1976).

Granting of Motion by Appellate Court: Alternatives for disposition of a motion under this section available to a trial court are equally available to a reviewing appellate court. Therefore, where appeal was inter alia from denial of motion under this section, appellate court in reversing trial court could itself order a new trial. Erickson v. Perrett, 169 M 167, 545 P2d 1074 (1976).

Time for Ruling on Motion: Where judgment was granted for the defendant on May 4 and an alternative motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial was filed by the plaintiff on May 10, the hearing thereon continued until May 30, and the plaintiff's brief was not filed until July 10, the District Court had no authority to grant the motion on July 10 since Rules 50(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., clearly indicate that the court shall rule on a motion within 15 days after the motion is submitted and that the court may continue the case for only 30 days. Here the case was continued beyond the time provided for in the rules, and the court's decision was rendered more than 15 days beyond the date upon which it was ordered to be submitted. Cain v. Harrington, 161 M 401, 506 P2d 1375 (1973).

Denial of Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict — Upheld: Plaintiff motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in negligence action was properly denied. French v. Abercrombie, 156 M 356, 480 P2d 187 (1971).

Burden of Proof: Denial of a motion for a directed verdict will not be presumed error. The moving party must show that error was committed. Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969); Laughnan v. Sorenson, 139 M 531, 366 P2d 433 (1961); Bouma v. Bynum Irrigation District, 139 M 360, 364 P2d 47 (1961).

New Trial Alternate to Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict: This rule contains no language which absolutely requires a court to enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict although persuaded it erred in failing to direct a verdict for the losing party. Thus, a new trial might better serve the ends of justice, and it is within the judge's discretion to so order. Jangula v. U.S. Rubber Co., 147 M 98, 410 P2d 462 (1966).

Disqualification of Trial Judge: This rule does not prevent the disqualification of a trial judge, which is governed by 3-1-801, during the 10-day period after reception of a verdict. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962).

Explanation of change: The procedure where a party joins a motion for a new trial with his motion for judgment n.o.v., or prays for a new trial in the alternative has often been misunderstood. This amendment summarizes the practice. It does not alter the effects of a jury verdict or the scope of appellate review.

The amendments conform the rule to the 1991 amendments of the Federal Rule.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: In (1), near beginning of first sentence before "motion", inserted "renewed" and after "judgment" substituted "as a matter of law" for "notwithstanding the verdict, provided for in subdivision (b) of this rule"; and in (2), after "party", substituted "against whom judgment as a matter of law has been rendered" for "whose verdict has been set aside on motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict" and at end deleted "notwithstanding the verdict".

Identity With Federal Rule: As of May 1, 1990, the rule was identical to the Federal Rule except for references to "supreme court" instead of "appellate court" and to "respondent" instead of "appellee", and except that in (2) the Montana Rule measures from service of notice of entry of judgment N.O.V. instead of from entry of judgment N.O.V.

Rule 50(d). Denial of motion for judgment as a matter of law.

Explanation of change: This subdivision does not attempt a regulation of all aspects of the procedure where the motion for judgment n.o.v. and any accompanying motion for a new trial are denied, since the problems have not been fully canvassed in the decisions and the procedure is in some respects still in a formative stage. It is, however, designed to give guidance on certain important features of the practice.

Case Notes

Denial of Motion for Judgment N.O.V. Proper When Evidence Sufficient to Support Question of Liability: Defendant appealed the District Court's denial of a posttrial motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, claiming that the motion was warranted based on the statutory liability of an indemnitor on claims for which its indemnitees had no liability. The Supreme Court, noting that the issue of indemnity was not raised at trial and was thus not arguable on appeal, restated the question as whether the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied. After reviewing the record, the court concluded that plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to support submission to the jury of the question of defendant's contract liability. Rule 51. Instructions to jury — objection.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

The rule has been written so as to substantially comply with those provisions of R. C. M. 1947, sections 93-5101 [now codified as 25-7-301, MCA] and 93-5502 [superseded by Rule 46, M.R.Civ.P.] dealing with instructions and with Montana case law and practice on this subject.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

GENERAL

Failure to Request Jury Instruction on Sudden Emergency Doctrine — Appeal Precluded: Payne's son was killed while transporting an antique tractor purchased from defendants. The jury found that more than 51% of the negligence was attributable to Payne's son. Payne appealed on grounds that under the sudden emergency doctrine set out in Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983 (1986), the son was not negligent as a matter of law. Defendants argued that the sudden emergency doctrine is no longer a recognized doctrine in Montana negligence law. Without ruling on whether the doctrine is still viable, the Supreme Court dismissed the issue because Payne failed to request a jury instruction on sudden emergency, thereby failing to preserve the issue for appeal. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

No Prejudice in Jury Instructions Explaining General Elements of Legal Malpractice: Plaintiffs contended that general instructions regarding the elements of legal malpractice given to the jury in a legal malpractice case were internally inconsistent, incomplete, and essentially confusing. Defendant attorney asserted that the jury was advised that the attorney had a duty to use the care and skill ordinarily used by lawyers practicing in Montana and that the jury was not confused by an instruction that did not recite every duty discussed by an expert. The Supreme Court agreed with defendant. Although the trial court might have crafted other instructions that may have better assisted the jury in considering the law applicable to the case, when taken as a whole, the instructions, when coupled with extensive expert testimony for both parties, adequately described the attorney's standard of care and did not potentially mislead or confuse the jury, resulting in prejudice to plaintiffs. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004).

Lack of Evidence on Impact of Taking on Value of Remaining Property — Jury Instructions on Compensation for Taking of Access Proper: The District Court instructed the jury that defendants were not entitled to compensation merely because traffic access was diverted because of road construction or for defendants' loss of business resulting from the taking of a part of defendants' property. Defendants contended that the instructions were an abuse of discretion because they were not seeking compensation for access impairment, traffic diversion, or loss of business, but rather that those factors had caused severance damages when the remaining property's commercial value sustained a permanent market value loss, entitling defendants to a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants failed to offer any evidence of a loss of revenue from their business and the impact of the loss on the fair market value of the remainder of the property. Thus, the jury instructions did not materially affect defendants' substantial rights, and the motion for a new trial was properly denied. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

No Prejudicial Error in Failure to Give Negligent Homicide Mental State Instruction in Wrongful Death Action When Other Instructions Adequately Reflect Negligence: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for foreseeable negligence. To boost the theory of foreseeability, Samson offered a jury instruction that defined Bercier's conduct as reckless and postulated therefrom that the conduct was foreseeable because of Bercier's background, seeking to undermine the state's theory that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The District Court refused to offer the instruction, instead instructing the jury on elements of wrongful death, and Samson appealed. The state argued that the mental state of Bercier was not a controlling issue and contended that it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the mental state of negligent homicide because the instructions as a whole properly included the key concepts of a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The fundamental issue concerned the state's negligence, not Bercier's mental state. Nevertheless, Samson was still able to present the foreseeability theory under the instructions that were given, so failure to give Samson's offered instruction did not result in prejudice to Samson's case. It is within a District Court's discretion to decide how to instruct the jury, taking into account the theories of the contending parties, and absent an abuse of discretion, the District Court was affirmed. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

Rule of Law Regarding Admissibility of Evidence of Subsequent Accident With Nonparty — Defendant's Burden to Show That Damages Divisible and Apportionment Proper: Following

Truman's injury in an automobile accident, she was involved in a second automobile accident and in an accident involving an ultralight aircraft. The District Court held that evidence of Truman's injuries in the second automobile accident and the aircraft accident would be admissible in a trial related to the first automobile accident to disprove causation. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court relied on an analogous situation in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), holding that once a plaintiff presents a prima facie case that the defendant's conduct contributed as a cause of injury, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the injury is divisible. A defendant is permitted to submit relevant evidence of subsequent accidents to negate allegations that the defendant is the cause or sole cause of the injury, but the defendant may not attempt to apportion fault to the conduct of a nonparty because assignment of liability to a nonparty without affording that party the opportunity to defend against liability risks an unreliable and disproportionate assignment of liability and places the burden of defending the nonparty on the plaintiff. In this case, plaintiff must prove that defendant's conduct contributed as a substantial factor to the damages, but need not prove the extent to which defendant is responsible. If defendant proves by a reasonable medical probability that the injury is divisible and that defendant is responsible for only a portion of the damages, the jury may reduce defendant's obligation by the portion of damages for which it is proved that defendant is not responsible. However, if the injury is indivisible and evidence does not permit an apportionment, then defendant is liable for the entire damage. Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003).

Plaintiffs Residing in House for Several Years Not Entitled to Instruction on Warranty of Habitability: The Satterfields appealed the District Court's refusal to submit a jury instruction regarding the implied warranty of habitability. The Supreme Court held that the instruction was properly excluded because the plaintiffs did not introduce enough evidence to support their argument especially in light of the fact that they inhabited the home for a period of several years after construction was finished. Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Oil and Gas Habendum Clause Obligating Maintenance of Production — Jury Instructions Allowing Consideration of Causes of Cessation of Production Improper When Evidence Shows Lack of Production of Paying Quantities: Actions to terminate oil and gas leases invoke two distinct inquiries: (1) whether the lease is producing in paying quantities; and (2) if not, whether the cessation in production is permanent or temporary. As an ownership-in-place state, in Montana, the lessee's interest terminates upon the occurrence of a stated event, which, under the habendum clause in effect here, was the cessation of production in paying quantities. Paying quantities is defined as the amount that would pay a small profit over the cost of operation, excluding the initial cost of bringing the well into production. Thus, the finder of fact must necessarily consider income generated from the property and the expenses incurred in its operation. However, in an effort to mitigate the harshness of the automatic termination rule, courts developed the temporary cessation of production rule, which shifts the burden to defendant to prove that cessation is temporary once plaintiff establishes that the lease has halted production. To determine whether a cessation is temporary or permanent, a jurisdiction considers the cause of the cessation, the time reasonably required to restore production, and the diligence exercised by the lessee in restoring production. Ownership-in-place jurisdictions generally limit temporary cessations to mechanical or production breakdowns. If there is a lack of market, if the lease is capable of producing in paying quantities, and if the lessee is using reasonable diligence to market the product, Montana law considers the lease as one that is producing in paying quantities and will not reach the temporary cessation of production question. The District Court in this case allowed jury consideration of oil prices, economic considerations, and defendant's financial condition in determining whether cessation was temporary or permanent. However, plaintiff established that the leases in question failed to produce in paying quantities during the prescribed accounting period. At that point, analysis implicating economic factors concluded. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that allowing jury consideration of defendant's economic factors was an abuse of discretion and was prejudicial to plaintiff, warranting a new trial. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2002 MT 141, 310 M 221, 49 P3d 598 (2002), following Berthelote v. Loy Oil Co., 95 M 434, 28 P2d 187 (1933), and Christian v. A. A. Oil Corp., 161 M 420, 506 P2d 1369 (1973). See also Watson v. Rochmill, 155 SW 2d 783 (Tex. 1941).

No Error in Giving Jury Instructions Regarding Intervening Cause When Jury Did Not Consider Issue: Pula sued the state for negligence related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. The District Court's special verdict form required jurors to answer a series of questions on breach of duty, causation, and damages, and then, depending on the answers, to move on to succeeding questions, one of which was the issue of whether there was an intervening cause. Pula asserted error in that the instructions on independent intervening causation were incorrect statements of the law. However, the first question for the jury was whether the state was negligent, which was answered affirmatively, so the jury moved on to the second question, which was whether the negligence resulted in Pula's injuries. The answer was negative, so the jury was instructed not to consider the third question, which was whether there was an intervening cause. Because the jury never considered the issue of intervening cause in reaching its verdict, the instructions on intervening cause had no effect on the outcome of the trial. The Supreme Court declined to assign reversible error to instructions addressing an issue that was never reached. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002). See also Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980).

Jury Instructions Regarding Causation and Superseding, Intervening Cause Not Conflicting: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. Although conceding that the jury instructions were correct statements of the law, Payless nevertheless asserted that the instructions, when read together, were confusing regarding Payless's liability when the case involved a defense of superseding, intervening cause. The Supreme Court found that the instructions were appropriate and not conflicting and that nothing in the record indicated that the jury was confused. The jury sent out no written questions to the court and deliberated less than 2 hours before unanimously agreeing on its answers to six special verdict questions. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Heightened Standard of Care of Driver in Vicinity of Children: Fifteen-year-old Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection near a school. The intersection had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist operating in an area in which children are known to likely be present has a heightened standard of care, relying on Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302 (1993). The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a person's duty of care varies depending on the circumstances at the time and place in question, so in this case, as in Okland, the standard negligence instruction permitted Hanson to argue that the circumstances required a heightened standard and was thus considered adequate. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Motorist's Affirmative Duty to Ascertain Whether Intersection Clear and to Anticipate Presence of Pedestrians: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist has an affirmative duty to ascertain whether an intersection is clear before proceeding and a duty to anticipate that pedestrians may be present in the intersection. The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the instruction that was given, which clarified a driver's obligation to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk and a pedestrian's obligation to avoid moving into the path of a vehicle that is too close for the driver to yield, was a proper statement of law under 61-8-504 and that the trial court did not err in refusing to give Hanson's proposed instruction regarding a driver's affirmative duties. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Error in Refusal to Give Law of the Case Instruction: On remand from Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 277 M 134, 920 P2d 97, 53 St. Rep. 618 (1996) (Federated Mut. I), defendant offered a jury instruction setting forth as facts three paragraphs that had been determined to be true as a matter of law in Federated Mut. I. The District Court rejected the proposed law of the case instruction, which defendant contended was error because it allowed third-party defendant to present testimony contrary to the facts found in Federated Mut. I. The court found for third-party defendant. The difference between the instruction given and the proposed law of the case instruction was that the instruction given stated only the conclusion reached in Federated Mut. I, while the proposed instruction stated the specific facts on which those conclusions were based. Normally, the instructions as given would have been adequate, but in this case, the District Court had warned the parties prior to trial that pursuant to Federated Mut. I, the reasonableness of third-party defendant's actions was no longer at issue, yet third-party defendant improperly raised the reasonableness issue at least 23 times during trial but was not sanctioned. As a result of the instruction given and this violation of the pretrial order, third-party defendant in effect relitigated several fact issues previously settled in Federated Mut. I. Thus, the jury instructions as a whole failed to adequately present the law of the case, allowing the presentation of improper testimony and argument to the jury, constituting reversible error. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999).

Failure to Give Instruction Regarding Retaliation in Wrongful Discharge Claim — No Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiffs filed action against a hotel employer, alleging wrongful discharge and violation of wage and hour laws. Since plaintiffs did not advance this theory for discharge, the Supreme Court ruled that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to provide the jury with an instruction using the theory as a ground for a wrongful discharge claim. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 1998 MT 248, 291 M 164, 967 P2d 382, 55 St. Rep. 1023 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Instruction on Implied Contract Covenant to Farm in Workmanlike Manner — Express Lease Terms Stricter Than Requested Instruction on Implied Term: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. The lease required Stephens to farm with "diligence and care" and to do "all work necessary . . . and to the best interest of lessor, all in such time and manner as shall be to the best advantage and economy". The Schumachers sued Stephens, alleging that Stephens breached the implied contract covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court refused to give the Schumachers' requested instruction on an implied covenant in the lease that would have required Stephens to farm the property in a "competent, skilled, workmanlike and husbandlike fashion". The Supreme Court noted that: (1) the District Court was correct in not giving an instruction on negligence because the Schumachers' complaint and evidence contained no such theory; (2) the District Court did instruct on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (3) the standard of care required of Stephens was expressly stated in the lease itself; and (4) the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced by the failure to give the requested instruction. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that it was not error for the District Court to refuse to give an instruction on an implied covenant to farm in a workmanlike manner. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Plaintiffs' Instruction on Effect of Material Participation Provisions — Instruction on Mutual Cooperation Held Sufficient: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. Later, when the Schumachers sued Stephens over Stephens' failure to comply with the terms of the lease, Stephens claimed in defense that the Schumachers had breached the material participation agreements in the lease and that therefore he was excused from compliance. The Schumachers requested an instruction stating that if the jury found that Stephens failed to cooperate with the plaintiffs, then Stephens was not entitled to claim that he was excused from liability because of his contention that the Schumachers breached the material participation agreements in the lease. The District Court refused to give the instruction and instead gave an instruction stating that "the failure of a party to fully perform a contract is excused if his performance is prevented or delayed by the conduct of the other party". The Supreme Court noted that the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced in any way by the failure of the District Court to give the requested instruction. Citing Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347 (1997), the Supreme Court held that: (1) a party assigning error to a refused instruction must show that the party was prejudiced by the refusal; and (2) the refused instruction must be reviewed in the context of the instructions that were given and the evidence produced at trial. Under these standards, the Supreme Court held that the instruction given by the District Court was sufficient. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Aggravated Assault — Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence — Extraneous Allegation of Use of Weapon Held Not to Affect Conviction — Instruction Properly Refused: Neary was charged with aggravated assault of a female friend. The evidence at trial consisted of statements by witnesses who placed him, in an angry mood, with the injured woman at the top of some stairs and who heard admissions against interest and inconsistent statements from Neary about the circumstances of the woman's injury. The state also introduced expert medical testimony that the woman's injuries were consistent with a blow to the head with an object or a fall down some stairs onto an object. A neurologist testified for Neary that the woman's injuries could have been caused in the same manner and that the woman's blood showed evidence of alcohol, amphetamines, and a prescription drug, which, in combination, would cause a propensity to fall. Neary contended that the state's case was circumstantial and that the verdict was not supported by the evidence. The Supreme Court held that Neary's inconsistent statements, his other statements, and his actions before, during, and after the incident supported the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. Gould, 216 M 455, 704 P2d 20 (1985), and St. v. Gommenginger, 242 M 265, 790 P2d 455 (1990), by pointing out that in Gommenginger, unlike the case before it, testimony came from a drug informant with a motive to lie and that in Gould, the defendant had moved to suppress pretrial admissions, that Neary had not. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court did not err in refusing to amend one of the state's jury instructions to provide that Neary had committed the elements of aggravated assault "with a weapon". The Supreme Court noted that the fact that the text of the state's information alleged that Neary struck the woman "with some type of blunt weapon" did not change the fact that the jury was correctly given the elements of the offense of aggravated assault and that the jury was not required to find that Neary used a weapon to find him guilty of aggravated assault. Distinguishing St. v. Later, 260 M 363, 860 P2d 135 (1993), in which the defendant had been charged under the wrong statute, the Supreme Court held that Neary was not prevented from preparing an adequate defense by the statement in the information that Neary used a weapon. St. v. Neary, 284 M 409, 944 P2d 750, 54 St. Rep. 942 (1997).

Timing of Settlement of Instructions — Inapplication of This Rule for Lack of Notice Rejected: In a case in which an issue on appeal was whether the plaintiff's estate could assert a survival action and the state submitted no jury instruction regarding the survival action, the state argued that it should not be bound by this rule because it did not have timely notice that the District Court was going to give an instruction requested by the plaintiff. The Supreme Court rejected that state's argument concerning damages, noting that the plaintiffs submitted an instruction based upon Montana Pattern Jury Instructions 25.20 through 25.25 and that because of the language of the proposed instruction, the state knew or should have known that the "not instantaneous" (concerning the death of the decedent) language was being proposed with regard to the survival of the action. Thus, although the final revised language of the instruction was not available for the state to review, the Supreme Court held that the state had sufficient knowledge of the content of the final instruction that this rule would be applied to the state for its failure to submit a different or clarifying instruction. Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997).

New Trial Denied — Failure to Object to Instruction — No Plain Error Found: Berg contended on appeal that he was entitled to a new trial concerning workers' compensation fraud because the District Court failed to instruct the jury on the meaning of the term "misrepresentation". Citing St. v. Courchene, 256 M 381, 847 P2d 271 (1992), and Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625 (1996), the Supreme Court held that Berg was not entitled to a new trial for failure of the District Court to give a certain instruction when Berg had not requested that the instruction be given. Distinguishing the case of St. Bank of Townsend v. Maryann's, Inc., 204 M 21, 664 P2d 295 (1983), relied upon by Berg, the Supreme Court also held that there was no "plain error" sufficient to justify the Supreme Court's review of the failure to give the instruction notwithstanding Berg's failure to request the instruction. State ex rel St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Foreseeability to Be Considered Part of Analysis of Duty: The trial court refused to give Columbus Hospital's proposed jury instruction on proximate cause and also did not instruct the jury on foreseeability even though the hospital contended that the Supreme Court had included foreseeability as an element of proximate cause in Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court, after a lengthy discussion of duty, proximate cause, and foreseeability and after examining the statutory definitions of duty and proximate cause, held that foreseeability is to be considered as part of the analysis of duty rather than proximate cause. The Supreme Court further held that it was reversing that part of Kitchen Krafters that requires a two-tiered analysis of causation that includes consideration of foreseeability in cases other than those cases in which there has been an allegation that the chain of causation is severed by an independent, intervening cause. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996), followed in Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996), Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35, 55 St. Rep. 183 (1998), Gentry v. Douglas Hereford Ranch, Inc., 1998 MT 182, 290 M 126, 962 P2d 1205, 55 St. Rep. 737 (1998), Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999), and Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000).

Instruction on Duty to Examine Available Fraudulent Form — Fraudulent Material Inserted After Availability Ceases: In an action by the insureds against an insurance agent and his company for the agent's fraud, the lower court properly refused defendants' instruction that one who fails to take the opportunity to examine a written form before executing it cannot claim that the form was fraudulent. The instruction was taken out of context. In addition, the agent's insertion of fraudulent material on insurance applications after plaintiffs saw them made the obligation in the instruction inapplicable to plaintiffs. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Instructions as to Contract Clause Requiring Independent Investigation Properly Denied: A real estate broker appealed a verdict finding that an employee had negligently misrepresented the boundary of property purchased by the Cechovics. The basis for the appeal was that the contract between the parties contained a clause requiring the Cechovics to conduct an independent investigation, which the Cechovics had not conducted, and that therefore the Cechovics' reliance on the employee's representation was not justified. The broker requested a jury instruction stating that a buyer has the duty to make a reasonable investigation of property prior to purchasing it and a second instruction containing the independent investigation clause as set out in the parties' buy-sell agreement. The Supreme Court held that the instructions had been properly denied because the issue had been argued to the jury and the jury had been instructed regarding contributory negligence. In fact, the jury had found the Cechovics partially at fault for the damages. Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520, 52 St. Rep. 854 (1995), followed, with regard to jury instructions on causation, in Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Failure to Give Duplicitous and Legally Incorrect Instructions — Jury Properly Instructed: Contreras contended that the jury was denied consideration of his case by the District Court's refusal to give his proposed jury instructions, which would have acted to direct a verdict on the element of duty. However, the proposed instructions were duplicitous and not correct statements of the law. The instructions that were given properly instructed the jury on all theories of the case and on the appropriate law. Thus, the court did not abuse its discretion in instructing the jury. Contreras v. Vannoy Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 270 M 393, 892 P2d 557, 52 St. Rep. 246 (1995).

Failure to Notify Seller of Nonconformity of Goods — Damages Unwarranted: Defendants claimed that a jury instruction should have been given regarding damages owing under the Uniform Commercial Code for a sale of nonconforming goods. However, defendants did not reject the goods upon delivery or notify the seller within a reasonable time regarding the nonconformity. Because no damages were owing, an instruction on the measure of damages was not appropriate. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 269 M 150, 887 P2d 260, 51 St. Rep. 1530 (1994).

Challenge by Party Who Offered Instruction — Failure to Object: Defendant argued that the focal point of his defense was that he had asserted an attorney's retaining lien. Even though the only instruction he offered related to an attorney's charging lien, defendant contended that the District Court had erred by giving the charging lien instruction rather than a retaining lien instruction. When proposing the charging lien instruction, defendant's counsel stated that in his opinion, the language was broad enough to cover the defense. The rule that a party is barred from challenging on appeal a court's refusal to give an instruction if the party fails to object at the time that the instruction is given is particularly applicable when the party challenging the instruction is the party that offered it. A party will not be allowed to benefit from an error that that party created. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Incorrect Jury Instruction Requested — Plain Error Not Applied: In a civil rights action against a county and hospital, Buhr argued at trial that the deliberate indifference standard was the correct standard of care to apply to the defendants in the case and requested a jury instruction to that effect. During trial, Buhr discovered his error and, on appeal, argued for the first time that the correct standard to be applied in the case was the professional judgment standard. He further argued that the District Court erred in applying the deliberate indifference standard and that the Supreme Court should apply the plain error doctrine in order to reach the conclusion that the professional judgment standard applies to his civil rights claim. The Supreme Court refused to apply the plain error doctrine, noting that Buhr himself requested the jury instruction on deliberate indifference. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Lengthy Instructions Not Erroneous if Law Properly Stated: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure after being transferred to the Kalispell Regional Hospital's security room. His personal representative sued the hospital and others. During trial, the District Court instructed the jury on negligence per se by giving lengthy instructions that counsel claimed were too complicated for the jury to understand. Citing Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190 (1991), the Supreme Court held that if the instructions properly state the law, the fact that the instructions are lengthy serves no basis for reversing the District Court. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994). See also Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

No Error in Instruction Quoting Statute Verbatim: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure after being transferred to the Kalispell Regional Hospital's security room. His personal representative sued the hospital and others. During trial, the District Court instructed the jury on negligence per se by quoting mental health statutes verbatim to the jury. The Supreme Court said that giving jury instructions by quoting directly from the statutes may not be the best practice, but noted that the instructions proposed by opposing counsel were also direct quotations of mental health statutes. Given that situation, the Supreme Court held that there was no error in giving jury instructions in the form of direct quotations from the statutes. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Duty of Care of Children — Failure to Give All of Requested Instruction Cured by Argument of Counsel: Chad was hit, while on his bicycle, by a car driven by Matt. Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Chad's counsel requested a jury instruction on a child's standard of care, but one sentence of that instruction, providing that "A child is not held to the same standard of care as an adult." was deleted by the District Court. The Supreme Court held that in this case, it was not reversible error for the District Court to refuse to give all of the requested instruction because it is error only if the omission adversely affects the substantial rights of a party. Here, the plaintiff's substantial rights were not affected because his counsel's closing argument contained statements that nullified the effect of the District Court's refusal to give the requested instruction. Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Reversible Error Not to Instruct Jury on Law of Important Theory of Party's Case: Chad was hit, while on his bicycle, by a car driven by Matt. Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection, but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Chad's counsel requested a jury instruction on the duty of automobile drivers to observe what is to be seen at an intersection, but the District Court refused to give the instruction. Citing Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053 (1988), the Supreme Court held that it was reversible error for the District Court not to instruct the jury on an important part of a party's theory in the case. Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Jury Instructions as a Whole Sufficiently Instructed Jury: Mannix, a corporate officer fired by the board of directors, argued that the lower court erred in refusing to submit to the jury his proposed instructions on the scope of authority of the board of directors of the defendant corporation. The Supreme Court held that, taken as a whole, the instructions were sufficient as to the scope of the board's authority and that the lower court had not abused its discretion in refusing the plaintiff's instructions. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993).

Criminal Trial — Time and Place of Alleged Offense: The District Court did not err by instructing the jury that the state was not required to state the time and place of an alleged criminal offense with impossible precision. St. v. Scott, 257 M 454, 850 P2d 286, 50 St. Rep. 353 (1993).

Proposed Instruction on Elements of Partnership Properly Rejected: The District Court did not err in refusing a proposed jury instruction setting out criteria for the existence of a partnership when the proposed instruction was not an accurate statement of prior cases establishing the elements of partnership. Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 96 (1993).

Not Error to Fail to Instruct That Severity of Injury Did Not Mean There Must Be Negligence: A doctor in a medical malpractice case argued on appeal that the judge should have given a "mere fact of injury" instruction because no instruction was given to prevent the jury from believing that because the injuries were so severe, there must have been negligence. There was no error because the given instructions stated in part: (1) that plaintiff had the burden of proving the doctor was negligent, that the plaintiff was injured, and that the doctor's negligence was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury; (2) that it is the doctor's duty to use the skill and learning ordinarily used in like cases by other doctors practicing in that same specialty and holding the same national board certification and that violation of that duty is negligence; and (3) that the proper test for determining negligence in a doctor's actions is whether the doctor meets the accepted standards of skill and care. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Negligence of County in Maintaining Jail — Failure to Give Jury Instruction on Business Invitees Not Error: The plaintiff was injured when she fell against a wall in a jail bathroom after slipping on a wet floor. The District Court refused to give a jury instruction dealing with nonliability of a business owner to a business invitee for danger known or obvious to the plaintiff. The District Court gave only a general instruction on the duty of the county established in another case. Following Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364 (1982), the Supreme Court held that if the instruction taken as a whole states the applicable law of the case, a party cannot claim reversible error. The Supreme Court held that the county was not prejudiced by the District Court's failure to give the requested instructions. Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Proposed Instruction on Same Subject — Refusal to Give Thayer Instruction Not Error When Covered in Other Instructions: Appellant contended that the District Court erred in refusing to give the following instruction from Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784 (1990): "Plaintiffs are not required to eliminate all possible causes of damages in order to prove causation." However, other instructions informed the jury on causation. When other instructions adequately cover the law relating to a particular issue, it is not error to refuse a proposed instruction on the same subject. Valley Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Steadman's Hardware, Inc., 251 M 242, 824 P2d 250, 49 St. Rep. 13 (1992).

Showing of Prejudice Required to Prevail on Claim of Error in Giving Jury Instruction: As stated in Jacobsen v. St., 236 M 91, 769 P2d 694 (1989), a party assigning error to the giving of a jury instruction must show prejudice in order to prevail. Absent a showing by appellant that failure to give a particular instruction adversely affected his substantial rights and as long as the jury is properly instructed on the applicable law, the failure to give an instruction does not constitute reversible error. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993). See also Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Duty of Court to Review Jury Instructions:

Jury instructions on appeal are to be viewed in their entirety and in light of the evidence presented. Hash v. St., 247 M 497, 807 P2d 1363, 48 St. Rep. 277 (1991).

When considering jury instructions it must be remembered that often a jury is deluged with numerous instructions, many of which attempt to explain complex questions of law. The court on review must therefore balance the possible confusion created by layer upon layer of instructions with the necessity of providing the appropriate legal theories. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

Constructive Wrongful Discharge — "Without Due Process of Law": In a case for constructive wrongful discharge, it was reversible error for the court to instruct the jury that "without due process of law" is equivalent to "without authority of law". The jury was not correctly instructed concerning the requirements of due process, nor was it properly instructed on the type of conduct required for liability in a case under 42 U.S.C. 1983. Doohan v. Bigfork School District No. 38, 247 M 125, 805 P2d 1354, 48 St. Rep. 121 (1991).

Proposed Instruction on Preparation of Employment Termination Check Properly Rejected: The appellant argued that the lower court erred in rejecting the appellant's proposed instruction setting out for the jury the fact that state law required an employee to be paid immediately upon separation. The Supreme Court disagreed on the basis that the plaintiff had argued that the check had been made out before his meeting with management, demonstrating that the decision to fire him had been made prior to any hearing. The Supreme Court held that the instruction would mislead and confuse the jury and that each side had the opportunity during trial to argue the significance of the check being made out prior to the hearing. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

Plaintiff Entitled to Instruction Adaptable to His Case: A railroad employee sued the railroad for injuries he received on the job. The defendant objected to the wording of a jury instruction proposed by the plaintiff and adopted by the lower court. The defendant argued that the instruction imposed a bias upon the jury against the defendant's position that no manpower or equipment was available to assist the plaintiff at the time he was injured. The Supreme Court ruled that in a Federal Employers' Liability Act action in which the plaintiff has submitted to the jury evidence tending to prove an actionable violation of the Act, he is entitled to an instruction adaptable to his case. Kalanick v. Burlington N. RR Co., 242 M 45, 788 P2d 901, 47 St. Rep. 532 (1990).

Question of Statutory Applicability Preserved for Appeal: Defendant argued that by failing to include a violation of statute claim in a pretrial order, plaintiffs abandoned the claim on appeal. However, the issue was properly preserved through jury instructions when plaintiffs presented an instruction that stated the statutory language verbatim. Further, the statute was the subject of a motion for summary judgment. Notwithstanding certification, an order denying summary judgment is interlocutory; thus, the applicability of the statute was not waived insofar as it was presented in the motion for summary judgment. Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Instruction Stating Applicable Law: In a case in which the plaintiff's proposed instruction had no basis in Montana law and other instructions adequately presented the applicable law, the plaintiff could not claim reversible error as to the giving or denying of certain instructions. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

Emotional Distress Damages — Error to Submit to Jury: Jury instruction on emotional distress damages was improper when the evidence was insufficient to raise a question of fact about the existence of severe emotional distress. Defendant's cross-claim alleged only that he felt bad, lost sleep, and became withdrawn as a result of the defendant's failure to release plaintiff's personal guaranty in violation of the alleged agreement. The Supreme Court endorsed the severe emotional distress standard found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts, holding that the adoption of the standard was only a new interpretation of the existing "significant impact" requirement and not a departure from prior law. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989), affirmed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), to the extent that it addressed the "serious" or "severe" element articulated in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), which is synonymous with the "significant impact" element found in Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984).

Fiduciary Relationship — Error to Submit Instruction to Jury: Evidence attested to longstanding business relationship between defendant and First Bank but did not indicate that the bank had acted as a financial adviser to the defendant in a manner other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor/creditor relationship. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Fraud — Refusal to Instruct on Actual Fraud Affirmed: The Supreme Court ruled that an instruction on actual fraud was warranted only if the requesting party raised a question of fact by presenting some evidence on each of the nine elements of actual fraud. The District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on actual fraud when the defendant failed to introduce evidence that the bank made a knowingly false representation and intended the defendant to rely on it to his detriment. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Malicious Prosecution Damages — Error in Submitting Instruction to Jury: Defendant's counterclaim alleged that he had suffered lost profits and damage to his reputation as a result of the plaintiff's suit. No evidence that the suit was wrongful was introduced, and the Supreme Court held that the utilization of the legal process to resolve a good faith controversy cannot constitute a basis for damages. The court further held that the counterclaim was in reality a charge of malicious prosecution and that one of the basic elements, termination of a prior proceeding in favor of the alleging party, was not present making it an error to submit the issue to the jury. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Negligence and "Res Ipsa" Instructions on Negligent Suppression of Forest Fire: In an action against the state for negligence in suppressing a forest fire, the Supreme Court held that disputed jury instructions on the reasonable person, hindsight, and intervening cause correctly stated the principles of negligence law and related to the exercise of reasonable care by the state. It was not error for the court to refuse to give an instruction on res ipsa loquitur because by the definition stated in the instruction, it did not appear to apply to the case. Jacobsen v. St., 236 M 91, 769 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 207 (1989).

Jury Instruction on Issue of Retaliation for Participation in Discrimination Action: Acts of retaliation for participating in proceedings before the Human Rights Commission are discrimination actions separate and apart from the claim of discrimination in the original proceedings. Plaintiff is therefore entitled to jury instructions based on his claim of retaliation and is further entitled to comment on the retaliation in oral argument. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Instruction Adequate Concerning Shifting of Blame: Instruction adopted by the trial court was adequate in directing the jury that the only parties that could be held liable were those named in the suit at the time of trial. Rollins v. Blair, 235 M 343, 767 P2d 328, 46 St. Rep. 39 (1989).

Objection Raised for First Time on Appeal: When objections to instructions at trial were based on redundancy but not on wording, the Supreme Court refused to consider a challenge to wording on appeal. The Supreme Court will not consider a challenge to an instruction based upon a reason that was not raised in the court below. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988), followed in Greytak v. RegO Co., 257 M 147, 848 P2d 483, 50 St. Rep. 204 (1993), and in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Instructions on Equity Claims Refused: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The rule that a party is entitled to jury instructions adaptable to his theory of the case is not absolute. The instructions must be supported by credible evidence. Plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. The District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on estoppel and laches or to include those issues in the special verdict form for the jury. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Jury Instructions on Proximate Cause Not Appropriate in Criminal Case: Defendant in a homicide case argued that refusal to give his offered instructions on proximate causation deprived him of the opportunity for the jury to consider his theory that the victim's death was a result of the victim's own negligence. Proximate cause is not a term that is generally used in criminal jury instructions. Problems created by concepts of proximate cause should be faced as problems of the culpability required for conviction and not as problems of causation. St. v. Magruder, 234 M 492, 765 P2d 716, 45 St. Rep. 2075 (1988).

Instruction in Comparative Negligence, Not Sudden Emergency: A jury instruction, which presented three standards of care expected of motor vehicle drivers and said that failure to meet the standards constituted negligence, was more concrete than the sudden emergency instruction banned in White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986). Because it spoke to both drivers, it was considered an instruction in comparative negligence, not one in sudden emergency, and was properly given. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Coexistence of Instructions on Parol Evidence and Waiver: An instruction prohibiting consideration of parol evidence on what the contract language required for performance may coexist with an instruction and evidence on waiver. Pipe Indus. Ins. Fund Trust v. Consol. Pipe Trades Trust, 233 M 162, 760 P2d 711, 45 St. Rep. 1392 (1988).

Instructions Not Identical — Not Repetitious: The trial court gave two instructions on waiver that adequately covered applicable law but refused to give another offered instruction, holding it inapplicable. Of the given instructions, each covered areas left out by the other; other portions were simply repetitive, not conflicting. Instructions not essentially identical are not unduly repetitive. Pipe Indus. Ins. Fund Trust v. Consol. Pipe Trades Trust, 233 M 162, 760 P2d 711, 45 St. Rep. 1392 (1988).

Inapplicable Subject Matter in Proposed Instructions: The Supreme Court cited In re Estate of Hogan, 218 M 428, 708 P2d 1018, 42 St. Rep. 1711 (1985), in holding that a party is not prejudiced by a refusal of proposed instructions when the subject matter of the instructions is not applicable to the facts or supported by trial evidence. Webcor Electronics, Inc. v. Home Electronics, Inc., 231 M 377, 754 P2d 491, 45 St. Rep. 695 (1988), followed in St. v. Barnes, 232 M 405, 758 P2d 264, 45 St. Rep. 1150 (1988). See also Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Jury to Be Informed of Effect of Verdict: The Supreme Court adopted the reasoning of the Idaho Supreme Court, as expressed in Seppi v. Betty, 579 P2d 683 (1978), in holding that Montana juries can and should be trusted with the information about the consequences of their verdicts. Upon the request of a party, the trial court must give this instruction unless the court finds the issue so complex as to confuse the jury. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Instruction on Duty to Display Traffic Warning Flags — Important Theory of Case: Plaintiff objected to giving of an instruction regarding his duty to display warning flags on the highway near his disabled vehicle on the ground that because a truck parked behind the disabled vehicle was exhibiting its flashing emergency lights, there was no need for warning flags. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting both the statutory duty to place warning flags and defendant's right to instruction on that duty as an important theory of the case. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Instruction on Duty to Reduce Speed Improperly Denied — Important Theory of Case: The District Court improperly denied defendant's proposed instruction on relative duties between a pedestrian on a highway and a driver approaching the pedestrian, citing as grounds for denial: (1) 61-8-303 does not apply to pedestrians not in a crosswalk; and (2) under evidence in the case, the driver, prior to the accident, did not perceive any special hazard with respect to the pedestrian. The Supreme Court remanded because 61-8-303 applied to all pedestrians whether or not in a crosswalk and because the second reason was an issue for determination by the jury. The duty of the driver to reduce speed was an important part of the theory of plaintiff's case. Refusal to instruct constituted reversible error. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Investigative Responsibility of Newspaper Before Publishing: A newspaper has a duty to investigate before publishing when it has facts that indicate material is highly suspect. The Supreme Court remanded this case upon finding that a jury instruction defining "reckless disregard of the truth" as being equivalent to having serious doubts about the truth tended to shield a newspaper from its investigative responsibility. Sible v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 224 M 163, 729 P2d 1271, 43 St. Rep. 2101 (1986).

Jury Instruction on Presumption of Accidental Fire Inappropriate — Evidence of Arson: Defendant's proposed jury instruction that ". . . ordinarily, it will be presumed that an unexplained fire was caused by an accident or natural causes or, at least, that it was not of criminal origin" was properly refused when suspicious facts strongly indicating arson accompanied the fire. St. v. Atlas, 224 M 92, 728 P2d 421, 43 St. Rep. 2042 (1986).

No Bad Faith Instruction in Absence of Actual Knowledge of Defects — Knowledge Not Imputed: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not instructing the jury on breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, arguing that the covenant should have been applied to a real estate partnership and to a development partnership. The Supreme Court found no error in refusing to instruct as against the real estate partnership because it was not shown at trial that the partnership had actual knowledge of claimed defects in the land necessary to constitute bad faith. The court further held that while knowledge may be imputed to a real estate partnership as a member of a development partnership, it cannot be imputed from the development partnership to the real estate partnership. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Jury Instruction Regarding Ambiguities in Product Labeling and Instructions for Use — Issue of Fact: Herbicide manufacturer contended the District Court erred in instructing the jury that ambiguities in the wording on product labels and in application instructions were to be construed against the manufacturers, claiming that this rule of construction was a rule of law for the court to apply and not a proper subject for a jury instruction. Plaintiff argued that the instruction was justified because the manufacturer presented the meaning of the application instructions as a factual issue at trial. The Supreme Court agreed, concluding that the jury instruction was a correct statement of law under the facts of the case. Vandalia Ranch, Inc. v. Farmers Union Oil & Supply Co., 221 M 253, 718 P2d 647, 43 St. Rep. 790 (1986).

No Evidence in Record to Warrant Jury Instruction on Mitigating Circumstances: Defendant contended District Court erred in refusing to give jury instructions on the lesser offense of mitigated deliberate homicide. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no error in refusing to instruct for two reasons: (1) the only potentially mitigating circumstance presented at trial concerned defendant's use of alcohol on the night in question; however, in St. v. White, 194 M 421, 632 P2d 1118, 38 St. Rep. 1417 (1981), the court held that voluntary intoxication alone was insufficient to show the extreme mental or emotional stress which would mitigate deliberate homicide charges; and (2) since defendant's main defense at trial was alibi, he was entitled either to an acquittal or to be found guilty, and if the jury believed his testimony, it would have been inconsistent with finding defendant guilty of mitigated deliberate homicide. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Verbatim Reading of Unfair Claim Settlement Practices as Jury Instruction — Harmless Error: An insurer claimed the District Court erred in including in its charge to the jury a verbatim reproduction of the 14 proscribed unfair claim settlement practices contained in 33-18-201, contending that a majority of the practices had no applicability to this case. On appeal, the Supreme Court found there was at least an arguable basis for submission to the jury of 12 of the 14 practices enumerated, and that inclusion of the two inapplicable practices in the jury instruction was harmless and not prejudicial. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Sudden Emergency Instruction — No Longer to Be Used: The Supreme Court held that the sudden emergency instruction may no longer be used because the instruction, which provided a test for actions done in the course of a sudden emergency, added nothing to the established law applicable to any negligence case and might only leave an impression in the minds of jurors that a driver is somehow excused from the ordinary standard of care because an emergency existed. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), distinguished in Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988), and followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Duty to Warn of Known Danger — Lack of Warning of Known Danger as Defect: In a tort action over injury caused by a hay baler, the Supreme Court held, based on the holding of Brown v. N. Am. Mfg. Co., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), that it was error to instruct the jury that a manufacturer has no duty to warn a person who claims to be entitled to a warning if the person actually knows of the danger. Under the facts of this case, there is a duty to warn of a known danger if the product is unreasonably dangerous and lack of such warning can make an otherwise nondefective product defective. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986). Recognition of a failure to warn claim and the Brown criteria were applied in Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993). See also Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Tort Action — Refusal to Instruct on Party's Central Contention — Reversible Error: In a tort action, it was error for the District Court to refuse to instruct on the central contentions of the plaintiff and instead undertake to instruct the jury in an incomplete manner. Taken as a whole, the instructions did not allow the jury to consider plaintiff's central contentions regarding unnecessary hazard rendering the machine defective and unreasonably dangerous. It is reversible error to refuse to instruct on an important part of a party's theory of the case. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986).

Instructions Taken as Whole Not Contradictory: On issue of partial abandonment of an easement, the jury instructions taken as a whole were not contradictory; thus, the trial court did not commit error in giving certain of the instructions to the jury. As stated in Rock Springs Corp. v. Pierre, 37 St. Rep. 1378 (1980), the instructions are considered given in their entirety. Where the jury instructions, taken as a whole, state the law applicable to the case, a party cannot claim reversible error as to the giving of certain instructions. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Denial of Proposed Jury Instructions — No Error: The defendant was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and on appeal contended that denial of two of his proposed jury instructions constituted error. At trial, he had sought to introduce the victim's medical and Youth Court records in an attempt to impeach her credibility as a witness. The District Court refused to allow inspection of the records, and the Supreme Court ruled that because of the refusal, a jury instruction relating to credibility based on such records could not be given. His second proposed instruction stated the precaution that rape is easy to allege and difficult to defend against and called for instructing the jury to view the victim's testimony with caution. The Supreme Court, quoting St. v. Liddell, 211 M 180, 685 P2d 918, 41 St. Rep. 1293 (1984), ruled that such a cautionary instruction "is an improper and unwarranted comment on the evidence and is not required under the law or by reason of public policy. Therefore, such an instruction should not be given." The propriety of denying the defendant's proposed jury instructions was adequately supported, and conviction was affirmed. St. v. Mendenhall, 219 M 328, 721 P2d 1255, 42 St. Rep. 2060 (1985).

Questioning on Voir Dire: Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing attorney to pose to prospective jurors hypothetical questions about possible instructions from the court to ascertain if the prospective jurors would follow the law as given to the jury by the court. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985), followed in Young v. Horton, 259 M 34, 855 P2d 502, 50 St. Rep. 662 (1993).

Technical Error — Not Reversible: In a condemnation action, the jury was given an instruction with a technical defect. On appeal, appellants failed to show any prejudice or interference with their substantial rights by reason of the instruction. Mere technical defects in the instructions, if considered as a whole, do not render such errors reversible error. Unless an error affects the substantial rights of an appellant, judgment will not be reversed. St. v. DeTienne, 218 M 249, 707 P2d 534, 42 St. Rep. 1557 (1985), followed in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2005 MT 217, 328 M 260, __P3d__ (2005).

"Substantial Factor" Rule To Apply:

The substantial factor rule applies when two causes concur to bring about an injury and either cause would have been sufficient for the result. Thus, it applied in this case when the necessity for amputation of the leg of a state prison inmate could have been caused either by the inmate's preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs or by the negligence of doctors treating him for an ingrown toenail. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

The Supreme Court stated its approval of the "legal cause" (substantial factor) instruction in this medical malpractice case involving alleged concurrent and subsequent tortfeasors (surgeon, nurses, and radiologist). The court stated that the rule was developed primarily for cases such as the one under consideration in which application of the "but for" (proximate cause) rule would allow each defendant to escape responsibility because the conduct of one or more others would have been sufficient to produce the same result. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985), followed in Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985), and Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996).

Instruction on Duty to Examine Bank Statement That Was Not Sent: Trial court properly refused defendant bank's offered jury instruction on the duty of plaintiff depositor to examine statements and report errors within a reasonable time because the statements were not sent to depositor and there was no question in the case as to his unauthorized signature or as to alterations. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Instructions Expanding Pleadings — Prejudice Negated by New Trial on Other Grounds: The grant of a new trial negated any prejudice to defendant from unexpected proposed supplemental jury instructions submitted by plaintiff on the last court day before trial began. The defendant argued the additional instructions were in effect amendments to the pleadings and contained new legal theories. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Instructions on Statutes Preferred: In a wrongful death action arising out of a head-on collision, plaintiff offered instructions quoting federal and state laws which concern the dimming of headlights at night on the highway. The court gave the instruction concerning the federal regulations but refused to give the instruction quoting 61-9-220 and 61-9-221. Plaintiff pointed out that a violation of the federal regulation may be considered by the jury in determining negligence, while a violation of a Montana statute is negligence as a matter of law. The Supreme Court said it would have been preferable for the District Court to instruct on Montana statutes as they pertain to the use of high and low beams of headlights at night. The court also found that the instruction given was consistent with the statutes, so the jury was not misled. Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Submission of Instruction Not Needed in Order to Appeal State's Instruction: The state contended that because appellant did not submit a jury instruction defining "reasonable doubt", he should be barred from complaining about the state's instruction that was given by the court. That rule applies, however, only when the court fails to instruct on a point of law. The appellant clearly voiced his objection to the instruction and stated his reasons with particularity. The court, nonetheless, overruled the objection and made no effort to strike, clarify, or alter the instruction in response to appellant's objection. The appellant preserved his assignment of error. St. v. Lucero, 214 M 334, 693 P2d 511, 41 St. Rep. 2509 (1984).

No Error in Giving, Refusing Certain Instructions: There was no error in refusing one instruction when the point was adequately covered in another instruction. The instruction that an original survey of real property boundary must, whenever possible, be retraced is not inconsistent with the instruction that jury, in making decision, is not to consider or conjecture as to effect of decision on boundaries or corners of adjacent lands owned by persons not parties to suit. Therefore, both instructions were justifiable. Funk v. Robbin, 212 M 437, 689 P2d 1215, 41 St. Rep. 1848 (1984), followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Indemnity — Refusal to Instruct on Active/Passive Negligence Not Reversible Error: Where the plaintiff supplier of certain air pollution control equipment brought an action against the defendant manufacturing company for breach of warranty, the District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on the active/passive negligence of the plaintiff. The record in this case shows that there was no active negligence on the part of the plaintiff and he therefore did not lose his right to indemnity under the rationale of Town Pump, Inc. v. Diteman, 191 M 98, 622 P2d 212, 38 St. Rep. 54 (1981). Iowa Mfg. Co. v. Joy Mfg. Co., 206 M 26, 669 P2d 1057, 40 St. Rep. 1479 (1983).

"Negative" Jury Instructions Discouraged as Confusing to Jury: Where the defendant in a condemnation action sought compensation for the decreased value of his property as a result of heat, dust, and noise arising from travel upon a proposed interstate frontage road, the District Court did not err in refusing to give an instruction requested by the state that injected a nonissue into the case. Under the rationale of Brown v. N. Am. Mfg., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), the court has discouraged the use of such negative instructions to prevent confusion. St. v. Howery, 204 M 417, 664 P2d 1387, 40 St. Rep. 975 (1983).

Standard Self-Defense Instruction Given — Repetitious Instruction Tailored to Facts Held Improper: In aggravated assault trial, the 9th instruction fully set forth the elements of self-defense and the 10th instruction related to self-defense by one assaulted with fists, as defendant claimed he had been. The 10th instruction was repetitious and may have placed undue emphasis on the requirements for self-defense. On remand following reversal on another issue, the court recommended that the repetitious instruction not be given. St. v. White, 202 M 491, 658 P2d 1111, 40 St. Rep. 235 (1983).

Jury Instruction — Breadth of Statutory Incorporation by Reference: Section 69-4-201 specifically incorporates only the construction standards of the National Electrical Safety Code rather than the code in its entirety. In the absence of specific statutory incorporation, the provisions of the National Electrical Safety Code can only furnish evidence of a standard of care to be considered in determining negligence. Therefore, the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violation of any provision of the National Electrical Safety Code constitutes negligence per se was proper. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), overruled in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988), and followed with respect to the Architects' Handbook of Professional Practice in Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. Cannaday, 230 M 151, 749 P2d 63, 45 St. Rep. 102 (1988).

Defendant Entirely Liable — Evidence Not Permitting Apportionment: Plaintiff injured his back when the seat in the locomotive he was operating broke and threw him backward. Plaintiff had had two prior back injuries which had been successfully treated. Defendant objected to the following instruction, contending it was an improper statement of the law: "Where a pre-existing condition exists which has been aggravated by the accident, it is your duty, if possible, to apportion the amount of disability and pain between that caused by the pre-existing condition and that caused by the accident. But if you find that the evidence does not permit such an apportionment, then the defendant is liable for the entire disability." The Supreme Court found the instruction proper, relying on an analogous situation in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), and held that a plaintiff should not go uncompensated should the evidence not permit an apportionment of injuries and damages. Callihan v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 350, 654 P2d 972, 39 St. Rep. 2158 (1982), followed in Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Lack of Basis for Instructions: In a suit by tenants against a landlord whose building burned, the trial court properly refused the landlord's requested instructions since some of them had no citation of authority showing them to be correct statements of the law, the landlord did not point to the record evidence justifying the instructions, the jury was adequately instructed on both the common-law negligence and the negligence per se theories, and the requested instructions were repetitious and were conflicting since they did not distinguish between the two negligence theories. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Repetitious Instructions: Repetitious instructions setting forth abstract principles of law should be avoided. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions on Effect of Contributory Negligence Properly Given: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that the plaintiff was contributorily negligent and the District Court did not commit error in giving verbatim the Montana Jury Instruction Guide instruction No. 4 on the effect of contributory negligence. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions Properly Refused — Harmless Error: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, the District Court did not err in refusing to give the plaintiff's jury instructions relating to the defendant's negligence. Because the jury based its decision on the plaintiff's contributory negligence, the defendant's negligence could not have affected the result in this case. If any error occurred, it was harmless. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

"Mere Happening" Instruction — Propriety — No Inference Except Res Ipsa Loquitur: Plaintiff, a mail carrier, was attempting to negotiate a left turn. Evidence was unclear as to whether he signaled for the turn. The roadway into which he was attempting to turn was a private driveway open to public use. While turning he was struck by defendant, who was attempting to pass. The road was lined for passing and visibility was clear. The jury was instructed that "[t]he mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not give rise to legal inference that it was caused by negligence or that any party to this action was negligent or otherwise at fault". The Supreme Court said that it can be confusing to a jury to give this instruction and recommended against it, but held that it was not prejudicial error to give the instruction in this case in light of the facts of the case and other instructions given. The Supreme Court affirmed that the "mere happening" instruction is totally incompatible in res ipsa loquitur cases. It is the law in negligence cases that negligence may not be inferred from the happening of an accident, but that res ipsa loquitur is an exception to the rule. Sampson v. Snow, 194 M 392, 632 P2d 1122, 38 St. Rep. 1441 (1981).

Proposed Jury Instructions — Definition of "Impeach" — Consideration of Instructions as a Whole: A defendant was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault. On appeal, he alleged error in the failure to give a jury instruction on the definition of "impeach". The Supreme Court held that the definition was not necessary because the jury was fully instructed on that aspect of the law and defense counsel had not been precluded from arguing his theory of the case. Another alleged error was in the failure to give an instruction outlining certain types of evidence that could serve to impeach a witness' testimony. The Supreme Court said that, although it would not have been error to give such a specific instruction, it was unnecessary. The instructions given contained the substance of this omitted instruction. The instructions as a whole were considered in determining adequacy. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Instruction on Entitlement of Broker to Sales Commission Held Incorrect — No Error in Refusal: In an action by the plaintiff real estate brokerage firm to recover a real estate sales commission from the defendant, the trial court did not err in refusing the defendant's proposed instructions, relating to payment of the sales commission. The proposed instruction was misleading in that it implied that a broker employed to "sell or effect a sale" would not be entitled to his commission if the sale had not been consummated, even if such failure was due to acts of the seller. A broker is entitled to his commission even if the sale has not been completed if a ready, willing, and able buyer is procured and the failure to consummate was solely due to the wrongful acts or interference of the seller. Assoc. Agency of Bozeman, Inc. v. Pasha, 191 M 407, 625 P2d 38, 38 St. Rep. 344 (1981).

Jury Instruction Correct as to Real Estate Law — No Prejudice Shown Upon Referral: In an action by the plaintiff real estate brokerage firm to recover a real estate sales commission from the defendant, the trial court did not err in refusing to give the defendant's requested jury instruction. A party is not prejudiced by a refusal of his proposed instruction where the subject matter of the instruction is not applicable to the pleadings or the facts, is not supported by the evidence, or is adequately covered by other instructions submitted to the jury. While the instruction accurately sets forth the law that a landowner must be given a copy of the listing agreement, the subject was never raised in the pleadings and the defendant admitted that he may have received a copy and misplaced it. Thus, no error was committed. Assoc. Agency of Bozeman, Inc. v. Pasha, 191 M 407, 625 P2d 38, 38 St. Rep. 344 (1981).

No Prejudice From Superfluous Instruction: In an action by the plaintiff real estate brokerage firm to recover a real estate sales commission from the defendant, the trial court did not err in refusing to give the defendant's requested instruction setting forth the law of the Statute of Frauds. The contract at issue is not an oral contract for deed but the written listing agreement signed by the defendant. As there is no dispute over the listing agreement, the instruction was unnecessary and the defendant was not prejudiced by its refusal. Assoc. Agency of Bozeman, Inc. v. Pasha, 191 M 407, 625 P2d 38, 38 St. Rep. 344 (1981).

Denial of Instruction as Incorrect Statement of Law — Primary Duty of Avoiding Collision: The appellant claimed error in the trial court's denial of his proposed jury instruction stating that the primary duty of avoiding an accident is on a vehicle approaching from the rear when the vehicle in front has signaled for 100 feet. This was an inaccurate statement of the law, and as given, the jury instructions adequately explained the duties of the passing motorist and the left-turning motorist. Even if it had been a correct statement of the law, the proposed statement would have added nothing to the jury's understanding of the applicable law. Burns v. U. & R. Express, 191 M 343, 624 P2d 487, 38 St. Rep. 302 (1981), followed in St. v. DeGraw, 235 M 53, 764 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 2154 (1988).

Wrongful Death Action — Jury Entitled to Consider Whether Contractor Followed Directions of State: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, the court properly instructed the jury that it could consider whether the defendant properly followed the directions and instructions of the state.

These directions are one factor to be considered in determining whether the contractor acted reasonably. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Manufacturer's Duty to Warn in Strict Liability Cases — Erroneous Instruction Not Prejudicial: Where plaintiffs who were injured in the fall of an elevator brought a products liability action based on strict liability against the manufacturer, of the elevator cable, it was error for the court to instruct the jury that the manufacturer has a duty to warn of defects known to him only if he believes that the user of the product will not discover the defect. In strict liability cases, a manufacturer is not relieved of the duty to warn because of any prior experience by the consumer with the product. However, where the evidence showed that the failure to warn was not the cause of the plaintiffs' injuries, the erroneous instruction was not prejudicial. Rost v. C. F. & I. Steel Corp., 189 M 485, 616 P2d 383, 37 St. Rep. 1657 (1980), distinguished in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

"Mere Happening" Instruction Found Incompatible: The "mere happening" instruction in a res ipsa case may suggest to the jury that they are foreclosed from considering the evidence provided by the happening of the accident itself. The instructions in this case were found so incompatible that a reversal was required. Helmke v. Goff, 182 M 494, 597 P2d 1131 (1979).

Failure to Properly Instruct: There was a complete failure to instruct the jury on damages and to properly instruct the jury on the issues relating to respondent's counterclaims. Hence, the trial court decision was vacated and remanded for a new trial. Billings Leasing Co. v. Payne, 176 M 217, 577 P2d 386 (1978).

Circumstantial Evidence Instruction Proper Only When No Direct Evidence: A confession, such as that appearing in the record, constitutes direct evidence of the corpus delecti; thus it is not error to refuse a circumstantial evidence instruction. St. v. Hallam, 175 M 492, 575 P2d 55 (1978).

Negligence Per Se — Directed Verdict: The court should have granted a directed verdict against defendant truckdriver who carelessly placed himself in a position of not being able to stop behind codefendant's truck and negligently passed to avoid collision but collided instead with an oncoming vehicle in which plaintiff's husband was a passenger. The court was in error to instruct the jury on sudden emergency when the driver's negligence created his own emergency. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Basis for Approving Instructions: The court did not err in refusing certain instructions when repetitious, misleading, or an incorrect statement of the law, or in giving instructions which were a correct statement of all relevant rules that have emerged from accepted case authorities. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Effect of Preliminary Instruction — Criminal Trial: Judge's reading cautionary instruction in substantially standard language prior to introduction of evidence was not error. St. v. Armstrong, 172 M 296, 562 P2d 1129 (1977).

Instructions to Be Evaluated as a Whole: When jury instructions as a whole correctly state the law, prejudice is not created because of refusal of a proposed instruction. Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976); St. v. Anderson, 171 M 188, 557 P2d 795 (1976); Holland v. Konda, 142 M 536, 385 P2d 272 (1963).

Comment on Evidence: Court erred in giving jury instruction based on its own finding of fact from inconclusive testimony. Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976).

Refusal to Give Negligence Instruction — Conflicting Evidence: Refusal of instruction on reckless misconduct and the defense of contributory negligence was error in negligence action where both drivers were driving late at night without headlights, and reasonable men could reach opposing conclusions as to whether or not defendant was willfully and wantonly negligent. Mallory v. Cloud, 167 M 115, 535 P2d 1270 (1975).

Instructions — Theory of the Case: When defendant bank was sued for negligently cashing plaintiffs' check, the bank was entitled to instruction regarding possible defenses based upon the provisions of the U.C.C. since a party is entitled to have instructions given which are adaptable to his theory of the case. Williams v. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Bozeman, 167 M 24, 534 P2d 1247 (1975).

Instructions in Sex Offense Cases: Refusal to give an instruction that the testimony of a complaining witness in a sex offense case should be viewed with caution since the charge is easily made and difficult to disprove is not in error unless specific cause is shown for distrusting the testimony of the complaining witness such as manifest malice, desire for revenge, or an absence of corroborating evidence tending to support the facts testified to by the complaining witness. St. v. Ballew, 166 M 270, 532 P2d 407 (1975).

Specificity of Objections — Purpose: Objections to jury instructions must be specific. The purpose of this rule is to give the judge an opportunity to correct his own errors, and objections will not be heard on appeal unless they were initially raised at trial. Highway Comm'n v. Beldon, 166 M 246, 531 P2d 1324 (1975), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993).

Rules of the Road — Instructions on Nonapplicable Law as Error: In action for negligence in making left turn in no passing zone, it was error to instruct jury on inapplicable laws prohibiting anyone from driving on left side of road, especially when the instruction was combined with instruction that statutory violations are negligence as a matter of law. Rude v. Neal, 165 M 520, 530 P2d 428 (1974).

No Evidence of Negligence — Instruction in Ordinary Care Proper: In action for wrongful death of boy who was killed by brahma bull at rodeo, jury instructions on ordinary care of a reasonable person were sufficient where there was no proof of negligence against the rodeo company. Ross v. Golden St. Rodeo Co., 165 M 337, 530 P2d 1166 (1974).

Instructions — Motor Vehicle Negligence — Error: Court erred in giving instructions which permitted jury to find plaintiff contributorily negligent when such was impossible as a matter of law. Smith v. Babcock, 157 M 81, 482 P2d 1014 (1971).

Instructions — Negligence — Effect of F.E.L.A.: Instructions correctly blended motor vehicle, state negligence, and Federal Employer's Liability Act negligence laws, and jury was properly charged. Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 M 12, 473 P2d 549 (1970).

Interchange of Words — Preserving for Review: Appellant who objected to jury instruction but did not specifically object to an interchange of words therein did not preserve review of the interchange. Cross v. Tretheway, 155 M 337, 471 P2d 538 (1970).

Instructions Proper — Negligence — Failure to Offer Instructions: Instructions were proper on issue of wanton negligence. Plaintiff was precluded from assigning several instructions as error because he failed to offer any instructions on the issue. Gunderson v. Brewster, 154 M 405, 466 P2d 589 (1970).

Refusal to Give Instructions — Deprivation of Defense: Denial of offered instructions which were adaptable to defendant's theory of the case was prejudicial error where such denial deprived him of a possible defense of assumption of risk. Wollan v. Lord, 142 M 498, 385 P2d 102 (1963), distinguished in Graveley v. Springer, 145 M 486, 402 P2d 41 (1965).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Instruction to Be Offered: If plaintiff desired the jury instructed on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it was his duty to tender such instruction and request that it be given. Whitney v. NW. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 125 M 528, 242 P2d 257 (1952).

Instructions to Be Obeyed: Instructions to the jury constitute the law of the case and must be obeyed by the jury. A verdict contrary to them is against law, even though they be erroneous, necessitating a new trial, as where under the undisputed evidence an instruction amounted to one to find for defendant, whereas the jury found for plaintiff. Ingman v. Hewitt, 107 M 267, 86 P2d 653 (1938).

Failure to Request Instruction on Evidence Objected to — Effect: Where in an action against a principal and his surety declarations of the former were admissible as to him but inadmissible as to the latter, failure of the surety to request an instruction that such evidence should be limited in its application to the principal barred the surety from complaining of the court's ruling admitting the evidence over objection. Outlook Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 70 M 8, 223 P 905 (1924).

Objection to Unspecific Instruction — Offer of Instruction Required: A party who desires a more specific instruction than the one given must offer one to conform with his views of the law. Zanos v. Great N. Ry., 60 M 17, 198 P 138 (1921); Heitman v. Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Ry., 45 M 406, 123 P 401 (1912); Rand v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 398, 107 P 87 (1910); St. v. Broadbent, 19 M 467, 48 P 775 (1897); Mulligan v. Mont. Union Ry., 19 M 135, 47 P 795 (1897).

Transcript on Appeal: Section 93-5502, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 46, M.R.Civ.P.), providing what shall be deemed excepted to, was not designed to modify the provision of subsection 5 of section 93-5101, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 51, M.R.Civ.P.), so as to do away with the necessity of identifying or authenticating, in the transcript on appeal, an instruction which was refused. Roberts v. Sinnott, 54 M 114, 169 P 49 (1917).

Objection to Instructions — Application of Rule: The provision that at the settlement of the instructions the particular grounds of objection or exception to those deemed erroneous shall be stated, else a motion for a new trial shall not be granted nor a cause reversed by the Supreme Court for error in them, applies only to instructions given and not to those refused. Billings Realty Co. v. Big Ditch Co., 43 M 251, 115 P 828 (1911).

SPECIFICATION OF OBJECTION REQUIRED

Failure to Object — Waiver of Right to Appeal: Failure to object to a jury instruction at the trial level amounts to a waiver of the right to raise an objection on appeal. St. v. Holzapfel, 230 M 105, 748 P2d 953, 45 St. Rep. 53 (1988), citing St. v. Long, 223 M 502, 726 P2d 1364, 43 St. Rep. 1948 (1986). Holzapfel was followed in Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998).

No Objection to Jury View — New Trial Not Granted: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not granting a new trial when the jury was allowed to view the property prior to the time the plaintiff rested her case and in not giving a cautionary instruction. However, the record showed that plaintiff's counsel made no objection to the jury view and did not request a cautionary instruction. The Supreme Court found no District Court error for a procedure to which plaintiff did not object. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

No Objection to Instructions — Law of the Case: An instruction given without objection becomes the law of the case. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Lack of Basis for Instructions: In a suit by tenants against a landlord whose building burned, the trial court properly refused the landlord's requested instructions for some of them had no citation of authority showing them to be correct statements of the law, the landlord did not point to the record evidence justifying the instructions, the jury was adequately instructed on both the common-law negligence and the negligence per se theories, and the requested instructions were repetitious and were conflicting, as they did not distinguish between the two negligence theories. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Objections Not Raised at Trial — Effect: Instructions were not reviewable on appeal because objections made did not cover objections and contentions urged on appeal. The objection must point out where the evidence is insufficient in order to preserve it for appeal. Roberts Realty Corp. v. Great Falls, 160 M 144, 500 P2d 956 (1972); Dieruf v. Gallaher, 156 M 440, 481 P2d 322 (1971); Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 M 12, 473 P2d 549 (1970); Vogel v. Fetter Livestock Co., 144 M 127, 394 P2d 766 (1964). See also Zimmerman v. Bozeman Prod. Credit Ass'n, 233 M 156, 759 P2d 166, 45 St. Rep. 1387 (1988); Reno v. Erickstein, 209 M 36, 679 P2d 1204 (1984).

Appellate Review of Erroneous Instructions: The Supreme Court, in reviewing errors assigned on the giving of instructions, may consider only the particular objections presented to the trial court at the time the instructions were settled. Holland Furnace Co. v. Rounds, 139 M 75, 360 P2d 412 (1961); Teesdale v. Anschutz Drilling Co., 138 M 427, 357 P2d 4 (1960); Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926); Stiemke v. Jankovich, 72 M 363, 233 P 904 (1925); Eablonski v. Close, 70 M 292, 225 P 129 (1924); Humber v. Marshall, 60 M 267, 198 P 747 (1921); Lehane v. Butte Elec. Ry., 37 M 564, 97 P 1038 (1908).

Failure to Object — New Trial or Appeal Unavailable: The District Court is precluded from granting a new trial for error in an instruction not specifically pointed out at the time of settlement of the instructions, and on appeal the Supreme Court will not consider any error not so pointed out. Pilgeram v. Haas, 118 M 431, 167 P2d 339 (1946); Lundquist v. Jennison, 66 M 516, 214 P 67 (1923).

Appellate Review — Objection Required at Time Instructions Settled: In reviewing instructions, the Supreme Court is limited to objections made at the time the instructions were settled. Tripp v. Silver Dyke Min. Co., 70 M 120, 224 P 272 (1924); St. v. Newman, 66 M 180, 213 P 805 (1923); Morgan v. Hines, 65 M 306, 211 P 778 (1922); Sanborn Co. v. Powers, 58 M 214, 190 P 990 (1920); Stokes v. Long, 52 M 470, 159 P 28 (1916); Flathead County St. Bank v. Ingham, 51 M 438, 153 P 1005 (1915); Allen v. Bear Creek Coal Co., 43 M 269, 115 P 673 (1911); Frederick v. Hale, 42 M 153, 112 P 70 (1910).

No Review of Improper Instruction: The Supreme Court in its review of instructions is limited to the objections made by counsel for appellant at the time they were settled. Though an instruction may be incorrect but not open to the particular objection urged against it, the court may not declare error on that account. Outlook Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 70 M 8, 223 P 905 (1924).

Statutory Requirements as Controlling: An assignment of error based on the refusal of an instruction may not be considered on appeal where the instruction is not identified or presented in the manner required by statute. Roberts v. Sinnott, 54 M 114, 169 P 49 (1917).

SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION

Inadvertent Omission of Instruction by Court — Objection by Affidavit — Waiver: The trial court inadvertently omitted an instruction regarding the standard of care for a bicyclist. One of the plaintiff's attorneys noticed the omission but did not object or bring the omission to the court's attention until later when filing an affidavit. Plaintiff moved for a new trial based on the omission. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial, holding that the objection was untimely, that the lack of the instruction did not prejudice plaintiff, and that failure to object at the time that the instructions were given constituted waiver of the objection. Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Failure to Object to Court Solution for Improper Jury Instruction — New Trial Precluded: During settlement of jury instructions, plaintiff withdrew an objectionable instruction, but the instruction was inadvertently read to the jury anyway. The court reported to the jury that the attorneys had stipulated that the instruction should be removed, the correct instruction was given, and the erroneous instruction was not sent to the jury room. Defendant argued that because the inadvertent instruction was a misstatement of law, he was prejudiced and therefore entitled to a new trial. The Supreme Court followed Rasmussen v. Sibert, 153 M 286, 456 P2d 835 (1969), in holding that even if defendant objected to the reading of the incorrect instruction, there was no objection made to the solution used by the trial court in dealing with the mistake. Because defendant did not move for mistrial or other corrective action, choosing instead to submit the case to the jury based on the posture that it was in, he was precluded from requesting relief in the nature of a mistrial for the first time on appeal after receiving a verdict he considered adverse. The same rationale applied to defendant's complaint regarding an allegedly improper closing argument by plaintiff's attorney. Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Motor Vehicle Accident — Sudden Emergency Instruction Usually Improper: As defendant passed codefendant driving downhill, codefendant speeded up and defendant cut in front of him while only 20 feet from an oncoming vehicle. Codefendant overturned in the other lane, and the next two oncoming vehicles were involved in a collision with him. Defendant's proposed sudden emergency doctrine instruction was properly refused. The instruction should not be given in an ordinary motor vehicle accident case. It is unnecessary and confusing, and the ordinary rules of negligence are applicable and sufficient. Further, a test for giving the instruction is that the perilous situation was not created by the person confronted by it and whom the instruction favors; in this case, whether defendant was negligent was very much in dispute, and the instruction was a comment on the evidence as it implied no negligence on his part. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984), followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Negligence Instruction Commenting on Evidence — Theory of Instruction Covered by Other Instructions: Defendant's instruction based on the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent was denied because the court believed it commented on the evidence. Other instructions adequately covered the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent, and the jury found the codefendant 100% negligent. The instruction was thus properly denied. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Sufficiency of Objection — Incorrect Statement of Law — Sufficiency of Evidence: In settling a boundary dispute, the Supreme Court held that the objection to a jury instruction as being an incorrect statement of law was insufficient, not having specified the defect. Considering the jury instructions as a whole, the Supreme Court held that the jury was fully and correctly instructed on the law, that there was substantial evidence to support its verdict, and that no prejudice to the defendants arose from the failure of the court to give a proffered jury instruction. Nott v. Booke, 194 M 251, 633 P2d 678, 38 St. Rep. 1507 (1981).

Insufficient Objection — Reversal Improper: Where the objections to instructions did not specifically point out the alleged error, the Supreme Court may not reverse the cause on that account. Adams & Gregoire, Inc. v. Nat'l Indem. Co., 141 M 103, 375 P2d 112 (1962); Franck v. Hudson, 140 M 480, 373 P2d 951 (1962); Dimich v. N. Pac. Ry., 136 M 485, 348 P2d 786 (1959).

Negligence Action — Objection Found Insufficient: In a personal injury action based on negligence, objection to instructions because they placed a higher duty on defendants than that fixed by law was not sufficiently specific to be subject to review. LeCompte v. Wardell, 134 M 490, 333 P2d 1028 (1958).

Contract Action — Objection Found Insufficient: An objection to the effect that the giving of an instruction in an action to recover on an insurance policy was "an attempt by the court to nullify" a provision of the contract was insufficient to put the court in error. Scinski v. Great N. Life Ins. Co., 110 M 106, 99 P2d 218 (1940).

Specific Objection Not Included in General Objection: Where a party at time of settlement of instructions stated a general objection to an instruction, a new and different ground of objection not included in the general one was not properly available either on motion for new trial or on appeal. Brennan v. Mayo, 100 M 439, 50 P2d 245 (1935).

Specification of Law Not Required: The rule that no judgment shall be reversed on appeal for any error in instructions not specifically pointed out and excepted to at their settlement does not require that the party interposing an objection also state the correct principle of law upon which it is based. Though the objection was based on a wrong principle, if the instruction was actually erroneous, its review is nevertheless proper. First Nat'l Bank v. Perrine, 97 M 262, 33 P2d 997 (1934).

Instruction Unsupported by Evidence: An objection to an instruction that the evidence did not warrant its giving was insufficient under the provision that requires the objecting party to specify particularly wherein the instruction was insufficient or did not state the law. St. v. Daly, 77 M 387, 250 P 976 (1926).

Incorrect Statement of Law: An objection to an instruction that it was an incorrect statement of the law and would have a tendency to mislead the jury was insufficient to entitle the alleged error to review where it did not point out wherein the proposed instruction was objectionable. Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926).

Case Notes

No Mandatory Requirement That Court Accept Proposed Findings and Conclusions: The court properly exercised its discretion under this rule in declining to accept the plaintiff's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Advisory Committee Notes

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 21, 1969, AMENDMENT

Explanation of change: Sections 93-5302, 93-5305, 93-5306, and 93-5307, R. C. M. 1947, are hereby superseded. The purpose of changing Rule 52, along with the change made in Rule 46, is twofold. It should eliminate the confusions that now exist with respect to the lack of necessity of making exceptions to the rulings and orders of the court, as distinct from the requirement that appropriate exceptions be made to findings of the court on trial of fact issues. In addition, it incorporates in this one rule the existing practice and procedure with respect to exceptions to findings of the court, and eliminates the necessity of researching for, and referring separately to, controlling statutes, case decisions, and rules, and then trying to correlate all three.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO OCTOBER 9, 1984, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 52(a). The amendment to the fifth sentence conforms the rule to the 1983 Amendment of the Federal Rule. For a discussion of the amendment see the advisory committee note to the Federal Rule.

The last two sentences are new and do not appear in the Federal Rule. The next to last sentence is modeled after the language of Rule 59(f) (Order Granting New Trial). It is only applicable in the event that the court grants the motion and the order is appealable. The amendment answers the disapproval leveled in recent Montana Supreme Court decisions that the trial court had granted summary judgment but failed to state the reasons therefor. See Stepanek v. Kober Construction, (1981) 191 Mont. 430, 625 P.2d 51.

Hopefully the last sentence will set to rest any problems arising out of the verbatim adoption by trial courts of counsels' proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The practice has been disapproved in recent Montana Supreme Court decisions although the adoption of counsels' findings and conclusions does not appear to be reversible error in and of itself, provided such findings and conclusions are supported by the evidence and law of the case. See Baer v. Baer, (1982) 199 Mont. 21, 647 P.2d 835.

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendments conform the rule to the 1991 amendments of the Federal Rules.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: In third sentence, near beginning after "fact", inserted "whether based on oral or documentary evidence"; at end of sixth sentence substituted "subdivision (c) of this rule" for "Rule 41(b)"; and made minor changes in style.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The 1969 amendment rewrote the first part of the rule and made it into a separate paragraph requiring that findings be reduced to writing and served on the parties.

The 1971 amendment restored the language as it stood prior to the 1969 amendment, with minor changes; and inserted new provisions as the second, third, and fifth sentences. This amendment made the rule identical with the Federal Rule. As of July 31, 1983, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule. On August 1, 1983, an amendment to the Federal Rule became effective allowing findings and conclusions to be given orally by the court. The 1984 amendment incorporated that change into the Montana Rule.

The amendment of October 9, 1984, in fifth sentence deleted "If an opinion or memorandum of decision is filed", after "conclusions of law" inserted "are stated orally and recorded in open court following the close of the evidence or", and after "appear" deleted "therein" and inserted "in an opinion or memorandum of decision filed by the court"; and inserted last two sentences.

On August 1, 1985, an amendment to the Federal Rule became effective that provided for the same standard of review of findings of fact "whether based on oral or documentary evidence".

As of May 1, 1990, the rule was identical to the Federal Rule except for the provision on standard of review added to the Federal Rule in 1985 and the two new sentences added to the end of the Montana Rule in 1984.

GENERAL

Error in Failure to Set Out Findings of Fact When Modifying Parenting Plan: Findings of fact are required when a District Court considers a petition for modification or amendment of a parenting plan. Although specific findings regarding each element in 40-4-212 are not necessary, the court must set forth the essential and determining facts upon which its conclusion rests. In the present case, the record was devoid of any oral or written findings of fact, and the District Court abused its discretion by amending a parenting plan without making the required findings and conclusions, constituting reversible error. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 2005 MT 125, 327 M 209, 112 P3d 1036 (2005). See also In re Marriage of Ulland, 251 M 160, 823 P2d 864 (1991).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment Without Hearing: The town of Virginia City sought to enjoin defendants from constructing a personal residence based on alleged permit violations. After a show cause hearing in District Court, a preliminary injunction was issued precluding further construction. Both parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment, which was granted to the town. Defendants moved to vacate pending completion of briefing and filing of transcripts and moved for oral argument, but the motions were denied. Defendants appealed, alleging that the District Court erred by granting summary judgment without affording defendants a hearing. The Supreme Court agreed. Summary judgment is only proper when there are no issues of material fact revealed in the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, and affidavits, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., a hearing is contemplated at which the District Court will consider not so much legal arguments, but rather whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, and in the ordinary case, the parties have a right to a summary judgment hearing unless the hearing is explicitly waived. In Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97 (1989), the Supreme Court noted that there may be an occasion when under the law and the facts adduced, the movant would be so clearly entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law that a District Court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but there was no such order in the present case. Rather, the language in the District Court's summary judgment order failed to state with sufficient particularity the rationale underlying the ruling, particularly the defenses raised in defendants' cross-motion for summary judgment. Although the District Court stated that it considered the entire record, there was no reference to considerations of defendants' affidavits. At one point, the court acknowledged that defendants were entitled to an evidentiary hearing, but failed to grant one, instead determining substantive questions that should have been left for a trial on the merits when granting injunctive relief. The only hearing afforded the parties in this case took place before discovery was conducted or responsive pleadings were filed, in noncompliance with Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The District Court abused its discretion in granting summary judgment without affording defendants a summary judgment hearing. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Virginia City v. Olsen, 2002 MT 176, 310 M 527, 52 P3d 383 (2002).

Validity and Enforceability of Memorandum of Understanding — Findings of Facts and Conclusions of Law Not Required: The District Court ruled that the parties had entered into a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU) regarding the parties' obligations applicable to an agricultural lease. The defendants argued that the MOU was simply an agreement to agree, that only a formal settlement agreement would bind the parties, and that the District Court erred in finding the MOU to be binding without setting out its findings of fact and conclusions of law. The plaintiff maintained that the MOU was an unconditional settlement agreement, that a more formal settlement document was not necessary to finalize or carry out the MOU, and that the court had no duty to set out its findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court found no error in the District Court's ruling and affirmed. All interested parties were present at the settlement conference and participated in negotiations, which ended with all the parties signing the MOU, memorializing the agreement among the signatories. Clearly there was a meeting of the minds during negotiations, and all the parties anticipated being bound by the MOU. The MOU was not conditioned upon the execution of a formal settlement agreement, so one was not necessary. The Supreme Court has recognized the validity of similar MOUs in Hetherington v. Ford Motor Co., 257 M 395, 849 P2d 1039 (1993), and Marta Corp. v. Thoft, 271 M 109, 894 P2d 333 (1995), and concluded that the agreement memorialized in the MOU here was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories. Further, under this rule, findings and conclusions are unnecessary on decisions of motions except for judgments at trial, which did not apply in this case. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a defendant's motion to file an amended answer and counterclaim addressed to the original complaint, because those claims were also resolved by the MOU. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

Scope of Review on Appeal:

The Supreme Court reviews the findings of a trial court sitting without a jury to determine if the findings are clearly erroneous. Clear error occurs if: (1) the findings are not supported by substantial credible evidence; (2) the trial court has misapprehended the effect of the evidence; or (3) a review of the record leaves the Supreme Court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. Evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Here, evidence was substantial that three separate agreements memorialized one transaction for the sale and purchase of three ice cream distributor businesses, that a related consulting agreement was merely a promissory note wherein the seller agreed to finance the balance of the purchase price, and that the seller did not "sell, transfer, assign, and deliver" one of the distributor agreements to the buyer as promised. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Appellants must show by a clear preponderance of the evidence that the findings of fact of the District Court are incorrect, and it is their burden to do so before the Supreme Court may disturb those findings of fact. Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978).

Denial of Contractual Liability by Both Defendant Entities — Claims Put in Issue — Burden of Proof — Proposed Findings to Be Based Upon Evidence — No Evidence of Intent to Mislead as Basis for Relief From Judgment: Wright Oil sued Goodrich for petroleum products allegedly delivered but not paid for. Goodrich denied liability, claiming that the products were for the use of West Yellowstone Snowmobile Rentals, Inc. (WYSR), which owned Westgate Texaco, operated by Goodrich. Wright Oil amended its complaint to include WYSR, and after a bench trial, the District Court held against Goodrich because no evidence had been presented proving a contract between WYSR and Wright Oil. Wright Oil then filed a motion for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., seeking relief from the District Court's failure to hold against WYSR. On the basis of evidence not presented at trial, the District Court granted the motion and ordered an evidentiary hearing to reopen the case against WYSR regarding WYSR's contractual liability to Wright Oil. WYSR appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the motion because the circumstances of the District Court's failure to hold WYSR liable for the debt to Wright Oil were not so extraordinary as to warrant relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court noted that WYSR's denial of its liability put the allegation of its contractual liability at issue under Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P., and under 26-1-401 and 26-1-402, Wright Oil had the burden of going forward with the evidence of WYSR's contractual liability but failed to present evidence of a contractual relationship between WYSR and Wright Oil. The fact that Goodrich alleged that WYSR was liable for the debt could not, the Supreme Court held, be taken as an admission by WYSR that it was liable for the amounts due. Further, the Supreme Court noted that Wright Oil should not have been surprised by WYSR's proposed findings of fact that it was not liable for the debt because under this rule, a party's proposed findings of fact must be supported by the evidence, and Wright Oil failed to produce that evidence of liability. Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Unnecessary for Decisions on Motions: Welch argued that the District Court had erred in adopting the figures for child support supplied by his ex-wife without any accompanying findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court held that this rule provides that findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions on motions and that although the Supreme Court encourages lower courts to include findings and conclusions, this encouragement does not translate into an absolute requirement. In re Marriage of Welch, 273 M 497, 905 P2d 132, 52 St. Rep. 1081 (1995).

Court Error in Arriving at Conclusion of Law Before Finding Facts: The plaintiff, Marry, was injured in an automobile accident involving a Deputy Sheriff. The lower court found the parties equally at fault and ordered that neither receive damages. Marry appealed on the basis that even if she were 50% negligent, she suffered more damages and should receive some money from the defendant. On reconsidering the case, the lower court stated that it was its intention that the plaintiff not receive any money and amended one of its findings to hold that Marry's negligence was greater than the defendant's and she was not entitled to recovery. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the lower court did not reexamine the evidence in amending its order. It formulated its conclusion of law first and then changed the findings of fact to conform to the conclusion already arrived at. Marry v. Missoula County Sheriff's Dept., 263 M 152, 866 P2d 1129, 50 St. Rep. 1751 (1993).

Denial of Motion to Change Venue — Explanation Within Court Discretion: Under this rule, when a court grants a motion under Rule 12 or Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., the court shall support its order with an explanation of its reason, but there is no comparable requirement for orders denying motions to change venue. A District Court is at liberty to deny a venue motion with or without comment. Therefore, it was not error for a court to provide an explanation for why defendant's motion for change of venue was denied, nor was it error for the court to direct plaintiff to prepare an appropriate memorandum and order for the court to sign. I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993).

Vacation of Injunction for Failure to Support It With Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law: Because the District Court improperly failed to make supporting findings of fact and conclusions of law when it issued its injunction, the Supreme Court had no basis to decide whether the injunction itself was proper. Therefore, the Supreme Court vacated the injunction and remanded for reconsideration and issuance of findings of fact and conclusions of law. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993).

Failure of District Court to Rule on Counterclaim for Emotional Distress and Attorney Fees as Requiring Remand — Refusal to Make Findings on Appeal: Plaintiff realty corporation brought an action in District Court to find defendants in default for failure to make payments under a contract for deed. Defendants counterclaimed for damages and attorney fees, alleging that as a result of plaintiff's breach of its fiduciary duty, defendants suffered emotional distress. The District Court made findings and conclusions that plaintiff breached its fiduciary duty to defendants, but the court failed to rule on defendants' counterclaim. The Supreme Court held that the failure of the District Court to rule on the counterclaim required a remand to the District Court for that purpose. The Supreme Court refused to make findings and conclusions on appeal, holding that deference to the District Court's position to observe the witnesses and assess their credibility required that the District Court make the findings. Cont. Realty, Inc. v. Gerry, 251 M 150, 822 P2d 1083, 48 St. Rep. 1134 (1991).

Failure to Specify Grounds for Summary Judgment — Remand: Failure of the District Court to specify the grounds for summary judgment rulings with sufficient particularity to apprise the parties and the appellate court of the rationale underlying the rulings resulted in remand of the case with instructions to enter reasons in support of summary adjudication. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 248 M 227, 810 P2d 1189, 48 St. Rep. 405 (1991), following Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981), and followed in Ravalli County Bank v. Gasvoda, 253 M 399, 833 P2d 1042, 49 St. Rep. 488 (1992). On remand, the District Court stated its reasons for granting respondents' summary judgment based on respondents' argument that a mobile home was lawfully repossessed. On subsequent appeal, the Supreme Court found that the home was actually converted. It was within the Supreme Court's power to reverse the District Court's grant of summary judgment and order summary judgment in favor of the appellant as a matter of law when all facts bearing on the issue were before the Supreme Court. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Supreme Court Deference to Workers' Compensation Court Judgment: The Supreme Court held that there was conflicting evidence concerning whether or not the claimant had suffered an additional injury or if his disability was the result of a prior accident. The court stated that when there was conflicting evidence, it would, in most cases, defer to the trial court. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989), followed in White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Unless posttrial motions are made by the losing party under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the losing party is not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal until proper service of notice of entry of judgment is made. This rule applies to orders that may become final as well as to judgments. In this case, notice of entry of judgment was not served and no posttrial motions were made. The time for appeal did not begin to run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Plaintiffs Not Entitled to Instructions on Equity Issues — Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. No questions of equity were ever placed before the jury nor were such claims appropriate. Therefore, the trial judge was not required to make findings and conclusions. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Correctable Error — No Reversal: The District Court was determined to be in error in finding appellant had received $2,000 in temporary maintenance, when in fact she had received only $1,000. This error is correctable and does not constitute an abuse of discretion by the District Court rising to the level of reversible error. In re Marriage of Turbes, 234 M 152, 762 P2d 237, 45 St. Rep. 1805 (1988).

Error in Findings — Judgment Affirmed: In a contract dispute between the buyer and seller of property, the seller objected to 35 specific findings of the trial judge. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred both in stating that seller took no action to collect default fees and in describing the buyer's expenses in improving the property. The findings were amended to reflect these facts. However, no change was required in the judgment, and the other challenged findings were supported by testimony and evidence. Schilke v. Bean, 232 M 125, 755 P2d 565, 45 St. Rep. 930 (1988).

Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary on Motions for Summary Judgment: The Supreme Court has on several occasions followed the portion of this rule that states that findings of fact and conclusions of law are not required to be entered upon motions for summary judgment. Pertinent cases are cited in this opinion. Simmons v. Jenkins, 230 M 429, 750 P2d 1067, 45 St. Rep. 328 (1988), followed in Gypsy-Highview Gathering System, Inc. v. Dept. of State Lands, 231 M 330, 753 P2d 317, 45 St. Rep. 657 (1988).

Failure to Separate Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law — Undue Prejudice Not Shown — No Reversible Error: District Court failure to specifically separate findings of fact and conclusions of law, in the absence of evidence of undue prejudice, did not constitute reversible error. Yellowstone Conference of the United Methodist Church v. D.A. Davidson, Inc., 228 M 288, 741 P2d 794, 44 St. Rep. 1528 (1987).

Review of STAB Decision — Additional Evidence: When additional evidence is presented during review of a STAB decision under 15-2-303, such evidence may be introduced before the court rather than the agency. Findings of fact and conclusions of law are then required to be made by the court. If the court does not permit or receive additional evidence, written findings and conclusions by the court are not required. Hi-Line Radio Fellowship v. Dept. of Revenue, 227 M 150, 737 P2d 886, 44 St. Rep. 955 (1987).

Judgment Distinguished: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are not the judgment, but merely the foundation for the judgment. Reintsma v. Lawson, 223 M 520, 727 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 1962 (1986); State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939); Galiger v. McNulty, 80 M 339, 260 P 401 (1927); State ex rel. Reser v. District Court, 53 M 235, 163 P 1149 (1917).

Ambiguous Insurance Policy Provision — Summary Judgment Reversed: An insurance policy that did not clearly state whether it provided uninsured motor vehicle coverage when the driver was insured but the ownership of the vehicle was not was held to be ambiguous; therefore, under the rationale that an ambiguous provision is construed against the insurance company, the policy was interpreted to provide coverage. The District Court grant of summary judgment holding that the policy did not provide uninsured motor vehicle coverage was reversed. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 223 M 215, 725 P2d 821, 43 St. Rep. 1667 (1986).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Real Estate Valuations — Conflicting Appraisals — Grounds for Adopting One Over Another: In an action for rescission of a contract for the sale of a ranch for $558,200, the seller's appraiser valued the ranch at about $870,000, the buyers' appraiser valued it at about $515,000, and the court found its value to be $635,000. The only possible source for the court's figure was seller's testimony that she had a second appraisal of $635,000. The appraiser was not called as a witness, and his report was not put in evidence. The court's figure was based on data that could not be cross-examined by sellers, and acceptance of the $635,000 appraisal was error, though harmless. In the future, all trial judges valuing real estate should explain in the court's findings why one appraiser's figure is believed over another's so that the Supreme Court can assess the conscientiousness or reasonableness of the lower court's exercise of its broad discretion. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

No Duty to Outline All Evidence in Findings: Judge trying divorce proceeding without a jury was not obligated to outline all the testimony presented at trial in his findings of fact, and no error was found on appeal in which husband claimed the judge ignored evidence husband had submitted and failed to make necessary findings thereon. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983), followed in Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992). Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. was followed in Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997), and Madison Addition Architectural Comm. v. Youngwirth, 2000 MT 293, 302 M 302, 15 P3d 1175, 57 St. Rep. 1244 (2000).

Findings and Conclusions Required With Injunction: The parties entered an oral agreement for plaintiff to loan money to defendant to purchase a semitruck, subject to an oral security interest and repayment schedule. Plaintiff later located defendant and the truck in Missoula and filed a complaint alleging breach of contract and replevin. An injunction was also requested. Following a show cause hearing, plaintiff was given immediate temporary custody of the truck and allowed to operate it to mitigate his damages. Defendant appealed the ruling under Rule 1(b), M.R.App.P. The Supreme Court vacated the injunction, holding that the court's order failed to preserve the status quo. It determined substantive property rights and did not set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law at the time the injunction was issued. Ensley v. Murphy, 202 M 406, 658 P2d 418, 40 St. Rep. 173 (1983).

Ambiguity of Contract Clause — Conclusion of Law: Contract ambiguities are questions of fact, and on appeal the Supreme Court would ordinarily limit their review to the "clearly erroneous" standard of review. The initial determination of whether or not an ambiguity exists is one of law. Thus, the determination by the District Court that a default clause is ambiguous is a conclusion of law freely reviewable. When on review the Supreme Court finds that the clause is not ambiguous, the court is free to rely on its own interpretation of the clause. SAS Partnership v. Schafer, 200 M 478, 653 P2d 834, 39 St. Rep. 1883 (1982).

Balancing Expert and Lay Testimony: A trier of fact is free to disregard the expert testimony of a party's witness and adopt the testimony of the other party if the other party's evidence is credible and substantial. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982).

Award of Fees Reasonable — Appeal to Clarify Alternative Judgment Not Frivolous: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, attorneys for defendant requested fees of $11,000. The District Court awarded fees of $2,000 based on testimony received. The Supreme Court found that this finding was not clearly erroneous. The court also declined to award attorney fees for the appeal under Rule 32, M.R.App.P., because plaintiffs were justified in bringing the appeal to clarify the alternative judgment. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Facts Argued in Brief Irreconcilable — Court's Finding Clearly Erroneous: Although the facts argued in the parties' briefs with regard to delinquent child support payments were irreconcilable, the trial transcript indicated that the respondent was current on the payments. The court's finding of delinquent payments was, therefore, clearly erroneous. Baer v. Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835, 39 St. Rep. 1178 (1982).

Decisions on Motions — When Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary: On wife's motion to enforce decree of dissolution of marriage dissolved some 8 months prior to the motion, the trial court entered an order in her favor without making findings of fact and conclusions of law. Husband's appeal was not an appeal from a judgment following trial, and findings and conclusions were not required under this rule's provision that findings and conclusions are unnecessary on decisions of motions under Rules 12 or 56 or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Baker v. Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Findings of Income and Marital Estate Clearly Erroneous — Evidence in Support of Findings Required: Where, in an action for divorce, the uncontradicted evidence of the husband showed his annual net income to be $9,000 a year and the value of the marital estate to be $740,673.95, the District Court erred in adopting wholesale the proposed findings of the wife that the husband's income was $21,000 a year and the value of the marital estate was $760,000. Wholesale adoption of proposed findings and conclusions is a practice disapproved by the Supreme Court and in this case resulted in clearly erroneous findings unsupported by the evidence. In re the Marriage of Beck v. Beck, 193 M 166, 631 P2d 282, 38 St. Rep. 1054 (1981).

Findings and Conclusions Entered After Notice of Appeal — Loss of Jurisdiction: An employer appealed from an order of the Workers' Compensation Court determining that its former employee was permanently totally disabled. Through various stages of the case, the court failed to make findings of fact. Notice of appeal to the Supreme Court was filed. A week later the court entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of its original order reinstating benefits cut off by the employer. The Supreme Court agreed with the appellant/employer that the supplemental findings entered after the notice of appeal was filed could not be considered. The trial court had lost jurisdiction, except for ancillary matters, when the notice of appeal was filed. The order reinstating the claimant's benefits, determining that she was permanently totally disabled and ordering the employer to pay a penalty and attorney fees, was not an interim order because, unless appealed, it would have to be obeyed. Therefore, proper findings and conclusions were needed to support the order. A new hearing was ordered with discovery to be enforced against both parties. Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981), overruled, at least in relation to Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification of findings, by Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983).

Findings Supporting Continued Maintenance Properly Made — Issue Not Before the Court: Where the marriage of the parties was previously dissolved and the wife awarded maintenance without being required to seek employment in order that she be able to care for her handicapped child at home, the District Court did not err, upon a petition for discharge of the maintenance award, in adopting the respondent's proposed findings and conclusions. With the exception of a finding regarding increased financial need, there was sufficient evidence before the court showing no change in the child's need for special care to support the findings and conclusions that were adopted, no matter who drafted them. As the issue of increased spousal maintenance was not before the court, that finding must be vacated. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Required — Case in Equity and Tried to Jury: In this case concerning a contract for deed, the Supreme Court remanded the cause to the District Court for a determination of several factual issues. It held that, because the case was in equity, the District Court should have entered findings of fact and conclusions of law even though the cause was tried to a jury. The jury's interrogatories did not state the facts underlying the decision. Unless both parties agreed to be bound by a jury decision without further findings by the court, the findings of the jury were advisory only and the District Court was required to make findings under this rule. Three reasons for requiring findings of fact were stated: (1) as an aid to the trial judge's adjudication; (2) for res judicata and estoppel purposes; and (3) to facilitate appellate review. Stoddard v. Gookin, 191 M 495, 625 P2d 529, 38 St. Rep. 326 (1981).

Appointment of Lead Counsel for Consolidated Cases — Hearing and Findings Unnecessary on Motion: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous related cases were consolidated for trial, the District Court did not err in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing prior to the appointment of one attorney as lead counsel for all of the consolidated cases. Because Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., provides that findings are unnecessary on decisions on motions, the court's decision under Rule 42(a), M.R.Civ.P., did not require findings and there was therefore no obligation on the District Court to provide an evidentiary hearing. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Property Held Prior to Enactment of Tax Payment Requirement — No Adverse Possession Established — Court Presumed Correct Despite Lack of Finding: Plaintiffs were properly denied adverse possession of yard space on the basis of nonpayment of taxes even though no finding was made regarding whether the property was held prior to enactment of the statute requiring payment of taxes to establish adverse possession. The District Court's judgment is presumed correct, and the Supreme Court will draw every legitimate inference to support that presumption. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Application of Debtor's Payment to Past Due Account With Creditor — Debtor's Instructions — Creditor's Lien Despite Payment: Defendant contracted for a new building. The contractor purchased materials from the plaintiff through a subcontractor who had an account with the plaintiff. When the subcontractor was paid by the defendant, he in turn paid the plaintiff. The plaintiff applied the payment to the subcontractor's past due account, then later filed a lien against the defendant. The defendant appealed from a judgment upholding the lien. Because a creditor is bound by the instructions given to him by his debtor as to the application of a payment, the issue on appeal was the instructions the subcontractor gave to the plaintiff. With no trial court finding of a duty of the plaintiff to apply the funds paid to it by the subcontractor to the bill for materials used by the defendant, the Supreme Court followed the clear mandate from the Legislature and held that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff on the lien judgment against him, while recommending that the Legislature review the statute. Gen. Elec. Supply v. Mont. Auto. Ass'n, 189 M 553, 617 P2d 136, 37 St. Rep. 1715 (1980), distinguished in Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 995 (1983).

Moving Expenses and Attorney Fees Upon Dissolution of Marriage — Failure to Make Findings and Conclusions: Where, following entry of the court's order dissolving the marriage of the parties, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for additional findings of fact concerning a military pension, the District Court was also directed to rule on and make findings of fact concerning the appellant's requests for moving expenses and attorney fees if the appellant renews her requests. Failure of the District Court to make findings only results in needless remands of the case to the District Court for determination of the issues. Ebert v. Ebert, 189 M 477, 616 P2d 379, 37 St. Rep. 1674 (1980).

Findings Upon Questions Not in Dispute: Plaintiff power company appealed from the refusal of the District Court to adopt a certain finding. The Supreme Court held that the District Court is not required to make a finding on a fact which has no real relation to the prime issue contested in a case, notwithstanding entry of evidence in pretrial court bearing on the irrelevant issue. Mont. Power Co. v. Kravik, 189 M 369, 616 P2d 321 (1980).

Attorney's Fees — Reliance by Courts on Experts: In determining attorney's fees, the court as a jury is not bound absolutely to the testimony of expert witnesses. It can reduce or increase the figures submitted to it by experts as reasonable attorney's fees, and as long as its findings are not clearly erroneous the determination made in its discretion will not be disturbed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Prevailing Party Not Presenting Expert Testimony: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home structural problems requiring repair occurred. At trial plaintiffs were awarded damages against the defendant. On appeal defendant claimed that findings that the roof had not been constructed as planned and bid, and that construction defects by defendant brought about the instability and unsafe nature of the house, were not supported by credible evidence especially since the District Court did not accord any weight to the testimony of defendant's expert architect. The Supreme Court rejected the claim, stating that when substantial evidence in the record supports the findings of the District Court, the fact that the prevailing party does not present expert testimony does not mean that the testimony produced by experts on the other side is inherently superior. When the evidence is conflicting but the findings are supported by substantial credible evidence, the findings of the District Court will be upheld. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Findings Required in Probate Proceeding: Although Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., is seldom used in probate proceedings, it must be applied to this case to enable the Supreme Court to know precisely the questions presented for appellate review, because they cannot be determined from the record. In re Estate of Murphy, 183 M 127, 598 P2d 612 (1979).

Credibility of Witness: Findings of fact may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous and due regard will be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge the credibility of the witnesses. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by ruling in favor of the defendant on one issue after the defendant's credibility had been impeached on a separate issue. Kis v. Pifer, 179 M 344, 588 P2d 514 (1978). See also Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996), and Walls v. Travelers Indem. Co., 281 M 106, 931 P2d 712, 54 St. Rep. 82 (1997). Walls was followed in Paterson v. Mont. Contractor Comp. Fund, 1999 MT 158, 295 M 120, 983 P2d 300, 56 St. Rep. 623 (1999).

Testimony Not Directly Controverted — Judge Not Bound: A trial judge is not bound to find in favor of a party simply because one of his witness's testimony is not directly controverted. Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978).

Findings of Fact — Definition and Purpose: The findings of fact required by Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., are nothing more than a recordation of the essential and determining facts upon which the District Court rested its conclusions of law and without which the District Court's judgment would lack support. The purpose of requiring findings of fact is three-fold: as an aid in the trial judge's process of adjudication; for purposes of res judicata and estoppel by judgment; and as an aid to the appellate court on review. Barron v. Barron, 177 M 161, 580 P2d 936 (1978), followed in Clemans v. Martin, 221 M 483, 719 P2d 787, 43 St. Rep. 994 (1986). See also Lake v. Lake County, 233 M 126, 759 P2d 161, 45 St. Rep. 1354 (1988), and Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Rules Regarding Effect of Stipulations: Court did not go beyond agreed statement of facts in making its findings. In considering an agreed statement of facts a court may make any reasonable inference of which the facts might be susceptible as if the facts had been gleaned from testimony. When a court feels it needs evidence beyond that in the agreed statement to make its decision, it may refer to evidence outside of the agreed statement. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Subsequent Accounting Not a New Judgment: Where a judgment contains a provision that either party may petition the court for a supplemental decree and accounting in the event the parties cannot agree upon the remaining balance due, it is considered an interlocutory judgment and a subsequent judgment of accounting is not a new judgment, but a clarification of the prior interlocutory judgment as no rights in the prior judgment were changed, nor were any of the formerly settled issues changed. Heller v. Osburnsen, 168 M 232, 541 P2d 1032 (1975).

Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary — Motions Under Other Rules: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, Rule 56, or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Summary Judgment — Reversal Based on Findings: Even though findings are not required in granting summary judgment, if findings are made that form the basis for judgment and if the evidence does not support the findings, the judgment will be reversed. Upper Missouri G & T Elec. Co-op v. McCone Elec. Co-op, Inc., 157 M 239, 484 P2d 741 (1971).

Nonjury Case — Findings and Conclusions Properly Made: Here, the case being tried without a jury, the court properly made findings of fact and conclusions of law. Tolson v. Tolson, 145 M 87, 399 P2d 754 (1965).

Additional Findings After Judgment: Since courts have the inherent power to correct or amend their judgments so as truly to express what was actually passed upon and decided, they may also, after entry of judgment, add to or make additional findings, which are but the foundation for the judgment so long as the judgment itself is not substantially changed. O'Keefe v. Routledge, 110 M 138, 103 P2d 307 (1940).

FORM OF FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

Adoption of One Party's Findings and Conclusions in Estate Dispute Not Grounds for Reversal: The conservator of an estate contended that the District Court erred by adopting the findings and conclusions of the decedent's niece and by denying the conservator's motion to alter or amend the judgment after receiving a brief in support and the niece's response but before the conservator filed a reply brief. The Supreme Court noted that a court's adoption of the findings and conclusions of a prevailing party is not grounds for reversal, but rather the question is whether the findings are sufficiently comprehensive, pertinent, and supported by substantial evidence to provide a basis for the decision. In this case, the findings were sufficiently comprehensive and supported by substantial evidence, and the decision was affirmed. Further, although the Supreme Court does not condone or encourage entering orders prior to the expiration of the time for briefing, the conservator offered no argument or analysis to support a conclusion that the conservator's due process rights were implicated by denial of the motion to alter or amend the judgment, so denial of the motion also did not constitute grounds for reversal. In re Estate of Stukey, 2004 MT 279, 323 M 241, 100 P3d 114 (2004). See also In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279 (1986), and In re Marriage of Nikolaisen, 257 M 1, 847 P2d 287 (1993).

Defendant's Proposed Findings Adopted Verbatim — Lack of Evidentiary Support Warranting Remand: The District Court essentially adopted the findings and conclusions proposed by Service Distributing, Inc. (SDI), prior to trial. Generally, a District Court's findings will not be disturbed unless they are clearly erroneous or unsubstantiated by the evidence. Here, Norwood claimed, and the Supreme Court agreed, that SDI did not offer any evidence at trial in support of several of the findings or file any posttrial findings omitting or modifying the pretrial proposed findings, which were not supported by substantial evidence. In fact, several of the District Court's findings and conclusions were clearly erroneous and legally incorrect, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000). See also Baer v. Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835 (1982).

Motion to Enforce Divorce Degree — Written Findings and Conclusions Not Required: Corliss brought a motion to enforce a part of her divorce decree relating to her ex-husband's payment of medical expenses. The District Court denied the motion but failed to make written findings and conclusions. Corliss sought to reverse the District Court's order, arguing that the District Court had failed to make written findings and conclusions and that written findings and conclusions were required by In re Marriage of Bliss, 187 M 331, 609 P2d 1209 (1980), and Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850 (1980). The Supreme Court distinguished both Bliss and Jones, pointing out that there were no findings at all in either of those cases and noting that in the case of the denial of Corliss's motion, the District Court had made specific oral findings of fact that were shown in the written District Court record. The Supreme Court concluded that those oral findings were sufficient to support the District Court's denial of Corliss's motion. In re Marriage of Johnson, 1999 MT 254, 296 M 311, 989 P2d 356, 56 St. Rep. 1011 (1999).

Summary Judgment — Reversal for Insufficient Specificity of Dismissal Rationale: Although findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary in Rule 12 and Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., decisions, a District Court is required under this rule to specify the grounds for granting a motion with sufficient particularity to apprise the parties and the appellate court of the rationale for the ruling. The lower court was reversed for failing to state that no genuine issue of material fact existed. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989).

Request for Remand for More Specific Findings — Denied as Caused by Party: A party who failed to take advantage of his opportunity to present specific evidence to the District Court in a dissolution of marriage action was denied a remand for more specific findings because such findings were caused by his actions and, furthermore, the Supreme Court determined there was substantial evidence to sustain the District Court's judgment. In re Marriage of Merry, 213 M 141, 689 P2d 1250, 41 St. Rep. 2009 (1984).

Failure to Find Property Subject to Distribution — Conflicting Findings Requiring Remand: Where the District Court found, in a dissolution proceeding, that a coin collection was acquired by the wife's wages during the marriage and therefore constituted property subject to division and awarded the collection to the wife but failed to include the collection in a list of property subject to division, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for amendment of the findings in a manner consistent with the Supreme Court opinion. Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

Effect of Inconsistent Findings: In a case seeking to modify a child custody decree, the trial court made conflicting findings based on evidence presented by both the mother and the father. The Supreme Court stated that the trial court's findings did not reveal the basic facts on which the trial court relied. The case was remanded with directions to enter findings of fact to resolve the conflicts in the evidence. Wilmot v. Wilmot, 199 M 477, 649 P2d 1295, 39 St. Rep. 1535 (1982).

Actual Fraud in Execution of Contract for Deed — Compliance With Pollution Laws — Doctrine of "Implied Findings": Where the plaintiffs sued for damages caused by the defendants' fraud in the execution of a contract for deed for the sale of a shale and concrete block plant, alleging misrepresentation by the defendant company and its agents as to the plant's status of compliance with air pollution laws, the court did not err in finding the defendants guilty of actual fraud. Actual fraud is always a question of fact, and there was ample evidence upon which the court could find that the factual requisites for actual fraud had been satisfied. Although the court did not make a specific finding that the plaintiff relied upon the false representations by the defendants, the Supreme Court will engage the doctrine of "implied findings" so long as those findings are not inconsistent with express findings and assume that the court found reliance upon the defendants' misrepresentation. Poulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 192 M 69, 626 P2d 1822, 38 St. Rep. 218 (1981), holding on "implied findings" followed in Interstate Brands Corp. v. Cannon, 218 M 380, 708 P2d 573, 42 St. Rep. 1670 (1985), H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000), and St. v. Wooster, 2001 MT 4, 304 M 56, 16 P3d 409 (2001). Interstate was followed in In re Mental Health of S.C., 2000 MT 370, 303 M 444, 15 P3d 861, 57 St. Rep. 1584 (2000).

Findings Sufficient to Determine Net Worth — Discretion of Court: While the District Court in a divorce dissolution failed to make a specific finding of net worth, the findings as a whole are sufficient to determine the net worth and to decide whether the distribution was equitable. All of the major assets were valued by the court, and the court specifically found that the husband had a greater opportunity to acquire a residence in the future and that the wife's age, skills, and custodial status justified allocation of the house to the wife. The District Court has far-reaching discretion in resolving property divisions, and its judgment will not be altered unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. Nunnally v. Nunnally, 192 M 24, 625 P2d 1159, 38 St. Rep. 529 (1981).

Necessity of Proper Findings and Conclusions — Incorporation of Property Settlement: An action for the dissolution of marriage was brought, and dissolution was granted. The parties entered into a property settlement a week before the decree of dissolution was entered. About 3 months later, one party brought a motion to incorporate the agreement in the court's final decree. The other party objected to the adoption of the visitation provisions. After a hearing, the District Court entered a supplemental decree of dissolution, incorporating all the terms of the property settlement agreement. On appeal, the appellant argued that the trial court erred in incorporating the property settlement without making specific findings of fact regarding the impact of the visitation provided for on the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court held that the purpose of the findings and conclusions required under the rule of civil procedure was to provide a foundation for the court's judgment. The record should include the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment would lack support. The finding of fact and conclusion of law that the visitation provision in the property settlement agreement was in the best interests of the child failed to set forth the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusion. Without those factors, the Supreme Court was unable to determine the propriety of the determination. The case was remanded for the required factual findings. Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850, 37 St. Rep. 1973 (1980). See also In re Marriage of Johnson, 1999 MT 254, 296 M 311, 989 P2d 356, 56 St. Rep. 1011 (1999).

Maintenance and Support Order — Invalidated for Lack of Findings and Conclusions: A District Court order of maintenance and child support that failed to comply with Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., by finding the facts specially and stating conclusions of law separately was held invalid. Park v. Park, 190 M 180, 619 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1874 (1980).

Particularity of Findings on Property Distribution — Not Necessarily Required if Directive Items Considered: On appeal relating to his divorce settlement agreement, the former husband contended that the trial court erred in making an "equitable" grant of personal property without making certain findings, such as the net worth of the marital estate. The Supreme Court reiterated an earlier holding that a District Court need not set forth its findings with particularity if there is substantial evidence that the court was aware of and considered the directive items of 40-4-202. The trial court held a hearing on all elements in a marital estate, and there was no substantial evidence that the court did not consider the whole estate in finding that the separation agreement was deficient. The existence of a valid agreement presumes that the net worth of the parties has been considered in the disposition of their property by the agreement. There was substantial evidence here that the net worth of the parties was established by the District Court and by the settlement agreement. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Factual Support for Maintenance Award Required: Maintenance payments require an affirmative showing as a condition precedent to their award. The existence or lack of this condition precedent is to be shown by a recordation of the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment lacks support. Schultz v. Schultz, 183 M 20, 597 P2d 1174 (1979).

General Findings: Very general findings of fact and conclusions of law will support a judgment when they substantially follow the allegations of the pleadings. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Incomplete Findings Sufficient: If the findings ascertain the ultimate facts and sufficiently conform to the pleadings and the evidence to support the judgment, they will be regarded sufficient, though not as full and complete as might be desired. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Statement of Ultimate Fact as Conclusion of Law: A statement of ultimate fact retains its character as such, although it could also be read as a conclusion of law. Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978).

Modification of Maintenance and Support — Factual Determinations Imperative: The pertinent factors in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204, with findings of fact to support them, should be set out in the District Court's decision. Otherwise the appellate court has nothing upon which to base its review. Moreover, under 40-4-208 the District Court can grant modification or termination of maintenance and support only if there is a showing of circumstances making the payments unconscionable, which compels proper findings and conclusions. Capener v. Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978).

Failure of Probate Court to Make Findings and Conclusions: When the District Court entered an order admitting a will to probate but failed to make findings of fact and conclusions of law stating its basis for the order, the order was reversed and case remanded with instructions to provide such information in order that the Supreme Court not be forced to speculate as to the reasons for the District Court's decision. In re Craddock, 173 M 8, 566 P2d 45 (1977).

Findings of Ultimate Versus Evidentiary Fact: The court need only make findings of ultimate facts and not evidentiary facts. The court need not find proposed facts submitted by a party which are evidentiary facts related to an ultimate fact found against the party. Erickson v. Fisher, 170 M 491, 554 P2d 1336 (1976).

Sufficiency of Findings: Lower court ruling that "no cause of action or claim exists or has been proven" and "the same is hereby dismissed" was sufficient compliance with rules despite plaintiff's contention that findings of fact and conclusions of law did not meet requirements of rules. Mondakota Gas Co. v. Becker, 151 M 513, 445 P2d 745 (1968).

Failure to Make Findings as Grounds for Reversal: Upon proper request it is the duty of the District Court to make findings, in the absence of which the cause presents grounds for reversal. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Findings Referring to Complaint: Even though findings based upon the allegations of the pleadings are valid they must be weighed as to sufficiency by the complaint or pleadings upon which they are based and if the findings of fact refer to the complaint, then to be sufficient, the complaint must state a cause of action. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Findings Mixed With Opinion: Written findings of fact and conclusions of law should be separately stated in case tried by the court without a jury, and not made a part of any other document, even though not expressly requested by the parties. The purpose of such treatment of the findings and conclusions is that no question may arise as to their properly being a part of the judgment roll or of the record on appeal. Opinion, intermingled with other matters, containing the court's view of the evidence was equivalent to its findings of fact, and may be made a part of the record by amendment to show what he considered proved, the balance being disregarded. Coffman v. Niece, 110 M 541, 105 P2d 661 (1940).

Separate Findings and Conclusions: In every case specific findings should be made upon all material issues of fact raised by the pleadings, followed by the appropriate conclusions of law, indicating the judgment to be entered thereon. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 43 M 102, 115 P 25 (1911).

FINDINGS NOT CLEARLY ERRONEOUS

Finding of Permissive Use of Cotenants' Fractional Interest Not Clearly Erroneous: Foley brought an action to quiet title to ranch property, claiming that title had been acquired from the cotenants by adverse possession of fractional interests acquired by two siblings in the distribution of their father's estate. Foley had operated the ranch since 1947, paid all taxes on the property, and built two homes, a garage, haysheds, barns, irrigation works, and fences. None of the surviving siblings ever claimed an interest in the profits from the ranch, and Foley never offered to share them. Foley never sought permission from the siblings to build any structure on the ranch or to use the property other than as he wished. The siblings professed that they always wanted Foley to operate the ranch as he saw fit, provided that the property not be mortgaged or sold. When Foley and his wife divorced in 1996, the District Court ordered the sale of the ranch to satisfy the settlement agreement. Title problems frustrated the sale, prompting the quiet title action. Following a bench trial, the District Court concluded that as a matter of law, Foley was a tenant in common with the two surviving siblings who had not quitclaimed their interests to Foley and that one cotenant could not gain title to another cotenant's interest by adverse possession. The court also found as a matter of fact that Foley's use of the cotenant's interests had been permissive. Foley contended on appeal that the findings and conclusions were erroneous. The testimony on the question of whether Foley's use was permissive was conflicting, with Foley testifying that he had always asserted his complete ownership of the ranch and that his longstanding arguments with his siblings established his claim as hostile, while the wife of Foley's deceased brother testified that until these proceedings, Foley had never asserted that she or her late husband had no interest in the ranch, but instead had asked her to sign over her interest on several occasions. Her testimony provided substantial credible evidence that, at least until he tried to sell the property, Foley's use of his siblings' fractional interests was in conformity with their wishes and was permissive. The District Court was in the best position to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses and to give each its proper weight. The finding that Foley was a permissive user of his cotenants' fractional interest was not clearly erroneous and was thus affirmed. Foley v. Arvidson, 2000 MT 388; 304 M 43, 16 P3d 389, 57 St. Rep. 1650 (2000).

Constructive Fraud for Failure to Disclose Risk of Erosion to Field Planted in Old River Channel: The sellers of farm land and an irrigation system failed to disclose to the buyers that the field at pivot three was an old river bed that had been filled but not riprapped and that the field was subject to increased risk of erosion. The buyers spent $99,575 to fix the impairment and sued for damages. The District Court found that the sellers were liable for constructive fraud for failure to disclose, and the sellers contested the District Court findings. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court was capable of finding that a risk of increased erosion existed without the benefit of expert testimony. Further, the court's conclusion, that filling the old river bed and creating a greatly increased risk of erosion was a serious impairment, was not clearly erroneous. Moreover, the court did not err in holding that the buyers had no way of knowing of the increased risk, even though a conversation with the the sellers' employee who performed the backfill work would have revealed the problem. The buyers were not required to speak with the sellers' employees before purchasing, particularly given the fact that when the field at pivot three was cleared and leveled, it looked like any other field. The sellers also contended that the buyers had merely to ask their own consultant, who would have informed them of the origin and obvious condition of the field. However, the buyers' consultant did not inspect the fields until after closing of the sale and thus could not have provided the buyers with any knowledge. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Action to Quiet Title in Mining Company Shares — Credible Evidence of Outstanding Shares — District Court Upheld: Safronoff and others were defendants in an action to quiet title to outstanding shares of the defunct Sun Mining, Inc., which was involuntarily dissolved by the state. The District Court reviewed all of the evidence before it, including a list of outstanding shares prepared by Sun Mining's secretary-treasurer shortly before the company was dissolved, the number of shares held by each shareholder according to each shareholder's stock certificate, and oral testimony, and found that the secretary-treasurer's list was the only credible evidence. Safronoff appealed the decision of the District Court, contending that he should have been awarded additional shares. Relying upon Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106 (1992), the Supreme Court applied the "clearly erroneous" standard to the District Court's findings of fact and held that although there were conflicts in the evidence before it, the District Court reasonably relied upon this evidence and that the District Court's findings of fact were not clearly erroneous. Duncan v. Allen, 1998 MT 316, 292 M 180, 970 P2d 1036, 55 St. Rep. 1296 (1998).

Decedent's Estate — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: On May 31, 1994, Joseph executed a will bequeathing his estate to his former wife, Mary. On June 14, 1994, while Joseph was in a nursing home, Joseph and Mary signed a declaration of marriage. On July 1, 1994, Joseph executed a will renouncing the marriage and bequeathing the estate to a sister. Mary initiated informal probate proceedings under the May 31 will, and the sister initiated informal probate proceedings under the July 1 will. The court ordered that the July 1 will be admitted to formal probate and declared void the declaration of marriage. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in invalidating the declaration of marriage but affirmed the portion of the court's order admitting the July 1 will to probate. Mary failed to show reversible error in any of the challenged findings. In re Estate of Flynn, 274 M 199, 908 P2d 661, 52 St. Rep. 1190 (1995).

Court Not Required to Make Findings on All Evidence Submitted: Vanderburg argued that the trial court had erred because it failed to make 11 additional findings of fact based on evidence that had been submitted. The Supreme Court held that the trial court is not required to make findings based on all evidence submitted and that in the present case, the findings of fact were sufficient to support the court's judgment. In re Seizure of $23,691.00, 273 M 474, 905 P2d 148, 52 St. Rep. 1063 (1995).

Findings in Case of Fraudulent Oil Well Sales Not Clearly Erroneous: Boedecker was convicted of fraudulently selling interests in oil well property to Berlin without disclosing his interest in the transaction or the fact that production had been sold to another company, without taking reasonable care in evaluating the property sold to Berlin, and without consulting with Berlin in another sale transaction. Citing Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), followed in Daines v. Knight, 269 M 320, 888 P2d 904, 52 St. Rep. 8 (1995) the Supreme Court held that the standard of review was whether the findings of fact were clearly erroneous and that the Supreme Court would further examine whether the findings were supported by substantial credible evidence, whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, and determine whether the Supreme Court was left with a conviction that a mistake has been committed. The Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence supporting all of the District Court's findings and that they were not clearly erroneous. Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180, 51 St. Rep. 569 (1994). See also Strom v. Logan, 2001 MT 30, 304 M 176, 18 P3d 1024 (2001).

Finding of Business Interruption Losses Affirmed: DeTienne Associates sued Montana Rail Link (MRL) after an explosion caused by one of MRL's locomotives damaged the hotel owned by DeTienne. DeTienne introduced evidence of business interruption losses. Citing Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), the Supreme Court upheld the findings because the District Court's findings were supported by substantial credible evidence, the District Court did not misapprehend the effect of the evidence, and the Supreme Court was not left with a firm and definite conviction that a mistake had been committed. DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 264 M 16, 869 P2d 258, 51 St. Rep. 125 (1994).

Supported Findings Challenged on Basis of Sometimes Irrelevant Inferences From and Interpretations of Those Findings: In an action to invalidate provisions of a trust, appellants' challenges to seven specific findings depended on appellants' inferences from and interpretations of the findings. Some of appellants' points were irrelevant. The findings were supported by the record and were not clearly erroneous. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Equitable Distribution of Investment Account: The District Court properly exercised its equity power in dividing the proceeds of an investment account by taking into consideration other equities existing between the parties connected with the main subject of the suit and by granting relief necessary to an entire adjustment of the subject. Tondu v. Akerley, 259 M 194, 855 P2d 116, 50 St. Rep. 754 (1993).

Challenge of Juror for Cause — Standard of Review: In clarifying the standard of review applicable to challenge of a juror for cause, the Supreme Court adopted the standard for findings of fact set out in this rule. Because factual determinations of juror appropriateness are being made by the trial court, the "clearly erroneous" standard applies to review of a trial court's decision to deny a challenge for cause. The Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the trial court absent a showing that the lower court's findings are clearly erroneous, even if there is evidence in the record to support contrary findings. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991). This standard was applied to criminal cases in St. v. Cope, 250 M 387, 819 P2d 1280, 48 St. Rep. 949 (1991).

STAB Recalculation of Value of Grain Storage Facilities Properly Ordered by District Court: When the State Tax Appeal Board (STAB) ignored evidence regarding the loading capacity of three grain elevators in calculating the value of the elevators for taxation purposes, the District Court properly ordered STAB to recalculate the value based on the simple arithmetic evidence. United Grain Corp. v. Dept. of Revenue, 248 M 297, 811 P2d 555, 48 St. Rep. 440 (1991).

No Unlawful Interference With Ditch Easement: Plaintiff contended that construction of a pond constituted an unlawful interference with his ditch easement, depriving him of water and reducing the value of his property. The District Court's findings that the pond had nothing to do with plaintiff's water shortage, but rather that the shortage was caused by an upstream user exercising his full right to the water, were not clearly erroneous and were therefore affirmed on appeal. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991).

Psychotherapy for Paranoid Wife Appropriate Expense: The husband appealed a maintenance award to the wife that included an amount to pay for her psychotherapy. The Supreme Court ruled that there was substantial evidence proving that the wife suffered from a paranoid mental disorder that if not treated would impair her ability to find employment. The court also found that there was ample evidence for the lower court to find that physical abuse by the husband was causative of the wife's psychological problems. In re Marriage of Ernst, 243 M 114, 793 P2d 777, 47 St. Rep. 1034 (1990).

Failure to Notify Second Mortgagor of Sales and Future Advances Not Breach of Fiduciary Duty: Absent findings of clear error, a District Court decision that a first mortgagor breached no fiduciary duty to second mortgagor by failing to notify of property sales and future advances was affirmed. The court properly found it was the second mortgagor's obligation to discover the existence and extent of the future advance clause by requesting a copy of the deed of trust and to investigate more closely the actual terms of the instrument prior to entering the second mortgage. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

Child Custody — Reliance on Expert Testimony Not Clearly Erroneous: The lower court heard testimony from numerous witnesses, including experts, as to the issue of child custody. The court did not abuse its discretion in relying heavily on the testimony and observations of two of the experts concerning the children's wishes, interrelationship of the children with their parents, and the mental and physical health of all individuals. In re Marriage of Ereth, 232 M 492, 757 P2d 1312, 45 St. Rep. 1223 (1988).

False Representations — Ability to Construct Hog Barns — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: There was testimony showing defendant knowingly made material false representations that he could construct water-flush hog barns—promises that he could not keep. Plaintiff had a right to rely on defendant and was injured because of that reliance. Although there were conflicting findings, the Supreme Court found no clear error constituting abuse of discretion. Roberts v. Mission Valley Concrete Indus., Inc., 222 M 268, 721 P2d 355, 43 St. Rep. 1254 (1986).

Six Findings of Fact Omitted — No Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiff contended six findings of fact omitted by the District Court resulted in erroneous conclusions of law detrimental to her. Specifically, she claimed she was entitled to a larger judgment. She acknowledged any one of the alleged abuses would not be sufficient to mandate a new trial or amended judgment, but together they constituted sufficient abuse to warrant action. The Supreme Court noted it would not disturb findings of fact in a nonjury civil action unless they were clearly erroneous. The court then declined to disturb the District Court's findings as being clearly erroneous in this case. Sharbono v. Darden, 220 M 320, 715 P2d 433, 43 St. Rep. 400 (1986).

Inclusion of Retirement Pension as Marital Asset: In a dispute concerning valuation of marital assets, the wife argued that because she contributed in the course of the marriage her teacher's salary as compared to the ranching losses contributed by the husband, it was inequitable to include her teacher's retirement pension as a marital asset. The trial court included as a marital asset that portion of the value of the pension rights earned during the marriage, as established by the testimony of an economist. The wife failed to meet her burden of showing that such finding was clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court upheld the trial court findings in light of substantial credible evidence, ruling that under In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), retirement benefits are classed as part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Pryor, 224 M 488, 731 P2d 895, 43 St. Rep. 2358 (1986).

Bank Foreclosure of Mortgage — Supported by Substantial Credible Evidence: Plaintiff bank foreclosed on certain parcels of real estate pledged as collateral for business loans after the bank refused an extension of the note unless the loan principal balance was substantially reduced. The trial court had before it substantial credible evidence to find the bank properly could foreclose the mortgage without liability for damages to the defendants' business. There was also substantial credible evidence for the court's denial of the defendants' counterclaim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Therefore, the standard for review set forth in this rule is met. Cent. Bank of Mont. v. Eystad, 219 M 69, 710 P2d 710, 42 St. Rep. 1850 (1985).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Medical Malpractice — Ingrown Toenail — Amputation of Leg: Substantial credible evidence supported a jury verdict of medical malpractice when treatment of a state prison inmate's ingrown toenail resulted in the amputation of his leg, even though the attending physicians contended that the inmate suffered from a preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs which was the cause of the amputation. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

Agreement Represents Intention of Parties: A loan consolidation and extension agreement between the parties superseded prior oral negotiations, and it was not clearly erroneous for the trial court to find that the agreement represents the intention of the parties. The finding is supported in the testimony of the bank officers and the execution of the written instruments following the oral negotiations. First Nat'l Bank of Missoula v. McGuinness, 217 M 409, 705 P2d 579, 42 St. Rep. 1288 (1985).

Execution and Delivery of Quitclaim Deed Supported in Evidence — Effect: The District Court found that a quitclaim deed was executed and delivered by the Morins to the Mapstons before a typewritten note was signed by Mapstons to convey the subject property to Morins. This central finding of fact was held to be clearly supported in the evidence. The legal effect of the finding is that the quitclaim deed constituted a gift to Mapstons, no consideration being necessary. The transfer vested all actual title which Morins then had, since no different intention was expressed or necessarily implied. The typewritten note cannot be specifically enforced by Morins because they had not received an adequate consideration for the contract and because the contract lacks mutuality. Moreover, no involuntary trust was created. Morin v. Mapston, 217 M 403, 705 P2d 118, 42 St. Rep. 1283 (1985).

Custodial Parent Found Unstable and Alcoholic — Modification Granted: The Supreme Court refused to set aside, as not supported by evidence, a District Court order granting a change of a child's custody from the mother to the father when evidence indicated that: (1) the mother's lifestyle and living situation lacked stability; (2) the mother had been arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol with the child in her vehicle; (3) the mother had attended a residential alcoholism treatment center but had failed to stop drinking or follow up on her problem after her discharge; and (4) the father was able and willing to provide a more stable environment for the child. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Workers' Compensation — Out-of-Pocket Expenses — Findings Supported by Evidence: The Workers' Compensation Court found that out-of-pocket expenses incurred by claimant's mother during claimant's hospital stay were not medically necessary and denied request for reimbursement. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that substantial evidence supported the verdict, and that the Supreme Court may not set aside the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court unless the findings are clearly erroneous. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Motor Vehicle Damage Award: The trial court's findings of fact with regard to the damage to the plaintiff's vehicle and reasonable costs of repairs were clear and specific. The testimony of two auto repairmen constituted substantial credible evidence upon which the court could base its findings of fact on this issue. Findings will not be overturned unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against them. Round v. Reikofski, 216 M 54, 699 P2d 72, 42 St. Rep. 634 (1985).

Evidence of Emancipation of Minor Child: When evidence in a URESA action indicated that the minor child lived away from the obligee but was not earning enough money to support herself, the District Court's determination that the minor child was not emancipated was not clearly erroneous. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Construction of Exclusionary Clause — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: District Court determined that arrangement by which insured purchased truck for use of son-in-law in exchange for free hauling of insured's hay and cattle was on a share expense basis, and as such not excluded from coverage under insurance policy provision that excluded coverage for lease or rental. Supreme Court affirmed District Court judgment and held that the policy clause was ambiguous, capable of at least two interpretations, and as such capable of construction against the insurance company. The District Court findings were not clearly erroneous and therefore must be sustained. Bauer Ranch, Inc. v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 215 M 153, 695 P2d 1307, 42 St. Rep. 255 (1985).

Equitable Division of Property and Water Rights — No Compensation or Attorney Fee: The court held that under the clearly established standard of review of a nonjury civil action, the trial court did not err in finding in a partition action that the defendants were entitled to the one-half share in the West Gallatin Canal Company, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation for the water right awarded, and that plaintiff was not entitled to attorney fees for bringing the partition action. The court examined the equity of the proceeding in its entirety and concluded that the fact that one party may have received less water than it started with does not make the partition inequitable. The partition of the property and appurtenant water rights was based on substantial credible evidence and resulted in an equitable division among the cotenants. Kravik v. Lewis, 213 M 448, 691 P2d 1373, 41 St. Rep. 2228 (1984), followed in Frank DeHaan, Inc. v. Gallatin-Madison Ranch Co., 250 M 304, 820 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 963 (1991).

No Common-Law Marriage — Absence of Immediate Creation or Mutual Agreement to Marry: As in Sartain, cited below, the Supreme Court applied the standard of review set forth in Cameron, also cited below, and found that the purported common-law marriage lacked the essential of immediate creation. A common-law marriage cannot be created piecemeal but rather comes instantly into being or does not come at all. The District Court correctly applied Montana common-law marriage standards. In re White, 212 M 228, 686 P2d 915, 41 St. Rep. 1705 (1984).

The Supreme Court concluded that there is substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings of fact that no common-law marriage existed between Sherri and deceased and that deceased's ex-wife, Peggy, should be appointed personal representative. The findings of fact are not clearly erroneous and were not set aside. Because of contradictions in the evidence, the court respected the Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., requirement that due regard be given to the opportunity of the District Court to judge the credibility of witnesses and applied the standard of review set forth in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978). The District Court properly applied Montana common-law marriage standards. Those standards were applied in Estate of Murnion, 212 M 107, 686 P2d 893, 41 St. Rep. 1627 (1984), in finding a mutual agreement to marry. In contrast, there was no evidence of any such agreement between Sherri and deceased. In re Sartain, 212 M 206, 686 P2d 909, 41 St. Rep. 1691 (1984).

Maintenance Award — Findings Sufficiently Specific Where Appellant of Little Help and Lacks Credibility: The parties were married to each other twice. Following the second dissolution, the wife was awarded maintenance until remarriage, death, or passage of 10 years. The District Court found that the property distributed to wife was income-consuming as opposed to income-producing property. The wife was facing a monthly deficit situation. The husband, through financial wheeling and dealing, had previously taken considerable amounts from the estate of the wife. The husband failed to substantiate his financial position, and his credibility was questionable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court had done its best to make statutory findings with no help from the husband. The wife's current standard of living was considerably lower than during the marriage. The award of maintenance was proper and was supportable based on the facts and the weight given to the witness' credibility. Thompson v. Thompson, 208 M 156, 676 P2d 223, 41 St. Rep. 237 (1984).

Contradictory Evidence in Custody Dispute — Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where there was contradictory evidence introduced by the parties to a custody dispute, the Supreme Court held that the findings of fact, while lacking in detail, were sufficiently supported by record evidence, especially that of a county social worker, to support the District Court's findings that the welfare of the parties' children was endangered by being in their mother's custody. C.C.W. v. H.M.W., 205 M 498, 668 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 1455 (1983).

No Fraud Found in Sale of Real Property — Theory of Negligent Misrepresentation Abandoned — Findings and Conclusions Not Clearly Erroneous: Where the plaintiffs agreed to purchase a bar and restaurant from the defendant seller and later brought an action for damages against the county and the county sanitarian, claiming that the sanitarian misrepresented the capacity of the sewer system and conditions of a county license, the findings and conclusions of the District Court were supported by substantial evidence and were not clearly erroneous. The District Court found that the plaintiffs failed to prove their claim of fraud and that the theory of negligent misrepresentation had been abandoned by the plaintiffs. The record contained conflicting evidence but showed that there could have been a misunderstanding between the parties, and a misunderstanding will not support a claim for fraud in the inducement. The statements made by the defendant may have been negligent, but the District Court properly concluded that by failing to argue the theory of negligent misrepresentation, the plaintiffs evidenced an intention to abandon that theory. Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Substantial Evidence of "Injury": Substantial evidence exists to support the District Court's finding that claimant suffered an injury within the meaning of 39-71-119 since medical evidence indicated that he had a preexisting condition, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, that was made worse by his inhalation of air containing a high concentration of grain dust. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Architect and Not Contractor Liable for Inadequate Specifications: There was sufficient evidence presented to the District Court to support its findings that the architect's water system specifications for a new school building were inadequate. A contractor is not responsible for errors or defects in the plans and is not liable, absent negligence on his part, when the owner's plans and specifications prove defective. Ace Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. School District, 204 M 81, 662 P2d 1327, 40 St. Rep. 678 (1983).

Diversion of Joint Business Account Funds for Personal Use: The accountant for one party to a joint business account testified as an expert and stated that about one-half of a $9,000 sum the party withdrew from the account was used for personal purposes and that in his opinion the remainder was used for business purposes. The other party testified that the whole amount was impermissibly withdrawn and used for the withdrawing party's own benefit. The accountant's testimony did not conclusively establish that the money was not diverted from the account for nonbusiness purposes, and a finding that the money was withdrawn and converted to the personal use of the withdrawing party was based upon substantial credible evidence and was affirmed. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982).

Award of Costs and Attorney Fees — Use of Contingency Agreement: Defendants defaulted on a promissory note. The bank and defendants negotiated a new note and executed a security agreement. This note provided the debtor would be liable for collection costs, including reasonable attorney fees, upon default. Defendants defaulted, and the bank repossessed and sold the security. A deficiency remained. The bank retained an attorney under a contingency fee agreement to collect the deficiency, and suit was filed. Defendants' answer raised defenses necessitating research and investigation. The attorney discovered defendants owned unmortgaged land, which they were attempting to transfer. The bank attached the land and acted as its own surety and purchased a separate surety bond. The trial court included the bond in allowable costs and awarded $5,000 in attorney fees to the bank. The bond was required under 27-18-204, and under the note was clearly a cost of collection. The attorney estimated 50 hours of work. The trial court followed the guidelines of Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975), for awarding attorney fees and found that since he would be entitled to more under the contingency agreement, which was not binding on the court, the award was reasonable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court's findings and conclusions adequately supported the award. First Nat'l Bank v. Beckstrom, 200 M 323, 651 P2d 45, 39 St. Rep. 1778 (1982).

Award of Child Support — Not Clearly Erroneous: Only when the findings of the District Court are clearly erroneous will they be set aside. There was substantial credible evidence in the record to affirm the District Court's judgment on child support; thus the determination of the father's child support obligation is not clearly erroneous. McConnell v. Dempster, 200 M 276, 650 P2d 799, 39 St. Rep. 1740 (1982).

Action on Promissory Notes Held in Trust — Real Party in Interest: The plaintiff bank filed an action to collect payment on four promissory notes, and the defendant contended that the bank was not a real party in interest to the case. The Supreme Court found that the District Court's finding that the plaintiff was the holder of legal title to each of the promissory notes and that it was therefore a real party in interest was supported by substantial evidence in both the transcripts and exhibits. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

Sufficient Rejection of Nonconforming Goods: Plaintiff sold defendants an irrigation system and pump. Plaintiff substituted a different type of pump for the one ordered by defendants. Plaintiff and his supplier installed the system, and defendants paid for everything but the pump and its installation. Plaintiff and his supplier supervised the digging of the sump for the installation of the pump but did not test it. The pump became clogged before any water ever came out of it. The supplier cleaned the pump and had an agent reinstall it. Defendants tried unsuccessfully to get the system to work and called plaintiff to complain several times. Defendants finally told plaintiff to come and get the pump and refused to pay for it. They later purchased a different pump, which operated the system properly. Plaintiff sued for the price of the pump and installation costs. The District Court entered judgment for the defendants. Plaintiff contends that the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law were insufficient, failing to adequately address the provisions of the U.C.C. governing rejection of nonconforming goods. The Supreme Court found that although the findings and conclusions could have been better, there was substantial evidence to support the conclusions that: (1) the goods were nonconforming; (2) there was a failure to cure the defects of the pump; and (3) the use of the pump was in fact a prolonged effort to determine why the pump failed to work and to cure the defect, and as such was not an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership. There was no acceptance by the defendants, no use inconsistent with the ownership of the plaintiff, and no delay in offering the return of the nonconforming pump significant enough to justify a conclusion that defendants had accepted the pump. Steinmetz v. Robertus, 196 M 311, 637 P2d 31, 38 St. Rep. 2067 (1981).

Refusal to Reopen Default Divorce Upheld — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution but failed to answer or otherwise appear. A default was entered, and 1 ½ years later the appellant moved to set aside the default and to obtain an accounting from his former spouse with respect to various items of personal property. The court refused to reopen the divorce decree and denied his motion for an accounting. The court found, with respect to the personal property, that appellant had made a gift of the personal property to his former spouse. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no basis in the record to determine that the District Court was clearly erroneous in finding that a gift had been made. Because of that, he was not entitled to an accounting and the District Court properly denied his motion. In re the Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981).

Extra Capacity Factor in Allocating Cost of Service — Finding of Substantial Evidence Not Clearly Erroneous: The Public Service Commission's (P.S.C.) decision to reject the city's proposed extra capacity factor, which was based upon a contract provision between the city and an adjoining water district to allocate cost of services to the water district, was upheld by the Supreme Court. The P.S.C. had substantial evidence before it in determining the extra capacity factor to be assigned to the district, and the decision, which was based on actual water use and comparisons from large water consumers similar in extent of demand to the water district, was not clearly erroneous. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Normalization of Test-Year Data in Rate Determination — Finding of Sufficient Evidence Not Clearly Erroneous: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has no statutory duty to normalize test-year data; it is within the Commission's discretion to determine when normalization is necessary, and the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the P.S.C. on appeal. The P.S.C. had sufficient evidence before it upon which to reach a determination, and the P.S.C. did not act unreasonably nor did it establish a rate that was so low as to be confiscatory. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

What Constitutes Excuse of Performance — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: On appeal in a breach of contract action, the seller argued that the evidence showed he intended to deliver the calves to the buyer by the extended delivery date of December 15 but was excused from performance because of bad weather. The trial court, however, chose to believe that the seller did not so intend, which belief was supported by the facts. The findings were not clearly erroneous. Therefore, the trial court was upheld. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

What Constitutes Excuse of Performance by Reason of Rejection: On appeal in a breach of contract action, the seller argued that the buyer had wrongfully rejected delivery after January 1. (The contract called for delivery in mid-November, but an extended delivery date of December 15 had been discussed.) The rejection allegedly made performance impossible due to the buyer's hindrance. The trial court found that the seller had never delivered any calves and concluded that the failure of the seller to make even partial performance amounted to a complete breach of the contract. The court's finding was supported by the evidence that the seller failed to tender delivery after January 1, that all he did was state on several occasions that he would be unable to deliver until January 1, and that the buyer had always demanded delivery by the (earlier) agreed date. After January 1, the seller took the calves to Billings and sold them at a price higher than the contract price without offering them to the buyer. Accordingly, the trial court's findings were held not clearly erroneous. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

Family Farm — Installment Payments for Spouse's Share: Petitioner and respondent were divorced. In the decree dissolving the marriage, the trial judge divided the major asset, the family farm, awarding 55% to the husband and 45% to the wife. The farm had been in the husband's family since 1917. The husband was to pay the wife's share in four equal annual installments. The wife contends that the farm should have been sold so that she would have the opportunity of sharing in any gain realized on the property. She also contends that the settlement scheme is unfair because it allows the husband to retain income-producing property while she receives only cash. The dissolution decree was consistent with the policy of keeping a farm or ranch intact and operated as a unit upon dissolution whenever there is a reasonable means of providing a wife her equitable share of the property short of selling the land. The value of the estate is a question of fact for the District Court, and there was no showing that the valuation was "clearly erroneous". Giving the wife a lien on the property until the payments are made adequately protects her interests. Gomke v. Gomke, 192 M 169, 627 P2d 395, 38 St. Rep. 578 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Attorney's Fees Substantiated by the Evidence: Attorney's fees awarded to the wife in a marriage dissolution case were not excessive where the District Court's finding of the number of hours necessary to represent the wife is substantiated by evidence in the record. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Lump-Sum Award Double to Wife Where Husband Has Greater Earning Capacity — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: A lump-sum award to the wife in a marriage dissolution of a proportion of the marital estate twice the husband's award was not an abuse of discretion by the District Court where the husband did have a greater earning capacity, despite his unemployment at the time of dissolution and immediately prior to the dissolution. Section 40-4-202 requires the District Court to consider the opportunity of the parties for future acquisition of capital asset and income. "Opportunity" is a broad word that includes the capacity of the parties to earn future income. The findings were therefore not clearly erroneous. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

No Finding of Enticement to Obtain Personal Jurisdiction: The District Court's finding that it had personal jurisdiction over respondent in a marriage dissolution is supported by the record and thus will be allowed to stand on appeal under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. Respondent's contention that he was enticed into the jurisdiction was found to have no basis since respondent stated that he was a resident of the state and he was taking care of his own and other family affairs. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Findings of Reliance Not Clearly Erroneous: In an action by the plaintiff contractor against the defendant motor carrier for breach of contract, the finding by the District Court that the plaintiff relied upon the bid of the defendant was supported by substantial evidence. The evidence showed that the memorandum of the defendant was delivered to the plaintiff for the purpose of consummating a proposal previously offered by the defendant and that the plaintiff advised the defendant that the plaintiff would notify the defendant when the contract was to be performed. These findings were not clearly erroneous and therefore could not be set aside by the Supreme Court. Empire Steel Mfg. Co. v. Carlson, 191 M 189, 622 P2d 1016, 38 St. Rep. 101 (1981).

Sufficiency of Evidence of Oral Agreement Additional to Written Divorce Settlement Agreement: On appeal relating to his divorce settlement agreement, the former husband argued that there was insufficient evidence of an oral agreement between him and his former wife covering matters not in the written agreement. The Supreme Court said that there was no preponderance of evidence contrary to the findings at trial. The only evidence that the oral agreement did not exist was the husband's denial. The husband had put a car at his wife's disposal for several months after their separation, which action could properly be interpreted as an action in furtherance of his obligations under the oral agreement. The findings of the District Court were based on sufficient evidence to properly support the trial court's judgment. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Attorney's Fees — Reliance by Courts on Experts: In determining attorney's fees, the court as a jury is not bound absolutely to the testimony of expert witnesses. It can reduce or increase the figures submitted to it by experts as reasonable attorney's fees, and as long as its findings are not clearly erroneous the determination made in its discretion will not be disturbed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Findings to Support Breach of Contract: The parties entered into a written agreement under which defendant was to selectively cut all merchantable timber on plaintiff's land that had been or was infected by the pine beetle. The evidence showed that defendant cut trees that were not merchantable and merchantable trees not affected by the pine beetle. He was also clearcutting sections of timber. This evidence was sufficient to support the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law that defendant had breached the contract. Madison Fork Ranch v. L & B Lodge Pole Timber Prod., 189 M 292, 615 P2d 900 (1980).

Child Support Determination — Error on Financial Matters: When the District Court's findings in determining child support were contradictory to the evidence of the husband's income, and when debt payments were allocated differently in two places in the decree, the findings were clearly erroneous, and thus cannot stand and must be reviewed again by the District Court. Benjamin v. Benjamin, 189 M 158, 615 P2d 218 (1980).

Recovery Limited to Specific Injury Statute: The workers' compensation court decided that the claimant was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits and limited his recovery to benefits under 39-71-707 (since repealed) and to such temporary total disability compensation benefits as he had received while convalescing. The decision was upheld since credible and substantial evidence appeared in the record in support of the workers' compensation court. McGee v. Indus. Indem. Co., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156 (1979).

Prior-Acquired and Gifted Property — Disposition: The trial court found the wife had not contributed financially to property gifted to the husband during the marriage and property acquired by the husband prior to the marriage and that her contribution as a homemaker had not facilitated maintenance of that property. Any increase in the value of the property was the result of inflation. Such findings were not clearly erroneous, unsupported by the evidence, or made arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or in excess of the bounds of reason. In re Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979).

Independent Contractor Status Supported by Substantial Evidence: The trial court's finding that a general contractor did not lose his independent contractor status when the defendants began making direct payments to the contractor's employees and subcontractors in order to keep them from walking off the job was supported by substantial evidence. Kosmerl v. Barbour, 180 M 208, 589 P2d 1017 (1979).

Contracts: Where plaintiff's performance under a contract was prevented in part by the defendant and in part by the weather, the District Court did not err in awarding defendant only one-fourth of the balance due under the contract. Rosenquist v. Harding, 179 M 521, 587 P2d 416 (1978).

Validity of Election — Alternative Form of Government: The findings of fact and conclusions of law of the District Court upholding the validity of city and county alternative form of government elections and proceedings leading thereto were supported by substantial evidence. Schuman v. Study Comm'n of Yellowstone County, 176 M 313, 578 P2d 291 (1978).

Substantial Evidence — Findings Not Affected by Newly Discovered Evidence: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law, and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which at best was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977).

Easement by Prescription — Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where the District Court's judgment entered upon findings and conclusions declared the plaintiffs to be the owners of an easement by prescription for the use of a roadway across the defendant's land, the findings that the defendant's use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted were supported by substantial credible evidence. Lunceford v. Trenk, 163 M 504, 518 P2d 266 (1974), followed in Rasmussen v. Fowler, 245 M 308, 800 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 2134 (1990).

Findings of Fact: The findings of fact set forth by the judge were sufficient to meet the requirements of this rule. Mondakota Gas Co. v. Becker, 151 M 513, 445 P2d 745 (1968).

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Standard of Review of Findings and Conclusions of District Court Sitting Without Jury: The Supreme Court reviews the findings of a District Court sitting without a jury to determine if the findings were clearly erroneous. Findings are clearly erroneous if substantial credible evidence does not support them, if the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, or if a review of the record leaves the Supreme Court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake was committed. The evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party when determining whether substantial credible evidence supports the findings. A District Court's conclusions of law will be reviewed to determine whether the conclusions are correct. Ray v. Nansel, 2002 MT 191, 311 M 135, 53 P3d 870 (2002), following Guthrie v. Hardy, 2001 MT 122, 305 M 367, 28 P3d 467 (2001).

Scope of Review on Appeal:

The Supreme Court reviews the findings of a trial court sitting without a jury to determine if the findings are clearly erroneous. Clear error occurs if: (1) the findings are not supported by substantial credible evidence; (2) the trial court has misapprehended the effect of the evidence; or (3) a review of the record leaves the Supreme Court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. Evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Here, evidence was substantial that three separate agreements memorialized one transaction for the sale and purchase of three ice cream distributor businesses, that a related consulting agreement was merely a promissory note wherein the seller agreed to finance the balance of the purchase price, and that the seller did not "sell, transfer, assign, and deliver" one of the distributor agreements to the buyer as promised. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Appellants must show by a clear preponderance of the evidence that the findings of fact of the District Court are incorrect, and it is their burden to do so before the Supreme Court may disturb those findings of fact. Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978).

Action to Quiet Title in Mining Company Shares — Credible Evidence of Outstanding Shares — District Court Upheld: Safronoff and others were defendants in an action to quiet title to outstanding shares of the defunct Sun Mining, Inc., which was involuntarily dissolved by the state. The District Court reviewed all of the evidence before it, including a list of outstanding shares prepared by Sun Mining's secretary-treasurer shortly before the company was dissolved, the number of shares held by each shareholder according to each shareholder's stock certificate, and oral testimony, and found that the secretary-treasurer's list was the only credible evidence. Safronoff appealed the decision of the District Court, contending that he should have been awarded additional shares. Relying upon Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106 (1992), the Supreme Court applied the "clearly erroneous" standard to the District Court's findings of fact and held that although there were conflicts in the evidence before it, the District Court reasonably relied upon this evidence and that the District Court's findings of fact were not clearly erroneous. Duncan v. Allen, 1998 MT 316, 292 M 180, 970 P2d 1036, 55 St. Rep. 1296 (1998).

Common-Law Marriage — District Court Overturned: The standard of review of a District Court's findings of fact is whether the findings are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court has adopted a three-part test to determine whether a District Court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous. A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if it is not supported by substantial evidence, if the District Court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, or if, after reviewing the record, the Supreme Court is left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made. In this case, involving an alleged common-law marriage, the Supreme Court overturned the District Court's conclusion that a common-law marriage did not exist, stating that although there was substantial evidence to support the lower court's findings of fact, the Supreme Court's review of the record led it to the conclusion that the District Court misapprehended the effect of the evidence. In re Estate of Hunsaker, 1998 MT 279, 291 M 412, 968 P2d 281, 55 St. Rep. 1144 (1998).

Alleged Failure to Disclose Agency Relationship — Resolution of Conflicting Evidence — Alternative Findings Not Required: Garrison purchased property on Flathead Lake through Averill, a real estate broker. Later, Garrison filed suit against Averill and the seller of the property, alleging that he, Garrison, considered Averill his agent and relied on Averill to represent his interests and that Averill was aware of that reliance. Garrison also argued that the District Court ignored testimony from his expert to the effect that Averill breached the standard of care by failing to document his disclosure to Garrison of his agency relationship with the seller. Garrison also alleged that Averill was negligent and that the negligence caused Garrison's damages. The Supreme Court pointed out testimony in the record from Averill's expert and concluded that the District Court had not ignored the testimony presented by Garrison but simply resolved conflicting evidence against Garrison. Citing Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341 (1992), the Supreme Court held that just because there is evidence in the record on which the District Court could have based certain findings of fact does not require the District Court to make those findings. Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997).

Supreme Court Clarifies That Standard of Review for Estate Cases at Equity Is the "Clearly Erroneous" Test: In reviewing a lower court's decision that a will could be admitted to probate because it was not the product of undue influence, the Supreme Court stated that the standard of review in estate cases at equity was inconsistent and contradictory. Under the statute, the test has tended to be whether substantial credible evidence supports the lower court's findings, while under the rule, the test has been whether the lower court's findings are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court held that nothing in the statute precludes the use of the "clearly erroneous" test, while the rule, by its terms, mandates its use. Therefore, with respect to estate cases at equity, the standard of review would be the "clearly erroneous" test. In re Estate of Tipp, 281 M 120, 933 P2d 182, 54 St. Rep. 90 (1997).

Valuation of Farm Property — Adoption of Appraisal as Factual Issue Determined by District Court — "Clearly Erroneous" Standard Applicable: Upon the dissolution of Alan's and Linda's marriage, the District Court adopted the appraisal of Alan's expert witness, to the exclusion of the appraisal by Linda's expert. Linda raised numerous objections to the appraisal by Alan's expert. Citing Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the valuation of property is a factual issue to be determined by the trial court and that when reviewing findings of fact on this subject, the Supreme Court is precluded from substituting its judgment for that of the trier of fact and may only set aside the findings of the trial court if they are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court set out specific reasons why the appraisal by Alan's expert was adopted and the appraisal by Linda's expert rejected. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996), followed and clearly erroneous standard applied in In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000).

Substantial Evidence of Negligence: Although in conflict with defendant's version of facts, substantial evidence existed to support plaintiff's claim. It was foreseeable that a freestanding light standard could fall and injure anyone in its path and that someone could act with a minimal amount of force in a manner to intervene with the standard's stability. The Supreme Court will not retry a case simply because the jury chooses to believe one side's evidence to the exclusion of the other and will not disturb a jury's negligence findings unless the results are inherently impossible to believe. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

In reviewing the trial of a suit for damages suffered in a car accident, the Supreme Court refused to overturn a jury verdict of no negligence by respondent when the evidence indicated the following: (1) the respondent was traveling at a reasonable rate of speed; (2) respondent's headlamps were on and aimed properly; and (3) appellant and his companion were walking on the road, facing away from traffic, and wearing dark clothes on a dark night. Kukuchka v. Ziemet, 219 M 155, 710 P2d 1361, 42 St. Rep. 1916 (1985).

Evidence of Adequate Medical Care — Jury Finding of Lack of Medical Malpractice Affirmed: On appeal from judgment based on a jury verdict finding no medical malpractice for injuries sustained by a premature infant, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding sufficient evidence derived from expert testimony to establish a reasonable basis for the jury conclusion that medical care met or exceeded the applicable standard of care under the circumstances. Silvis v. Hobbs, 251 M 407, 824 P2d 1013, 49 St. Rep. 62 (1992).

Adoption by Workers' Compensation Court of Claimant's Proposed Findings, Conclusions, and Judgment: Appellant claimed reversible error by the Workers' Compensation Court's substantial, although not verbatim, adoption of claimant's proposed findings, conclusions, and judgment. Although under 39-71-2903 that court is governed by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act rather than by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, there is nothing in the Montana Administrative Procedure Act or the rules of the Workers' Compensation Court that prohibits the verbatim adoption of the prevailing party's proposed findings, conclusions, and judgment in a manner similar to that allowed for District Courts under this rule. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992), followed in In re Marriages of Boyer & Overman, 261 M 179, 862 P2d 384, 50 St. Rep. 1277 (1993).

Attorney Not Public Figure as Matter of Law — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Defendant attorney filed a defamation action against the Great Falls Tribune for damages arising from a published article, later retracted, that incorrectly reported that he was sought for criminal charges. In reversing the judgment and remanding the case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment because its factors did not specify with sufficient particularity the rationale underlying its ruling that the defendant was a public figure as a matter of law. Article II, sec. 7, Mont. Const., provides that in libel suits, the facts and the law are determined by the jury under the direction of the court. Review of the record revealed the existence of genuine issues of material fact that must be determined by a jury. Kurth v. Great Falls Tribune Co., 246 M 407, 804 P2d 393, 48 St. Rep. 13 (1991).

Condemnation Findings Not Challenged at Trial Court Level: A condemnation case was remanded for the lower court to determine certain factual questions concerning the city's proposed takeover of a privately owned water company. Upon appeal of the remanded case, the city did not allege that findings were clearly erroneous or unsupported by evidence. Therefore, the Supreme Court was bound by the findings. Missoula v. Mtn. Water Co., 236 M 442, 771 P2d 103, 46 St. Rep. 494 (1989).

Findings and Conclusions Not Completely Verbatim — Evidence of Judge's Thoughtful Consideration: A party specified as error a judge's verbatim adoption of findings of fact and conclusion of law proposed by the other party. The Supreme Court determined that they were not adopted completely verbatim and held that the judge's editing of findings and selective use of conclusions, as well as reliance on his own conclusions, evidenced thoughtful consideration by the judge deciding the case. Felton Inv. Group v. Taurman, 222 M 238, 722 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 1228 (1986).

Reasonable Visitation Provision Replaced by Fixed Visitation Schedule — No Abuse of Discretion: Following dissolution of marriage, mother was granted custody of two minor children with reasonable visitation awarded to father. In the ensuing months, the father was permitted to visit the children only once and further attempts to arrange visitation were not successful since the mother had no phone and would not respond to messages. The father petitioned the District Court to grant a fixed visitation schedule, and the petition was granted. Although not required under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order contained findings and conclusions, including evidence that the District Court Judge considered the best interests of the children and the conclusion that the mother's suggested graduated basis visitation schedule required reasonableness that was lacking in both parties. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's aid was necessary to clarify the meaning of "reasonable visitation" and found no abuse of discretion in the District Court Judge's conclusion. In re Marriage of Vinecke, 221 M 58, 716 P2d 638, 43 St. Rep. 633 (1986).

Proposed Findings and Conclusions of Counsel Adopted Verbatim:

The test applied by the Supreme Court to determine if the District Court's use of proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law was proper is whether the proposed findings are sufficiently comprehensive and pertinent to the issues to provide a basis for decision and whether they are supported by the evidence presented. In re Marriage of Benner, 219 M 188, 711 P2d 802, 42 St. Rep. 1943 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Purkett, 222 M 225, 721 P2d 349, 43 St. Rep. 1217 (1986).

The Supreme Court rejected appellants' contention that, by adopting verbatim the bank's proposals, the District Court led itself into egregious error because it made no findings relating to appellants' affirmative defenses and counterclaims. Noting that this was a serious defect in the findings, the Supreme Court proceeded to treat the case as one of summary judgment and, relying on the finding that there was no specific agreement not to foreclose, held that there was no genuine issue of material fact raised in the defense and counterclaim issues that would merit remand. First Nat'l Bank of Missoula v. McGuinness, 217 M 409, 705 P2d 579, 42 St. Rep. 1288 (1985).

The court rejected defendants' argument that the District Court failed to exercise independent judgment by adopting the plaintiffs' proposed findings. The plaintiffs' findings, as adopted by the District Court, are supported by the record. The standard for review of findings made by a District Court is the same whether the District Court has prepared them or has adopted a party's proposed findings and conclusions. Bowman v. Prater, 213 M 459, 692 P2d 9, 41 St. Rep. 2236 (1984).

It is not good practice for the District Court to adopt verbatim (here, by mere photocopying) one party's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law because it may lead to error. However, once the District Court adopts findings and conclusions, they become the court's own and may not be overturned on appeal unless they are clearly erroneous. The record in this case contains substantial credible evidence to support the court's findings and conclusions. R.L.S. & T.L.S. v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983), followed in Turner v. Ferrin, 232 M 146, 757 P2d 335, 45 St. Rep. 946 (1988).

Although the practice is disapproved, the fact that District Court substantially adopted the findings proposed by counsel for one of the parties does not change the standard for review, which is that the findings are to stand if supported by law and evidence. LeProwse v. LeProwse, 198 M 357, 646 P2d 526, 39 St. Rep. 1053 (1982). See also Kowis v. Kowis, 202 M 371, 658 P2d 1084, 40 St. Rep. 149 (1983), In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987), In re Marriage of Hagemo, 230 M 255, 749 P2d 1079, 45 St. Rep. 183 (1988), In re Marriage of Purdy, 234 M 502, 764 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 2084 (1988), In re Marriage of Walls, 278 M 413, 925 P2d 483, 53 St. Rep. 974 (1996), and In re Marriage of McDermott, 2003 MT 283, 318 M 13, 79 P3d 245 (2003). Purdy was followed in In re Marriage of Stufft, 276 M 454, 916 P2d 767, 53 St. Rep. 467 (1996).

Notwithstanding the duty imposed in Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., upon a District Court to "find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon", the rule is not automatically breached when a court adopts verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions submitted by the prevailing party, especially where, as here, the District Judge invited both parties to submit proposed findings and conclusions prior to making his decision. Adopted findings, though not the product of the District Judge's mind, are formally his and will stand if supported by the evidence. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981), followed in Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

The appellant argued that the District Court erred by adopting the proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and decree submitted by respondent. She suggested that a lower standard for review should exist for the review of findings and conclusions drafted by counsel than exists under the "clearly erroneous" standard of Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court declined to adopt this suggestion. The findings of fact and conclusions of law entered here by the court were comprehensive and supported by the evidence. They contained no clear error. Jensen v. Jensen, 193 M 247, 631 P2d 700, 38 St. Rep. 1109 (1981), followed in Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720

P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986), and in Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988).

Commodity Credit Corporation Payments — Loan Not Sale: Substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion that a farm corporation treated loans of the federal Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) as corporate debt. The CCC loans have few of the aspects of a true sale. There is no transfer of title. Actual title or ownership of the grain is not specifically transferred until the farmer either activates the nonrecourse clause or pays his loan. The government pays the farmer for storing the grain during the term of the loan, but aside from that has no other power to use the grain. Hass v. Hass Land Co., 217 M 246, 704 P2d 63, 42 St. Rep. 1170 (1985).

Substantial Evidence to Support Order of Commitment — Scope of Review: The Supreme Court found substantial evidence to support the lower court's order of commitment. The oral testimony of Dr. Hughes, various medical reports submitted by the psychiatrists, and hospital records were relied upon by the judge. Appellant expressly asked the Supreme Court to review the weight of Dr. Hughes' testimony. That is not the role of an appellate court. The trier of fact makes findings, and the Supreme Court will not disturb them unless shown to be clearly erroneous. In re G.S., 215 M 384, 698 P2d 406, 42 St. Rep. 451 (1985).

Employee of General Contractor Expert on Tile Installation — Standard of Review: In an action for breach of warranty brought by the general contractor against a subcontractor regarding installation of a tile floor, plaintiff's employee was allowed to testify as an expert witness on the subject of tile installation. The court rejected subcontractor's argument that the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the witness was an expert. Although the court expressed concern that witness was allowed to express his opinion on a skill of which he had no practical or personal involvement prior to preparation for trial, the fact that it would reach a different conclusion on the determination than that of the trial court does not render the trial judgment infirm. The trial court's ruling must be upheld unless shown to be clearly erroneous. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Christensen, 215 M 372, 697 P2d 1344, 42 St. Rep. 440 (1985). This standard applied in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

No Indication of Weight Trial Court Placed on Inadmissible Evidence — New Trial: In the appeal of a conviction under 61-8-401 for driving under the influence of alcohol, the Supreme Court ruled inadmissible blood test results entered into evidence by the trial court. The Supreme Court further ruled that it could not decide whether there was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant without the blood test results because the Supreme Court had no indication of the weight the trial court placed upon the test in its decision. The case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985).

District Court Findings Presumed Correct: The appellate standard for review is clear. The findings of the trial court are presumed to be correct if supported by substantial evidence. Robinson v. Schrade, 215 M 326, 697 P2d 923, 42 St. Rep. 401 (1985).

Medical Evidence Entered by Deposition — No Substantial Evidence to Deny Claim — Liberal Construction: Because the record on appeal of a Workers' Compensation Court decision consisted mainly of testimony by deposition, the court's function on review is different than the usual limited standard of review. When the critical evidence, particularly medical evidence, is entered by deposition, the Supreme Court is in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to judge the weight to be given to such record testimony. A review of the medical experts' depositions in this case reveals a sharp conflict in the medical evidence presented in regard to the claimant's injury. The court held that the testimony of the expert relied on in the Workers' Compensation Court's findings did not amount to substantial evidence and that there was no causal relation between claimant's current symptoms and the original injuries suffered while under defendant's employ. Moreover, the Legislature has mandated that the Workers' Compensation Act be liberally construed. Shupert v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 215 M 182, 696 P2d 436, 42 St. Rep. 277 (1985), followed in Frost v. Anaconda Co., 216 M 387, 701 P2d 987, 42 St. Rep. 889 (1985), and Weber v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 270 M 239, 890 P2d 1296, 52 St. Rep. 162 (1995).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Terminate Parental Rights: Evidence was held sufficient to support trial court's findings that appellant failed to comply with court-approved treatment plan and that appellant's condition which rendered her unfit to be a parent is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. Substantial credible evidence supports the findings, and they may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. In re R.M.B., Youth in Need of Care, 213 M 29, 689 P2d 281, 41 St. Rep. 1925 (1984).

Substantial Evidence to Support Findings: The function of an appellate court in reviewing findings of fact in a civil action tried by the District Court without a jury is not to substitute its judgment for the trier of fact but to determine whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Although there is conflicting evidence, the record indicates substantial evidence upon which the District Court based its decision. Eliason v. Wallace, 209 M 358, 680 P2d 573, 41 St. Rep. 758 (1984), followed in Gypsy-Highview Gathering System, Inc. v. Dept. of State Lands, 231 M 330, 753 P2d 317, 45 St. Rep. 657 (1988).

Role of Supreme Court on Review:

The Supreme Court's function on review does not include retrial of the case. The Supreme Court may not substitute its judgment for that of the trial court. The reviewing court is confined to determining whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law. The court reviews the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The evidence may be inherently weak and still be "substantial". General Mills, Inc. v. Zerbe Bros., Inc., 207 M 19, 672 P2d 1109, 40 St. Rep. 1830 (1983), following Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978); In re Estate of LaTray, 183 M 141, 598 P2d 619 (1979); Olson v. Westfork Properties, Inc., 171 M 154, 557 P2d 821 (1976); Hornung v. Estate of Lagerquist, 155 M 412, 473 P2d 541 (1970); followed in In re Estate of Lehner, 220 M 129, 714 P2d 130, 43 St. Rep. 231 (1986), and in Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992). See also In re Marriage of Beitz, 211 M 111, 683 P2d 485, 41 St. Rep. 1247 (1984), and Emasco Ins. Co. v. Waymire, 242 M 131, 788 P2d 1357, 47 St. Rep. 636 (1990).

The standard for review of a District Court's findings is the same whether the court prepared the findings or adopted a party's proposed findings: the test, then, is whether the court abused its discretion by acting arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. The findings must stand if supported by the record. Error in adopting proposed findings is more an ethical than a legal breach and occurs when the proposed findings are relied upon to the exclusion of the proper consideration of facts and the exercise of independent judgment. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Merry, 213 M 141, 689 P2d 1250, 41 St. Rep. 2009 (1984). See also Johnson v. Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438, 40 St. Rep. 1255 (1983).

Action to Increase Child Support — Standard of Appellate Review:

Five years after entry of the parties' original divorce decree, the District Court, on motion of the mother, ordered that the father's monthly child support payments be increased from $125 to $200. On appeal, the Supreme Court, noting that it will reverse the District Court only if its findings are clearly erroneous, declined to overrule the District Court. The Supreme Court stated that the factors relied upon by the District Court, i.e., the increase in the child's age and needs, inflation, and the fact that the wife's expenses exceed her income, rendered the terms of the original decree unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-208. Johnson v. Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438, 40 St. Rep. 1255 (1983).

On appeal of an action to increase a child support payment, the Supreme Court will view the record in a light most favorable to the prevailing party. Findings of a District Court will not be set aside unless they are clearly erroneous. When there is substantial credible evidence, though perhaps conflicting, the judgment of the District Court will not be overturned. Nicolai v. Nicolai, 193 M 203, 631 P2d 300, 38 St. Rep. 1100 (1981).

Substantial Credible Evidence in Support of District Court's Finding That Operation of Bar Did Not Create Nuisance: Plaintiffs, owners of a building in which defendants, lessees, operated a bar, filed an unlawful detainer action against defendants pursuant to 70-27-108. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants, by allowing loud music and noise in the bar, were violating an implied covenant not to operate their bar in such a manner as to create a nuisance. The trial judge ruled that the lease could not be canceled under any theory of nuisance because defendants were doing what they had a right to do, operate a bar. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's finding that the bar was not being operated as a nuisance, it was unnecessary to determine whether Montana law recognizes in real property leases an implied covenant on the part of the lessee to use the leased premises so as not to injure the lessor by creating a nuisance. Martinson v. Thompson, 205 M 264, 667 P2d 423, 40 St. Rep. 1259 (1983).

Evidence Insufficient As a Matter of Law: Testimony at trial did not clearly and convincingly establish that respondent, due to his mental condition, was unable to protect his life or health at the time of the trial. Therefore, the evidence that respondent was "seriously mentally ill" within the meaning of 53-21-102 was insufficient as a matter of law, and the District Court commitment order was vacated. In re R.T., 204 M 493, 665 P2d 789, 40 St. Rep. 1025 (1983).

Findings and Conclusions as to Water Rights Held Inadequate — Judgment Vacated and Remanded:

Although the Supreme Court has discouraged District Courts from the practice of adopting the prevailing party's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law virtually verbatim, once adopted by the District Court the "clearly erroneous" standard of Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., supports them on appeal. In re Marriage of Speer, 201 M 418, 654 P2d 1001, 39 St. Rep. 2204 (1982), followed in Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

When a midstream and downstream water user filed suit against the upstream user to have the District Court declare the relative water rights of the parties, the findings of fact and conclusions of law entered by the District Court were so bare and inadequate as to provide no basis for meaningful appellate review. Because it could not be determined from the District Court's bare conclusions (i.e., that the parties had failed to prove their case by a preponderance of the evidence and had abandoned their rights) what the factual or evidentiary basis for the District Court's decision was, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment as to all of the three parties, remanded the case to the District Court, and directed it to enter findings and conclusions that are reflective of the evidence presented at trial and the legal contentions of the parties. 79 Ranch, Inc. v. Pitsch, 193 M 229, 631 P2d 690, 38 St. Rep. 1048 (1981).

Ambiguity of Contract Clause — Conclusion of Law: Contract ambiguities are questions of fact, and on appeal the Supreme Court would ordinarily limit their review to the "clearly erroneous" standard of review. The initial determination of whether or not an ambiguity exists is one of law. Thus, the determination by the District Court that a default clause is ambiguous is a conclusion of law freely reviewable. When on review the Supreme Court finds that the clause is not ambiguous, the court is free to rely on its own interpretation of the clause. SAS Partnership v. Schafer, 200 M 478, 653 P2d 834, 39 St. Rep. 1883 (1982).

Evidence to Support Findings: On appeal, the court will not substitute its judgment for that of the trier of fact. Findings will not be overturned unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against them, recognizing that evidence may be weak or conflicting yet still support the findings. On review, evidence will be reviewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126, 39 St. Rep. 1867 (1982). See also Wallace v. Wallace, 203 M 255, 661 P2d 455, 40 St. Rep. 430 (1983), followed in Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Expert Testimony Review — Substantial Evidence Most Favorable to Prevailing Party: Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. At all times defendant denied any damage. The parties presented conflicting expert testimony as to whether the increase in the water table level was due to precipitation or the dam. The Supreme Court's standard of review is whether the findings of fact and conclusions of law are supported by substantial evidence (citing Kearns v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 173 M 239, 567 P2d 433 (1977)). The evidence must be reviewed in a light most favorable to the prevailing party in District Court (citing Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1331 (1977)). There was substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's findings. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 9 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Findings Contradicted and Unsupported: The determination by the District Court that the wife's bachelor's degree in economics would enable her to find appropriate employment to support herself in a manner similar to that enjoyed during the marriage was contradicted by other findings and was unsupported by the record. Therefore, it was clearly erroneous and had to be reversed. Bowman v. Bowman, 194 M 233, 633 P2d 1198, 38 St. Rep. 1515 (1981).

Appellate Review of Facts — Action of an Equitable Nature: In equitable causes where issues are close, a degree of deference will be accorded the findings of the trial court since it is in a better position to make decisions of fact. Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires findings of fact made by the District Court to be upheld unless they are clearly erroneous, but the rule does not make any distinction between equitable causes and cases at law; thus the Supreme Court in reviewing an action of an equitable nature must look to 3-2-204(5) and independently review all questions of fact as well as questions of law. In causes where the issues are not close, the standard for this review is to uphold the District Court on questions of fact unless there is a decided preponderance of the evidence against its findings. Rase v. Castle Mtn. Ranch, Inc., 193 M 209, 631 P2d 680, 38 St. Rep. 992 (1981).

Findings Supporting Continued Maintenance Properly Made — Issue Not Before the Court: Where the marriage of the parties was previously dissolved and the wife awarded maintenance without being required to seek employment in order that she be able to care for her handicapped child at home, the District Court did not err, upon a petition for discharge of the maintenance award, in adopting the respondent's proposed findings and conclusions. With the exception of a finding regarding increased financial need, there was sufficient evidence before the court showing no change in the child's need for special care to support the findings and conclusions that were adopted, no matter who drafted them. As the issue of increased spousal maintenance was not before the court, that finding must be vacated. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Prevailing Party Not Presenting Expert Testimony: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home structural problems requiring repair occurred. At trial plaintiffs were awarded damages against the defendant. On appeal defendant claimed that findings that the roof had not been constructed as planned and bid, and that construction defects by defendant brought about the instability and unsafe nature of the house, were not supported by credible evidence especially since the District Court did not accord any weight to the testimony of defendant's expert architect. The Supreme Court rejected the claim, stating that when substantial evidence in the record supports the findings of the District Court, the fact that the prevailing party does not present expert testimony does not mean that the testimony produced by experts on the other side is inherently superior. When the evidence is conflicting but the findings are supported by substantial credible evidence, the findings of the District Court will be upheld. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Nature of District Court Order — Mandamus — Action at Law: When the order of the District Court commands a school district to perform a duty that devolves upon it by operation of law, the order is in the nature of mandamus. Mandamus is an action at law. Therefore 3-2-204 does not apply. The District Court findings are to be reviewed on appeal under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. In re the "A" Family, 184 M 145, 602 P2d 157 (1979).

Findings by the Court: The findings of a trial court in a nonjury trial will not be reversed upon appeal, unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against the findings. Steward v. Casey, 182 M 185, 595 P2d 1176 (1979).

Conflicts in Evidence: Although conflicts may exist in the evidence presented, it is the duty and function of the trial judge to resolve such conflicts. His findings will not be disturbed on appeal where they are based on substantial though conflicting evidence. Kostbade v. Buckingham, 182 M 137, 595 P2d 1149 (1979).

Conflicting Evidence in Findings: If a trial court's findings are sustained by competent and substantial although conflicting evidence, they will not be disturbed on appeal. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Review of Evidence on Appeal: The evidence will be reviewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party, and the credibility of witnesses and weight accorded their testimony is for the District Court's determination in nonjury trials. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Review of Property Division: The rule for review of property division in marital cases is whether the District Court acted arbitrarily, without use of conscientious judgment, or exceeded the bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. Kuntz v. Kuntz, 181 M 237, 593 P2d 41 (1979).

Workers' Compensation — Standard of Review: The findings and conclusions of the workers' compensation court, like those of District Courts, may not stand if there is a preponderance of the evidence against them when viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The findings of fact will not be set aside unless they are clearly erroneous. However, the Supreme Court is in as good a position to judge record testimony, as opposed to oral testimony, as the trial court. Hert v. Newberry, 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656, 587 P2d 11 (1978), clarified and rehearing denied in Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Trial Court to Determine Ultimate Facts: The trial court's function in nonjury cases is to find ultimate facts from conflicting evidence, and those findings are sufficient if sustained by competent and substantial although conflicting evidence. Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978), followed in Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985).

Court's Function — Determination of Substantial Credible Evidence: The court's function on review is not to substitute its judgment in place of the trier of facts but rather it is confined to determining whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Although conflicts may exist in the evidence presented, it is the duty and function of the trial judge to resolve such conflicts. His findings will not be disturbed on appeal where they are based on substantial though conflicting evidence. Olson v. Westfork Properties, Inc., 171 M 154, 157 P2d 821 (1976), followed in In re Support of Rockman, 217 M 498, 705 P2d 590, 42 St. Rep. 1323 (1985), and In re Adoption of E.S.R., 218 M 118, 706 P2d 132, 42 St. Rep. 1448 (1985).

Preponderance of Evidence: Findings of fact made by trial court will not be disturbed where they are supported by preponderance of evidence. W. Foundry, Inc. v. Matelich, 150 M 228, 433 P2d 789 (1967).

Commission Notes

COMMISSION NOTE
TO AUGUST 1, 1965, AMENDMENT

Under Rule 77(d) the prevailing party has 10 days after the entry of judgment to give the unsuccessful parties notice of such entry. The change in 52(b) is an adjustment to this provision, and is designed to meet the possibility that the prevailing party is the only party that knows of the entry of the judgment and waits 10 days before giving the unsuccessful party notice of such entry. The provision is similar to that found in Rule 59(b) and (e).

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of August 1, 1965, inserted "service of notice of" before "entry of judgment" in the first sentence.

The amendment of September 7, 1965, added a second paragraph providing that motions to amend should be heard and determined within the time for determining motions for new trial as provided by Rule 59(d).

The 1969 amendment rewrote the rule to require that parties file written requests for findings, to remove as ground for appeal the want of findings not requested by the party, and to provide for exceptions to findings and the determination thereof.

The 1971 amendment restored the language as it stood prior to the 1965 amendments; inserted "notice of" before "entry of judgment" in the first sentence; and added new language as the third sentence. This amendment made the rule substantially identical to the Federal Rule. As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule, except for the inclusion of "notice of" as stated above.

Case Notes

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved.

Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Successor Judge Not to Issue Amended Findings of Facts Without Review of Original Trial Transcript — Reversible Error: It was reversible error for a District Court Judge who did not preside over an original bench trial to issue amended findings of fact without having the benefit of a transcript of the original proceeding. That judge does not have the necessary basis to act as an advised and intelligent factfinder, either in the first instance or in an amendatory fashion. Unless the parties have stipulated to the relevant and controlling facts, a judge who is asked to amend findings of fact entered by another judge cannot act on the motion to amend without reviewing the relevant portions of the trial transcript. FIRS Holding Co., Inc. v. Lemley, 272 M 490, 901 P2d 571, 52 St. Rep. 831 (1995).

Court Error in Arriving at Conclusion of Law Before Finding Facts: The plaintiff, Marry, was injured in an automobile accident involving a Deputy Sheriff. The lower court found the parties equally at fault and ordered that neither receive damages. Marry appealed on the basis that even if she were 50% negligent, she suffered more damages and should receive some money from the defendant. On reconsidering the case, the lower court stated that it was its intention that the plaintiff not receive any money and amended one of its findings to hold that Marry's negligence was greater than the defendant's and she was not entitled to recovery. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the lower court did not reexamine the evidence in amending its order. It formulated its conclusion of law first and then changed the findings of fact to conform to the conclusion already arrived at. Marry v. Missoula County Sheriff's Dept., 263 M 152, 866 P2d 1129, 50 St. Rep. 1751 (1993).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to or Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., or this rule. A notice of appeal filed under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Issues Adequately Presented to Jury — Motion to Amend Verdict Properly Denied: Resolution of any conflicts in the evidence is in the province of the trier of fact. Therefore, when the issues were properly presented to the jury, it was not error for the trial court to deny a motion to alter or amend the verdict. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

Amendment Within Discretion of Court: The decision to amend and the manner of amendment lie squarely within the discretion of the court. The court is under no obligation to tailor its amendment to fit the specifications of the parties. Wagner v. Cutler, 232 M 332, 757 P2d 779, 45 St. Rep. 1092 (1988).

Contract Providing Attorney Fees as Part of Record — Fees Mentioned in Pretrial Order: A motion to amend pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., to include attorney fees was denied on the basis that defendants abandoned their claim for attorney fees by neglecting to state a claim in their pretrial order and because no evidence relative to fees was introduced at trial and therefore could not be added as a posttrial issue. The Supreme Court noted that attorney fees were contractually agreed to by the parties, so the issue of whether fees should be awarded was not one that would have been argued at trial. Further, since the contract was before the court as evidence and since the issue of attorney fees was raised twice in the pretrial order, the issue was not outside the court's record. The case was remanded for determination of reasonable attorney fees. Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788, 44 St. Rep. 1467 (1987).

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987).

Motion to Amend as "Refresher" When Considerable Time Elapsed: After original findings and conclusions were entered, husband moved to amend. The motion was granted, and judgment on the amended findings and conclusions was entered. Wife contended the motion to amend should have been rejected. The Supreme Court found that due to elapsed time between trial and issuance of original findings and conclusions (10 months), the motion served mainly as a reminder or "refresher" to the trial court that the complex and extensive property of the parties may not have been entirely equitably divided in the original findings and conclusions. Such use of a motion to amend was held not to be unreasonable. In re Marriage of Gallinger/Weissman, 221 M 463, 719 P2d 777, 43 St. Rep. 976 (1986).

No Findings of Fact Made — Denial of Motion to Amend Proper: When the trial court rendered judgment as a matter of law and no findings of fact were made, the court's denial of the appellant's motion to amend his complaint was proper. This rule provides a method by which a trial court's findings of fact may be amended. Klundt v. St., 219 M 347, 712 P2d 776, 43 St. Rep. 1 (1986).

Findings of Court in Error — No Waiver of Indemnity Reimbursement From State: Appellant contracted with the state to build a segment of highway. Respondent subcontracted with appellant to do certain concrete work on bridges. The state designed cuts through a mountainous area that were too steep and had to be redone for stability. This delayed the project and the availability of concrete, increasing costs of construction. Appellant entered a supplemental agreement with the state that purported to waive claims for extra costs. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court finding that this provision precluded appellant from indemnity reimbursement from the state for extra money paid to respondent because of the delay. Under the waiver provision, the contractor could still claim expenses from conditions not within the knowledge of the parties at execution of the agreement. Unavailability of concrete because of delay was such a condition. The court noted that the judgment against the state was subject to 18-1-404. E.F. Matelich Constr. Co. v. Goodfellow Bros., Inc., 217 M 29, 702 P2d 967, 42 St. Rep. 1004 (1985).

Time for Motion to Amend Motion: Neither a motion to amend findings nor a motion for a new trial may be amended after the time allowed for filing the original motion has passed. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Distinction Between Modification and Clarification of Decree: A final dissolution decree was entered on March 3, 1983. Because of later disputes between the parties concerning the property settlement, the District Court held two hearings and then entered an order: (1) setting March 3, 1983, as the date of valuation for some corporate stock that was awarded to the wife; and (2) giving the wife the right to choose the stock. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that neither action by the District Court was a modification of the dissolution decree in violation of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, but rather each was a clarification of the decree. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Ex Parte Maintenance Order Entered After Final Decree Upheld: It was proper for the District Court to award wife temporary maintenance ex parte even though the effect of the award was amendment of the dissolution decree without holding the hearing required by Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that since the intent of the District Court's earlier order, i.e., that the wife be maintained pending final disposition of the matter, was not being carried out, it was within the District Court's discretion to grant the wife temporary maintenance. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982).

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Motion to Be Based on Record Alone: A motion to amend the findings and judgment was supported by an affidavit stating that appellant's former attorney was suffering from severe emotional problems during the trial. The motion was properly denied, as it must be based on the record as it existed at the time the findings were made. Matters outside the record may not be considered. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Filed — District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Enter Nunc Pro Tunc Order: The findings, conclusions, and decree of dissolution were filed on December 2, 1980. Appellant filed a motion to alter the court's findings and conclusions on December 4, 1980, and filed a notice of appeal on January 7, 1981. On January 20, 1981, the District Court entered amended findings and conclusions and dated them, nunc pro tunc, December 12, 1980. The Supreme Court held that a trial court cannot enter supplemental findings after a notice of appeal has been filed. Bartmess v. Bartmess, 193 M 200, 632 P2d 299, 38 St. Rep. 1097 (1981).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Modification Order: The lower court order modified the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under Rule 5, M.R.App.P., and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing Notice of Appeal — Findings and Conclusions Improperly Amended: In an action for damages resulting from the defendants' breach of contract by failing to complete the construction of a road for the plaintiff, the trial court committed reversible error in attempting to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law after the defendants filed a notice of appeal. Since 1954 it has been the rule in Montana that when a notice of appeal is filed, personal and subject matter jurisdiction pass from the District Court to the Supreme Court. When the District Court amended its findings and conclusions after filing of the notice of appeal, it did so without jurisdiction and the amendments were therefore void. Julian v. Buckley, 191 M 487, 625 P2d 526, 38 St. Rep. 128 (1981). See also St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by Amendment After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Perfection of Appeal — Motion to Amend Findings Not Required: When a party's trial memorandum indicated that the opposing party's proposed findings were insufficient in two regards, the failure to move for amendment of the trial court's findings in that regard is not fatal to an appeal raising the same issue. Metcalf v. Metcalf, 183 M 266, 598 P2d 1140 (1979).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made. Thus, the District Court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Distinction — Reopening Case: The time for filing motions under this rule applies when a party desires the findings and conclusions altered, not when a case is reopened to take further testimony. Compton v. Alcorn, 171 M 230, 557 P2d 292 (1976).

Amendment of Findings — New Trial Unnecessary: Where trial court's decision was not supported by findings of fact, proper procedure would have been to proceed under this rule providing that court may amend its findings or make additional findings and amend its decision accordingly. Higdem v. Whitham, 167 M 201, 536 P2d 1185 (1975).

Amendment of Findings and Judgment: A motion to alter, amend, and supplement findings of fact, conclusions of law and the judgment combined with a motion for a new trial, filed on September 28, 1965, was a motion contemplated by this rule and Rule 59(e) and was not governed by the time limits of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Rozan v. District Court, 147 M 532, 416 P2d 19 (1966).

Findings of Court in Error — Railroad's Negligence: Court erred in finding railroad, inter alia, liable for injuries of plaintiff due to its willful, wanton, and reckless negligence. Sztaba v. Great N. Ry., 147 M 185, 411 P2d 379 (1966).

Advisory Committee Note

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE TO OCTOBER 9, 1984, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 52(c) [redes. Rule 52(d), 1993]. The amendment provides for a time limitation for the determination of motions made under subdivision (b) of the rule.

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendments conform the rule to the 1991 amendments of the Federal Rules.

1999 Amendment: Near end increased time from 45 days to 60 days. Amendment effective June 7, 1999.

Rule Repealed: Supreme Court Order No. 10750-9, dated May 21, 1969, created a new Rule 52(c) requiring statement of conclusions of law and entry of judgment. Supreme Court Order No. 10750-10, dated October 22, 1971, effectively repealed Rule 52(c) as it then read by omitting it from Rule 52 as amended. Note that in its October 9, 1984, amendment the court created a new Rule 52(c) (redes. Rule 52(d), 1993) containing provisions unrelated to former Rule 52(c).

Identity With Federal Rule: The rule is all new material with no counterpart in the Federal Rule.

Case Notes

Improper Grant of New Trial After Time to Move for New Trial Expired: A substitute District Court Judge assumed jurisdiction of a marriage dissolution case 1 day after the husband moved for reconsideration or a new trial. The motion for a new trial was granted 76 days later. The wife contended that the court exceeded its jurisdiction because the motion was granted more that 60 days after being filed, in violation of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The husband argued that an equitable exception to the rules should be granted because the presiding judge was substituted between the time when the motion was filed and when it was ruled upon. The Supreme Court declined to make an exception, reiterating that the time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment are mandatory and strictly enforced. The District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering a new trial after the time to rule on the motion had expired, so the order was reversed. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001).

Denial by Failure to Rule on Motion — Not Error When Underlying Issues Upheld on Appeal: When a District Court fails to rule within 45 days as provided in this rule, the motion is considered denied. However, such denial does not constitute error if the same issues raised in the motion were appealed and on appeal the District Court's judgment was held to be correct on such issues. Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986).

Rule 53. Masters

Case Notes

Acceptance of Special Master's Report in Partnership Dissolution Case Not Error: The District Court appointed an accountant as a special master to examine and report on a complicated partnership dissolution. One of the partners complained that the District Court erred in adopting the findings of a special master because the special master did not comply with this rule, failing to hold proceedings on the record and preparing findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. The special master complied with the directive of the District Court by holding hearings with the parties, receiving evidence, and issuing a report, and although the findings and conclusions were not in a typical legal format, they were not clearly erroneous, and the District Court was required to accept the special master's report. McCormick v. Brevig, 2004 MT 179, 322 M 112, 96 P3d 697 (2004).

Special Master's Report Properly Considered and Findings Adopted: The Fiedlers stipulated to the procedures to be followed in disposing of partnership property, agreeing that a special master would handle the sale and distribution of the property. On appeal, Joseph Fiedler contended that the special master exceeded the authority granted by the District Court, resulting in prejudicial treatment and improper distribution of the partnership assets. The Supreme Court held that the parties were bound by the stipulation, noting that there had been ample consideration of the special master's report and that the trial court had not misapprehended the effect of the evidence. Absent clear error, the special master's findings of fact were properly accepted. Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Rule 53(a). Appointment and compensation.

Advisory Committee Notes

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO OCTOBER 9, 1984, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 53(a). The amendment broadens the definition of "master" to include an assessor, which also appears in the Federal Rule.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: As of July 31, 1983, this rule was still identical with the Federal Rule, except that the Federal Rule included "a commissioner, and an assessor" in the definition of "master". On August 1, 1983, an amendment to the Federal Rule became effective, deleting the reference to "commissioners" and "standing masters" and exempting full-time masters from the Rule's compensation provisions. The 1984 amendment to the Montana Rule inserted "assessor". As of May 1, 1990, the preceding comments were still applicable.

Amendments: The amendment of October 9, 1984, in second sentence inserted "and an assessor".

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

Reversal of Hearing Examiner's Findings — Power of Workers' Compensation Court to Order New Trial: The Workers' Compensation Court appointed a hearing examiner to hear evidence in an injury case, but it was for the court to make the final decision. The examiner's findings, conclusions, and proposed decision were submitted to the court for approval. It was within the court's power to order a new trial on the ground that the examiner apparently disregarded or was not aware of evidence crucial to the case. Gould v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 233 M 494, 766 P2d 213, 45 St. Rep. 1671 (1988), distinguishing Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983).

Contract Allowing Costs to Prevailing Party — Contrary Subsequent Agreement: In an action in which each party claimed breach of a contract, where the parties agreed to an order that each would pay one-half of a special master's fee, the order was not in error, even though the contract provided for costs to the prevailing party. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Appointing Ministerial Officer to Assess Damages: The court erred in appointing a ministerial officer to determine the cost of repairs which the court would assess as damages; it makes the award indefinite and delegates an exclusive judicial function. McMahon v. Falls Mobile Home Center, 173 M 68, 566 P2d 75 (1977).

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule, except that matters "of difficult computation of damages" is added as an exception in cases tried to the court and on August 1, 1983, an amendment to the Federal Rule became effective that allowed a magistrate to serve as a special magistrate with the consent of the parties.

COMMISSION NOTE

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO OCTOBER 9, 1984, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 53(c). The amendment conforms the rule to the 1983 Amendment of the Federal Rule in recognizing the abrogation of Rule 43(c) by the Montana Rules of Evidence.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: As of July 31, 1983, the above commission note was still applicable. On August 1, 1983, an amendment to the Federal Rule became effective that deleted the reference to Rule 43(c) in favor of a general reference to the Federal Rules of Evidence. The 1984 amendment to the Montana Rule made a similar change with reference to the Montana Rules of Evidence. As of May 1, 1990, the rules were identical except for the reference to Rules of Evidence.

Amendments: The amendment of October 9, 1984, in last sentence substituted "the Montana Rules of Evidence" for "Rule 43(c)".

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

Challenge of Special Master's Findings to Be Timely Made in Written Objection: Under this rule, the trial court shall accept the special master's findings, in nonjury actions, unless they are clearly erroneous. The burden of challenging the special master's findings is on the party objecting. The related burden of establishing that a finding is clearly erroneous is also on the party objecting. The intent of this rule is that all objections to a special master's report must be timely made in a party's written objections. The Supreme Court will no longer entertain objections that are not made to the District Court at that juncture. In re Marriage of Doolittle, 265 M 168, 875 P2d 331, 51 St. Rep. 450 (1994).

Failure to Submit Order of Reference to Master — Harmless Error: When a special master is appointed, the District Court must give the special master an order of reference to follow. In this case, the court failed to submit an order of reference and the special master's proposed decision went directly to the District Court. The court in turn stated its finding that there was an equitable division of marital debts and assets. Although the court erred by not following the procedure outlined in Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., the court found that the special master, as instructed, had equitably divided the marital property and liabilities. The acceptance of the special master's decision did not materially affect the parties' rights and did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Proceedings Supplementary to Execution — Method of Examination: Where referee is appointed to conduct proceedings supplementary to execution in response to an application for an order requiring judgment debtor to appear and answer concerning his property, notice to the judgment debtor need not be given before ordering his examination or the examination of third persons in absence of statutory requirement. The time and place for appearance of the debtor are properly left to be fixed by the referee within bounds of the statute. Bair v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 112 F2d 247 (9th Cir. 1940), affirming Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Bair, 34 F. Supp. 857 (D.C. Mont. 1939).

Books and Accounts Examined: A Writ of Supervisory Control will not be granted to compel the vacation of an order of reference made by the District Court, in an action on a contract in which plaintiff claimed to be entitled to certain commissions, and alleged that an examination of a long and complicated account was necessary to a determination of the cause, before it had ascertained whether in fact a contract existed between the parties, where the return showed that plaintiff had already examined the books of the relator company at its invitation, that some of the books and accounts had been produced and examined before the referee, and where no claim was made that books or accounts not pertinent or material to the inquiry were required to be produced. 1993 Amendment: In (1), at end of second sentence, inserted "serve on all parties notice of the filing", in third sentence, after "reference,", inserted "the master" and substituted "the report" for "it", and substituted last sentence concerning service of report on parties for former sentence that read: "The clerk shall forthwith mail to all parties notice of the filing"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Acceptance of Special Master's Report in Partnership Dissolution Case Not Error: The District Court appointed an accountant as a special master to examine and report on a complicated partnership dissolution. One of the partners complained that the District Court erred in adopting the findings of a special master because the special master did not comply with Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., failing to hold proceedings on the record and preparing findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. The special master complied with the directive of the District Court by holding hearings with the parties, receiving evidence, and issuing a report, and although the findings and conclusions were not in a typical legal format, they were not clearly erroneous, and the District Court was required to accept the special master's report. McCormick v. Brevig, 2004 MT 179, 322 M 112, 96 P3d 697 (2004).

Failure to File Motion or Affidavit Requesting Custody Modification — Adoption of Special Master Report Improper When Jurisdiction Lacking: Both the father and the mother filed motions for contempt of court, claiming failure by the other party to abide by past court orders regarding custody and visitation. A special master was appointed to make a final report concerning all pending custody, visitation, child support, medical expenses, and contempt issues between the parties. The special master submitted a report recommending changing primary physical custody from the mother to the father, and the report was adopted. However, the only pending issue was the question of contempt. Neither party moved for or filed an affidavit requesting a custody modification. Under Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., a special master's authority is limited to the issues or acts stated in the order of reference to the special master. Thus, the District Court erred in adopting the special master's report recommending a custody change because the court lacked jurisdiction to do so absent a motion or affidavit for modification. In re Marriage of Lundby, 1998 MT 122, 289 M 74, 959 P2d 485, 55 St. Rep. 486 (1998), distinguishing In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729 (1985).

Failure to Submit Order of Reference to Master — Harmless Error: When a special master is appointed, the District Court must give the special master an order of reference to follow. In this case, the court failed to submit an order of reference and the special master's proposed decision went directly to the District Court. The court in turn stated its finding that there was an equitable division of marital debts and assets. Although the court erred by not following the procedure outlined in Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., the court found that the special master, as instructed, had equitably divided the marital property and liabilities. The acceptance of the special master's decision did not materially affect the parties' rights and did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Rule Not Permissive — Objection Required: In an attempt to excuse an untimely objection, husband contended that the use of the word "may" in subsection (2) of this rule makes the rule strictly permissive rather than mandatory because it does not say that a party must object or lose the right to contest the findings. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that there can be no other reason for setting a 10-day limit than to require that objecting parties meet that limit or waive their rights to object. "May" refers to the permission given to "any party" to object; however, the objection must be made within 10 days. In re Marriage of Hayes, 259 M 302, 856 P2d 229, 50 St. Rep. 805 (1993).

Master's Report Conclusive Unless Clearly Erroneous: The plaintiff, in a partnership dissolution action, argued that the lower court had erred in finding that a tavern he had given his ex-wife during his divorce was partnership property and that the court erred in placing a $50,000 value on the property. The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to find that the tavern had been originally purchased with partnership funds and therefore remained a partnership asset. The court also ruled that the valuation placed on the property was that arrived at by a court-appointed master and that unless clearly erroneous, the valuation was binding on the lower court. Mehl v. Mehl, 241 M 310, 786 P2d 1173, 47 St. Rep. 292 (1990), followed in Frank v. Birky, 250 M 11, 817 P2d 696, 48 St. Rep. 850 (1991).

Hearing on Report: No hearing is necessary when no objections are made to report by parties after being notified by clerk that special master has filed his report. State ex rel. Ross v. District Court, 150 M 233, 433 P2d 778 (1967).

Advisory Findings: Where, under an order of reference, a referee has no power to decide any of the issues made by the pleadings, his findings are not conclusive on the court, but advisory merely, and it is not necessary for the court to make a formal order setting aside the findings of the referee before proceeding to make findings of its own. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 575, 63 P 375 (1901).

Force of Report Determined by Reference: Where the reference provided that a referee should take testimony, and state a complete account between the parties, but did not authorize him to hear and to determine the issues, his findings cannot be given the effect of a special verdict since the force to be given to the report of a referee depends not only upon the nature of the action, but upon the terms of the order of reference. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 575, 63 P 375 (1901).

Delay in Reporting — Effect: The failure of a referee to file his report within the statutory time after the closing of the testimony does not invalidate the report or the judgment rendered thereon. Emerson v. Bigler, 21 M 200, 53 P 621 (1898).

Referee Limited by Reference: The terms of an order of reference determine the scope of the referee's authority, and a referee who is appointed to state an account between parties has no authority to determine the whole issue. The court can disregard the findings of the referee, allowing or disallowing specific items in the account. Bradshaw v. Morse, 20 M 214, 50 P 554 (1897). See also Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 575, 63 P 375 (1901).

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: This rule adds to the Federal Rule the definition of a judgment as "the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding". As of May 1, 1990, the rules were identical except for insertion of this language in the Montana Rule.

Case Notes

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Award Attorney Fees Beyond Mandatory Time Limit: Final judgment was entered on January 8, 2003, and the next day plaintiffs filed a motion requesting attorney fees. Defendant objected, and the District Court conducted a hearing on the matter on February 25, 2003. The court finally granted the motion on April 3, 2003. Defendant contended on appeal that the award was untimely, and the Supreme Court agreed. Under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., a mandatory jurisdictional time limit requires a ruling on a motion for attorney fees within 60 days after final judgment or the motion is considered denied. The District Court had until March 10, 2003, to rule on the motion, but failed to do so. Thus, the court lacked jurisdiction to enter an order granting attorney fees in April, and the award was reversed. Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004).

Multiple Claims — No Appeal Available Absent Final Judgment — Remand: Plaintiff brought several employment claims against the state. The District Court certified judgment for the state on one claim, and plaintiff moved for partial summary judgment on another, but the motion was denied. However, there was no final judgment certified on that claim, so no appeal on that issue was available. Because the motion for partial summary judgment was not final and appealable, the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings on that claim. Losleben v. Oppedahl, 2004 MT 5, 319 M 269, 83 P3d 1271 (2004).

No Final Judgment When Multiple Parties Involved but Summary Judgment Granted to Only One Party — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required: Purchasers of real property sued the seller and the seller's agent over an alleged access problem. The District Court granted summary judgment to the seller, but denied summary judgment for the seller's agent because material facts remained in dispute regarding the agent's disclosure of information pertaining to the access problem. Plaintiffs then appealed the summary judgment that was granted to the seller. The Supreme Court held that the order granting summary judgment to the seller was not a final judgment and thus was not appealable because in an action involving multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but not all of the parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the District Court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. In this case, there was no indication or certification by the District Court that the matter should be certified as final, and absent a final judgment, no appeal was available. The appeal was dismissed without prejudice and remanded for further proceedings. Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001). See also Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268 (1993).

Oral Decree of Dissolution Improperly Granted at Hearing — Continuing Jurisdiction by District Court: At a hearing on the parties' petition for dissolution, the court orally granted the petition but reserved its judgment on the issues of custody, maintenance, and support. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly granted an oral decree of dissolution and was without jurisdiction to do so. The Supreme Court noted that under 40-4-103(4), a decree includes a judgment and that under this rule, a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties. In this case, because the District Court did not intend its decree to be its final determination, the Supreme Court held that the District Court had continuing jurisdiction over the rights of the parties following the oral decree. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Finality of Judgment — Award of Attorney Fees: A general contractor was awarded damages under a materials and labor bond. Attorney fees, an element of damages provided for in the bond, were to be determined at a later hearing. Because the attorney fees were based on the bond, the subject matter of the action, the judgment was not final and could not be appealed until actual determination of attorney fees. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Judgment Unsupported by Conclusions — Child Support Modification: Where the petitioner sought the modification of a divorce decree in order to increase the amount of child support payments she was receiving from $100 to $210 monthly and appealed the order of the trial court, the Supreme Court did not reach the issues presented by the petitioner because the judgment entered in the case clearly conflicted with the trial court's findings and conclusions. The trial court concluded that the additional $100 be paid to petitioner but the judgment provided that the additional $100 be kept by the respondent in a trust fund. Because the judgment was not supported by the conclusions, the Supreme Court remanded the case and directed the trial court to enter a judgment consistent with the findings and conclusions. Dempster v. McConnell, 191 M 153, 622 P2d 680, 38 St. Rep. 121 (1981).

Failure to Enter Findings or Judgment on Counterclaim: When the trial court did not enter a judgment or make a general finding on defendant's counterclaim alleging defective performance, it cannot be implied that the claim was without merit. The cause was remanded for entry of findings and judgment disposing of the counterclaim. Bauer v. Cook, 182 M 221, 596 P2d 200 (1979).

Action Not "Pending Before the Court": Suits which had been reduced to judgment were not, once time for appeal had passed, "pending before the court" so as to make them amenable to consolidation, and court could not properly consolidate suits with similar suits by other claimants which had not been reduced to judgment. Peavey Co. v. Agri-Services, Inc., 163 M 394, 517 P2d 718 (1974).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Judgment Not Final by Its Terms: A judgment in a water rights case which ordered admeasurement and distribution of water pursuant to prior decree, installation of headgates, and retention of jurisdiction during 1962 irrigation season, stating that the judgment was interlocutory and that final judgment would be made after 1962 season, was not appealable as a final judgment. Whitcomb v. Helena Water Works Co., 142 M 171, 382 P2d 822 (1963).

Dismissal as Judgment: An order dismissing an action is a final judgment from which an appeal can be perfected if the order has the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Injunction Appealable: A judgment and order granting an injunction in interpleader action was appealable. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Denial of Prohibition Not Judgment: Order of District Court denying petition for Writ of Prohibition to restrain Justice Court from further proceedings in criminal action was not a judgment. State ex rel. Aho v. Justice Court, 131 M 585, 313 P2d 542 (1957).

Accounting Not a Judgment: An order for an accounting is not a judgment since it is not a final determination of the rights of the parties. It is not final, but is a necessary step to determine what if anything the plaintiff has coming from the defendant. Corcoran v. Fousek, 125 M 223, 233 P2d 1040 (1951).

Quashing of Writ Not Judgment: In proceeding for Writ of Certiorari an order sustaining a motion to quash and dismissing the proceeding was a judgment. State ex rel. Walker v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 120 M 413, 187 P2d 1013 (1947), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 246 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Order for Sale of Estate Property: A proceeding for the sale of estate property is a continuous one, and the order of confirmation of the sale is the only judgment or final order in the proceeding finally determining the rights of the parties. In re Ryan's Estate, 114 M 281, 134 P2d 732 (1943).

Findings and Conclusions Not Judgment — Time for Appeal: Findings and conclusions of the court in a case tried as an equity action are not the judgment of the court so that the time for taking a cross-appeal commenced to run from the date of the judgment based on the findings, rather than from the date of the findings and conclusions, which were merely the basis for the judgment. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Divorce Denied — Case Still Pending: Although an order dismissing an action is a final judgment, where District Court merely denied a divorce on the ground the plaintiff had not been a resident of the state for 1 year and did not dismiss the case, the action was still pending, there was no final determination of the rights of the parties and no final judgment. Hence, no appeal could be taken and supervisory control was proper to review the action of the trial court. State ex rel. Duckworth v. District Court, 107 M 97, 80 P2d 367 (1938).

"Final Judgment" to Be Determined by Contents: An order of the District Court having the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties is a judgment, irrespective of the title given it; it must be judged by its contents and substance. State ex rel. Meyer v. District Court, 102 M 222, 57 P2d 778 (1936), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Action Still "Pending" if Appealed: While a judgment is defined as the final determination of the rights of the parties to an action or proceeding, the action must be regarded as still pending until final determination on appeal or until the time for appeal has passed. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Order Allowing Attorney's Fees: An order made in an estate matter allowing an attorney's fee for services rendered to a special administrator was not a "judgment" within the meaning of 31-1-110, allowing interest on judgments, such an order being no more than a settlement of one of the matters arising in a probate proceeding preparatory to a final judgment. In re Bielenberg's Estate, 98 M 546, 40 P2d 49 (1935).

Workmen's Compensation Award as Judgment: The final determination by the District Court of the rights of the employer and employee with relation to an award made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, Ch. 96, L. 1915, is a judgment. Paulich v. Republic Coal Co., 97 M 224, 33 P2d 514 (1934).

Denial of Writ of Review Not Judgment: Where a court refused to take jurisdiction of an application for Writ of Review, thus in effect declining to issue process to bring the other party into court, the order in that behalf was not a judgment from which an appeal lay. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235 (1931).

Interlocutory Judgment as Final Judgment: A final judgment is not necessarily the last one in an action; a judgment which is conclusive of any question in a case is final as to that question. Kline v. Murray, 79 M 530, 257 P 465 (1927).

Decree in Equity Similar to Judgment at Law: Decrees in equity are judgments and are, so far as they award a recovery of money, in nowise different from judgments at law. Kline v. Murray, 79 M 530, 257 P 465 (1927); State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909); Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1908), explained in Lewis v. Lewis, 109 M 42, 94 P2d 211 (1939).

Order Overruling Motion to Strike: Where an affidavit has been filed in support of a motion to modify a decree of divorce, an order overruling a motion to strike such affidavit is not an "appealable order" nor a "judgment". Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919), distinguished in State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Dismissal of Action Not Judgment: An order entered in the minutes of the court sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint, and directing a dismissal of the action is not a judgment. Pentz v. Corscadden, 49 M 581, 144 P 157 (1914), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Decree in Equity as Final Decree: If, after a decree in equity has been entered, no further questions could come before the court except such as are necessary for carrying the decree into effect, it is final. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899); Arnold v. Sinclair, 11 M 556, 29 P 340 (1892).

Judgment Declaring a Trust as Final: A judgment declaring a trust and removing the trustee is a final order, notwithstanding that it directs the trustee to file an inventory and an account of all property received by him as trustee. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899).

Judgment on the Pleadings: An order of court granting a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings is a judgment in defendant's favor. Whitbeck v. Mont. Cent. Ry. & Great N. Ry., 21 M 102, 52 P 1098 (1898).

Commission Notes

Subdivision (b) has been changed to conform to the amendment proposed by the Federal Advisory Committee, it being the purpose to make it clear that the rule is applicable when an action is terminated as to some but not all of the parties, a matter as to which there is a conflict under the present Federal Rule.

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: A 1961 amendment of the Federal Rule adopted the proposal of the Federal Advisory Committee referred to in the above commission note, but in a slightly different form than in the Montana Rule.

Case Notes

District Court Decision Regarding Constitutionality of One Issue Precluding Consideration of Other Constitutional Questions — Certification to Supreme Court Proper: Baumgardner raised numerous issues concerning the constitutionality of 2001 amendments to the Public Employees' Retirement System. The District Court decided that the amendments were an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power but did not consider other issues related to the amendments. The Public Employees' Retirement Board moved to certify the judgment as final, and the motion was granted. On appeal, Baumgardner contended that certification was improper because the District Court did not resolve all of the pending issues. The Supreme Court disagreed. Once the amendments were declared unconstitutional on the delegation question, there was no need for the District Court to consider other challenges to the constitutionality of the amendments, so certification was appropriate, and the case was properly submitted to the Supreme Court. Baumgardner v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 2005 MT 199, 328 M 179, 119 P3d 77 (2005).

Improper Certification of Partial Summary Judgment as Final Order When Issues Still Pending — No Supreme Court Jurisdiction to Hear Appeal: In order for an order to be properly certified to the Supreme Court, the criteria in Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980), and Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101 (1995), must be met, including a clear articulation of the reasons and factors underlying the decision for certification, so the appellate court has some basis for distinguishing between well-grounded orders that have considered all the relevant factors and mere boilerplate approval unsupported by facts of legal analysis. Here, the certification order failed to address numerous claims that were not clearly resolved in District Court and that were still technically pending. Thus, the case was not ready for appellate review, and because the District Court failed to enumerate the factors in Roy and Weinstein, the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The certification order was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Kohler v. Croonenberghs, 2003 MT 260, 317 M 413, 77 P3d 531 (2003), followed in In re Marriage of Armstrong, 2003 MT 277, 317 M 503, 78 P3d 1203 (2003).

No Supreme Court Jurisdiction to Address Certified Question Absent Final Judgment in District Court — Use of Rule to Gain Advisory Opinion Improper: Following a prior remand (see Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2000 MT 206, 300 M 530, 6 P3d 965 (2000)), a question arose regarding whether the previous appeal resolved issues related to viability of the parties' counterclaims. Plaintiff therefore requested that the District Court certify the question to the Supreme Court to clarify what the original order meant and to save the trial court and the parties the time and effort of misreading the decision and going through a trial process that might ultimately be ruled unnecessary on subsequent appeal. The motion was granted, but the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal with prejudice. Courts should not certify difficult issues to the Supreme Court in order to obtain guidance for the remainder of the case because the purpose of certification is not to provide an advisory opinion to the District Court. Use of the certification process was improper in this case because there were neither multiple claims nor multiple parties. The District Court abused its discretion in certifying its order as final, so there was no final judgment for the Supreme Court to consider. Because the District Court abused its discretion, the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, so the case was remanded for adjudication of the counterclaims. Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2003 MT 56, 314 M 378, 66 P3d 294 (2003). See also Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

No Final Judgment When Multiple Parties Involved but Summary Judgment Granted to Only One Party — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required: Purchasers of real property sued the seller and the seller's agent over an alleged access problem. The District Court granted summary judgment to the seller, but denied summary judgment for the seller's agent because material facts remained in dispute regarding the agent's disclosure of information pertaining to the access problem. Plaintiffs then appealed the summary judgment that was granted to the seller. The Supreme Court held that the order granting summary judgment to the seller was not a final judgment and thus was not appealable because in an action involving multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but not all of the parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the District Court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. In this case, there was no indication or certification by the District Court that the matter should be certified as final, and absent a final judgment, no appeal was available. The appeal was dismissed without prejudice and remanded for further proceedings. Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001). See also Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268 (1993).

Failure to Participate in Water Court Hearing — Attorney Fees Assessed as Sanction for Defense of Unreasonable Appeal: Despite warnings from the Water Court of the consequences, plaintiffs chose not to participate in a Water Court hearing, thereby creating no record of their issues and preserving none of their arguments for appeal. They appealed anyway, contending that the Water Court's findings were in error. The Supreme Court first found that the findings and conclusions were correct, then sanctioned plaintiffs pursuant to Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), finding that defendant was entitled to attorney fees incurred in defending an appeal that was taken without any substantial or reasonable grounds, that delayed the case, and that wasted the resources of defendant and the Supreme Court. Swinger v. Collins, 1999 MT 202, 295 M 447, 984 P2d 151, 56 St. Rep. 787 (1999).

Party Voluntarily Intervening Subject to Adverse Judgment: Double AA Corporation sought specific performance to require Newland & Company, a trust company, to convey land that it held in trust and had entered into a contract to sell to Double AA. Sievers intervened in the case, arguing that specific judgment should not be granted on the basis that he had purchased part of the remainder interest in the trust property and had a first option to purchase the property based on the remainder interest. Sievers sought a ruling from the lower court that he had the first option to purchase the property. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in ruling that Sievers did not have a first right of purchase even though not all of the remainder interest holders had intervened in the case to protect their interests. Even though they had not intervened, the remainder interest holders were aligned with the trustee, and any decision that Sievers might have obtained that was adverse to the trustee would also have been adverse to them. Double AA Corp. v. Newland & Co., 273 M 486, 905 P2d 138, 52 St. Rep. 1073 (1995), distinguishing Warnack v. Coneen Fam. Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715 (1994).

Claims Arising From Same Facts Treated as Single Claim — Roy Factors Not Satisfied — Factors Inappropriately Considered for Certification: Weinstein sued the university for breach of contract following his dismissal as head of the Mansfield Center. Weinstein included in his complaint several claims based on theories arising from the same fact situation. Two of the defendants were dismissed. Weinstein sought and received certification pursuant to this rule from the District Court. The Supreme Court reiterated the factors listed in Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980), to be considered in determining whether the District Court abused its discretion in granting certification. Citing cases decided under Rule 54(b) of the federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Supreme Court held that because all of Weinstein's claims arose from a single factual situation, the case constituted a partial adjudication of a single claim and because the case against the remaining defendant arose from the same facts as the cases against the two dismissed defendants, the Supreme Court was in reality being asked to decide a case remaining in the District Court. The Supreme Court found that these factors mitigated against granting certification under this rule. The Supreme Court also held that other reasons relied upon by the District Court for certification, such as to control further litigation, to enhance settlement, and because an appeal was likely, were insufficient and inappropriate reasons to grant certification. For all of these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in granting certification, and the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101, 52 St. Rep. 578 (1995).

Multiple Claims and Multiple Parties — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required for Final Judgment: In an action involving multiple claims and multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993), followed in Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001).

Direct Appeal of Venue Question — Certification of Judgment Not Required: Following summary dismissal of all Missoula defendants, the trial court granted the motion of defendant Kalispell doctor for a change of venue to Flathead County, certifying the summary judgment order as final pursuant to this rule. When the venue question was appealed to the Supreme Court, the doctor asserted that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to determine whether venue was properly transferred because the order under this rule did not mention the order changing venue. However, under Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), direct appeal of an order changing or refusing to change venue is allowed, and as such, certification under this rule is not required. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Offset of Tort Judgment With Amount Owed on Contract Underlying Tort as Within Equity Power of Court: Defendant fraudulently induced plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property. The District Court required her to file an accounting reflecting the principal balance due her from each of the plaintiffs for property purchased under the contracts for deed, and the court then offset and credited the amounts due plaintiffs from the judgment against the balance of the principal owed by plaintiffs under the contracts for deed. Although the contracts themselves were not at issue, the respective obligations of the parties arose from the same transaction and damages were related to the value of the premises and the purchase price, which was the basis of the principal under the contract. It was within the equity power of the court to allow a setoff of debts under these circumstances because that power exists independent of statute when grounds for equitable interposition are shown, such as fraud or insolvency. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993). On remand, the District Court found that although one cotenant had quitclaimed all interest in the property to the plaintiff cotenant, the right to personal damages did not pass with the transfer of the property. Clarifying Dew, supra, the Supreme Court noted that the discussion regarding the equity power of the District Court was confined solely to its ability to set off the principal balances on the contracts for deed against the damages plaintiff sustained. As such, the District Court was not invested with the broad equitable power to award plaintiff 100% of the personal damages attributable to fraud when he was not entitled to such an award by law. Because the underlying action was for personal damages, not property damages, the court properly determined that plaintiff was entitled to only 50% of the personal damages arising from defendant's fraud. However, the court miscalculated the amount of accrued interest owing, so the case was remanded for a recalculation of damages. Dew v. Dower, 269 M 286, 888 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1388 (1994). See also S. Surety Co. of N.Y. v. Maney, 121 P2d 295 (Okla. 1941).

Theories of Recovery Limited Through Instructions Following Filing of Amended Complaint — No Prejudice: An original complaint alleged theories of bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Three weeks prior to trial, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that defendant asserted changed the theories to equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Prior to settling of instructions, the District Court, on its own motion, dismissed plaintiff's claims of equitable estoppel, fraud, bad faith, and punitive damages and allowed the case to go forward on theories of constructive fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The action by the court in limiting the theories of recovery through instructions had the effect of removing much of defendant's claimed prejudice through the allowance of the amended complaint. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Setoff or Counterclaim Pleaded — One Judgment Required: When a setoff or counterclaim is pleaded, it becomes part of a single controversy between the parties, requiring only one verdict and one judgment according to the facts. Therefore, the grant of two separate judgments arising out of the same general issue constituted an improper procedure. (See 20 Am. Jur. 2d Counterclaim, Recoupment, and Setoff 157.) Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989), following Stensvad v. Miners & Merchants Bank of Roundup, 196 M 193, 640 P2d 1303 (1982).

Water Right of State in Bean Lake — Drainage Adjudication Process — Appealability of State's Claim Under Finality of Decision Rules: As part of the statewide water rights adjudication process, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks filed a claim for a pre-1973 "use" water right appropriation for recreation, fishing, and wildlife purposes in the waters of Bean Lake. In recent consolidated cases relating to drainage areas, the Supreme Court dismissed appeals because a certificate had not been obtained under this rule. In effect, the court held that the causes were not final for purposes of appeal. In this case, the court accepted jurisdiction under its power of general supervisory control over the Water Courts. The Department had filed 15 to 17 similar claims in various drainages, the same issues would recur, and a decision in the present case would help speed the water adjudication process. In re Water Rights in Dearborn Drainage, 234 M 331, 766 P2d 228, 45 St. Rep. 1948 (1988).

Determination of Final Water Rights Judgment Under Rule — Appeal From Water Court: This rule provides for and allows a water right claimant to seek and procure from the Water Court an express direction for the entry of a final judgment as to his claim upon the express determination of the Water Court that there is no just reason for delay. Such action under this rule constitutes a final judgment within the meaning of 85-2-235, which provides for appeals from the Water Court. In re Adjudication of Sage Creek Water Rights, 234 M 243, 763 P2d 644, 45 St. Rep. 1876 (1988).

Agency Question of Fact: In a zoning variance controversy, plaintiffs claimed a city-county planning board and city board of adjustments granted the variance without proper notice, without a hearing, and without considering legal requirements. The District Court dismissed the claim as to defendant and granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed, saying the plaintiff may be able to show the planning board is directly liable to plaintiffs because of its acts through its agent. Borrowing on California precedent, the court held that allegations of agency are questions of fact and should not be decided on a motion for summary judgment. The court noted that in dealing with government entities this is not always true because a principal cannot delegate authority it does not possess. This can be determined by establishing the authority which, as a matter of public record, citizens are charged with knowing. The court also noted that while a government principal's authority may be limited by law, the principal may exceed that authority in its day-to-day activity, thereby existing in fact although precluded by law. The dismissal and summary judgment were reversed. Stillman v. Fergus County, 220 M 315, 715 P2d 43, 43 St. Rep. 396 (1986).

Certification Requirements Not Mere Formality: Plaintiff, appearing pro se, failed to seek or obtain certification of a matter for appeal. The mere statement of the judge in a partial final judgment that "there is no just reason for delay in entering this judgment as a final judgment" is not sufficient to meet the certification requirement. The Rule 54(b) certification requirement is not a mere formality but is a necessary and valuable tool for preventing piecemeal litigation and waste of the resources of both the litigants and the courts. McDonald v. Unirex, Inc., 221 M 153, 721 P2d 302, 43 St. Rep. 330 (1986), followed in Milk River Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Big Hook Land & Cattle Co., 239 M 496, 783 P2d 359, 46 St. Rep. 1861 (1989).

Order Not Appealable When All Issues Not Decided and Undecided Issues Not Certified: An order of the District Court, not certified under Rule 54, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), entering summary judgment for one party, ruling that party entitled to attorney fees, and ordering a later hearing for the purpose of determining the amount of the attorney fees, was not a final order for the purpose of filing an appeal. Boles v. Ler, 213 M 266, 692 P2d 1, 41 St. Rep. 2106 (1984).

Appeal of Water Court Order Regarding Two Parties Before Final Decree — Rule 54(b) Certification of Tort Issues: A Water Court order awarding priorities between two parties is a final and appealable order even though the basin-wide adjudication has not been completed. It is necessary that their respective irrigation water allowances be determined without waiting for the basin-wide decree before appealing to the Supreme Court. The fact that trespass and damage claims have not yet been decided does not deprive the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The Water Court properly entered a Rule 54(b) certification. The determination of these claims is beyond the jurisdiction of the Water Court, but they cannot be decided until the water rights are resolved. Hill v. Merrimac Cattle Co., Inc., 211 M 479, 687 P2d 59, 41 St. Rep. 1504 (1984).

Damage Award to Appropriator of Costs of Lawsuit Filed to Enforce Rights: In a water rights dispute, upstream junior appropriators damaged downstream senior appropriators' headgate. A lawsuit over their respective water rights ensued, and the senior appropriators were successful both at trial and on appeal. At trial, the jury awarded the senior appropriators their court costs and attorney fees as damages. The Supreme Court refused to overturn the award, ruling that the costs of the lawsuit were consequential to the interference with the headgate and not so remote as to preclude recovery. Cate v. Hargrave, 209 M 265, 680 P2d 952, 41 St. Rep. 697 (1984).

Permissible to Provide Reasons for Certification After Appeal Filed: The failure of the District Court to provide its reasons for a proper certification until after the notice of appeal was filed does not render the certification defective as long as the guidelines of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., have been complied with. Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), overruling Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981).

Determination and Certification Necessary: Absent (1) an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and (2) certification as final judgment, an order adjudicating the rights and liabilities of less than all parties is not appealable. Benders v. Stratton, 202 M 150, 655 P2d 989 (1982); followed in Granite Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 204 M 10, 662 P2d 1312, 40 St. Rep. 630 (1983).

Dismissal of Claims Without Certification Held Not Appealable — Multiple Parties: Where the claims of two of the three plaintiffs for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and trespass were dismissed for failure to state a claim, the dismissal was not appealable without certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. In Tobacco River Lumber, Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978), the Supreme Court held the dismissal of the claims of one of several parties to be appealable because the practical effect of the dismissal was to leave the party without judicial relief. However, in the instant case the remaining plaintiff sought the same relief as those whose claims were dismissed. The order dismissing those claims must therefore be considered interlocutory and not final. Benders v. Stratton, 202 M 150, 655 P2d 989, 39 St. Rep. 2389 (1982).

Order Denying Motion for Summary Judgment Not Appealable Notwithstanding Certification: The defendant appealed the District Court's denial of a motion for summary judgment after the District Court certified its order under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that the order was not appealable notwithstanding the District Court's certification because under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., an order denying a motion for summary judgment is an interlocutory order, which fact cannot be changed by certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Order Not Appealable When Certified Judgment Never Docketed in Record: The District Court made an express order that the Clerk of Court enter final judgment in a case certified for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., but a final judgment was never docketed in the record. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide an appeal. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Award of Attorney Fees Not Separate Claim: A general contractor was awarded damages under a materials and labor bond. Attorney fees, an element of damages provided for in the bond, were to be determined at a later hearing. Because the attorney fees were based on the bond, the subject matter of the action, multiple claims were not involved. The judgment was not final and could not be appealed until actual determination of attorney fees. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Denial of Certification of Partial Summary Judgment Not Subject to Appeal: If a trial court abuses its discretion in certifying an order of partial summary judgment as final under this rule, an appellate court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981), followed in Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101, 52 St. Rep. 578 (1995). See also Taylor Rental Corp. v. Ted Godwin Leasing, Inc., 199 M 280, 648 P2d 1168, 39 St. Rep. 1358 (1982).

Certification of Judgment as Final — Factors Considered by Appellate Court: An appellate court will normally consider the following factors when considering a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification: (1) the relationship between the adjudicated and unadjudicated claims; (2) the possibility that the need for review may be mooted by future developments in the District Court; (3) the possibility that the reviewing court might be obliged to consider the same issue a second time; (4) the presence or absence of a counterclaim that could result in a setoff against the judgment sought to be made final; and (5) miscellaneous factors such as delay, economic and solvency considerations, shortening the time of trial, triviality of competing claims, expenses, and the like. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981); Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980); followed, in part, in Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Certification of Partial Summary Judgment — Judicial Policy: When reasonable alternatives are available, the Supreme Court will not allow a case to be fragmented to allow successive appeals by a process of lower court grants of partial summary judgment followed by certification of finality. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981).

Vacation of Partial Summary Judgment — Certification as Abuse of Discretion: On appeal from partial summary judgment disallowing one of three items of damages and certified as final below, determination of the appeal would finally settle the matter and might reduce trial time, but the trial court abused its discretion in certifying the issues for appeal and the partial summary judgment was vacated without prejudice. The delay caused by the appeal would result in undesirable consequences, such as added costs, unwarranted delay, and additional attorney fees. Further, the issue on appeal might be mooted by the final decision of the District Court, as well as by a finding of no liability for that item of damages; and reasonable alternatives to fragmented appeal were available, such as a bifurcated trial, first on liability, then on damages. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981).

Certified Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Despite failure to comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Multiple Claims and Parties — Certification Required for Appeal Because of Impleader of Third Party: Where the plaintiff corporation brought an action against the defendant insurance company to collect an account and the defendant impleaded a third-party defendant, a final judgment against the defendant insurance company was interlocutory in nature and could not be appealed absent an express determination by the court that there was no just reason for delay. Rule 14, M.R.Civ.P., expressly provides that an entry of judgment upon either the original claim or the third-party claim must comply with Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Because the court did not make the express determination required, the appeal is premature. Pioneer Concrete & Fuel, Inc. v. Apex Constr., Inc., 190 M 229, 620 P2d 854, 37 St. Rep. 2023 (1980).

Differing Considerations for Summary Judgment and Final Judgment: The considerations which result in a grant of summary judgment are not the same considerations relevant to an order of final certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Under summary judgment procedure, the essential inquiry is whether material facts are disputed. Under Rule 54(b) procedure, the inquiry is whether, after balancing the competing factors, finality of judgment should be ordered to advance the interests of sound judicial administration and public policy. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Improper Where Rights of All Parties Have Not Been Adjudicated: An order granting summary judgment is not final where the rights and liabilities of all parties have not been adjudicated. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Certification of Judgment as Final — Discretion of Judge — Findings to Be Set Out: It is within the discretion of the District Court to grant or deny a request to certify a judgment as final. The decision should not be entered lightly. The District Court must find that there is "no just reason for delay" and the factors underlying that decision must be clearly articulated. Roy v.

Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980). See also Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101, 52 St. Rep. 578 (1995).

Certification of Judgment as Final — Guidelines: The guiding principles for a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification may be summarized as follows: (1) the burden is on the party seeking final certification to convince the District Court that the case is the "infrequent harsh case" meriting a favorable exercise of discretion; (2) the District Court must balance the competing factors present in the case to determine if it is in the interest of sound judicial administration and public policy to certify the judgment as final; and (3) the District Court must marshal and articulate the factors upon which it relied in granting certification so that prompt and effective review can be facilitated. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Summary Judgment Against Less Than All Defendants — Appeal Improper: A summary judgment in favor of one of two defendants was not a final order under the provisions of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., and in the absence of compliance with the certification requirements of that rule the summary judgment was not appealable. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Hazard Insurance — No Issue: Although the plaintiffs claimed that defendant insurers were negligent regarding the issuance and delivery of a hazard insurance policy, the policy issued conforms to the contract it was extended to cover and its lack of delivery was not shown to affect recovery, thus the defendant insurers were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Dooling v. Perry, 183 M 451, 600 P2d 799 (1979).

Interlocutory Judgment: When a District Court does not direct entry of a final judgment on the claim of invalidity of a marriage or make an express determination that there is no just reason for delay in entering final judgment on that claim, there is no right of immediate appeal because the judgment is interlocutory and may be changed at any time prior to entry of a final judgment adjudicating all the claims, rights, and liabilities of all the parties. Adams v. Adams, 183 M 26, 598 P2d 197 (1979).

Requirements of Rule: Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires the trial court to determine that there is no just reason for delay and to direct the entry of judgment before judgment will be final as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties in a multiple claim or multiple party action. Krusemark v. Hansen, 182 M 291, 597 P2d 48 (1979).

Failure to Enter Findings or Judgment on Counterclaim: When the trial court did not enter a judgment or make a general finding on defendant's counterclaim alleging defective performance, it cannot be implied that the claim was without merit. The cause was remanded for entry of findings and judgment disposing of the counterclaim. Bauer v. Cook, 182 M 221, 596 P2d 200 (1979).

Lack of Jurisdiction for Appeal: When multiple claims for relief or multiple parties are involved in an action, the court may direct the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties only upon an express direction for the entry of judgment. The District Court did not make an express determination that there was no just reason for delay and an express direction for the entry of a final judgment in compliance with Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. For this reason the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to entertain on appeal. Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 182 M 74, 595 P2d 376 (1979).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor Rule 1, M.R.App.P., provides for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Amendment to Include Codefendant: Case would be remanded to District Court for purpose of amending, by incorporating appropriate terms, judgment which omitted to name defaulting codefendant who was jointly and severally liable on obligation. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied: When appeal is available from a summary judgment, the Supreme Court will not issue a Writ of Supervisory Control without extremely extenuating circumstances. Circumstances here were insufficient. State ex rel. Kober v. District Court, 147 M 116, 410 P2d 945 (1966).

Optional Claims May Be Dispensed With: Holder of note secured by contracts of unconditional guarantee and real estate mortgage may plead alternatively as to theory of recovery with court having authority under the rules to dispense with any claim left unadjudicated. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation v. Cowgill, 143 M 98, 387 P2d 435 (1963).

Promissory Note — Judgment Not Bar to Action: A judgment against one of several makers of a promissory note, jointly and severally liable thereon, does not merge the instrument so as to bar an action thereon against the others. Lepper v. Jackson, 102 M 259, 57 P2d 768 (1936).

Joint and Several Liability: Where several defendants are jointly and severally liable, the District Court may enter judgment against one or more of them, letting the action proceed against the others. Stauffacher v. Great Falls Pub. Serv. Co., 99 M 324, 43 P2d 647 (1935); State ex rel. Stiefel v. District Court, 37 M 298, 96 P 337 (1908).

Dismissal of Joint Tortfeasor — Modification of Common-Law Rule: The common-law rule that a joint judgment against two alleged tortfeasors may not be reversed as to one and permitted to stand as against the other, has been modified, and the Supreme Court will in a negligence action where the evidence does not justify a verdict against one defendant reverse the judgment with direction to dismiss the action as to him, and affirm it as to the other shown to have been negligent. Mellon v. Kelly, 99 M 10, 41 P2d 49 (1935).

Employer and Employee — Concurrent Negligence: The plaintiff, in an action against a railway company and one of its employees for injuries caused to him in being ejected from a freight train by one of the company's brakemen, has the option to proceed against either or both of the defendants by whose concurrent negligence the wrong was done. Golden v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 435, 104 P 549 (1909). See also Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915); Grorud v. Lossl, 48 M 274, 136 P 1069 (1913); Verlinda v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 44 M 223, 119 P 573 (1911); Knuckey v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 314, 109 P 979 (1910); Rand v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 398, 107 P 87 (1910).

Assignment to Partners — Partners Dismissed: Where several parties are sued as assignees for the benefit of creditors, and a partnership is alleged to exist between them, but it appears from the findings that the assignment was not to the firm but to one of the partners individually, a judgment may be properly entered against the individual partner and the action dismissed as to the others. Knatz v. Wise, 16 M 555, 41 P 710 (1895). See Logan v. Billings & N. Ry., 40 M 467, 107 P 415 (1910).

GENERAL

No Authority of Court to Order Refund of Taxes Paid Without Protest Absent Legislative Authorization: The District Court ordered that numerous parties who properly petitioned to be excluded from an irrigation district should be reimbursed for back taxes paid by the parties as of the date of their petitions. The irrigation district appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Tax refunds are a matter of legislative discretion, and absent specific legislative authorization, a court has no power to refund taxes paid without protest. RSG Holdings v. Missoula Irrigation

District, 2004 MT 214, 322 M 369, 96 P3d 1131 (2004), followed in Petitioners I-549 v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2005 MT 100, 326 M 527, 111 P3d 664 (2005). See also Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 217, 322 M 388, 96 P3d 1127 (2004).

Guardian Entitled to Award of Attorney Fees for Appointment as Guardian — Award in Nonadversarial Proceeding Held Not to Violate General Rule for Award of Attorney Fees — Award Approved Though Not Requested in Original Petition for Appointment: Appellant contested the payment of $30,000 in legal fees from the estate of a ward to the attorney representing the guardian appointed by the District Court, arguing that the general rule is that attorney fees are not payable to a prevailing party without special statutory provisions to the contrary and that the original petition for appointment of the guardian did not include a request for payment of attorney fees. The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the District Court awarding the fees. The Supreme Court pointed out, citing opinions from other states, that the general rule regarding payment of fees applies to adversarial proceedings and that the appointment of a guardian is not an adversarial proceeding but is a proceeding in rem to promote the bests interests of the ward and to protect the ward's estate. The Supreme Court also held that under this rule, the District Court may grant relief to which a party is entitled regardless of whether the party has specifically requested the relief granted. The Supreme Court noted that the payment of the guardian's legal fees by the estate of the ward is relief to which the guardian would be entitled under 72-5-428(1) if the petition for appointment was brought in good faith and the appointment was in the bests interests of the ward. In re Estate of Bayers, 1999 MT 154, 295 M 89, 983 P2d 339, 56 St. Rep. 607 (1999).

Appeal of Judgment Involving Declaratory Judgment and Injunction: Defendant argued that an appeal that concerned declaratory judgment was premature because plaintiff did not seek Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification of the court's order. However, because plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment involved both the declaratory judgment and an injunction issue and because plaintiff validly exercised the right to appeal the court's denial of the request for an injunction, the appeal was not considered premature and the entire case was subject to review by the Supreme Court. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Judgment to Grant Relief Entitled: The District Court did not err in awarding damages in excess of those requested in a complaint and petition for supplemental relief. Petitioner's failure to request specific money damages or coercive damages did not hinder the court's ability to order the relief necessary to effectuate its judgment. Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Trial Necessary on Facts in Support of Relief Not Specifically Requested: This rule allows a court to grant relief to which a party is entitled even if such relief was not demanded in the party's pleading. However, the court may not grant relief not specifically requested when the facts and issues necessary to support that relief have not been tried and proved at trial. Therefore, the District Court's order to proceed with a sale of trust property was in error when the validity of the sale agreement and the equitable question of specific performance were never properly raised and litigated. In re George Trust, 253 M 341, 834 P2d 1378, 49 St. Rep. 424 (1992), following the rationale in Smith v. Zepp, 173 M 358, 567 P2d 923 (1977).

Theories of Recovery Limited Through Instructions Following Filing of Amended Complaint — No Prejudice: An original complaint alleged theories of bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Three weeks prior to trial, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that defendant asserted changed the theories to equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Prior to settling of instructions, the District Court, on its own motion, dismissed plaintiff's claims of equitable estoppel, fraud, bad faith, and punitive damages and allowed the case to go forward on theories of constructive fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The action by the court in limiting the theories of recovery through instructions had the effect of removing much of defendant's claimed prejudice through the allowance of the amended complaint. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Judge's Discretion to Award Maintenance When Not Specifically Requested: A court's discretion to award relief to which a party is entitled, even if it is not requested, under this rule is subject in dissolution proceedings to established statutory dissolution guidelines. Under 40-4-203, a court is required to make specific findings regarding maintenance. The findings are subject to review. In re Marriage of Hughes, 236 M 427, 770 P2d 499, 46 St. Rep. 482 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Haney, 267 M 107, 882 P2d 497, 51 St. Rep. 981 (1994).

Retroactive Child Support: Once the issue of child support is before the trial court, pursuant to the parties' pleadings, the court has jurisdiction to award retroactive child support from the time of separation and is not limited to the child support prayed for or agreed to by the parties. In re Marriage of Di Pasquale, 220 M 497, 716 P2d 223, 43 St. Rep. 557 (1986).

Effect of Statement of Damages on Amount Recoverable for Federal Jurisdiction Purposes: This case was removed to federal court but remanded to the Montana District Court, based on jurisdictional amounts. While discussing the options a plaintiff has with regard to the specification of damages for purposes of removal to federal court in light of the provisions of 25-4-311, 25-4-313, and 25-4-314, the federal District Court discussed Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. The court said it did not interpret the rule, which provides that the statement of claims is not a limitation on what the plaintiff ultimately may recover, as imposing on a plaintiff's option of avoiding federal jurisdiction by seeking less than the requisite amount for diversity jurisdiction. Rollwitz v. Burlington N., 507 F. Supp. 582, 38 St. Rep. 264 (D.C. Mont., 1981).

Hazard Insurance — No Issue: Although the plaintiffs claimed that defendant insurers were negligent regarding the issuance and delivery of a hazard insurance policy, the policy issued conforms to the contract it was extended to cover and its lack of delivery was not shown to affect recovery, thus the defendant insurers were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Dooling v. Perry, 183 M 451, 600 P2d 799 (1979).

Attorney Fee — Quiet Title Action: Even though defendant in a quiet title action for a tax deed had not prayed for a reasonable attorney fee she should have been allowed one as the successful party. Plaintiff was not entitled to attorney fees as "successful party" because that designation was intended to mean the party obtaining the tax deed and not the party receiving reimbursement for taxes, penalties, and interest paid. Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977).

Forfeiture Improper — Grant of Relief Not Requested: Interpreting the forfeiture clause of a mine sale contract against plaintiffs, the parties for whose benefit the provision was created, it can hardly be said that the contract requires forfeiture for failure to produce 300 yards of material each working day. The appropriate remedy is an award of damages for breach of contract, even though not requested in the pleadings. Smith v. Zepp, 173 M 358, 567 P2d 923 (1977).

Divorce — Failure to Request Property Settlement: Where pleadings of both parties in divorce proceedings showed that they expected the court to make orders relative to the property, the court had authority to vest all the property in the husband and order alimony paid where justified by the facts, even though neither party had asked for that specific disposition. Libra v. Libra, 157 M 252, 484 P2d 748 (1971).

Inconsistent Theories for Recovery: The rule that a party may not adopt one theory of the case in his complaint and recover upon another, or adopt one theory in the trial court and insist upon a different one on appeal, is not affected by the provision that the District Court may grant plaintiff any relief consistent with his complaint and fairly embraced within the issues. Outlook Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 70 M 8, 223 P 905 (1924).

Relief Justified by Facts: If upon the facts stated, from any point of view, the plaintiff is entitled to relief, the complaint will be sustained. Simonsen v. Barth, 64 M 95, 208 P 938 (1922); Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916); Hicks v. Rupp, 49 M 40, 140 P 97 (1914); Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Thomas, 48 M 222, 137 P 380 (1913); Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1908); Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 M 61, 92 P 49 (1907); Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 M 298, 78 P 519 (1904); State ex rel. Russel v. Tooker, 18 M 540, 46 P 530 (1896); Kleinschmidt v. Steele, 15 M 181, 38 P 827 (1895); Davis v. Davis, 9 M 267, 23 P 715 (1890); Leopold v. Silverman, 7 M 266, 16 P 580 (1888); Gillett v. Clark, 6 M 190, 9 P 823 (1886); Morse v. Swan, 2 M 306 (1875).

Unintelligible Complaint — Relief Properly Denied: Where the complaint not only does not state a cause of action but is unintelligible, the rule that if from the facts stated it is apparent that plaintiff is entitled to some relief, the pleading will be upheld, does not obtain. Wing v. Brasher, 59 M 10, 194 P 1106 (1921).

Relief Consistent With Complaint to Be Awarded: When there is appearance and answer by the defendant, any relief may be awarded which is consistent with the complaint and embraced within the issues, but the award may not extend further in any case. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910); Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 M 298, 78 P 519 (1904).

Allegation as Prayer for Relief: Though a complaint has no formal prayer for judgment, it is sufficient if it contains an allegation showing the limits of the plaintiff's claim, as such an allegation serves the same practical purpose as a formal prayer for judgment. Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 304, 109 P 275 (1910).

Stipulation for Judgment Prayed — Multiple Defendants: Where in a foreclosure suit the principal defendants enter into a stipulation that the judgment may be entered against them in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, it is error for the court to direct, in its decree, not only the sale of the property and the application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of the mortgages, but also the application of the surplus to the satisfaction of judgments set up in the plaintiff's replication to the answer of another defendant holding liens on the property. Manuel v. Turner, 36 M 512, 93 P 808 (1908).

Prayer Not Stated: Informality of the prayer in a complaint, or the total absence of one, is not ground for demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 M 61, 92 P 49 (1907).

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Custody — Relief Not Specifically Demanded: In an action seeking termination of the parental rights of the natural parents, the award of full care and custody of the child to her aunt and uncle, the institution of a restraining order against the mother's boyfriend to prevent him from molesting the child, and for such other relief as the District Court deemed proper, the District Court had authority to name the child's aunt and uncle her general guardians under the fourth paragraph of the prayer for relief. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Interest Award Exceeding Prayer: When an award of interest on the purchase price recovered in a default judgment exceeded the amount in the prayer, it was ordered amended. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Divorce — Failure to Preserve Alleged Error: Where proper notice of hearing on application for judgment of divorce was given defendant in accordance with Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P., and no relief different from that demanded in the complaint was granted in violation of this rule, an appeal on those grounds was dismissed by Supreme Court upon its own motion where no application to set aside default or judgment was made under Rule 60(b). Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 148 M 195, 418 P2d 859 (1966).

Relief Limited by Complaint: The relief granted as to defaulting defendants cannot exceed that which is demanded in the complaint. Steinbrenner v. Love, 113 M 466, 129 P2d 101 (1942); Stillwater County v. Kenyon, 89 M 354, 297 P 453 (1931).

Quiet Title Action — Inconsistent Allegations: In an action to quiet title, the complaint spoke in the present tense, no reference being made to claim of title as of an earlier date. One of defendants answered and plaintiff replied setting up title as of the earlier date. Appealing defendants were served by publication and defaulted. The court should have decreed that plaintiff's title be quieted as of the date of filing of the complaint. Stillwater County v. Kenyon, 89 M 354, 297 P 453 (1931).

Mortgage Foreclosure: In a mortgage foreclosure suit, the court may order the land to be sold en masse without a foundation being laid therefor in the pleadings, and therefore the sale could be ordered as against defaulting defendants even though plaintiff did not in his prayer ask that it be so sold. Elston v. Hix, 67 M 294, 215 P 657 (1923).

GENERAL PRAYER FOR RELIEF

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P., was misplaced because that rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of the rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that Rule 70 was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993).

Appointment of Guardian: In an action seeking (1) termination of the parental rights of the natural parents, (2) the award of full care and custody of the child to her aunt and uncle, (3) the institution of a restraining order against the mother's boyfriend to prevent him from molesting the child, and (4) for such other relief as the District Court considered proper, the District Court had authority to name the child's aunt and uncle her general guardians under the fourth paragraph of the prayer for relief. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Divorce — Payment of Money: In divorce action it was not error for court to adjudge that plaintiff recover from defendant the amount which she had withdrawn from the bank although such relief was not requested in the prayer where the prayer asked "for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and equitable in the premise". Rogers v. Rogers, 123 M 52, 209 P2d 998 (1949), explained in Key v. Clements, 133 M 344, 323 P2d 603 (1958), distinguished in Chapman v. Chapman, 137 M 544, 354 P2d 184 (1960).

General Principles of Relief: A prayer in the complaint for such other and further relief as may be meet and agreeable to equity and good conscience warrants the granting of any relief to which plaintiff is entitled on the allegations and proof. Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 M 298, 78 P 519 (1904).

Commission Notes

Subdivision (d) is adjusted to state practice by making reference to the state and its officers, agencies and political subdivisions, rather than to the United States and its officers and agencies. Also, the last two sentences of Federal Rule subdivision (d) are omitted. These provide: "Costs may be taxed by the clerk on one day's notice. On motion served within 5 days thereafter, the action of the clerk may be reviewed by the court." Such provisions do not accord with our present state practice, and it is believed that the present state statutes on the subject of costs are preferable.

Case Notes

Summary Judgment — Deposition Costs Recoverable if Deposition Used in Dispositive Manner: In summary judgment actions, deposition costs are recoverable when a deposition is used in a dispositive manner. Here, depositions were not necessary to decide defendant's summary judgment motion because the grant of summary judgment was based purely on statutory interpretation and undisputed facts not derived from the depositions, so defendant's motion for deposition costs was properly denied. Ritchie v. Ennis, 2004 MT 43, 320 M 94, 86 P3d 11 (2004). See also Roy v. Neibauer, 191 M 224, 623 P2d 555 (1981).

Easement Dispute — Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded — Foy and Randono Distinguished — Costs Sustained: Smalls brought a quiet title action against Goods for determination of an easement. Goods counterclaimed to quiet title to an easement for themselves. The District Court found in favor of the Smalls on the easement issue and awarded Smalls $8,536 in attorney fees and $759 in costs. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of attorney fees, holding that there was no applicable exception to the general rule that attorney fees cannot be awarded absent a contractual agreement or other special circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly relied upon Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), and Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). The Supreme Court stated that the Randono case stands for the proposition that fees may not be awarded as costs and that Foy is distinguishable in that in Foy, fees were awarded to a person who had sought to avoid legal action, unlike the Smalls who initiated litigation in this case. Although expressing no opinion on the applicability of Rule 11 and this rule to the case before it, the Supreme Court also pointed out that fees could be awarded as a sanction under Rule 11 and that costs could be awarded pursuant to this rule. However, the Supreme Court did sustain the award of costs to Smalls, noting that the purposes for which costs were awarded by the District Court were of the type of costs allowable under 25-10-201. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Plaintiff Awarded Fifty Percent Share in Mining Company as Prevailing Party for Purposes of Costs: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. At the outset of the case, each party claimed 100% of the shares of the mining company. The District Court awarded both Cowles and Sheeline 50% of the shares in the mining company and awarded costs to Cowles as the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in awarding costs to Cowles because he received the relief asked for at trial. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Award of Attorney Fees by Judge Who Did Not Try Case — No Abuse of Discretion: Parties had 2 months following judgment and prior to a change in jurisdiction to bring the matter of attorney fees before the judge who presided over a lien foreclosure action. Neither side did, and jurisdiction of the action was transferred from the 13th to the 16th Judicial District. Defendant later claimed the new judge abused his discretion by awarding fees in a case he did not try because he could not know all of the circumstances surrounding the foreclosure action. The Supreme Court held that a judge's jurisdiction over a case is a matter of law and that while it is preferable that the presiding trial judge consider the matter of attorney fees, it is not mandatory. Finding no abuse of discretion, judgment was affirmed. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Contempt Order — Costs Award Proper — Attorney Fees Award Improper: In reviewing a contempt order that arose out of a water rights dispute, the Supreme Court ruled that an award of costs to the irrigation district as the prevailing party was proper, but that an award of attorney fees to the district was not proper. The court reasoned that no applicable statute or contractual provision provided for attorney fees and that the case did not fit within the exceptions recognized in Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978). State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 216 M 327, 701 P2d 342, 42 St. Rep. 845 (1985).

Attorney Fees — General Rules for Determining Prevailing Party: No single factor solely determines the prevailing party for the purpose of attorney fees. The party awarded a money judgment is not necessarily the successful or prevailing party, though such a judgment is an important factor in deciding who prevailed. A party surviving an action involving a counterclaim, setoff, refund, or penalty and who has the net judgment should generally be considered the prevailing party. If a counterclaiming defendant receives only a portion of his requested relief, but the plaintiff's claim is totally denied, the defendant should receive his attorney fees. If plaintiff and defendant both seek relief and each is awarded part of the requested relief, the party prevailing on the main issue in controversy must be allowed attorney fees. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Contract Allowing Costs to Prevailing Party — Contrary Subsequent Agreement: In an action in which each party claimed breach of a contract, where the parties agreed to an order that each would pay one-half of a special master's fee, the order was not in error, even though the contract provided for costs to the prevailing party. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

No Explicit Authority for Award of Attorney Fees in Disqualification Action: As there is no provision in 3-1-802 that allows a judge to award attorney fees to a party or damages to a nonparty, such award is improper. Unless a statute provides explicitly for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party, a court cannot make such an award. In re Marriage of Gahr, 212 M 481, 689 P2d 257, 41 St. Rep. 1879 (1984).

Motion for Attorney Fees Following Judgment — Not Costs — Timeliness of Motion: The defendants signed a contract to purchase a tract of land from plaintiffs. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action commenced on the contract. Plaintiffs filed suit alleging that under the contract and various oral agreements, defendants had agreed to pay a real estate commission to plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding that written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission did not exist. No notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Defendants later moved to set an attorney fee award. The trial court ruled that under Title 25, ch. 10, attorney fees were not recoverable costs and that the motion for costs was not timely, as it was not filed within 5 days of judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees were awardable under the contract and that defendants' motion was essentially a motion to amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The motion was timely made since no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983).

Title Insurers' Failure to Defend Suit Against Insured — Insured's Costs Awarded: Adjoining landowner sued insured for interference with his easement rights, title insurance companies refused to defend, insured hired his own counsel, the suit was settled, and adjoining landowner again sued insured when insured refused to abide by the settlement. The insurers again refused to defend. The policy obligated insurers to defend any litigation founded upon a defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against. Insurers had failed to disclose and insure against the easements, though they were contained in the title records. The insurers acted in bad faith in refusing to defend the first suit but not in refusing to defend the second suit, since it arose from insurers' refusal to abide by the settlement in the first suit. Insurers were liable to insured for his costs in defending the first suit, and punitive damages could be imposed for failure to defend. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982).

Burden of Proof on Appeal: Where defendant objected to an item of awarded costs, the ruling of the trial judge on the item did not indicate on which of two grounds it was based, and defendant's raising of questions was thus not sufficient to carry defendant's burden of showing the item was not reasonable and necessary, the Supreme Court could not say whether the item was properly allowed and must therefore sustain the trial court's ruling. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Prima Facie Case for Costs: Verified memorandum of costs and disbursements of plaintiffs was prima facie evidence that the funds were necessarily expended and properly taxable to defendant unless, as a matter of law, they appeared otherwise on the face of the memorandum. Defendant had the burden of overcoming the prima facie case, and the award of costs was affirmed where defendant failed to carry its burden of showing the items of cost were not reasonable and necessary as found by the trial court. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Costs Awardable to Party Prevailing at Trial: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home structural problems requiring repair occurred. Plaintiffs prevailed at trial but were denied costs. Costs are awardable under Rule 54(d), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-10-101(3). The Supreme Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to costs at trial. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Deposition for Defendant's Benefit — Costs Disallowed: Section 25-10-201 particularly enumerates allowable costs under this rule. Where cost of taking plaintiff's deposition was made merely for the convenience of defendant's counsel, defendant cannot include such cost in his bill of costs because deposition was for his benefit. Deposition was never filed with the District Court, and plaintiff's counsel did not have any practical means of securing a copy. Johnson v. Furgeson, 158 M 170, 489 P2d 1032 (1971).

Dismissal to Include Costs: A judgment of dismissal carries with it a judgment for costs just as much as does a judgment on the merits. Graham v. Superior Mines, 100 M 427, 49 P2d 443 (1935).

Amended Memorandum of Costs — Filing Improperly Denied: The District Court should have permitted an amended memorandum of costs to be filed, in which no new items were sought to be added to the original, but the sole purpose of which was to furnish the objecting party with information relative to alleged expenditures, the absence of which from the original was claimed to be prejudicial. It is not necessary to make a preliminary showing that such information was omitted by inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Neary v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 480, 110 P 226 (1910).

Request for Costs Judgment Not Bar to Appeal: Where a plaintiff elects to stand on his complaint after demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) sustained, it is the duty of the court to render judgment against him for costs so as to place him in a position to appeal. Where the plaintiff is compelled to ask the court to enter such judgment, it is not such a consent to the judgment as to debar him of the right to appeal. Stevenson v. Matteson, 13 M 108, 32 P 291 (1893).

Rule 55. Default

Case Notes

Default Proper as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Alleging that she was defrauded out of nearly $1 million, Cass properly served defendants with a complaint, summons, and discovery requests. Defendants failed to respond to the discovery requests, and the District Court held defendants in default, awarding Cass $1,736,547.20. Defendants moved to set the judgment aside, but the request was denied, and defendants appealed, arguing that the default judgment should have been set aside pursuant to this rule when Cass filed an amended pleading. However, the record clearly showed that the District Court dismissed the case pursuant to Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., based on defendants' failure to comply with discovery requests and a court order to answer discovery, rather than on this rule for defendants' failure to defend. Although default could have been applied under either rule, the District Court obviously faced a litigant who simply was not going to respond to properly served discovery, so entry of default under Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., was not an abuse of discretion, and the judgment was affirmed. Cass v. Composite Indus. of Am., Inc., 2002 MT 226, 311 M 406, 56 P3d 322 (2002).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment on Basis That Prior Default Judgment Barred Further Claim Under Insurance Policy: Generally, under this rule, a default judgment based on one party's failure to answer under Rule 8, M.R.Civ.P., permits the nondefaulting party to assert that all factual allegations in the pleadings are considered admitted in ascertaining liability. This general rule is an exception to an overriding principle that cases are to be tried on the merits and that judgments by default are not favored. Construing the interplay between the two procedural rules, the Supreme Court adopted the general rule in 6 Moore's Fed. Prac. 55.10 (2nd Ed. 1966) that although at "the time of entry of default, the facts alleged by the plaintiff in the complaint are deemed admitted", plaintiff's conclusions of law are not considered established. Further, although not factually identical to the present case, under Aldrich & Co. v. Donovan, 238 M 431, 778 P2d 397, 46 St. Rep. 1393 (1989), the deemed admissions resulting from one party's failure to respond to an amended counterclaim, because of a technicality, cannot sustain a claim for fraud in a subsequent motion for summary judgment. Here, plaintiff's husband's arson, fraud, concealment, misrepresentation, and false swearing were considered by the District Court to have been admitted through an otherwise valid default judgment based on the husband's failure to answer or appear, barring the wife's subsequent claim for insurance coverage and warranting summary judgment for the insurance company. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the determination whether the husband committed each of these acts is a conclusion of law that can be reached only after applying particular rules of law to specific findings of fact and cannot be "deemed admitted" through a default judgment absent any legitimate evidence in the record. Lane v. Farmers Union Ins., 1999 MT 252, 296 M 267, 989 P2d 309, 56 St. Rep. 990 (1999). See also Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965), and Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993).

Notice of Hearing of Default Judgment — No Conflict Between Uniform District Court Rules and Rules of Civil Procedure: The controlling rules relating to the entry of default judgments are found in this rule and, with respect to service, are found in Rules 5 and 6, M.R.Civ.P. The Uniform District Court Rules do not enlarge, vary, or control the provisions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Case Notes

General 935
Motion Preventing Default 936

GENERAL

Default Judgment Distinguished: It is clear under this rule and Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P., that an entry of default by the Clerk of Court and an entry of default judgment by the District Court are two distinctly different acts. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Failure to Answer by Time of Application for Entry of Default — Default Properly Entered: Following defendant's failure to timely answer complaint, plaintiffs made timely application for entry of default. Defendant then answered, and 5 days later plaintiffs filed an affidavit for entry of default and default was entered by the Court Clerk. The Clerk properly entered the default, since no answer or appearance had been timely made at the time of the application for default. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Child Custody Disputes — Defaults Disfavored: The father sought a modification of custody of his children. His wife failed to file her response within the time provided by the rules. The father argued that he was entitled to custody of his children by default. The Supreme Court held that any doubt in the late filing of an answer should be resolved by trial on the merits of the case, and custody cases present a compelling reason for a hearing on the merits. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

Failure to Attend Pretrial Conference — Default Properly Ordered: In an action by the plaintiff for damages caused by the defendant's failure to provide an irrigation system, the District Court did not err in entering a default judgment against the defendant for his failure to attend a pretrial conference. Entry of a default judgment is a drastic sanction to impose for failure to attend a pretrial conference, and the court should only resort to such a remedy in extreme situations where there is a clear record of continual delay, abuse, and disregard of the court's authority. Because the defendant displayed a continual disregard for the trial court's authority and because there was sufficient evidence to support the finding that the defendant received a copy of the order for the conference, there was no evidence that the District Court abused its discretion. Calaway v. Jones, 191 M 353, 624 P2d 991, 38 St. Rep. 340 (1981).

Effect of Entry of Default — Further Pleading Prevented: A party against whom a default has been entered has no standing to file further pleadings, absent fraud, unless the default is set aside. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Bankruptcy Discharge — Effect on Default Judgment: Defendant in a tort action obtained a discharge in bankruptcy prior to entry of a default judgment but was denied in his application to the state court to set aside the default judgment in which defendant alleged that the judgment had been entered in violation of the stay occasioned by the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. Defendant's appeal of that denial to the Supreme Court was remanded to the District Court with directions to dismiss the default judgment against the defendant. Palmer v. Bracy, 177 M 433, 582 P2d 324 (1978).

Defendant Failed to Appear: When no one appeared on behalf of defendant at the trial, the court had no alternative but to grant plaintiff's motion for default judgment. Archer v. LaMarch Creek Ranch, 174 M 429, 571 P2d 379 (1977).

Notice of Default Not Required: Clerk of court is not required to give a notice of entry of default to the defendant. Johnson v. Matelich, 163 M 329, 517 P2d 731 (1973).

Answer Filed After Entry by Clerk: Plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default where defendants filed answer after entry of default by clerk and receipt of notice of hearing on motion for default, but before actual hearing on the motion, since entry of default by clerk requires no notice to party in default, answer was filed after defendants had received notice of motion for default and defendants failed to move to set aside entry of default for "good cause shown" as they were entitled to do under rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Unsigned Default to Be Corrected: The clerk's act in entering the default is purely ministerial and any mistakes of the clerk as distinguished from the judicial acts of the court are subject to correction by amendment of the court records. That the default was not "properly signed" would at best be but a clerical error or mistake which could not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Galbreath v. Aubert, 116 M 490, 157 P2d 105 (1944).

Withdrawal of Appearance: Where attorney filed demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) and answer in behalf of five defendants, but later discovered he was without authority as to one, and filed his withdrawal of the pleading as to the one, plaintiff by filing his praecipe for default recognized that there had been no appearance that would cure defective service of summons. Aronow v. Bishop, 112 M 611, 120 P2d 423 (1941).

Additional Time Impliedly Granted: Failure of plaintiff to cause defendant's default to be entered is an implied grant of further time in which to make appearance. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 81 M 459, 264 P 127 (1928).

Default After Appearance a Nullity: A judgment by default can be entered only where the defendant has wholly failed to make an appearance, either general or special; and where it is entered notwithstanding appearance made, it is premature and a nullity. Taylor v. Southwick, 78 M 329, 253 P 889 (1927).

Acquiescence by Plaintiff: Where defendant does not make appearance within the statutory limit and plaintiff permits further time to elapse without taking action, he thereby impliedly grants the former further time, and if appearance is made thereafter and before default is entered, it is timely, and subsequent entry of judgment by default is void. Edenfield v. Seal Co., 74 M 509, 241 P 227 (1925).

Rule Not Mandatory: The provision that where no appearance has been made by defendant within the time specified, "the clerk must enter" his default is directory only, not mandatory. Edenfield v. Seal Co., 74 M 509, 241 P 227 (1925); State ex rel. Kohl v. District Court, 46 M 348, 128 P 582 (1912).

Clerk's Power to Default: The power of the clerk to enter a default in any case is restricted to those in which no appearance either general or special has been made. Missoula Belt Line Ry. v. Smith, 58 M 432, 193 P 529 (1920).

Appearance by Counsel Only — No Default: The failure to appear in person at a trial after issues joined does not constitute a default, where counsel is present, and it was not necessary to move to set aside the order of the court directing the entry of a default. Sell v. Sell, 58 M 329, 193 P 561 (1920).

Default After Appearance: The mere appearance of a defendant does not prevent his default from being entered; judgment by default may be had when there has been a failure to do the things indicated. Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910).

Failure to Answer — Motion as Appearance: Where defendants filed no pleadings except a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction, until after the time to answer had expired, their default was properly entered without notice, though such motion be regarded as an appearance. Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910).

MOTION PREVENTING DEFAULT

Motion for Summary Judgment Held Sufficient to Prevent Default: Klock brought a civil action against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights. After the defendants' motion to dismiss was denied, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. Klock moved for entry of a default judgment, claiming that the defendants had failed to "answer" the complaint. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to grant Klock's motion, holding that a default judgment may be entered under this rule only if a party has failed to plead or "otherwise defend" against the complaint. The Supreme Court held that the defendants' motion for summary judgment satisfied the requirement that the defendants "otherwise defend" against the complaint. Klock v. Cascade, 943 M 1262, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997).

Motion to Change Venue: Where a motion for a change of venue was timely served and filed in the action by defendant's attorney, defendant was not in default. USF&G Co. v. St., 136 M 148, 345 P2d 734 (1959); McLeod v. McLeod, 124 M 590, 228 P2d 965 (1951).

Appearance by Motion Preventing Default: Appearance by motion, whether general or special, prevents entry of default prior to disposition of the motion. Paramount Publix Corp. v. Boucher, 93 M 340, 19 P2d 223 (1933).

Challenge to Filing of Supplemental Complaint — Time for Answer Extended: The filing of a motion challenging the jurisdiction of the court to make an order permitting a supplemental complaint to be filed without notice, constituted a special appearance only and extended defendant's time for making appearance on the merits until the motion was determined. State ex rel. Bingham v. District Court, 80 M 97, 257 P 1014 (1927).

Challenge to Jurisdiction — Time for Answer Extended: The filing by the defendant of a motion challenging the jurisdiction of the court before he interposes his answer or demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) extends the time for making appearance on the merits until the motion is determined. Missoula Belt Line Ry. v. Smith, 58 M 432, 193 P 529 (1920).

Motion as Challenge to Jurisdiction: A motion requiring the attorney for the adverse party to produce his authority challenges the jurisdiction of the court. Missoula Belt Line Ry. v. Smith, 58 M 432, 193 P 529 (1920).

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

COMMISSION NOTE

Subdivision (b)(1) has been changed by adding the clause, "and has been personally served, otherwise than by publication or personal service outside this state," thus requiring application to the court for judgment by default in cases of service by publication or personal service outside Montana. In subdivision (b)(2) the words "or guardian ad litem" have been added near the end of the first sentence, and "state of Montana" has been substituted for "United States" at the end of the subdivision.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO OCTOBER 9, 1984, AMENDMENT

The changes in Rules 55(b)(1) and 55(c) are being made because it appears that as long as the procedure for proof of service is reliable, there is no real basis for distinguishing between personal service within and without the state of Montana.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: As of October 9, 1984, the above commission note was not applicable regarding personal service. The Montana Rule adds the following to the end of (1) of the Federal Rule: "and has been personally served. No judgment by default shall be entered by the clerk when service has been by publication." Except for this variation, and the variations in (2) indicated in the above commission note, the rules were identical, as of May 1, 1990.

Amendments: The 1964 amendment inserted "an" before "account" in the final sentence of paragraph (2).

The amendment of October 9, 1984, in (1) at end of first sentence deleted "otherwise than by publication or personal service outside of this state"; and inserted second sentence.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

GENERAL

Prima Facie Case for Foreclosure — Default Judgment Proper: In order to make a prima facie case for foreclosure, a lender is required to show three elements: (1) the debt of the borrowers; (2) nonpayment of the debt; and (3) present ownership of the debt by the lender. Evidence of the presence of these elements, coupled with a sufficient showing of attorney fees, was adequate for a default judgment to be entered against debtors. NW. Farm Credit Serv., ACA v. Lund, 255 M

114, 841 P2d 490, 49 St. Rep. 910 (1992). See also First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48 (1989).

Parents Sued in Capacity of Guardians — Notice Insufficient to Establish Individual Liability: Defendants were sued in their capacity as guardians of their minor son for the expenses incurred in connection with the birth of an illegitimate child fathered by their son. A default judgment was rendered against defendants. The Supreme Court reversed and vacated the default judgment, holding that the guardians' duty to safeguard the rights of their son during the legal proceeding did not subject them to personal liability for their son's allegedly wrongful acts. The Supreme Court also held that because the title of the case, the allegations in the complaint, and all motions at trial addressed the defendants in their capacity as guardians, they had insufficient notice of any likelihood of personal liability. Breuer v. Poe, 245 M 22, 797 P2d 944, 47 St. Rep. 1812 (1990).

Computation of Notice Period for Default Judgment — General Rule Regarding Procedural Defects: Defendant claimed that insufficient notice had been given under subsection (2) of this rule for judgment by default when the notice period was computed under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Service was made upon defendant's counsel by mail. The question arose as to whether the rules intend that the noncourt days excluded under Rule 6(a) apply to additional days granted by virtue of mailing under Rule 6(e). The Supreme Court declined to rule on the question, instead affirming the default judgment on the grounds that: (1) defendant had ample notice of hearing; (2) the case was on the docket for more than 16 months after service of complaint and summons, but defendant took no other action except for a motion to dismiss; (3) defendant never answered the complaint; and (4) defendant did not allege or tender any proof that he had a meritorious defense to the suit for mortgage foreclosure. The court cited the general rule that a procedural defect with respect to notice of a default judgment must be considered with other factors before the judgment may be set aside. Therefore, even if notice was considered insufficient, in this case the other factors so outweighed the procedural defect as to require sustaining entry of the default judgment. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Final Order — Timeliness of Appeal: A default judgment was entered against defendant in March, his motion to vacate was denied in April, the judgment was renewed in August after a hearing on damages, and defendant appealed in September. The appeal was timely since the hearing on damages was mandatory under this section because the damages were unliquidated; therefore, the April order could not be final. The fact that a judge, not a clerk, entered the default judgment does not negate the need for a hearing on damages. The August judgment was the final judgment, and appeal from that judgment was timely taken. Paxson v. Rice, 217 M 521, 706 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1355 (1985).

Failure to Serve Notice — Default Rendered Voidable: Since the wife previously had appeared in this dissolution action, she was entitled to 3 days' written notice of the husband's motion for default judgment. The husband's failure to serve the requisite notice rendered the order of default judgment premature and voidable. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985), followed in Dean v. Hoepfner, 245 M 366, 801 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 2162 (1990), and in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Misrepresentation and Improper Process by Attorney — Sanctions: Since under 33-1-602 defendant, a foreign insurer, could only be served by service upon the Commissioner of Insurance, personal jurisdiction over insurer was not obtained when it was served at its Billings claim office. Thus, when plaintiffs' attorney appealed quashing of the service, the appeal was dismissed. Plaintiffs' attorney represented to the District Court's personnel that he had won the appeal and was entitled to a default judgment, and the personnel entered one against insurer for $150,000 punitive damages and $385 costs. The default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and the District Court correctly vacated it. As insurer was not properly served, the District Court properly ruled plaintiffs could not take depositions. The attorney was properly adjudged liable to insurer for $4,031.50 under 37-61-406, stating that an attorney guilty of deceit or collusion with intent to deceive the court or a party forfeits to the party injured by his deceit or collusion treble damages. LaFountaine v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 215 M 402, 698 P2d 410, 42 St. Rep. 496 (1985).

Entry of Default by Clerk Distinguished: It is clear under this rule and Rule 55(a), M.R.Civ.P., that an entry of default by the Clerk of Court and an entry of default judgment by the District Court are two distinctly different acts. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Failure to Appear at Hearing on Application for Default — Evidence Properly Taken: Plaintiffs gave defendant timely written notice that they would apply for judgment by default. The time for hearing was set, and neither defendant nor his representative appeared at the hearing. There was no reason for the court not to proceed to take evidence for the purpose of determining damages. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

What Constitutes an Appearance: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution of marriage. He failed to answer or otherwise appear, and a default was entered. One and one-half years later appellant moved to set aside the default on the grounds that he was not given the 3-day notice provided by Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P. He argued that he sent the District Judge two letters, and those letters constituted an appearance for purposes of Rule 55(b). The court disagreed. The District Judge did not read the letters, as it was his policy not to engage in correspondence with litigants. The letters themselves were not served on counsel for the petitioner or the petitioner, and no appearance fee of any kind was paid in connection with the letters. Appellant did not appear and was not entitled to a 3-day notice. In re Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981).

Notice of Subsequent Proceedings: If a party "appears" by filing a motion he is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Failure to Give Notice of Application — Jurisdiction Proper: District Court was not deprived of jurisdiction to enter default judgment by plaintiff's failure to give 3-day notice required by subdivision (2) of this rule where defendant had taken no action from the time of the entry of the default judgment until his death, a period of approximately 13 months, the judgment was attacked for the first time by his executrix after approximately 1 year and 7 months had elapsed, and almost 4 years had passed when the motion to set aside and vacate judgment was filed. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Failure to Serve Application for Judgment — Effect: Party's failure to serve defendant with notice of application for judgment did not preclude court from proceeding against defendant. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Answer Filed After Entry by Clerk — Default Properly Given: Plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default where defendants filed answer after entry of default by clerk and receipt of notice of hearing on motion for default, but before actual hearing on the motion, since entry of default by clerk requires no notice to party in default, answer was filed after defendants had received notice of motion for default and defendants failed to move to set aside entry of default for "good cause shown" as they were entitled to do under rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Divorce Proceedings — Default Properly Entered: Where proper notice of hearing on application for judgment of divorce was given defendant in accordance with this rule, and no relief different from that demanded in the complaint was granted in violation of Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P., an appeal on those grounds was dismissed by the Supreme Court on its own motion where no application to set aside the default or judgment was made under Rule 60(b). Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 148 M 195, 418 P2d 859 (1966).

Discretion in Denying Vacating of Default Judgment: Court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion to vacate default judgment. Defendant here was neither unsuspecting nor unaware. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Failure to Give Notice of Application — Nonprejudicial Error: Where record showed that defendant took no action for nearly 3 months after default judgment had been entered, defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to give written notice of application for default judgment as required by paragraph (2) of this rule, and District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to vacate the default judgment filed under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Ministerial Function — Clerk to Comply With Statute: Clerk of court in entering a default judgment is performing a ministerial function and must follow procedures in detail and absolutely. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Effect of Entry by Clerk: Where the Clerk of the District Court is empowered by statute to enter judgments, the judgment is one pronounced by law as a necessary consequence of the facts established. Lasby v. Burgess, 93 M 349, 18 P2d 1104 (1933).

Entry by Clerk as Judgment by Court: The ministerial act of the Clerk of the District Court in entering judgment upon default of defendant in an action for the recovery of money has the same effect as a judgment rendered upon a verdict of the jury, and the judgment roll is admissible in evidence in another action the same as though a formal judgment had been signed by the judge. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832 (1929).

Unliquidated Damages — Amount Not Admitted: In an action to recover unliquidated damages, the default of the defendant admits the cause of action and the material and traversable allegations of the complaint, but not the amount of damages. Smotherman v. Christianson, 59 M 202, 195 P 1106 (1921).

Foreclosure of Lien — Judicial Action Required: An action for the foreclosure of a lien is not an action on contract for the recovery of money or damages only, and the rendition of a proper judgment on default in such an action requires judicial action, and not the performance by the clerk of a mere ministerial function. Soliri v. Fasso, 56 M 400, 185 P 322 (1919), distinguished in Barrett v. Morton, 137 M 190, 351 P2d 601 (1960).

CLERK'S ERROR

Estimate of Damages — No Authority to Enter Default: In an affidavit accompanying his complaint, plaintiff stated that he would have to expend at least $86,000 to correct defendant's error in building plaintiff's house. When defendant defaulted, the clerk of court entered a default judgment against defendant in the amount of $86,000. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the amount was merely an estimate of the amount of the expected damages and did not constitute a sum certain and, therefore, the clerk of court did not have the authority to enter the default judgment. Hoyt v. Eklund, 249 M 307, 815 P2d 1140, 48 St. Rep. 681 (1991).

Harmless Error: Under Rule 61, omission of clerk of court to require affidavit of amount due under this rule before entry of default judgment in favor of plaintiff is not fatal unless refusal to take action with respect to the omission appears to the District Court inconsistent with substantial justice. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Motion to set aside default judgment because of plaintiff's failure to file affidavit of amount due and owing when it requested entry of default judgment was properly denied where defendant permitted judgment to be satisfied from her property, and no reason to avoid the voidable judgment had been presented. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Voidable Error: Entry of default judgment by clerk of court without requiring affidavit from plaintiff of amount due and owing rendered the judgment voidable but not void. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Unauthorized Entry by Clerk: The clerk of the court in entering a judgment acts ministerially and not judicially, and must determine from the allegations of the complaint alone whether the action is one upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only, and if not then he has no authority to enter a judgment therein, and the judgment is a nullity. Soliri v. Fasso, 56 M 400, 185 P 322 (1919), distinguished in Barrett v. Morton, 137 M 190, 351 P2d 601 (1960).

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

COMMISSION NOTE

In subdivision (c) the first two sentences have been added to the Federal Rule, for the purpose of preventing automatic default by reason of failure to comply with the exact requirements of the rules, requiring application for default by a party and permitting stipulation by the parties for extension of the times prescribed for appearance, motions, and pleadings.

Redraft of Rule — Identity With Federal Rule: Subsequent to the preparation of the above commission note, the Montana Civil Rules Commission redrafted Rule 55(c). In reporting to the Supreme Court, the Commission said: "We have also attached a redraft of Rule 55(c) as now proposed, and in brief we have merely inserted a provision that will give the court discretion to appoint a representative for any person served outside the boundaries of the state rather than to enter his default." The first sentence of Montana Rule 55(c), as enacted by the Legislative Assembly, is identical with Federal Rule 55(c). The second and succeeding sentences have been added. The 1984 amendment to the Montana Rule deleted the third sentence.

Amendments: The amendment of October 9, 1984, deleted former third sentence, which read: "Before entering the default of any person who has been served outside the boundaries of the state of Montana, the court may, in its discretion, appoint a representative for any such person even though such person has not appeared."

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

GENERAL

Appropriate Standards for Setting Aside Entry of Default and Default Judgment: Defendant failed to respond to a complaint within 20 days, and default was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant sought to set aside the entry of default under the good cause standard provided under Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989). Plaintiff contended that in order to meet the good cause standard, a party would have to meet the higher excusable neglect standard set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). The District Court held that the Blume standard applied and that defendant's neglect was inexcusable, so default judgment was entered. On appeal, the Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the applicable standards. When the issue is the setting aside of a default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., either alone or in conjunction with an entry of default, the appropriate standard is the Blume excusable neglect standard. When the issue is the setting aside of an entry of default under this rule, as opposed to a default judgment, the appropriate standard is the Cribb good cause standard. This case involved setting aside an entry of default, so the court applied the Cribb standard. Defendant failed to show that its default was not willful, instead professing ignorance in the face of repeated warnings that if no answer was filed, a default would be taken. The Cribb standard also compels consideration of the prejudice to plaintiff and whether defendant had a meritorious defense. Plaintiff had a right to be apprised of defendant's defense in a timely manner, and defendant should have raised those claims in a timely fashion rather than ignore plaintiff's repeated attempts to elicit a responsive pleading. Defendant was correct that the proper standard to be applied in this case was the Cribb standard, but defendant nevertheless failed to show good cause to set aside entry of default under that standard. Thus, even though the District Court applied the wrong standard, it reached the correct result for the wrong reason, and the Supreme Court affirmed the default judgment. Essex Ins. Co. v. Jaycie, Inc., 2004 MT 278, 323 M 231, 99 P3d 651 (2004), followed in Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Order Vacating or Refusing to Vacate Default Judgment Appealable as Special Order After Final Judgment: Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) moved to set aside a default judgment against the company. After the motion was granted, Roberts, the plaintiff, appealed the order setting aside the judgment and Empire contested the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to hear the appeal. The Supreme Court clarified the issue whether such an order is appealable, holding that an order vacating or refusing to vacate a judgment is appealable under Rule 1(b)(2), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), as an appeal of a special order after final judgment. Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Determining Existence of Good Cause Standard: To determine a sufficient showing of good cause for setting aside a default entry, courts should consider: (1) whether the default was willful; (2) whether the plaintiff would be prejudiced if the default was set aside; and (3) whether the defendant presented a meritorious defense to plaintiff's claim. The court must also balance the interests of the defendant in the adjudication of his defense on the merits against the interests of the public and the court in the orderly and timely administration of justice. In addition, courts may consider: (1) whether there was a good faith mistake; (2) whether a harsh or large judgment would result; (3) the strong preference of adjudication on the merits; and (4) resolution of doubts in favor of granting a motion to set aside. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989).

Standards Applicable to Setting Aside Default Entry and Default Judgment: The default entry is simply an interlocutory order that in itself determines no rights or remedies, whereas the default judgment is a final judgment that terminates the litigation and decides the dispute. Therefore, the "good cause" standard for setting aside a default entry under this rule is more flexible and lenient than the "excusable neglect" standard for setting aside a default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Attorney Withdrawal With No Notice to Client — Default Set Aside: The lower court granted defendants' attorney's motion to withdraw and ordered him to notify defendants. Defendants claimed on appeal that they received no notice. The record showed no evidence of notice by the attorney and no evidence of the notice that 37-61-405 required plaintiff to give. A default was issued against defendants at a time when they had no attorney and were not represented at the hearing. Defendants properly raised on appeal the lack of the lower court's power to proceed to default. The case was remanded with directions to set the default aside and grant a rehearing. Mont. Bank of Roundup, N.A. v. Benson, 220 M 410, 717 P2d 6, 43 St. Rep. 485 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Default Judgment Vacated for Lack of Evidence of Bad Faith or Willfulness: On March 19, 1976, Scott, a truck driver employed by England, struck and killed plaintiffs' elderly father in Alzada, Montana. No criminal charges were filed. Scott returned to Utah where he left England's employ. In April 1977, plaintiffs filed a wrongful death action seeking damages against England and Scott. England was personally served in Salt Lake City, and the office manager accepted service for Scott. In June 1978, plaintiffs noticed a deposition of Scott to take place in Ekalaka. Scott could not be located. Two years later, plaintiffs moved for a default judgment against Scott for failure to appear at the deposition. The trial court entered the default judgment on September 15, 1980. Scott was finally located in March 1981 and filed a motion to set aside the default. The trial court refused and held a hearing on damages. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, saying there was no evidence showing willfulness or bad faith on the part of England or Scott. Ewalt v. Scott, 206 M 503, 675 P2d 77, 40 St. Rep. 1809 (1983).

Failure to Pay Fee for Filing Pleading: District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment against defendant, and the judgment would not be overturned on appeal from denial of motion to set aside the default judgment, where the court found that negligent failure to pay filing fee for answer until 2 ½ months after filing of the answer was not excusable, that the fee was not filed until after plaintiffs requested entry of default, that the answer did not present a prima facie meritorious defense, that the evidence overwhelmingly indicated there was no defense, and that defendant's reckless disregard for the rights and feelings of the plaintiffs and his attempt to prolong the litigation were adequate reasons to deny his motion to set aside the judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Suit Attacking Judgment After Motion to Set Aside — New Issue Raised — Res Judicata Applied: In 1971 a default judgment had been entered against present plaintiffs, granting sole ownership of certain property to present defendant E.G.W., who sold the property to present codefendants in 1972. Plaintiffs' 1971 motion to set aside the default was denied. In 1981 plaintiffs sued for a one-half quieted interest, or in the alternative, an accounting and one-half the proceeds of the 1972 sale. The complaint was based on the claim that the 1971 judgment was void because it granted relief beyond that prayed for in the pleadings and the court lacked jurisdiction to grant the relief it granted. Res judicata barred litigation of the voidness issue because plaintiffs failed to raise it in their 1971 motion to set aside the default. Once there has been full opportunity to present an issue for judicial decision in a given proceeding, including jurisdiction issues, the court's determination in that proceeding must be accorded full finality as to all issues raised or which fairly could have been raised and their later consideration is precluded by res judicata. Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573, 39 St. Rep. 752 (1982). See also First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987), St. v. Perry, 232 M 455, 758 P2d 268, 45 St. Rep. 1192 (1988), and Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000).

Due Process Violations — Default Set Aside for Good Cause: On the basis of the total circumstances surrounding the proceedings, defendant tribe was denied a meaningful opportunity to appear and be heard. Late return of proof of service of summons could have contributed to the tribe's failure to appear, and coupled with other circumstances was "good cause" to set aside a default. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Failure to Appeal — Issue Res Judicata: Defendant's failure to appeal the denial of his motion to set aside default judgment renders the decision res judicata and precludes the filing of a second action to litigate the same claim or issues decided by the court. Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Notice Not Required — Good Cause Not Shown: Motion to set aside entry of default judgment grounded on failure of Clerk to give notice to defendant of entry of default failed to show good cause since no notice of entry of default by the Clerk of the District Court is required. Johnson v. Matelich, 163 M 329, 517 P2d 731 (1973).

Jurisdiction — Cannot Be Obtained by Consent: Objection to lack of jurisdiction over subject matter may be raised at any time. A court lacking jurisdiction cannot acquire it by consent of parties. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Answer Filed After Entry by Clerk — Default Properly Given: Plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default where defendants filed answer after entry of default by clerk and receipt of notice of hearing on motion for default, but before actual hearing on the motion, since entry of default by clerk requires no notice to party in default, answer was filed after defendants had received notice of motion for default and defendants failed to move to set aside entry of default for "good cause shown" as they were entitled to do under rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Discretion in Denying Vacating of Default Judgment: Court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion to vacate default judgment. Defendant here was neither unsuspecting nor unaware. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Default Judgment Set Aside — Improper Service: Because service upon a former employee was not service upon the company itself, default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

Default Properly Opened: Fact that corporate defendant claimed Sheriff had never served summons upon the corporation, Sheriff did not remember service of the summons, and default was not taken until 7 years after the plaintiff was injured, constituted clear, unequivocal, and convincing proof to rebut weight accorded Sheriff's return of service of process under 25-3-302 to open default judgment. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Premature Default Judgment — Voidable: A prematurely entered default judgment is voidable but not void. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965), followed in in Re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Voidable Judgments: A default judgment entered prematurely pursuant to this section could not be set aside under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., since Rule 60(b)(4) applies to void and not voidable judgments. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Delay in Opening Default:

District Court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to open default taken on April 28, 1960, where defendant did not move to open the default until December 15, 1960. Strnod v. Abadie, 141 M 224, 376 P2d 730 (1962).

Vacation of a decree of divorce rendered upon default after publication of summons on the ground of fraud on the part of plaintiff, after a lapse of more than 15 months from its rendition, was error; defendant's remedy being an action in equity to set the decree aside on the ground stated. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 57 M 432, 188 P 902 (1920).

Pending Action in Another State — Default Properly Set Aside: Trial court was correct in setting aside a default judgment entered in a divorce proceeding, where it was disclosed that at the time plaintiff instituted the divorce action in Montana there was pending a divorce action by defendant against plaintiff in California to which plaintiff had filed a cross-complaint. Petrol v. Petrol, 127 M 184, 259 P2d 338 (1953).

Alias Summons — Time for Answer Not Extended: Where defendant's delay in appearing was caused by belief that the service of an alias summons for the purpose of curing a defect in the original service extended the time for answering, the default judgment was properly set aside. Nelson v. Lennon, 122 M 506, 206 P2d 556 (1949).

Substitution of Real Party in Interest Allowed After Default: In action to quiet title, court was authorized after default of original defendant to set aside default, and permit assignee of timber rights to be substituted as the party defendant. State ex rel. Hilyard v. District Court, 120 M 342, 184 P2d 997 (1947).

Relief From Default for Failure to Serve Summons: Relief from a default judgment on the ground that defendant was not personally served with summons is by application to the trial court made within 1 year after rendition of judgment for permission to answer to the merits of the action, and upon expiration of such time limit the trial court is without jurisdiction to vacate the judgment. Complaint filed in instant case was insufficient to invoke the equity jurisdiction of the trial court. Housing Authority of City of Butte v. Murtha, 115 M 405, 144 P2d 183 (1943).

Jurisdictional Defect — Failure of Service as Affecting Default: Though failure to serve some persons interested in property sought to be condemned by a city housing authority did not affect its right to proceed against those served, those not personally served in proper time and who did not voluntarily appear could still within 1 year after rendition of judgment assert their rights and the county's lien for unpaid taxes against the interests of such owners remained unaffected by the proceedings already had. Housing Authority of City of Butte v. Bjork, 109 M 552, 98 P2d 324 (1940).

Execution After Default — Defendant's Remedy: Under the showing of personal service on defendant, her default and default judgment entered, issuance of execution on judgment and return showing complete satisfaction of the judgment, the matter had passed beyond jurisdiction of the court and it was without jurisdiction to pass on motion to set judgment aside, leaving defendant to her suit in equity to set it aside. State ex rel. Redle v. District Court, 102 M 541, 59 P2d 58 (1936).

Fraud — Relief by Suit in Equity: Motion informal in character, to have a default judgment procured by fraud set aside, is not so adequate a remedy as a suit in equity where the matter can be thoroughly investigated, and therefore failure of plaintiff to make such a motion did not bar recourse to equity. Stocking v. The Charles Beard Co., 102 M 65, 55 P2d 949 (1936); Bullard v. Zimmerman, 82 M 434, 268 P 512 (1928).

Motion to Open Default as Motion for New Trial: A motion to set aside a default judgment in a Justice of the Peace Court is akin to, or in effect, a motion for a new trial. Therefore, where such a motion has been made, the judgment is not final until the motion has been disposed of, and the time for appeal to the District Court does not start to run until the date of ruling on the motion. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936), overruling State ex rel. Cobban v. District Court, 30 M 93, 75 P 862 (1904).

Probate Proceedings:

A decree of distribution of property of an estate may not be set aside on the ground of fraud or other irregularity under the provision for setting aside a default, the remedy of the aggrieved party being by suit in equity. State ex rel. O'Neil v. District Court, 96 M 393, 30 P2d 815 (1934).

The provisions authorizing the District Court to relieve a party from a default under conditions prescribed are applicable to probate proceedings, and the District Court may in a proceeding to determine heirship permit an heir who from any cause was not personally served with notice to answer to the merits of the proceeding at any time within 1 year from the rendition of the judgment. The technical objection that such notice is not a "summons" and the proceeding not "an action" cannot be sustained. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Premature Default Judgment — Right to Vacate: A default judgment entered prematurely is not void, but voidable, and therefore requires a motion to set it aside. Such a motion however is one of right, not one of grace on the part of the trial court, and hence it is immaterial whether movant makes a showing sufficient to appeal to the court's discretion. Paramount Publix Corp. v. Boucher, 93 M 340, 19 P2d 223 (1933).

Execution After Default — Knowledge by Third Parties: Where third parties take property under execution sale with full knowledge of all the facts with relation to rendition of the judgment which is sought to be set aside as having been taken against movant through his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect, and the facts warrant the relief, the remedy should also run against the third parties. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Fraud — Decree of Divorce: Where a decree of divorce was nominally in favor of plaintiff wife but was in fact in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff was induced to procure it through fraud perpetrated upon her by defendant to enable him to marry another woman, she could properly proceed in the original action by motion to have it vacated. Hall v. Hall, 70 M 460, 226 P 469 (1924).

Amendment of Complaint After Default: While as a general rule an amendment of the complaint made after default operates to open the default, provided it introduces a new cause of action or goes to the substance of the pleading, an amendment which goes no further than to substitute a new party plaintiff for the original one because of transfer of interest, is merely formal and has not that effect; it could be made only by leave of court and therefore defendant was not entitled to service of the complaint as thus amended. Price v. Skylstead, 69 M 453, 222 P 1059 (1924).

Notice to Plaintiff Required: In the absence of notice to the plaintiff, the court is without authority to set aside a default. State ex rel. Hart-Parr Co. v. District Court, 58 M 114, 190 P 982 (1920).

Default Based on Insufficient Complaint Subject to Collateral Attack: Since, when a judgment has been rendered by default upon a complaint which is insufficient by reason of its failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the complaint, with a memorandum of the default endorsed upon it, the summons and proof of service, and a copy of the judgment constitute the record under this section. The record itself discloses the infirmity of the judgment and the latter is exposed to collateral attack at any time when it is made the basis of a right. Crawford v. Pierse, 56 M 371, 185 P 315 (1919), distinguished in State ex rel. Delmoe v. District Court, 100 M 131, 46 P2d 39 (1935).

Default After Demurrer Overruled: Where a defendant's demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to an amended complaint has been overruled, and he has failed to file his answer within the time set by the court, and a judgment by default has been entered, the court may in its discretion and upon a proper showing set the judgment aside and permit the defendant to file an answer. State ex rel. Smotherman v. District Court, 50 M 119, 145 P 724 (1914).

Terms of Opening Default Unnecessary: An order vacating a default judgment will not be set aside merely because the court failed to impose terms. Nash v. Treat, 45 M 250, 122 P 745 (1912).

Referee's Acts Immaterial to Default: Wrongdoing on the part of a referee, which in nowise affects the integrity of the judgment entered in accordance with his report, is not ground for a new trial, but rather the statute applies to cases where a party has for one or more of the reasons mentioned been prevented from having a proper hearing in the first instance, and is in default. Ogle v. Potter, 24 M 501, 62 P 920 (1900).

POLICY AGAINST DEFAULT

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

Trial Favored — Default Set Aside: Defendant was personally served with the complaint in the action and forwarded a copy of the summons and complaint to his attorney on the same day. The attorney never received the complaint and did not appear on behalf of defendant. The District Court entered defendant's default. Within 3 days of learning of the default, the attorney moved to set aside the default, and the District Court denied the motion. The Supreme Court held that the policy of the law is to favor trial on the merits and that no great abuse of discretion need be shown to warrant a reversal of an order denying a motion to set aside a default. Hoyt v. Eklund, 249 M 307, 815 P2d 1140, 48 St. Rep. 681 (1991), followed in Waldher v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 282 M 59, 935 P2d 1101, 54 St. Rep. 241 (1997).

Default Judgment Vacated for Lack of Evidence of Bad Faith or Willfulness: On March 19, 1976, Scott, a truck driver employed by England, struck and killed plaintiffs' elderly father in Alzada, Montana. No criminal charges were filed. Scott returned to Utah where he left England's employ. In April 1977, plaintiffs filed a wrongful death action seeking damages against England and Scott. England was personally served in Salt Lake City, and the office manager accepted service for Scott. In June 1978, plaintiffs noticed a deposition of Scott to take place in Ekalaka. Scott could not be located. Two years later, plaintiffs moved for a default judgment against Scott for failure to appear at the deposition. The trial court entered the default judgment on September 15, 1980. Scott was finally located in March 1981 and filed a motion to set aside the default. The trial court refused and held a hearing on damages. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, saying there was no evidence showing willfulness or bad faith on the part of England or Scott. Ewalt v. Scott, 206 M 503, 675 P2d 77, 40 St. Rep. 1809 (1983).

Preference for Disposing of Cases on Merits: The record shows the plaintiff took a default after the defendant felt she had been assured she would be given time to negotiate a settlement, and the judgment entered exceeds by $150 the amount defendant owed plaintiff at the time the court entered judgment. The default judgment was therefore set aside because it is preferable to dispose of cases on their merits rather than maintain too strict a regard for technical rules of procedure. Little Horn St. Bank v. Real Bird, 183 M 208, 598 P2d 1109 (1979).

Doubt Resolved in Favor of Motion: Each case wherein it is sought to have a default judgment set aside must be determined on its own facts, and where the showing made leaves the court in doubt or is one upon which reasonable men might reach different conclusions, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the motion. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960); Brothers v. Brothers, 71 M 378, 230 P 60 (1924), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Slight Abuse in Exceptional Cases: Default judgments are not favored and it is the policy of the law to have every case tried on its merits. While slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment is sufficient to justify a reversal of the order, only in exceptional cases will the Supreme Court disturb the action of a trial court in reopening a default. Waggoner v. Glacier Colony of Hutterites, 127 M 140, 258 P2d 1162 (1953).

Slight Abuse as Sufficient: Since courts universally favor trial on the merits, slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment is sufficient to justify a reversal of the order. Patterson v. Patterson, 120 M 127, 179 P2d 536 (1947); Brothers v. Brothers, 71 M 378, 230 P 60 (1924), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

Manifest Abuse Required — Standard of Appellate Review: The setting aside of default judgments lies within the sound legal discretion of the trial court and reversal may be had only on a showing of manifest abuse, such judgments not being favored and it being the policy of the law to have cases tried on their merits. Courts in applying the statute granting discretion should exercise the same liberal spirit which prompted its enactment, and the Supreme Court requires a stronger showing of abuse to warrant a reversal of an order granting relief than is required in case the court refuses to do so. If an order setting aside a judgment may be justified on any ground, it will be sustained. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

DISCRETION OF COURT

Failure to Answer Complaint Not Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Matthews filed a complaint in a wrongful discharge action, and the summons and complaint with an acknowledgment of service were forwarded to defendant's attorney. The attorney returned the acknowledgment, but the attorney's assistant failed to calendar the answer's due date and misfiled the summons and complaint in a different file. An answer was not timely filed, so Matthews sought and was granted a hearing on a default judgment and damages, but defendant's counsel did not attend the hearing, and a default judgment and damages of $185,000 were entered for Matthews. Defendant moved to set aside the default, but the District Court did not rule on the motion within 60 days, so the motion was considered denied. On appeal, defendant argued that the motion to set aside the default should have been granted on grounds of excusable neglect. However, by the time of the default hearing, the lack of attention to Matthew's complaint was a serious disregard of the judicial process and could not be considered excusable neglect, nor did the situation demonstrate extraordinary circumstances justifying setting aside the default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Further, the actions of defense counsel did not constitute gross negligence or actual misconduct, and defendant was not completely innocent in the matter, so any neglect of counsel was properly charged to defendant. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment, and the default judgment was affirmed. Matthews v. Don K Chevrolet, 2005 MT 164, 327 M 456, 115 P3d 201 (2005), applying the standard for setting aside a default in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). See also Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984).

Slight Abuse of Discretion — Refusal to Set Aside Reversed: Appellate courts reverse refusals to set aside entries of default on a showing of slight abuse of discretion by the lower court. Prejudice, the lack of willfulness, and the presence of factual allegations supporting a defense constituted sufficient abuse of discretion to warrant reversal. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Lack of Notice — Default Judgment Voidable: Since the wife previously had appeared in this dissolution action, she was entitled to 3 days' written notice of the husband's motion for default judgment under Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P. The husband's failure to serve the requisite notice rendered the order of default judgment premature and voidable. The lack of notice does not automatically entitle a party to relief but is a consideration to be weighed by the court in exercising its discretion under this Rule. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985), followed in Dean v. Hoepfner, 245 M 366, 801 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 2162 (1990).

Standard of Review — Neglect of Attorney: The Supreme Court held that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to set aside a default judgment when the defendants were completely abandoned by their attorney (after he made a general appearance on behalf of the clients who had neither been served with process nor authorized him to so act), proceeded with diligence to rectify the court's action, and alleged a potential defense to the action. The Supreme Court determined that, under the facts of the case, it would be unconscionable to apply the general rule charging the client with the attorney's neglect. The Supreme Court clarified which standard of review applies in default cases: (1) when a trial court has granted a motion to vacate the default, a strict standard of review applies—the trial court's action will only be set aside upon a showing of manifest abuse; (2) when a trial court has denied a motion to set aside a default, a "no great abuse" standard applies—only "slight abuse" is sufficient to reverse an order refusing to set aside a default. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993), in In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994), and Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Default Judgment — Setting Aside — Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiffs owned land through which a road ran. The public used that road in a continuous and uninterrupted way for over 25 years without objection by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs then filed a petition for abandonment of the road with the county and led the county to believe that further judicial action would be forestalled until completion of administrative proceedings on the petition. Plaintiffs then obtained a default judgment against the county 3 weeks before the county filed an answer to the plaintiffs' complaint. The county moved to set aside the default and the motion was granted. In reviewing this, the Supreme Court applied the rule that a District Court's discretion to set aside entry of default should be exercised liberally to promote trials on the merits and that an order setting aside default will be reversed only in exceptional cases. In finding no abuse of discretion by the District Court, the court found that the county had supported its attempt to cure the default not just by filing an answer but also by filing an affidavit detailing the circumstances of the default, which was sufficient to support the District Court's finding that the delay was not totally inexcusable. Additionally, the county had made a showing in its answer that there was a defense available to the plaintiffs' action since the public possessed a prescriptive easement. The easement's existence was found by the court to be supported by the plaintiffs' complaint itself. Accordingly there was no abuse of discretion in permitting the case to proceed to trial. McClurg v. Flathead County Comm'rs, 188 M 20, 610 P2d 1153 (1980).

Defendant Represented by Counsel — Motion Properly Denied: Denial of defendant's motion to set aside entry of default judgment and granting of plaintiff's motion for entry of default judgments were not an abuse of discretion where defendant's claims that he had not been informed of proceedings against him were countered by fact that he had been represented by counsel at material times and that he was aware of necessity of filing answer within 30 days of denial of his motion to dismiss. Johnson v. Matelich, 163 M 329, 517 P2d 731 (1973).

Judgment Set Aside — Lack of Knowledge by Defendant: Court's discretion was properly exercised when default judgment was set aside because it was obtained without knowledge of president or directors of defendant corporation. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Abuse of Discretion — Sufficient to Set Aside: Under the circumstances of this case, default judgment was set aside and judge's slight abuse of discretion in denying motion to set aside merited reversal. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Slight Abuse in Exceptional Cases Required for Reversal: Default judgments are not favored. Although slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment is sufficient to justify a reversal, only in exceptional cases will the Supreme Court disturb the action of a trial court in reopening a default. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960).

Application in Exceptional Cases Only: While the Supreme Court will disturb the action of a trial court in opening default only in exceptional cases, no great abuse of discretion by the trial court in refusing to set aside a default need be shown to warrant a reversal. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Decree of Distribution: The District Court erred in refusing to take jurisdiction of a petition to set aside a decree of distribution, within 6 months after its rendition. State ex rel. O'Neil v. District Court, 96 M 393, 30 P2d 815 (1934).

No Great Abuse Required for Reversal: Judgments by default are not favored, it being the policy of the law to have every case tried upon its merits; trial courts in passing upon motions for opening default judgments should exercise the same liberal spirit which prompted the Legislature in enacting the provision authorizing opening of the default, and where a court refuses to grant such a motion no great abuse of discretion need be shown to warrant a reversal. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

Review on Case-by-Case Basis: An application to set aside a default is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and its action will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is manifest that its discretion has been abused, each case being decided upon its own facts. Pac. Acceptance Corp. v. McCue, 71 M 99, 228 P 761 (1924); Robinson v. Petersen, 63 M 247, 206 P 1092 (1922).

Degree of Abuse Required: A stronger showing of abuse of discretion must be made to warrant a reversal of an order granting a motion to set aside a default than of one refusing it. Eder v. Bereolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922).

Motion Directed to Court's Discretion: Applications to set aside default judgments are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its action thereon will not be interfered with unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown. Eder v. Bereolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922); Greene v. Rowan, 29 M 263, 74 P 456 (1903); Hegaas v. Hegaas, 28 M 266, 72 P 656 (1903).

Abuse of Discretion Required: An order refusing a motion to vacate a judgment on the ground of mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect will not be reversed on appeal, if no complaint is made that the lower court abused its discretion. Ferguson v. Parrott, 36 M 352, 92 P 965 (1907).

FORM OF APPLICATION TO OPEN DEFAULT

Counteraffidavits Not Permitted: In ruling on a motion to set aside a default, the affidavits of merits filed by the petitioner cannot be controverted by counteraffidavits. The court confines itself to an investigation of the affidavit of merits to see whether a prima facie defense is made out. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Presumption — Prima Facie Defense: Where defendant alleged that he was owner of the record title in his motion to set aside a default and in his affidavit of merits, he has set out a prima facie defense in view of 70-19-404 which provides that the person establishing legal title is presumed to be in possession. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Request to Open Default — Filing of Answer Required: A party defendant, on application to set aside his default, must in addition to excusing his delinquency support the motion by an affidavit of merits setting forth the facts constituting his defense, or tender with the motion and affidavit a copy of his proposed answer. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957); State ex rel. Stephens v. District Court, 43 M 571, 118 P 268 (1911); Vadnais v. E. Butte Extension Copper Min. Co., 42 M 543, 113 P 747 (1911); Donlan v. Thompson Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910); Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 321, 106 P 563 (1910); Schaeffer v. Gold Cord Min. Co., 36 M 410, 93 P 344 (1908); Bowen v. Webb, 34 M 61, 85 P 739 (1906); Donnelly v. Clark, 6 M 135, 9 P 887 (1886).

Meritorious Defense Not to Be Controverted: On the hearing of a motion to set aside a default judgment, defendant's showing that he has a meritorious defense may not be controverted by evidence. Eder v. Bereolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922).

Application Denied — Proposed Answer Insufficient: Assuming that an answer may supply the place of an affidavit of merits in aid of a motion to vacate a default judgment, such a pleading, which was in effect a general denial and did not set forth the facts upon which the defendant relied to defeat plaintiff's claim so as to enable the court to determine whether he had a prima facie defense upon the merits, was insufficient to warrant the granting of the motion. Vadnais v. E. Butte Extension Copper Min. Co., 42 M 543, 113 P 747 (1911); Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910); Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 321, 106 P 563 (1910).

Purpose of Answer: The defaulted party must show that he has a defense, otherwise the court cannot determine whether justice will be promoted or retarded by setting aside the default. Vadnais v. E. Butte Extension Copper Min. Co., 42 M 543, 113 P 747 (1911).

Form of Affidavit: An affidavit of merits, on motion to set aside a default judgment, may be made by the attorney of an absent party, and the verification may be made upon information and belief. State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909).

NEGLECT OF DEFENDANT

Failure of Defendants to Monitor Litigation — Relief From Default Judgment Properly Denied: Although default judgments are not favored, litigants nevertheless have a duty to monitor litigation. Here, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment when defendants: (1) knew that litigation was proceeding; (2) knew that a status conference had been scheduled but failed to attend in person or to hire an attorney to appear in their behalf; (3) failed to notify the court or the opposing party of their intention to miss the conference; (4) were aware that service upon the listed post-office box was considered effective service for all matters regarding the litigation; and (5) neglected to notify the court of a change of address. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

No Abuse of Discretion in Granting Marriage Dissolution Default Judgment Given Failure to Establish Good Cause to Set Aside Default: The wife Florence petitioned for a legal separation to which her husband William did not respond. The District Court subsequently entered a default judgment against William, who appealed. The Supreme Court noted that default judgments are not favored and that a finding of even a slight abuse of discretion warrants setting aside a default judgment if good cause is shown. The court then applied the criteria in In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401 (1993), to determine whether William established good cause, which include whether: (1) the defaulting party proceeded with diligence; (2) the defaulting party's neglect was excusable; (3) the defaulting party has a meritorious defense to the claim; and (4) the judgment, if permitted to stand, will injure the defaulting party. William met the first and third criteria, but his neglect was not excusable, nor could he show that default would result in injury. Having failed to meet the McDonald good cause criteria, the court declined to address possible relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and default judgment was affirmed. In re Marriage of Shannon, 2004 MT 25, 319 M 357, 84 P3d 645 (2004), distinguishing In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229 (2000).

Failure to Respond — Disrespect for Judicial Process: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by entering a default judgment when husband ignored a petition and summons and, even though he claimed to have hired an attorney upon receipt of the petition, failed to pay a retainer, could not remember the attorney's name, and made no attempt to enter his appearance individually. In re Marriage of Mikesell, 257 M 482, 850 P2d 294, 50 St. Rep. 372 (1993).

Failure to File Written Request for Hearing on Wage Claims — Waiver of Right to Contest Amount: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a default judgment on a claim for unpaid wages when defendant employers failed to file a written request for an administrative hearing to explain the claims, thereby waiving their right to later contest the claim amounts. State ex rel. Vetch v. Hulman, 225 M 327, 732 P2d 843, 44 St. Rep. 275 (1987).

Neglect of Attorney Attributable to Client: When defendant's attorney received notices and talked on the phone on behalf of his clients but failed to do anything in response to numerous requests by opposing counsel and continued to postpone preparation and filing of a pleading, the attorney's procrastination was a type of neglect which was properly attributable to a client and did not constitute abandonment, which would excuse neglect. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in District Court's conclusion that the attorney's conduct was not excusable neglect. Paxson v. Rice, 217 M 521, 706 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1355 (1985).

Default Preventable by Attorney — Client Not Absolutely Liable for Attorney's Neglect: It appears from a review of the record that attorney for appellants could have easily acted to prevent entry of default and default judgment. However, the court has moved away from the rule that a client is absolutely responsible for attorney's neglect. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984). Furthermore, the court will not overturn a District Court order setting aside a default unless the order amounts to a manifest abuse of discretion. There are, in the affidavit of appellants' counsel, grounds to overturn the default, and that order must stand. Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590, 41 St. Rep. 2521 (1984).

Standard of Review — Neglect of Attorney: The Supreme Court held that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to set aside a default judgment when the defendants were completely abandoned by their attorney (after he made a general appearance on behalf of the clients who had neither been served with process nor authorized him to so act), proceeded with diligence to rectify the court's action, and alleged a potential defense to the action. The Supreme Court determined that, under the facts of the case, it would be unconscionable to apply the general rule charging the client with the attorney's neglect. The Supreme Court clarified which standard of review applies in default cases: (1) when a trial court has granted a motion to vacate the default, a strict standard of review applies—the trial court's action will only be set aside upon a showing of manifest abuse; (2) when a trial court has denied a motion to set aside a default, a "no great abuse" standard applies—only "slight abuse" is sufficient to reverse an order refusing to set aside a default. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993), and Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Failure to Pay Fee for Filing Pleading: District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment against defendant, and the judgment would not be overturned on appeal from denial of motion to set aside the default judgment, where the court found that negligent failure to pay filing fee for answer until 2 ½ months after filing of the answer was not excusable, that the fee was not filed until after plaintiffs requested entry of default, that the answer did not present a prima facie meritorious defense, that the evidence overwhelmingly indicated there was no defense, and that defendant's reckless disregard for the rights and feelings of the plaintiffs and his attempt to prolong the litigation were adequate reasons to deny his motion to set aside the judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Excusable Neglect — Local Custom Requiring That Absent Attorney Be Notified of Hearing: Husband's attorney failed to appear at District Court hearing on wife's motion to amend decree of dissolution of marriage and to hold husband in contempt for failure to pay child support. Court ruled in wife's favor by default. Husband moved to set aside default, claiming this was excusable neglect because by local custom and professional courtesy, attorney should have been notified of hearing. The District Court found excusable neglect but ordered husband's lawyer to pay wife's attorney fees. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction because no final order had been entered by the District Court. Rex v. Rex, 199 M 328, 649 P2d 460, 39 St. Rep. 1432 (1982).

Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Improperly Denied: Plaintiff entered into a contract to sell real property and a beer license to Dayton, who assigned the contract to Borkoski. Plaintiff later brought an action against Dayton and Borkoski. Borkoski failed to appear and a default judgment was entered. Borkoski believed that he did not have to appear until Dayton was served. He also called the clerk of court, who said that no hearing date had been set. In addition, the defendant only had 6 days from the time served until the default judgment was entered. Borkoski sought to have the default set aside but his motion was denied. On appeal, the court found that these facts constitute excusable neglect and the District Court abused its discretion in not setting aside the default judgment. Kootenai Corp. v. Dayton, 184 M 19, 601 P2d 47 (1979).

Failure to Update Name of Registered Agent: Where a complaint was served on a person listed as the registered agent of the defendant corporation, but who was no longer the agent of the corporation, and the corporation diligently sought to defend the action upon receipt of actual notice, failure of the defendant corporation to replace the name of its registered agent was excusable neglect and entry of default judgment was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Clute v. A.B. Concrete, 179 M 475, 587 P2d 392 (1978).

Motion Properly Denied: The court properly denied a motion to set aside a default judgment against a defendant who allegedly received no notice of the action because he failed to meet the burden of proving, as the moving party, inadvertence or excusable neglect. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Papers Mislaid: Copies of summons and complaint were served on corporation's president and mislaid. A diligent search was made, but papers could not be found until too late. Defense counsel made assertion that no service had been had on his client, and opposing counsel remained silent when he should have spoken. The clerk's files showed no return, required to be made in 10 days, until day of entry of judgment, as serving officer mailed it to plaintiff's attorney where it remained for 18 days. Under these circumstances, District Court erred in denying motion to set aside judgment. Madson v. Petrie Tractor & Equip. Co., 106 M 382, 77 P2d 1038 (1938).

Neglect Alone Insufficient: The power granted to the District Court to set aside a default judgment is predicated upon the neglect of the movant, coupled with a showing of facts and circumstances which will reasonably excuse it. Hence, the presence of neglect alone is not sufficient to deny relief. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926).

Attorney's Neglect Imputed to Client: The neglect of an attorney to make timely appearance is the neglect of the client and the latter can be relieved from the consequences of the attorney's neglect only on a showing which would excuse the client under like circumstances. First St. Bank of Thompson Falls v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Failure to Retain Attorney: Where defendant, after writing a letter to an attorney relative to the action against him, failed to have a consultation with the attorney as he had promised to do and to ascertain whether he would appear for him, and on his application to vacate the resultant default judgment did not attempt to excuse his own or the attorney's neglect, refusal of the motion to vacate was not an abuse of discretion. First St. Bank of Thompson Falls v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Forgetfulness Insufficient: Mere forgetfulness is not a sufficient excuse for setting aside a default judgment. Lovell v. Willis, 46 M 581, 129 P 1052 (1913).

MISTAKE

Failure of Pro Se Litigant to Include Filing Fee Considered Excusable Neglect Warranting Reversal of Default Judgment: A Texas defendant, acting pro se, filed a timely answer and special appearance in response to plaintiff's complaint and summons, but failed to include the $65 filing fee, which was not mentioned in the summons. By the time that defendant learned that a filing fee was required to be submitted with the response, plaintiff had already applied for and received a default judgment without notice to defendant. Defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that defendant had acted with diligence and that the failure to appear was not due to inexcusable neglect or disrespect for the court, but that defendant mistakenly assumed that if the instructions in the summons were followed, the answer would be filed. Defendant satisfied the good cause criteria in this rule, and because defendant's default was not willful, the neglect was excusable under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court's refusal, by operation of law, to set aside the default judgment was at a minimum a slight abuse of discretion. Thus, because of the policy to resolve issues on the merits, the Supreme Court reversed the default judgment and remanded for further proceedings. Sun Mtn. Sports, Inc., v. Gore, 2004 MT 56, 320 M 196, 85 P3d 1286 (2004).

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

Representations by Plaintiff's Counsel: Trial court erred in refusing to set aside a default judgment entered after defendant's failure to answer, where evidence disclosed that defendant after being served with process went to see the plaintiff's lawyer, and not finding him in talked with an associate who promised to relay defendant's message to him to the effect that the plaintiff was suing the wrong colony, and defendant understood that no further action would be required. Waggoner v. Glacier Colony of Hutterites, 127 M 140, 258 P2d 1162 (1953).

Multiple Defendants — Mistake as to Meaning of Summons: Where, in an action against eight defendants, the one most vitally interested in the result was not served with summons and did not know that it had been brought until several days after default and the others relied upon him to make appearance and defend the action, and one of them was under the impression that the summons served upon him meant simply that he was to appear as a witness, etc., refusal to open the default was error. Delaney v. Cook, 59 M 92, 195 P 833 (1921).

Ignorance of Law No Excuse: Ignorance of the law governing time for presentation of a bill of exceptions for settlement is no excuse for a default. Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914).

NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT

Action to Quiet Title: In an action brought for the purpose of removing clouds on title to real property, service of process was made upon nonresident defendants by publication. Their default was entered and they moved to have the decree vacated, not filing any affidavit in support of the motion. The application was addressed to the court's discretion and the applicants were required to make a showing that they did not have actual notice of the pendency of the action, and since they did not do so, the motion was properly denied. Skinner v. Carlysle Oil Dev. Co., 80 M 464, 260 P 1038 (1927).

Conditions Required to Set Aside Default: The application of a defaulting nonresident defendant not personally served with summons, like that of one who has been personally served, but who through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect suffered default to be taken against him and to have the judgment set aside, is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the District Court, and the movant must show that he did not have actual notice of the pendency of the action in time to make a defense, that he proceeded promptly to have the default set aside, that he has prima facie a defense upon the merits, and that the judgment if permitted to stand will affect him injuriously. Smith v. Collis, 42 M 350, 112 P 1070 (1910).

Probate Proceedings: After the default of all persons claiming as heirs of a deceased person who did not appear on a certain date to establish their heirship had been entered, foreign claimants filed a verified petition to set it aside. The claimants alleged that they did not become aware of decedent's death until after the default had been entered and that their interests would be lost to them if it was permitted to stand, and they made a prima facie showing that they were heirs at law of the decedent. Where it appeared that they exercised the utmost diligence in getting their claims before the court, such heirs should be allowed to appear in the proceedings, and it was error to refuse to set aside the default. State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909).

Commission Notes

Subdivision (a) and (d) of the rule are identical with the Federal Rule. Subdivision (e) of the Federal Rule, prohibiting entry of default against the United States without establishment of the right to relief by evidence, has been omitted. Of course, any such state rule could only apply to the state; our present statutes do not treat the State of Montana differently from other litigants as regards the entry of default against it, and there seems to be no reason to change the law.

Identity With Federal Rule: As of May 1, 1990, that portion of the above commission note regarding the identical nature of the Federal Rule was still applicable.

Case Notes

Default for Failure to Reply: Where the allegations of the defendant's "further and separate defense" are such as to require a reply, and none is filed, defendant is entitled to have judgment entered without other proof than the pleadings. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Thomas, 48 M 222, 137 P 380 (1913), explained in Matteson v. Ackerson, 104 M 239, 66 P2d 797 (1937).

Rule 56. Summary judgment

Case Notes

Opportunity for Opposing Parties to Present Facts Relevant to Summary Judgment Motion Required: The District Court granted summary judgment in a probate case, awarding a putative common-law spouse a portion of the estate. However, in this case, summary judgment constituted reversible error because the estate was not given notice and a full and fair opportunity to present facts relative to the summary judgment motion and to address issues of material fact regarding the claims of the putative spouse. In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), following Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Trust Matters Subject to Summary Judgment: Two sons, Thomas and William, sought to divide their mother's trust but failed to present sufficient evidence that good cause existed for the division. The District Court granted summary judgment to two other sons who were respondents. Thomas and William appealed on grounds that 72-33-416 necessitates a trial whenever trustees and beneficiaries have a disagreement about a trust, because of the inherent discretion in trust decisions, making summary judgment inappropriate for nearly all trust matters. The Supreme Court disagreed. Not every situation involving family disagreements or moves by beneficiaries will necessarily constitute good cause for a trust decision. Here, Thomas and William were unable to demonstrate that the District Court's conclusion that good cause did not exist was incorrect. Because trust matters are subject to the same principles of summary judgment as other matters, absent a showing of good cause to divide the trust, summary judgment for respondents was proper. In re Stevens Revocable Trust, 2005 MT 106, 327 M 39, 112 P3d 972 (2005).

Failure to Establish Elements of Prima Facie Retaliation Case — Partial Summary Judgment Proper: The elements of a prima facie case under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 are: (1) the plaintiff engaged in a protected activity; (2) thereafter, the employer took an adverse employment action against the plaintiff; and (3) a causal link existed between the protected activity and the employer's action. In cases under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, elements of a prima facie retaliation case generally consist of proof that the charging party was qualified for employment, was engaged in a protected activity, and was subjected to adverse action, as well as proof of a causal connection or other circumstances raising a reasonable inference that the charging party was treated differently because of the protected activity. In the present case, the Supreme Court applied the three-prong burden-shifting test for summary judgment motions in disparate treatment cases set forth in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), to evaluate whether Rolison's complaint constituted a prima facie case. Rolison established the protected activity element of a prima facie case by filing a gender discrimination case that the employer was aware of. However, Rolison failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the adverse employment action of the retaliation claim, thus failing the Heiat test for a prima facie case, so partial summary judgment for the employer on the state and federal discrimination claims was proper. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Wrighten v. Metropolitan Hosp., Inc., 726 F2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1984), and Beaver v. Employer Unaware That Employee Would Be Injured During Routine Job Activity — No Showing of Employer Malice Under Sherner Standard: Olszewski was seriously injured while loading building trusses onto a flatbed truck. Olszewski recovered workers' compensation benefits but also brought an action alleging that the injury was covered under the 1999 intentional act exception in 39-71-413, which was in effect when the injury occurred. The District Court found no showing of malicious action on the part of the employer or foreman and granted summary judgment to the employer and foreman. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the malicious intent standard in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), and affirmed. Olszewski was unable to provide evidence that the employer knew that employees would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident, and absent a showing of that material fact, the statutory exception did not apply and summary judgment was proper. Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004).

Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Breach of Bailment Obligation: Pursuant to a breach of a bailment agreement related to the transfer of 10 horses and tack, plaintiff filed a claim for the value of the property, asserting that under 27-2-202(2), 5 years were allowed to bring the claim as a breach of contract. The District Court concluded that the voluntary bailment agreement was not a contract, but rather an obligation, which was governed by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-202(3), and because the claim was not brought within 3 years, summary judgment for defendants was appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Regardless of the fact that plaintiff characterized the claim as a breach of contract, there was no evidence of an expressed agreement for sale of the property, so defendants were obligated but not contractually required to account for the property. Plaintiff's election to sue on a contract theory did not operate to grant 2 additional years for plaintiff to assert her rights. The District Court's conclusion that plaintiff's action was not timely was correct. Demarest v. Broadhurst, 2004 MT 147, 321 M 470, 92 P3d 1168 (2004).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved.

Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

No Requirement That Court Take as True Conclusions or Allegations With No Factual Basis or Contrary to What Has Been Adjudicated — Estoppel — Dismissal Proper: In Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 68, 320 M 332, 87 P3d 443 (2004), the District Court held that a husband's parents and sister had no enforceable ownership interests in their own right to disputed marital property because any interest that they arguably had was dependent on the husband's equitable interest, which was litigated in the dissolution action in which the husband denied any interest in the property. Nevertheless, the parents and sister brought a separate action, claiming that the parents were trustors of a trust created for the husband's benefit and that the sister was a successor trustee or trust beneficiary. The District Court dismissed the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to state a claim. The parents and sister appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not consider matters outside the pleadings, which would have required that the dismissal motion be converted to a summary judgment motion, but properly considered only the complaint and incorporated documents. Moreover, the court was not under any duty to take as true legal conclusions or allegations that had no factual basis or that were contrary to what had already been adjudicated. Any purported interest in the property by the husband was barred by estoppel. The prior decision that adjudicated the husband's interest in the property extinguished any derivative claim that the parents and sister might have had, and the complaint and attached documents supported the District Court's granting of the motion to dismiss. Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 97, 321 M 13, 89 P3d 6 (2004), following Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

Summary Judgment for Third Party Affecting Final Judgment Reviewable on Appeal: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against the subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for the tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The subcontractor contended that the judgment was not appealable because it was not designated in the notice of appeal, as required by Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21). The Supreme Court noted that summary judgments are generally interlocutory and not appealable until final judgment is rendered, but also noted that under Rule 2, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), any intermediate order or decision properly objected to that involves the merits or that necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal may be taken, is subject to review. The summary judgment in this case preceded and affected the final judgment, and because the contractor's objection was preserved, the summary judgment was reviewable on appeal. Glacier Tennis Club at The Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co, Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

No Waiver of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action on Remand: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Defendant insurer argued that because the Christensens never requested attorney fees in their motion for summary judgment or in their first appeal, their right to attorney fees was waived. Rule 8(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires that a party give notice of facts that the party expects to prove, and the facts must disclose the presence of all elements necessary to make out a claim. In this case, the defendant insurer had notice of the Christensens' desire to seek attorney fees because that relief was specifically prayed for in the initial petition for declaratory judgment, and defendant successfully defended against that request in District Court. However, the Christensens did not prevail until the case was remanded, so waiting to file a motion for attorney fees until prevailing on appeal was proper. Thus, the Christensens did not waive their entitlement to attorney fees. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

Legal Malpractice Action Not Brought Within Statutory Time Limit — Summary Dismissal Proper — Damage Rule Inapplicable: Plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against defendant on December 17, 1999, 3 years and 8 days after the date that plaintiff's damages occurred. The District Court dismissed the claim as untimely under 27-2-206. On appeal, plaintiff contended that under the damage rule set out in Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), and Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994), the statute of limitations should have been tolled until notice of damages was actually received on December 23, 1996, which would have allowed filing until December 23, 1999. The Supreme Court disagreed. The damage rule is not the accepted standard in Montana. Under the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions in 27-2-206, the time for filing is not tolled by a plaintiff's failure to discover damages, but runs from the date that plaintiff discovered or should through reasonable diligence have discovered the act or omission causing the damages. The claim or cause of action accrued on December 9, 1996, and the complaint filed on December 17, 1999, was beyond the statute of limitations, so summary dismissal for defendant was proper. Spolar v. Datsopoulos, 2003 MT 54, 314 M 364, 66 P3d 284 (2003).

No Obligation to Extinguish Lien Until Debt Fully Satisfied — Summary Dismissal of Action for Slander of Title Proper: Following a business default, defendant sought to enforce a lease agreement and received a judgment in Justice's Court for $7,156.56, including interest. In an effort to satisfy the judgment, plaintiff's wife paid $7,121.14. Plaintiff later attempted to refinance the disputed property and found that defendant's lien had not been extinguished, so plaintiff requested a partial satisfaction of judgment to his wife and release of the lien on the judgment. When defendant refused to release the lien, plaintiff sued for slander of title. Slander of title is an action in which one maliciously publishes false matter that brings into question or disparages the title to property, thereby causing special damages to the owner. Defendant was under no obligation to extinguish the lien until the judgment was fully satisfied. Because the wife's payment was $35.42 short of completely satisfying the judgment, defendant could not be said to have maliciously published false matter regarding the lien, so slander of title was not proved, and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Pryor v. Babcock Bldg. Corp., 2002 MT 68, 309 M 222, 45 P3d 35 (2002). See also First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), and Felska v. Goulding, 238 M 224, 776 P2d 530 (1989).

Adequate Notice and Opportunity to Respond to Revised Motion for Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended that the District Court improperly converted a Rule (12)(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion to dismiss to a motion under this rule for summary judgment, arguing that they were denied the opportunity to respond to affidavits submitted by defendant with its reply brief and that the District Court erred when it did not assume the facts stated in plaintiffs' complaint to be true, thus improperly resolving contested issues of fact. The Supreme Court noted that under Gebhardt v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855 (1983), when a District Court intends to convert a motion in this manner, notice should be given to the parties that the court intends to consider matters outside the pleadings, in order to give the party opposing summary judgment or dismissal the opportunity to produce additional facts by affidavit or otherwise that would establish a genuine issue of material fact and thereby avoid summary judgment if possible. However, in this case, the District Court did not convert the motion at a point when plaintiffs had no opportunity to respond. Rather, for reasons not apparent from the record, plaintiffs did not respond to the revised motion, nor at the time that the motion was heard did plaintiffs complain or ask for an opportunity to respond, even though it was clear that the motion for summary judgment would be heard. Instead, plaintiffs went beyond the pleadings in filing an affidavit with their response brief, but offered no further proof, and argued that the factual allegations in the complaint must be taken as true for purposes of a Rule 12(b) motion to dismiss. Therefore, plaintiffs had adequate notice of and opportunity to respond to the motion for summary judgment, and the District Court did not improperly convert the motion. Enger v. Missoula, 2001 MT 142, 306 M 28, 29 P3d 514 (2001).

Failure to Prove Mistake or Fraud in City Determination of Boundary of Special Improvement District — Summary Judgment Proper: The city of Missoula included plaintiffs' property in a storm sewer drainage special improvement district, and plaintiffs filed a complaint, alleging that pursuant to 7-12-4162, they could not be included in the special improvement district absent some benefit to them from the proposed system. The District Court heard contradicting evidence on the question of benefit, but concluded that plaintiffs failed to produce evidence of mistake or fraud as required in Stevens v. Missoula, 205 M 274, 667 P2d 440 (1983), and summarily dismissed plaintiffs' complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under Stevens, a city's determination of benefit and creation of special improvement district boundaries is conclusive absent proof of mistake or fraud that precludes the exercise of sound judgment. Plaintiffs did not satisfy the threshold requirement in Stevens and thus could not prevail even if the facts articulated in the complaint were true. Enger v. Missoula, 2001 MT 142, 306 M 28, 29 P3d 514 (2001).

Interpleader Purporting to Release Potentially Liable Individuals Remanded for Clarification That Only Insurer Released Upon Payment of Policy Limits: The District Court granted an insurer's request in a prayer for interpleader for an order "enjoining and restraining each and all of the defendants from instituting or prosecuting further any proceeding on account of the incident or the insurance policy". Defendants claimed that the order infringed on their right to seek further relief from other potentially liable persons individually after the maximum policy limits were distributed. The Supreme Court noted that the measure of damages for negligence, notwithstanding available insurance proceeds, is the amount that will compensate the injured for all detriment proximately caused, but in this instance, it was not clear whether the insurer specifically requested additional relief for other parties or intended such a comprehensive exclusion of remedies. Pursuant to the principles of subject matter jurisdiction, the District Court should have released only the insurer from further claims, not the other potentially liable individuals involved. The case was remanded for a clarification of the order. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971), and Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004), in which summary judgment was held to be proper under the Sherner standard absent evidence that an employer knew that an employee would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident.

Opinion Regarding Standard of Care in Obtaining Informed Consent Not Novel Scientific Evidence: The plaintiff's expert opined that the defendant physician violated the standard of care regarding informed consent when the physician failed to inform a patient that a greater risk was posed by placement of a thoracic spinal epidural catheter while the patient was anesthetized. The District Court decided that the expert's opinion regarding the standard of care was inadmissible because it was not based on scientific evidence supported by reliable methodology or research and awarded summary judgment to defendant on the basis that without a qualified medical opinion, plaintiff could not prove medical malpractice. In excluding the expert's opinion, the court concluded that plaintiff had attempted to introduce novel scientific evidence of the type contemplated by Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), and Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998). Applying the twofold threshold obligation of a plaintiff in a medical malpractice action set out in Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976), the Supreme Court noted that the Daubert test is limited to novel scientific evidence. Here, plaintiff sought to establish through expert testimony the amount of information that an anesthesiologist should provide to a patient in order to obtain the patient's informed consent, which is not novel scientific evidence. Thus, the District Court erred in relying on Daubert when excluding the expert testimony and in awarding summary judgment based on the conclusion that without a qualified medical opinion, plaintiff could not establish the existence of a legal duty as part of the prima facie case. The case was reversed and remanded. Gilkey v. Schweitzer, 1999 MT 188, 295 M 345, 983 P2d 869, 56 St. Rep. 734 (1999).

Denial of Agister's Lien by Summary Judgment — Vagueness of Underlying Agreement: While acknowledging that pursuant to Heckman & Shell v. Wilson, 158 M 47, 487 P2d 1141 (1971), an agister's lien may be enforceable without further specification in the underlying agreement regarding the price for the services, at a minimum, the material elements of a contract must be present in general terms. In the present case, not only were the material terms missing, but the agreement upon which the lien was based was so vague as to create more questions about the parties' expectations than it did purported certainties about their alleged obligations to perform. Because the agreement on which the claim of an agister's lien against the estate was unenforceable, the District Court did not err in summarily denying the existence of the lien. In re Estate of Bolinger, 1998 MT 303, 292 M 97, 971 P2d 761, 55 St. Rep. 1251 (1998).

District Court's Decision on Motion Reviewed De Novo by Supreme Court — Correct Decision Upheld Even if Reached on Incorrect Grounds: The lower court granted a sewer district's motion for summary judgment, ruling that the district had the right to impose hookup inspection fees on the appellant, Seypar, Inc. The Supreme Court stated that it reviewed the District Court's ruling on a de novo basis, applying the same evaluation as the lower court did. The Supreme Court also stated that in the present case, the facts were stipulated to and that therefore no genuine issues of fact existed. The only issue was to determine whether the District Court correctly concluded that the sewer district was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court held that it would uphold the decision of a District Court, if correct, even if the decision was reached on incorrect grounds. Seypar, Inc. v. Water & Sewer District No. 363, 1998 MT 149, 289 M 263, 960 P2d 311, 55 St. Rep. 578 (1998).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Motion for Summary Judgment Held Sufficient to Prevent Default: Klock brought a civil action against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights. After the defendants' motion to dismiss was denied, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. Klock moved for entry of a default judgment, claiming that the defendants had failed to "answer" the complaint. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to grant Klock's motion, holding that a default judgment may be entered under Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., only if a party has failed to plead or "otherwise defend" against the complaint. The Supreme Court held that the defendants' motion for summary judgment satisfied the requirement that the defendants "otherwise defend" against the complaint. Klock v. Cascade, 943 M 1262, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997).

Reversal of Summary Judgment and Grant to Other Party: Both parties moved the District Court for summary judgment, the material facts in the case being undisputed. The motion was granted to one party. After examining the facts bearing on the resolution of the legal issues, the Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment and granted summary judgment to the other party, exercising the power to substitute summary judgment as set out in Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), and In re Estate of Langendorf, 262 M 123, 863 P2d 434 (1993). Swank v. Chrysler Ins. Corp., 282 M 376, 938 P2d 631, 54 St. Rep. 390 (1997).

Burden-Shifting Analysis in Employment Discrimination Cases — Pretext for Discrimination: Under the rationale in Tex. Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089 (1981) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973)), according to the U.S. Supreme Court's burden-shifting analysis employed in discrimination cases, once a plaintiff has proved a prima facie case of employment discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reason offered by the defendant was not the true reason, but rather was a pretext for discrimination, and under St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 US 502, 125 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 2742 (1993), the reason cannot be proved to be a pretext for discrimination unless it is shown both that the reason was false and that discrimination was the real reason. At this point, the burden merges with the ultimate burden of persuading the court that the plaintiff has been a victim of intentional discrimination. The plaintiff succeeds either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence. The Montana Supreme Court held in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), that in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has the initial burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. This places the plaintiff, as nonmoving party in the summary judgment context, in the peculiar position of having to prove the case to survive the defendant's summary motion. The Kenyon requirements are thus overruled and the Burdine analysis adopted for employment discrimination cases. The plaintiff is required to raise an inference of pretext as opposed to proving pretext, so the burden is more aligned with the general requirement of raising a genuine issue of material fact to survive the motion for summary judgment. Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996), overruling Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992). Heiat was followed in Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996), Clark v. Eagle Sys., Inc., 279 M 279, 927 P2d 995, 53 St. Rep. 1150 (1996), and Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Court Required to Consider Allegations in Pleadings — Repetition in Opposition to Summary Judgment Motion Not Necessary to Preserve Claim on Appeal: Calder filed a complaint against the Andersons after falling on steps leading from an apartment rented from the Andersons. In the pleadings, Calder stated that the Andersons negligently failed to maintain the sidewalk in a safe condition in violation of 70-24-303. Summary judgment was granted for the Andersons when the court found that the injuries were not caused by a hidden or lurking danger subjecting the Andersons to liability. On appeal, the Andersons contended that Calder waived consideration of the statutory liability by failing to cite the statute in the opposition to the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that the law applicable to a case could not be waived. Once Calder alleged in District Court that the relevant statute had been violated and cited that statute to the court, it was not necessary to reargue that claim repeatedly in order to preserve the claim for appeal and to avoid waiver. The District Court erred in granting summary judgment. Calder v. Anderson, 275 M 273, 911 P2d 1157, 53 St. Rep. 139 (1996).

Lack of Property Ownership Within Proposed Annexation — No Standing to Challenge Annexation Resolution — Summary Judgment Proper Despite Lack of Notice to Parties of Intent to Convert Motion to Dismiss Into Motion for Summary Judgment: It is error for a court to fail to give formal notice of the intent to convert a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment, giving the party opposing the motion an opportunity to produce additional facts by affidavit or otherwise that would create a genuine issue of material fact to preclude summary judgment. However, in this case, plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge an annexation resolution because they did not own property within the proposed annexation. Without standing to state a claim, plaintiffs could prove no set of facts in support of their action that would entitle them to relief. Therefore, failure by the court to give the parties notice of conversion of the motion to dismiss was harmless error. Knudsen v. Ereaux, 275 M 146, 911 P2d 835, 53 St. Rep. 83 (1996), following O'Donnell Fire Serv. & Equip. v. Billings, 219 M 317, 711 P2d 822 (1985).

Determination of Constitutional Violation Necessary Element of 42 U.S.C. 1983 Claim — Summary Judgment Precluded: Talley filed a cross-complaint for summary judgment on the question of a violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 and associated attorney fees in connection with a discharge from his employment as a part-time community college instructor. Recognizing that a free speech violation might possibly have occurred, the District Court nevertheless properly dismissed the summary judgment motion because the free speech complaint had not been resolved and a violation of constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities is attendant to a 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim. Consideration of attorney fees prior to settlement of the free speech claim was also premature. Talley v. Flathead Valley Community College, 259 M 479, 857 P2d 701, 50 St. Rep. 889 (1993), affirmed in 273 M 336, 903 P2d 789, 52 St. Rep. 1016 (1995).

Denial of Motion to Change Venue — Explanation Within Court Discretion: Under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., when a court grants a motion under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P., or under this rule, the court shall support its order with an explanation of its reason, but there is no comparable requirement for orders denying motions to change venue. A District Court is at liberty to deny a venue motion with or without comment. Therefore, it was not error for a court to provide an explanation for why defendant's motion for change of venue was denied, nor was it error for the court to direct plaintiff to prepare an appropriate memorandum and order for the court to sign. I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993).

Summary Judgment Pertaining to Oil and Gas Lease Based Upon Interpretation of 30 U.S.C. 187a Upheld: The lower court awarded by summary judgment the royalties from an oil and gas lease to the plaintiff Norbeck on the basis that an assignment of the royalties to the defendants had not been approved by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior as required by 30 U.S.C. 187a. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had properly interpreted the federal statute. Norbeck v. Crawford, 254 M 256, 836 P2d 1231, 49 St. Rep. 771 (1992).

Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 Not Barred by Res Judicata — Prior Summary Judgment No Bar to Consideration of Motion to Dismiss — Differing Parties: Plaintiff brought an action against the city of Great Falls to recover damages for violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 in connection with a discharge from employment. The District Court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an action against her immediate supervisor, in the supervisor's official and individual capacity, making the same allegations. The supervisor moved the District Court to dismiss on the basis that the section 1983 claim was res judicata by reason of the summary judgment in the former action, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court's consideration of the first action was limited to consideration of the pleadings. The Supreme Court also stated that because the immediate supervisor was not a party to the first action, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was able to present all the facts and theories in the first case that are present in the second. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the second action was not barred. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Foreign Judgment — Summary Judgment Proper: A New Mexico bank successfully sued New Mexico defendants in New Mexico on defaulted loans secured by mortgages on Montana property. The bank then sought foreclosure in Montana. The law of the state where a judgment is rendered controls the interpretation of the effect of the foreign judgment in any subsequent actions between the parties or those with whom there is privity. Under a collateral estoppel analysis, the bank was entitled to summary judgment in Montana. The bank is entitled to attorney fees and costs, including attorney fees on appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48, 46 St. Rep. 1313 (1989).

No Notice of Intent to Treat Dismissal Motion as Summary Judgment — Eventual Result Same: Although the District Court erred in not giving the required notice that it intended to treat the motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment, the matter was not reversed or remanded because the eventual result in the court would have been the same. First Fed. S&L Ass'n of Missoula v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281, 46 St. Rep. 1280 (1989).

Power to Grant Summary Judgment on Issue After Motion to Dismiss Issue Was Denied: The District Court's denial of a motion to dismiss on the res judicata issue did not bind the court as the law of the case or prevent it from granting a summary judgment based on res judicata. The denial was interlocutory, and an interlocutory order can be changed without violating the law of the case doctrine. Burgess v. St., 237 M 364, 772 P2d 1272, 46 St. Rep. 870 (1989).

Failure to File Brief Not Admission That Summary Judgment Motion Well Taken: Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), provides that failure to file a brief by the moving party is considered an admission that the motion is without merit and that failure to file a reply brief an admission that the motion is well taken. The Supreme Court held that the essential question for a District Court deciding a summary judgment motion is whether a genuine issue of material fact exists that cannot be decided on a merely technical fact, such as the filing of briefs on time. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989). See also Konitz v. Claver, 1998 MT 27, 287 M 301, 954 P2d 1138, 55 St. Rep. 95 (1998).

Law of the Case Doctrine Not Applicable When Separate Issue Involved: Plaintiff argued that the District Court made findings involving disputed issues of fact, thereby precluding plaintiff from presenting certain proof at the time of trial. The court's summary dismissal of the issue of applicability of a statute of limitations did not preclude plaintiff from attempting to prove facts underlying a malpractice claim because it was an issue separate from the merits of the case. The law of the case doctrine does not apply when a separate issue is involved. Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988).

Motion to Dismiss Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment: A motion to dismiss that raised the failure to state a claim as a defense and presented facts outside the pleading was properly treated as a motion for summary judgment. Am. Medical Oxygen Co. v. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center, 232 M 165, 755 P2d 37, 45 St. Rep. 962 (1988).

Motions to Dismiss Properly Converted to Motions for Summary Judgment: Defendants brought motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., and in response, plaintiff attached 11 documents to his brief opposing the motions, arguing the contents of the documents throughout the brief. The District Court considered the documents, excluded nothing presented to it, converted the motions to dismiss to motions for summary judgment, and dismissed the action as barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff did not appear at the oral hearing, but later claimed he had no opportunity to present material pertinent to a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found that by introducing the documents and inviting consideration of them, plaintiff was fairly apprised that the trial court would look beyond the pleadings and could treat the motions to dismiss as motions for summary judgment. Bretz v. Ayers, 232 M 132, 756 P2d 1115, 45 St. Rep. 936 (1988), citing Grove v. Mead School District, 753 F2d 1528 (9th Cir. 1985). Bretz was followed in Koke v. Little Shell Tribe of Chippewa Indians of Mont., Inc., 2003 MT 121, 315 M 510, 68 P3d 814 (2003).

Transcribed Negotiation Session Not Sworn Testimony — Consideration Not Required: Appellant argued that a negotiation session between the parties, transcribed by a court reporter, should have been considered by the trial court. The Supreme Court held that because it was not sworn testimony, the lower court need not consider it in proceedings for summary judgment. Wright v. St., 231 M 324, 752 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 652 (1988).

Existence of Duty of Good Faith as Question of Law: The breach of a duty of good faith is a question of fact not susceptible to summary judgment. However, the existence of such a duty is a question of law properly determined during summary judgment proceedings. Simmons v. Jenkins, 230 M 429, 750 P2d 1067, 45 St. Rep. 328 (1988).

Disposal of Personal Injury Case by Summary Judgment — Negligence as a Matter of Law: Summary judgment is rarely proper in personal injury cases because of the peculiarly exclusive nature of the concept of negligence. Negligence is normally a question of fact; however, in certain cases where reasonable minds cannot differ, the cause of an accident may be a question of law for the court to determine. In determining comparative negligence between a driver who passed while visibility in the left lane was obstructed and the state's obligation to provide and maintain safe highways, the only conclusion to be reached was that the driver's negligence exceeded that of the state. Summary judgment was proper in determining negligence as a matter of law. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), citing Hartley v. Washington, 698 P2d 77 (Wash. 1985), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988), Christopherson v. White, Inc., 250 M 118, 817 P2d 1165, 48 St. Rep. 891 (1991), and Pappas v. Midwest Motor Express, Inc., 268 M 347, 886 P2d 918, 51 St. Rep. 1288 (1994), and distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence. Dillard was followed in Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996), and Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Failure of Broker to Disclose When Commission Due: A party who contracted with a real estate broker for an exclusive listing was unaware that a transfer of title in lieu of foreclosure would constitute a conveyance entitling broker to a commission, and the broker never informed the party of that fact. Summary judgment was improper where there may have been a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the broker breached a fiduciary duty to disclose. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

Promissory Estoppel Requiring Reversal of Summary Judgment — No Will Produced: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment, finding that genuine issues of material fact existed regarding testimony that an original will had been altered, yet no changed will was ever produced, and that all parties agreed to abide by deceased's wishes, but there was some disagreement as to what those wishes were. Further, appellant's reliance on the promise to abide resulted in potential injury and invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel, precluding summary judgment. Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986).

No Breach of Implied Covenant Established — Summary Judgment Not Upheld: On an appeal from summary judgment dismissing a wrongful discharge complaint against a religious school where the teacher was dismissed without notice or hearing, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment could not be upheld on the basis that no breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was established in the record. Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794, 43 St. Rep. 2059 (1986). Annotator's note: Summary judgment was upheld in this case on grounds that allowing the lawsuit to go forward would impermissibly interfere with the free exercise of religion.

Ambiguous Insurance Policy Provision — Summary Judgment Reversed: An insurance policy that did not clearly state whether it provided uninsured motor vehicle coverage when the driver was insured but the ownership of the vehicle was not was held to be ambiguous; therefore, under the rationale that an ambiguous provision is construed against the insurance company, the policy was interpreted to provide coverage. The District Court grant of summary judgment holding that the policy did not provide uninsured motor vehicle coverage was reversed. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 223 M 215, 725 P2d 821, 43 St. Rep. 1667 (1986).

Unresolved Issues Regarding Royalty Interests — Summary Judgment Precluded: Prior to 1955, McDonald & Eide, Inc. (M&E) owned the entire working interest in a lease on a producing oil well. On July 12, 1955, M&E assigned 100% of its interest in the south half and 50% of its interest in the north half to H. W. McDonald, but this assignment was not recorded until 1963. After M&E's corporate charter was repealed for failure to pay taxes, corporate officers of M&E purported to assign M&E's total working interest to V. Eide and J. Von DeLinde in 1961, but this assignment conflicted with the one previously made to McDonald, who filed a quiet title action. Thereafter, all three entered an agreement with Continental Oil Company (Continental) assigning to the company an undivided one-half interest in the lease. While the quiet title action was pending, McDonald assigned undivided interests to G. Huntley, D. Iverson, and A. Larson with the intent to convey to each the respective share "held in suspense by Continental". In 1964, final judgment quieted title in McDonald subject to the agreement with Continental. In 1965, M&E stockholders appointed F. Gunnip as receiver, and he sued M&E corporate officers to recover the lease and other property. A 1970 judgment voided the 1961 agreement, and in 1976, final judgment provided that Gunnip owned one-half interest in the north half of the lease while Eide, Von DeLinde, and Continental were held to have no interest. Shell Oil Company, responsible for disbursing the lease proceeds, continued to pay Continental one-half of the proceeds under the agreement with McDonald, and although Gunnip was owner of a 50% interest, he received only a 25% share of proceeds. In 1981, Gunnip assigned a 3.75% interest in the north half to Huntley and a 2.5% interest in the north half to R. Schwinn. Huntley became aware that Gunnip was not receiving his full share, so Gunnip, Huntley, and Schwinn sued Continental, requesting an additional one-eighth of the proceeds. The District Court granted summary judgment to Continental in 1985, but the Supreme Court reversed on appeal, holding that: (1) unresolved issues of material fact remained regarding Continental's interest; (2) a trial must be had to assess Continental's interest considering potential application of adverse possession, waiver, and estoppel; and (3) Continental's asserted 50% interest in the north half of the lease must be tested against the interest of McDonald's assignees and successors in interest. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Gunnip v. Cont. Oil Co., 223 M 141, 727 P2d 1315, 43 St. Rep. 1605 (1986). On remand, the District Court neglected to assess Continental's interest as directed. On later appeal, the Supreme Court granted supervisory control and determined that: (1) plaintiffs failed to present substantial evidence to support a theory of adverse possession, waiver, or estoppel against Continental; (2) Continental owned an undivided one-half interest in the working interest in the north half of the lease; and (3) Gunnip and his assigns owned the remaining half of the working interest in the north half. Cont. Oil Co. v. Elks Nat'l Foundation, 235 M 438, 767 P2d 1324, 46 St. Rep. 121 (1989).

No Property Damages in Changing Golf Handicap or in Letter of Reprimand — Summary Judgment Proper: Summary judgment was proper absent any showing of property damages resulting from lowering of a golfer's handicap or from the sending of a letter of reprimand by the board of directors of a private golf corporation. District Court held, and the Supreme Court affirmed, that: (1) a golfer had no right to a specific handicap but rather must earn one in accordance with standards and procedures of the U.S. Golf Association; and (2) in the absence of a clear allegation and convincing proof of fraud or bad faith, the actions of a duly delegated board of a private social club shall not be reviewed by the courts. Johnson v. Green Meadow Country Club, Inc., 222 M 405, 721 P2d 1287, 43 St. Rep. 1368 (1986).

Failure to Respond to Requests for Admissions — Summary Judgment Proper: Defendant sought to have the Supreme Court relieve it of the effect of Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P., that considers matters in requests for admission that are not responded to as admitted and conclusively established. Defendant argued that, since it had already denied the matter in question in its answer to the complaint, it should not be required to deny the matter again. The court affirmed the order granting summary judgment, finding ample opportunity for defendant to respond to the request for admissions. Holmes & Turner v. Steer-In, 222 M 282, 721 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 1266 (1986).

Issue of Whether Motion Properly Served — Not Appealable: The issue of whether there was a contested issue of fact regarding whether a motion for summary judgment was properly served is a question for the District Court and cannot be raised on appeal. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986), citing In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Summary Judgment — Unlawful Detainer: Appellant who refused to respond to requests for admissions thereby admitted he had no permission or legal right to reside on the property. Respondent followed proper statutory procedure in attempting to have appellant quit the property; therefore, District Court properly granted summary judgment to respondent concerning appellant's unlawful detainer. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986).

Questions of Anticipated Harm and Duty of Ordinary Care as Material Issues of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In reversing a summary judgment as improper, the Supreme Court found that material questions of fact for a jury existed on the issues of whether: (1) the town of Whitehall should have anticipated that harm would be caused by the condition of the sidewalk despite the knowledge and obviousness of the condition; and (2) the town of Whitehall exercised ordinary care to keep the sidewalk reasonably safe. Even if it appeared that recovery under these issues was very remote, they constituted genuine issues of material fact; therefore, summary judgment was not appropriate. Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986).

Reversal of Summary Judgment — Exception to Exclusiveness of Workers' Compensation Remedy: A summary judgment was granted by the District Court for the stated reason that because of the employee's application for and receipt of workers' compensation benefits, remedies were exclusive to the Workers' Compensation Act. Application and receipt of benefits resulted in an election pursuant to 39-71-411, thereby barring a common-law tort action against the employer. In reversing the summary judgment, the Supreme Court held that a narrow exception to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy existed when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee. Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986).

Hearing on Motion for Summary Judgment — Purpose: The purpose of a hearing on a motion for summary judgment is not to resolve factual issues but to determine whether there is any genuine issue of material fact in dispute. The opposing party's facts must be material and substantial. Implications based on the opposing party's opinions are not enough. The presentation of factual issues in conclusory fashion in briefs is not an appropriate means of opposing a motion for summary judgment. Westlake v. Osborne, 220 M 91, 713 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 200 (1986).

Open Range — Question of Law: The plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries she suffered when she swerved to avoid defendant's horse that was standing on a secondary highway. The District Court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Neither the presence of privately constructed fences nor the lack of designation in zoning regulations indicates an area is not open range. Open range designation is a legal determination, not a question of fact for the jury. The defendant was not obligated to keep his livestock off the secondary highway, and the order of the District Court granting summary judgment was not error. Siegfried v. Atchison, 219 M 14, 709 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1807 (1985).

Summary Judgment — Federal Boiler Inspection Act: Summary judgment on the issue of whether the presence of an obstructing object on the floor of a locomotive compartment violated the federal Boiler Inspection Act (45 U.S.C. 22, et seq.) was proper when a federal regulation (49 C.F.R. 229.119(c)) prohibited obstructions on the floors of railway cars and appellant presented nothing to counter the evidence of a Boiler Inspection Act violation. Anderson v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 456, 709 P2d 641, 42 St. Rep. 1738 (1985).

Summary Judgment Without Evidence or Jury — Broad Review: When a case is disposed of below on motion for summary judgment before a judge sitting without a jury and no testimony is taken as the facts are relatively uncontested, the scope of review is much broader than in other appeals. The Supreme Court is free to make its own examination of the entire case and reach a conclusion in accordance with its findings. Furthermore, the court will uphold the result below if it is correct, regardless of the reasons given below for the result. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984), followed in McCain v. Batson, 233 M 288, 760 P2d 725, 45 St. Rep. 1495 (1988), and in In re Estate of Pelzman, 261 M 461, 863 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1408 (1993).

Negligence Issue — Not Normally Susceptible to Summary Judgment: Plaintiff was injured when a car struck her as she was crossing a street at an intersection. Plaintiff sued the driver of the car and a beer distributing company whose truck was at least partially blocking one of four lanes of traffic and the intersection. The District Court granted summary judgment to the distributor. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's decision, holding that issues of negligence are not ordinarily susceptible to summary judgment. There was a material issue of fact as to whether the truck was illegally parked, and if so, whether the truck's position was a proximate cause of the accident. Hendrickson v. Neiman, 204 M 367, 665 P2d 219, 40 St. Rep. 909 (1983).

Improper to Enforce Foreign Judgment by Summary Judgment Against Defendants: A default judgment was obtained in Colorado against defendants, Montana residents, in a case which arose from defendants' participation in a reciprocal interinsurance agreement. Some of the subscribers to the agreement were Colorado residents. Plaintiffs sued on the judgment in Montana, and the District Court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to enforce the judgment in Montana, ruling that enforcement of the judgment would be a violation of the federal due process clause because the defendants had not had sufficient "minimum contacts" with the state of Colorado to warrant the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendants. The court stated that the provision of the Colorado long-arm statute that covered causes of action arising from "contracting to insure any person, property or risk residing or located within this state at the time of contracting" was not applicable because this was not the sort of "company" that was contemplated when the long-arm statutes were drafted. The court further stated that the defendants did not know the name of the insurance company which issued the policy and had not purposely availed themselves of the privilege of conducting activities within the state of Colorado. Benham v. Woltermann, 201 M 149, 653 P2d 135, 39 St. Rep. 2017 (1982).

Summary Judgment Proper When Statutory Language Excludes Claimant's Recovery: Logging company contracted with U.S. Forest Service to log an area. Logging company's subcontractor arranged for third company to provide equipment and operators to do actual logging. In the course of the logging, a chainsaw backfired and caused a fire. The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) extinguished the fire at a substantial cost and sued the contractors for the cost of the work, alleging both a violation of 50-63-103 under an absolute liability theory and common-law negligence. The District Court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the statutory claim, ruling that the statute applied only to the intentional setting of a fire. The jury found no negligence. DNRC appealed the summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. Mont. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation v. Clark Fork Logging Co., Inc., 198 M 494, 646 P2d 1207, 39 St. Rep. 1146 (1982).

Denial of Defendant's Motion Reviewable Upon Judgment for Claimant: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnification against the previous owner, the trial court's order denying the county's motion for summary judgment was reviewable on appeal by the county because a final judgment was entered for the purchasers. Nonappealable interlocutory orders are reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Notice of Covenants — Forfeiture — Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs purchased real property on a contract for deed from defendants subject to restrictive covenants filed after the contract was drawn but before it was signed. Some months later the sellers sent the buyers notice of default, citing the covenants. The issues on appeal related to summary judgment. Under Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., the moving party must show he is entitled to summary judgment. The sellers were found to have met the burden inasmuch as the validity and genuineness of all the documents in question were admitted by both parties, along with the signatures and dates of the documents. The reference in the contract put all parties on constructive notice of the covenants. The buyers failed to carry their ensuing burden to show issues of material fact and, accordingly, granting of sellers' motion for partial summary judgment was upheld. The lower court's ruling denying the buyers' motion for summary judgment was reversed. The sellers' counterclaim on this motion had raised the issue of violation of the covenants by the buyers, but the buyers argued that summary judgment should have been granted because the remedy sought by the sellers (forfeiture) was improper. The Supreme Court held that when a violation of the covenants would not defeat the main objective or purpose of the contract, a remedy of forfeiture was not warranted. The case was remanded. Van Uden v. Hendrickson, 189 M 164, 615 P2d 220 (1980).

Interlocutory Summary Judgment — No Appeal Allowed: Where an order of summary judgment is interlocutory, the case is not ripe for appellate review and any appeal thereon must be dismissed without prejudice. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Improper Where Rights of All Parties Have Not Been Adjudicated: An order granting summary judgment is not final where the rights and liabilities of all parties have not been adjudicated. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Order for Summary Judgment — Findings and Conclusions Not Required: Where the court resolved a dispute between the parties involving the respondent's right to a division of property by granting respondent's motion for summary judgment on his complaint to quiet title and for an accounting of income, but granted the motion without making findings of fact or conclusions of law, no findings or conclusions were necessary, as provided in Rule 52(2), M.R.Civ.P. This was not a case in which a dismissal was granted for failure of the plaintiff to prosecute or for violation of the court's rules under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979).

Prior Knowledge of Condition — Summary Judgment for Adverse Party: Plaintiff rented a residence from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The BIA replaced the front steps of the residence with steps that were not as long horizontally. Plaintiff caught her foot in the depression remaining from the old steps and fractured her ankle. Her knowledge of the condition prior to the injury precludes her recovery, and summary judgment must be rendered in favor of the defendant. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The above commission note was written prior to the amendment of the rule in 1975. The amendment of December 31, 1975, inserted "with or without supporting affidavits" near the end of the rule and made this rule identical to the Federal Rule. As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

No Violation of Pretrial Order Precluding Evidence of Negligence by Plaintiff's Employer — New Trial Properly Denied: Plaintiff was employed by a vocational day-care program that took developmentally disabled persons on day outings. Plaintiff was assaulted by a developmentally disabled person from a group home managed by defendant corporation and sued the corporation for negligence for failing to control the assailant. Before trial, the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion to exclude any evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer and ruled that defendant had a special relationship of custody and control over the disabled person and thus had a legal duty of care to those placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by any breach of that duty. Nevertheless, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that when defense counsel repeatedly referred to the individual planning process for the assailant, in which plaintiff's employer was a partner, blame for the injury was thereby shifted to plaintiff's employer in violation of the pretrial order and prevented plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. The Supreme Court disagreed, pointing out that plaintiffs opened the door by presenting evidence regarding the individual planning process in questioning plaintiffs' first witness and that both parties subsequently presented evidence about the process. Further, evidence regarding the individual planning process was relevant to a limit on defendant's ability to monitor the assailant and did not equate to evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer, nor did defense counsel ever attempt to establish that any breach of legal duty by the employer led to plaintiff's injury. Thus, the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, and the verdict was affirmed. Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004), distinguishing Cech v. St., 183 M 75, 598 P2d 584 (1979), Durden v. Liability of Tortfeasors Acting in Concert: Two defendants who were passengers in a car that was involved in a chase of and subsequent accident with another vehicle claimed that because they were not in control of the vehicle and did not make any encouraging statements to the driver, they could not be held liable for a tort or for injuries resulting from the accident. However, undisputed facts showed that they voluntarily joined in the pursuit for the purpose of eventually assaulting the occupants of the other vehicle and that they helped to free their own vehicle when it became stuck on a fence, thereby substantially assisting in the chase and encouraging the driver's actions. These facts showed that they acted in concert as tortfeasors, as defined in part in Restatement (Second) of Torts 876 (1979), and were subject to liability; therefore, a partial summary judgment for plaintiff on the issue of liability was proper. Sloan v. Fauque, 239 M 383, 784 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1767 (1989).

Strict Liability for Railroad Safety Under Federal Act — Contributory Negligence No Factor — Summary Judgment Proper: A motion for summary judgment was properly granted to claimant when the railroad admitted violation of portions of the federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. 1, et seq., since under the Act violation by a carrier of a specific safety requirement is held to constitute negligence as a matter of law regardless of a showing of negligence on an employee's part. Plouffe v. Burlington N., Inc., 224 M 467, 730 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 2341 (1986).

Burden of Proof: The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of establishing the absence of any genuine issue of fact, and the party opposing the motion must supply evidence supporting the existence of a genuine fact issue. Pretty on Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979), followed in Randolf V. Peterson, Inc. v. J.R. Simplot Co., 239 M 1, 778 P2d 879, 46 St. Rep. 1463 (1989).

Enforcement of Foreign Divorce Decree: Plaintiff in an action to enforce alimony provisions of a final, unappealed foreign divorce decree was properly granted summary judgment when no factual issues were raised by defendant but ultimate issues of law that are res judicata. Cicinia v. Cicinia, 173 M 39, 566 P2d 61 (1977).

Negligence Actions — Application of Rule: Ordinarily, issue of negligence is not susceptible of summary adjudication but should motion for summary judgment be made, burden is on moving party to establish clearly that there is no factual issue to be determined and opposing party does not have burden of showing prima facie case. Mally v. Asanovich, 149 M 99, 423 P2d 294 (1967), distinguished in Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The above commission note was written before the adoption of the 1975 amendment. The amendment of December 31, 1975, inserted "with or without supporting affidavits" near the end of the rule and made the rule identical to the Federal Rule. As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

Acceptance of Partial Payment After Demanding Full Payment — Waiver of Right to Statutory Damages — Summary Judgment Warranted for Violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act: Plaintiff collection agency sought to collect $148.96 for eight of defendant's bad checks, plus a $30 service charge for each check, for a total of $388.96. Defendant sent a partial payment, which plaintiff accepted, but missed two promised payments, so plaintiff filed suit for the balance due, plus statutory damages of $100 for each of the eight checks. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court conclusion that the right of a payee on a dishonored check to pursue statutory damages is a right created solely for the payee's benefit and is subject to waiver under 1-3-204 and that by accepting a partial payment after demanding full payment, plaintiff waived the right to statutory damages under 27-1-717. In order to reinstate the right to statutory damages, plaintiff was required to make further demand for full payment and wait the requisite 10 days before filing suit. The District Court also held that by seeking statutory damages without giving the requisite demand, plaintiff had attempted to collect an amount that was not permitted by law, in violation of 15 U.S.C. 1692f(1) of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Plaintiff contended that any mistake was a bona fide error, relieving plaintiff of liability under 15 U.S.C. 1692k(c). The Supreme Court again affirmed, accepting the majority view of Circuit Courts that the bona fide error defense is available only for clerical and factual errors and that plaintiff's mistake of law did not make its action any less intentional and was insufficient to rise to the level of a bona fide error. Summary judgment for defendant was proper. Collection Bureau Serv., Inc. v. Morrow, 2004 MT 84, 320 M 478, 87 P3d 1024 (2004). See also Baker v. G.C. Serv. Corp., 677 F2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982).

No Negligence by Architect if Professional Information Not Communicated in Absence of Contract: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence action against the architect who had provided preliminary design parameters and building specifications for the facility. The District Court summarily dismissed the third-party claim, and the contractor appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994), and Restatement (Second) of Torts 552 (1976), the court held that the architect owed no duty of care to the contractor because the contractor had no contract for the architect's services and failed to prove that the architect communicated professional information with the intention that the information be relied upon by the contractor. Absent a duty of care, there was no breach, so the third-party action failed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was proper. Glacier Tennis Club at The Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co, Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Action Not Brought Within Statutory Time Limit — Summary Dismissal Proper — Damage Rule Inapplicable: Plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against defendant on December 17, 1999, 3 years and 8 days after the date that plaintiff's damages occurred. The District Court dismissed the claim as untimely under 27-2-206. On appeal, plaintiff contended that under the damage rule set out in Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), and Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994), the statute of limitations should have been tolled until notice of damages was actually received on December 23, 1996, which would have allowed filing until December 23, 1999. The Supreme Court disagreed. The damage rule is not the accepted standard in Montana. Under the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions in 27-2-206, the time for filing is not tolled by a plaintiff's failure to discover damages, but runs from the date that plaintiff discovered or should through reasonable diligence have discovered the act or omission causing the damages. The claim or cause of action accrued on December 9, 1996, and the complaint filed on December 17, 1999, was beyond the statute of limitations, so summary dismissal for defendant was proper. Spolar v. Datsopoulos, 2003 MT 54, 314 M 364, 66 P3d 284 (2003).

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Defendant moved to dismiss the claims, and the District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claim and delivery require that the claimant prove that property is wrongfully detained and that the claimant has the right to immediate possession at the time that the action is brought. However, in this case, there was insufficient evidence that defendant wrongfully detained the tractor because defendant had no contractual relationship with plaintiff regarding the tractor and owed no contractual duty to return the tractor to plaintiff. Absent evidence of wrongful detainer, there was no basis for plaintiff to recover damages, so summary judgment was proper. 1st Bank v. Winderl, 2002 MT 339, 313 M 306, 60 P3d 998 (2002).

Failure to Prove Conduct a Cause in Fact of Alleged Damage — Summary Judgment Proper: Abraham's townhouse basement flooded, so Nelson, the builder of the townhouse, was sued for negligently designing and building the residence, breaching implied warranties of quality workmanship, good construction, and habitability, and causing the basement to flood. Causation is one of four elements that must be proved in a negligence action, and except in cases of intervening cause, proof of causation is satisfied by proof that a party's conduct was a cause in fact of the damage alleged. Here, when Nelson presented Abraham's deposition testimony that Abraham did not know the cause of the flooding, Nelson met the initial burden of demonstrating that no material question of fact existed regarding the element of causation, and the burden shifted to Abraham to provide facts to prove causation. However, Abraham could not merely point to lack of evidence as the factor creating a material question, nor did Abraham's suspicions or unsupported conclusory or speculative statements raise a genuine issue of material fact. Abraham could not merely rest on evidence of Nelson's negligence, but rather was required to show that Nelson's negligence was the cause in fact of Abraham's injury. Abraham failed to submit facts to create a material question upon which the District Court could determine whether Nelson's actions in designing and building the townhouse were the cause in fact of the flooding, so summary judgment for Nelson was proper. Abraham v. Nelson, 2002 MT 94, 309 M 366, 46 P3d 628 (2002). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), and Gentry v. Douglas Hereford Ranch, Inc., 1998 MT 182, 290 M 126, 962 P2d 1205 (1998).

Summary Judgment as Final Judgment on Merits for Purposes of Collateral Estoppel: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued the state and an assistant state fire inspector for negligence in failing to discover construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, claiming that the inspector's negligence ultimately resulted in a fire that destroyed part of the condominiums. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing the state and the inspector. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly applied collateral estoppel against the plaintiffs based on previous litigation involving structural defects in the same property. The Supreme Court found that the District Court took judicial notice of the previous litigation, that the construction of the fireplaces was an issue in that previous litigation, and that the plaintiffs in the present case knew or should have known of the defects in the fireplaces. In order to apply collateral estoppel there must be, inter alia, a final judgment on the merits in a previous case. The summary judgment to which the plaintiffs in the present case were a party, dismissing other defendants in that previous case, was a final judgment on the merits of the case. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Challenge of Validity of Release on Basis of Unconscionability — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff signed a release for personal injuries with an insurance company in exchange for $8,900. Plaintiff later sued insureds, who were granted summary judgment after pleading the affirmative defense of release. However, a release is governed by contract law and may be rescinded for the same reasons that allow rescission of a contract. Therefore, the validity of a release may be challenged on the basis of unconscionability. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment after finding the release was unconscionable based on: (1) plaintiff's dire financial situation, lack of education and legal advice, and vulnerability; (2) substantial uncertainty as to the extent of injury and future prognosis at the time of settlement; and (3) haste in executing the release. Taken together, the circumstances raised an issue of fact whether justice was done, precluding summary judgment. Kelly v. Widner, 236 M 523, 771 P2d 142, 46 St. Rep. 591 (1989).

Failure to Obtain Degree — University's Discretion — Summary Judgment Upheld: The University was entitled to summary judgment against plaintiff's claim of bad faith and breach of contract when plaintiff failed to fulfill his duties under the contract he alleged. The discretion vested in the University is the core substantive principle entitling it to summary judgment. The University did not abuse its discretion. Bindrim v. Univ. of Mont., 235 M 199, 766 P2d 861, 45 St. Rep. 2316 (1988).

National Guardsman Injured on Weekend Drill — No Right to Sue State — Summary Judgment Upheld: The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment granted state by District Court because: (1) issues raised on appeal were not genuine issues of material fact but rather questions of law, therefore summary judgment was proper; (2) the National Guard is a military force, not a political subdivision of the state, so appellant had no right to sue under the Tort Claims Act (Title 2, ch. 9, parts 1 through 3); and (3) traditionally, the federal government and state governments have not been held liable in tort for injuries that arise in the course of activity incident to military service (Feres v. U.S., 340 US 135, 95 L Ed 152, 71 S Ct 153 (1950)). Evans v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 223 M 482, 726 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1930 (1986), distinguished in Grove v. Mont. Army Nat'l Guard, 264 M 498, 872 P2d 791, 51 St. Rep. 366 (1994), and overruled in Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997). Trankel was followed in Lake v. St., 282 M 484, 938 P2d 698, 54 St. Rep. 442 (1997).

Summary Judgment Based on Earlier Settlement Agreement: A compromise agreement, when the basis for a final judgment, generally operates as a merger and bar of all preexisting claims and causes of action. Thus, it was proper to grant defendant's motion for summary judgment in an action when the underlying cause of action had been a preexisting and related claim to an earlier action that had been dismissed with prejudice. Webb v. First Nat'l Bank of Hinsdale, 219 M 160, 711 P2d 1352, 42 St. Rep. 1919 (1985), followed in Robinson v. First Sec. Bank of Big Timber, 224 M 138, 728 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 2080 (1986). See also S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990).

Summary Judgment Proper — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Party Slept on Rights: Summary judgment was proper when pretrial discovery did not indicate a genuine issue of material fact and when defendant failed to appear for a pretrial conference on August 2, failed to respond to a motion for summary judgment filed on August 21, failed to appear for the hearing on the motion on September 6, and filed a motion to set aside the summary judgment 5 days after receiving notice of it, but failed to file a brief in support of that motion until after the District Court had heard oral argument on the motion. Bedford v. Jorden, 215 M 508, 698 P2d 854, 42 St. Rep. 589 (1985).

No Issue as to Defendant's Duty or Comparative Negligence: The Hair Bender, a beauty salon, had a linoleum floor in the front of the shop for washing, cutting, and styling and an elevated carpeted area towards the back of the shop with five hair dryers. The carpeted area was one step higher than the linoleum area. Plaintiff's hair was washed in the front of the shop, and defendant's employee accompanied plaintiff to the drying area. After her hair was dry, plaintiff was proceeding to the front of the shop when she tripped on the step and was injured. The District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff failed to demonstrate that the step constituted a hidden danger or unsafe condition. Plaintiff failed to see and observe that which would be obvious through reasonably expected use of an ordinary person's senses. Defendant did not have a duty to warn plaintiff of an obvious danger. Plaintiff's fall was due to her own negligence, and there were no genuine issues of material fact concerning defendant's duty to warn or defendant's comparative negligence. Kronen v. Richter, 211 M 208, 683 P2d 1315, 41 St. Rep. 1312 (1984), followed in Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St. Rep. 484 (1994), and distinguished in Welton v. Lucas, 283 M 202, 940 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 562 (1997). Kronen was overruled, as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

General Release of Tortfeasor — Effect: From the date of this decision the law of Montana as to the effect of a general release of a tortfeasor on the liability of a joint tortfeasor will follow the position of the Restatement (second) of Tort. Section 885, "the release of one joint tortfeasor is not a release of any other joint tortfeasor unless the document is intended to release the other tortfeasors, or the payment is full compensation or the release expressly so provides". Unless a release specifically states otherwise, a finder of fact may consider the intent of the parties in making a release. Kussler v. Burlington N., Inc., 186 M 82, 606 P2d 520 (1980).

Summary Judgment for Nonmoving Party: No formal cross motion is necessary for a court to enter summary judgment. The invocation of the power of a court to render summary judgment in favor of the moving party gives the court power to render summary judgment for his adversary provided the case warrants that result. However, the court must be very careful that the original movant had a full and fair opportunity to meet the proposition and that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and the other party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979), followed in Canal Ins. Co. v. Bunday, 249 M 100, 813 P2d 974, 48 St. Rep. 597 (1991), and In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), and distinguished in Truck Ins. Exch. v. Waller, 252 M 328, 828 P2d 1384, 49 St. Rep. 318 (1992), in which a misrepresentation counterclaim was not involved in cross-motions for summary judgment, but the initial motion for summary judgment specifically included the misrepresentation counterclaim.

Burden of Proof: The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of establishing the absence of any genuine issue of fact, and the party opposing the motion must supply evidence supporting the existence of a genuine fact issue. Pretty on Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979), followed in Randolf V. Peterson, Inc. v. J.R. Simplot Co., 239 M 1, 778 P2d 879, 46 St. Rep. 1463 (1989).

Distinction Between Motion to Dismiss and for Summary Judgment: The District Judge did not reverse the previously disqualified District Judge's denial of defendants' motion to dismiss by granting defendants' motions for summary judgment and thereby improperly exercise appellate jurisdiction because the latter motion was a decision on the merits while the former was merely a determination of the sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Purpose — Proof — Deed's Validity Upheld: The purpose of this rule is to promptly dispose of actions in which there is no genuine issue of fact. The court has no duty to anticipate possible proof that might be offered under the pleadings. Judgment against party seeking cancellation of deed and reconveyance of property was upheld. Silloway v. Jorgenson, 146 M 307, 406 P2d 167 (1965).

Commission Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule, except that the provisions for affidavits are omitted and it is provided that affidavits shall not be considered for any purpose on motion for summary judgment.

NOTE TO 1965 AMENDMENT

The amendment expressly includes "answers to interrogatories" among material which may be considered on motion for summary judgment. This conforms to an amendment to the Federal Rule adopted January 21, 1963, the Federal Rule having inadvertently omitted the phrase. The courts have generally reached by interpretation the result required by the amendment.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The original commission note was written prior to more recent amendments. The 1965 amendment inserted "answers to interrogatories" in the first sentence.

The amendment of December 31, 1975, inserted the second sentence; inserted "answers to interrogatories" in the third sentence; inserted "together with the affidavits, if any" in the third sentence; and deleted a former third sentence which read "Affidavits shall not be considered for any purpose on motion for summary judgment." As a result of this amendment the rule is now identical to the Federal Rule. As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule.

GENERAL

Opportunity for Opposing Parties to Present Facts Relevant to Summary Judgment Motion Required: The District Court granted summary judgment in a probate case, awarding a putative common-law spouse a portion of the estate. However, in this case, summary judgment constituted reversible error because the estate was not given notice and a full and fair opportunity to present facts relative to the summary judgment motion and to address issues of material fact regarding the claims of the putative spouse. In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), following Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Improper Finding That Franchise Did Not Exist — Failure to Address Nonrevenue-Based Circumstances in Determining Substantial Reliance — Summary Judgment Reversed: On the question of whether a franchise existed, the parties agreed that their relationship met the definition of franchise in 61-4-201, but disputed whether plaintiff was substantially reliant on defendant for a continued supply of new motor vehicles, parts, and accessories. The District Court applied the common meaning of the term and concluded that plaintiff did not generate 50% or more of its revenue from sales of products supplied by defendant, so plaintiff was not substantially reliant on defendant, and therefore no franchise existed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court applied an unnecessarily restrictive and simplistic standard and failed to consider other nonrevenue-based circumstances that potentially impacted on the issue of substantial reliance. The question of whether a franchise existed was reversed and remanded for consideration of nonrevenue as well as revenue-based circumstances. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005), distinguishing Kans. City Trailer Sales v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 1994 WL 49932 (W. Dist. Mo. 1994).

Corporation Considered Real Party in Interest on Claim for Lost Corporate Profits — No Exception for S. Corporations: Gullett paid $10,000 earnest money for the purchase of real property. The money was drawn on the account of Gullett's corporation. When defendants refused to return the money after the purchase agreement failed, Gullett filed a complaint for return of the money and for profits allegedly suffered by the corporation's business through lack of the funds. Although the money was ultimately repaid to Gullett, the District Court summarily dismissed the claim for lost business profits on grounds that the corporation, not Gullett, was the real party in interest. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The cause of action for recovery of lost business profits belonged to the corporation, not to a shareholder. Gullett's argument that he should not be barred from the claim because the corporation was an S. corporation also failed because even though an S. corporation is treated differently for taxation purposes, it remains a corporation in all other ways, and the corporation and its shareholders remain separate entities. Gullett v. Van Dyke Constr. Co., 2005 MT 105, 327 M 30, 111 P3d 220 (2005), following Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045 (1991). See also Smith Setzer & Sons, Inc. v. Covenant Not to Compete Unlawful Restraint on Trade — No Claim for Interference With Contractual or Business Relations: Curl worked for a company that finished products for Montana Silversmiths. The company was purchased by plaintiff company, and plaintiff hired Curl to do the same work but required Curl to sign an employment contract that included a noncompetition covenant. After Curl's employment ended, a new business hired Curl to do the same work for Montana Silversmiths. Plaintiff sued the new business and Curl, claiming breach of contract and intentional interference with business relations based on the noncompetition covenant. The District Court granted summary judgment for Curl, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court applied the reasonableness test outlined in O'Neil v. Ferraro, 182 M 214, 596 P2d 197 (1979), and concluded that because Curl's only option was to work in the vicinity of her residence as a subcontractor for Montana Silversmiths, the covenant prohibited Curl from engaging in her profession and was thus unreasonable and an unlawful restraint on trade. Plaintiff's claims were based on the presumption that the covenant was valid, but because the covenant was void, summary judgment for Curl was affirmed. Mont. Mtn. Prod. v. Curl, 2005 MT 102, 327 M 7, 112 P3d 979 (2005).

Prior Ruling That Prison Escapee's Property Was Not Abandoned Not Dispositive of Later Claim That Property Was Converted: A prison escapee who was captured and returned to prison sued the prison and five prison officials for destroying the personal property that he left behind at the prison when he escaped. In a prior decision in this case, the Supreme Court ruled that there was a presumption of intent to abandon the property based on the escapee's acts, that the presumption was rebuttable, and that the escapee rebutted it, and thus his complaint was wrongly dismissed for failure to state a claim. The escapee then claimed on remand that the prison wrongfully converted his property, and defendants were granted summary judgment. The prison had a written policy that personal property left behind by an escapee was considered contraband and would be confiscated and sold or destroyed. The prior Supreme Court ruling turned on the issue of abandonment and did not control the ruling on the summary judgment motions, which turned on the issue of conversion. Defendants were entitled to raise the prison policy as a defense. It was not error to grant defendants summary judgment. Hawkins v. Mont. State Prison, 2004 MT 289, 323 M 326, 102 P3d 2 (2004).

Exhibits Properly Excluded as Inadmissible Hearsay in Summary Judgment Proceeding: During summary judgment proceedings, parties must limit affidavits to evidence that would be otherwise admissible pursuant to evidentiary rules. The first admissibility requirement in Rule 56(e), M.R.Civ.P., is that affidavits must be based on personal knowledge, and the personal knowledge requirement has been extended to attached exhibits as well. In this case, the District Court properly struck six challenged exhibits because they did not set forth facts within the affiants' personal knowledge and because a foundation was not laid for their consideration based on any exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence. Further, the court did not err in failing to take judicial notice of one of the exhibits—a motion to dismiss in a prior criminal proceeding—because the exhibit was not a form of law cognizable under Rule 202, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The exhibits were properly dismissed as inadmissible hearsay. Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment Without Hearing: The town of Virginia City sought to enjoin defendants from constructing a personal residence based on alleged permit violations. After a show cause hearing in District Court, a preliminary injunction was issued precluding further construction. Both parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment, which was granted to the town. Defendants moved to vacate pending completion of briefing and filing of transcripts and moved for oral argument, but the motions were denied. Defendants appealed, alleging that the District Court erred by granting summary judgment without affording defendants a hearing. The Supreme Court agreed. Summary judgment is only proper when there are no issues of material fact revealed in the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, and affidavits, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Under this rule, a hearing is contemplated at which the District Court will consider not so much legal arguments, but rather whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, and in the ordinary case, the parties have a right to a summary judgment hearing unless the hearing is explicitly waived. In Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97 (1989), the Supreme Court noted that there may be an occasion when under the law and the facts adduced, the movant would be so clearly entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law that a District Court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but there was no such order in the present case. Rather, the language in the District Court's summary judgment order failed to state with sufficient particularity the rationale underlying the ruling, particularly the defenses raised in defendants' cross-motion for summary judgment. Although the District Court stated that it considered the entire record, there was no reference to considerations of defendants' affidavits. At one point, the court acknowledged that defendants were entitled to an evidentiary hearing, but failed to grant one, instead determining substantive questions that should have been left for a trial on the merits when granting injunctive relief. The only hearing afforded the parties in this case took place before discovery was conducted or responsive pleadings were filed, in noncompliance with Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The District Court abused its discretion in granting summary judgment without affording defendants a summary judgment hearing. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Virginia City v. Olsen, 2002 MT 176, 310 M 527, 52 P3d 383 (2002).

Failure to Show That but for Negligent Legal Advice, Deportation Could Have Been Successfully Defended — Professional Negligence Claim Properly Dismissed: Fang, a Chinese citizen and lawful permanent United States resident employed by Montana State University-Bozeman, was involved in a domestic dispute with his wife that resulted in charges of assault. Fang consulted Bock, who worked at the university legal services offices, regarding the possibility of deportation. Bock in turn consulted Rice, an attorney who had made a presentation on immigration law at a seminar that Bock had attended, and asked if a misdemeanor domestic abuse charge was grounds for deportation. Rice informed Bock that the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) would not initiate deportation proceedings until the commission of two misdemeanors. Bock relayed that information to Fang, who relied at least in part on the information and pleaded guilty to family member assault. However, in 1996, Congress enacted a new immigration statute (see 8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(2)(E)(i)) that provides that domestic violence convictions are deportable offenses. Several weeks after pleading guilty, Fang received a notice to appear and face deportation. After hiring new counsel, Fang moved to withdraw the guilty plea. The District Court granted the motion on grounds that the failure of Bock to inform Fang of the possibility of removal to China constituted ineffective assistance of counsel, and the INS agreed to suspend further proceedings until the resolution of charges against Fang. Based on the advice of his new counsel, Fang reached a plea agreement with the Gallatin County Attorney to plead guilty to an amended charge of assault. Following conviction, the INS again moved to deport Fang, and based on the fact that assault also constitutes a crime of violence against a protected person pursuant to federal immigration law, Fang was ordered to be deported. Fang then filed a complaint against Bock, seeking damages for professional negligence and negligent supervision and treble damages under 37-61-406. The District Court applied Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335 (1989), and determined that Fang could not satisfy the last element of the test for a prima facie case of professional negligence, which requires a showing that but for such negligence, Fang would have successfully defended against the offense. The court then summarily dismissed the case. Fang appealed, contending that because of Bock's advice, he was exposed to the possibility of removal from this country and had to spend substantial amounts of money to avoid that exposure. Pursuant to Lorash, the Supreme Court had to determine whether Fang would have been exposed to the possibility of removal from this country with or without Bock's advice, in light of the offenses to which Fang pleaded guilty, the statutory basis for deportation, and the immigration judge's explanation for the deportation order. Under either charge, Fang was guilty of an offense of violence against a protected person—his wife. The title of the offense was irrelevant because for purposes of immigration law, misdemeanor assault is considered just as much a crime of violence against a spouse as family member assault. Further, Fang's argument that a different result was compelled by the fact that the assault conviction was subsequently expunged based on a deferred prosecution also failed because under federal case law, no effect is to be given to a state action that purports to remove a guilty plea or conviction by operation of a state rehabilitative statute. Thus, Fang's situation was a result of the conduct that he admitted and was the same following correct legal advice as it was following Bock's incorrect advice. Although Bock misinformed Fang, that advice did not lead to Fang's predicament, nor would the money that he spent to have the first conviction set aside have changed the result. Fang could not prove that but for negligent legal advice he could have avoided deportation, and Bock was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fang v. Bock, 2001 MT 116, 305 M 322, 28 P3d 456 (2001).

Negligence and Strict Liability Action for Damages by Pesticide Not Preempted by FIFRA — McAlpine Overruled: Plaintiffs brought an action for damages allegedly suffered when a pesticide was applied at the building where they worked. The District Court granted summary judgment for the pesticide manufacturer on the basis that the claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) and McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474 (1997), because all of the theories of liability were based on inclusions in or omissions from the pesticide labels. In particular, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b) provides that a state may not impose or continue in effect any requirement for labeling or packaging in addition to or different from those required under the federal law. On appeal, the Supreme Court overruled McAlpine and instead applied Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 US 470 (1996), concluding that Congress, through FIFRA, intended only to preempt states from imposing positive law requirements in the form of regulations and laws and did not intend to extinguish damage remedies under state common law. The word "requirements" in section 136v(b) means enactments of positive law by legislative or administrative bodies, not state law damage actions. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Grant Summary Judgment When Dispute Subject to Arbitration: A condition of Burkhart's employment agreement with Semitool, Inc. (Semitool), was that employment disputes would be subject to Montana law and the Uniform Arbitration Act. After 8 months of employment, Burkhart was terminated. He later brought suit against Semitool, alleging that: (1) he had been terminated without good cause; (2) his termination was in retaliation for his refusal to violate public policy; (3) Semitool's opposition to his application for unemployment benefits was without probable cause and motivated by malice; and (4) representations made to him prior to employment were deceptive and motivated by malice, contained misrepresentations, and included false advertisements concerning the kind or character of the employment. In its answer, Semitool demanded arbitration, and Burkhart accepted the arbitration offer on the first two issues. The parties agreed that because trade secrets were involved, the record would be sealed and hearings closed to the public to avoid disclosure of confidential information. Semitool then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim or, alternatively, to compel arbitration of all four claims. The District Court converted the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and held a hearing to discuss both motions, after which it granted summary judgment to Semitool and dismissed all four claims. The court determined that because proof of the allegations in the complaint would require disclosure of confidential attorney-client matters and because violation of the attorney-client privilege prejudiced the public interest, that prejudice was a proper ground upon which to invalidate the arbitration agreement. Burkhart appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited 39-2-914 and Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128 (1998), as controlling. Once an offer to arbitrate has been accepted, neither the District Court nor the parties have a right to continue the lawsuit. The exception relating to the public interest pertains to the validity of the arbitration agreement, not to the merits of the underlying dispute. Thus, the District Court erred in deciding the merits of the issues because it lacked jurisdiction to do so once the parties agreed to arbitrate. Summary judgment was reversed and the claims were remanded for arbitration. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000).

Transfer of Property for Creation of Trust Not Included in General Power of Attorney: Jameison appointed her granddaughter, Bolich, as "true and lawful attorney", granting her authority to generally act in Jameison's stead "in all matters affecting my business or property". Bolich created a trust agreement naming Jameison the income beneficiary for life and Bolich as trustee and designating Jameison's two daughters as income beneficiaries during their lives in the event that they survived Jameison. The trust agreement provided for distribution of the trust principal for the health, maintenance, and welfare of the income beneficiaries at the trustee's discretion, and upon the death of the last income beneficiary, the trust was to dissolve, with the remainder distributed to Bolich or her estate. Bolich then conveyed all of Jameison's real property, including over 30 parcels, and personal property, including several certificates of deposit and promissory notes, to herself. Jameison died a few months later, and one daughter died shortly thereafter. Over 7 years later, Bolich distributed $100 in trust income to the remaining daughter, who was unhappy with the accounting and challenged the validity of the trust agreement, moving for summary judgment on grounds that Bolich did not have authority under the power of attorney to create it, citing a lack of evidence of Jameison's intent to create the trust and the fact that the trust agreement and conveyance documents were signed solely by Bolich and not by Jameison. The District Court found that Bolich's assertions regarding Jameison's intent were purely speculative and that Bolich had failed to produce any evidence that Jameison had intended to create the trust. The court concluded that the general power of attorney did not specifically authorize Bolich to create the trust and that Bolich exceeded her authority in doing so. The trust was invalidated and terminated, and the estate was distributed pursuant to the laws of intestacy. Bolich appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. In this case, the power of attorney was broad and general but did not grant authority to create a trust, reflect Jameison's intent to create a trust, or even mention a trust, so Bolich's transfer of Jameison's property to herself as trustee was not warranted by the terms actually used in the power of attorney or as a means of executing other authority. The trust was not created by one of the methods in 72-33-201 and was invalid. Bolich's argument that the trust was ratified pursuant to 28-10-211 by Jameison's oral authorization also failed because ratification of a trust must be accomplished in writing pursuant to 72-33-208. Absent material facts regarding the validity of the trust, summary judgment invalidating the trust was proper. In re Trust of Jameison v. Bolich, 2000 MT 190, 300 M 418, 8 P3d 83, 57 St. Rep. 753 (2000), distinguishing McLaren Gold Mines Co. v. Morton, 124 M 382, 224 P2d 975 (1951).

Broad Language in Complaint as Opportunity to Litigate Unfair Claims Practices Action — Res Judicata Barring Second Action — Summary Judgment Proper: The doctrine of res judicata not only precludes a party from relitigating claims that were litigated in a previous action, but under Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997), res judicata will also bar an action for a claim that a party had an opportunity to, but did not, litigate in a previous action. In the present case, Fisher sued State Farm General Insurance Company (State Farm) and one of its agents for wrongfully denying coverage, alleging in the complaint that defendants were liable "for damages incurred as a result of the subject fire and the denial of coverage on theories of breach of contract, negligence, negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and any other applicable legal theories", and sought relief for money due under the insurance policy and "other further relief as the court may deem just and proper". One year later, Fisher filed a second action based on State Farm's denial of coverage, alleging failure to conduct a reasonable investigation of the claim and to attempt a good faith settlement. A few months later, State Farm presented a written offer of judgment on all claims in the original action, which Fisher accepted. Fisher then amended the second action to include allegations of a violation of the Unfair Claims Practices Act (UCPA) and sought punitive, special, and general damages. The District Court granted summary judgment for State Farm on grounds that the second action was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under the broad wording of the original complaint, Fisher clearly had the opportunity to litigate the UCPA claim. Had the claim been less broadly drafted, a judgment in the first action could not have barred the second action. However, the criteria of res judicata regarding identity of subject matter, issues, and relationship of the parties were met, and summary judgment on the second action was proper. Fisher's argument that the application of res judicata essentially negated statutory permissive joinder provisions and compelled mandatory joinder of otherwise independent causes of action was unpersuasive. Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452, 56 St. Rep. 1236 (1999).

Error in Summary Dismissal of Improperly Pleaded Claims: Green Tree Financial Corporation (Green Tree) as "lender" and Larson, doing business as Majestic Homes, Inc. (Majestic), as "approved dealer" had an arrangement for purposes of making federal housing loans pursuant to federal Housing and Urban Development (HUD) regulations. Majestic sued for breach of contract and for noncontract tort damages. The District Court held that no contractual relationship existed and dismissed the noncontract claims as improperly pleaded. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that a contract was in force, and reinstated the underlying noncontract tort damage claims without commenting on their merit, noting that although the complaint was not a model of notice pleading, the allegations were sufficiently precise and well supported to provide Green Tree with the factual basis for the tort claims against it. The claims should not have been dismissed by summary judgment based simply on the manner in which they were pleaded. Larson v. Green Tree Financial Corp., 1999 MT 157, 295 M 110, 983 P2d 357, 56 St. Rep. 618 (1999), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998). See also Linn v. Failure to Raise Conveyance Voidness Claim in Motion for Summary Judgment — Waiver of Claim on Appeal: Defendant claimed on appeal that under 70-21-304, good title had been claimed to a disputed tract of real property through first recording. Although defendant had raised the argument in principle before the District Court in one paragraph of a reply brief, defendant failed to cite any legal authority for the argument when requesting summary judgment. The District Court was not made aware of 70-21-304 and never ruled on its applicability. Defendant waived the right to any claim under that section. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Circumstantial Evidence Allowable to Establish Meeting of Minds Element of Civil Conspiracy — Summary Dismissal Proper Absent Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Because direct evidence of the meeting of the minds is typically in the possession and control of the alleged conspirators and thus difficult if not impossible to obtain, circumstantial evidence may be used to establish the meeting of the minds element of a civil conspiracy. However, when that circumstantial evidence does not raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the meeting of the minds element, summary dismissal is proper. Schumacker v. Meridian Oil Co., 1998 MT 79, 288 M 217, 956 P2d 1370, 55 St. Rep. 338 (1998).

Damage to Crops by Herbicide — Extent of Preemption by FIFRA — Claims for Breach of Express and Implied Warranty Not Preempted — Negligence and Strict Liability Preempted — Remedy for Prevention of Discovery by Summary Judgment: McAlpine applied Weedone LV6, a herbicide manufactured by Rhone-Poulenc and distributed by Ben Taylor, to crops of barley and spring wheat. After several weeks of cool morning temperatures, McAlpine noticed damage to his crops, which experts from Montana State University (now Montana State University-Bozeman) and the Montana Department of Agriculture said was caused by cool temperatures after application of the herbicide. The McAlpines brought a civil action against Rhone-Poulenc, claiming damages from negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and strict liability.

The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the basis that the plaintiffs' claims were based on deficiencies in the label on Weedone LV6 and that those claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA). Citing Wis. Pub. Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 US 597 (1991), and Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 US 504 (1992), the Supreme Court interpreted the FIFRA preemption statement, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b), to preempt only claims based upon negligence in labeling and not to preempt the appellants' claims based upon either express or implied warranty or strict liability. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the appellants must be given the opportunity to prove that Rhone-Poulenc and Ben Taylor breached their warranty by designing, manufacturing, and marketing a product that was inherently defective and that the same defendants are strictly liable for designing, manufacturing, and marketing an unreasonably dangerous product. In response to Rhone-Poulenc's argument that the McAlpines failed to offer any evidence to defeat summary judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that because the District Court granted summary judgment, the McAlpines were prevented from conducting complete discovery and that until discovery was completed, it was premature for the Supreme Court to conclude that the McAlpines' evidence was insufficient. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474, 54 St. Rep. 1123 (1997), overruled in Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000), holding that state common-law negligence and strict liability claims based on or implicating pesticide labels are not preempted by FIFRA. Following the 1997 remand, the McAlpines settled with Ben Taylor, Inc., and proceeded to trial against Rhone-Poulenc on a theory of strict products liability, claiming that Weedone LV6 was a defective product because its propensity to damage or destroy crops in conjunction with cold weather was a danger outside the expectations of the ordinary consumer. Rhone-Poulenc acknowledged that the crop damage was caused by the phenoxy herbicide, but argued that the damage was not unreasonably dangerous and that liability exists only when a product is sufficiently dangerous. The trial court instructed the jury that it must find that the herbicide was in a "defective condition unreasonably dangerous", rather than merely in a defective condition, and the jury returned a verdict for Rhone-Poulenc. The McAlpines appealed. The Supreme Court previously held in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910 (1987), that a product is defective if it is unreasonably dangerous, but a plaintiff is not required to show that a product is defective and also that it is unreasonably dangerous, because establishing that a product is unreasonably dangerous is merely a means of proving that it is defective. Thus, the "defective condition unreasonably dangerous" language creates a vague and imprecise dual test and should not have been submitted to the jury because it was not plain, clear, and concise. The jury should have been required to find merely that the product was in a defective condition, so the case was again remanded. Further, the decision in Sleath, id., also applied on remand, so evidence of the product label was admissible in further proceedings. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 2000 MT 383, 304 M 31, 16 P3d 1054, 57 St. Rep. 1644 (2000).

Opposition to Motion Based Upon Speculative and Conclusory Statements — "Statement of Facts" Held Insufficient — Summary Judgment Upheld: Klock brought a civil action against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights, and the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court. The Supreme Court upheld the grant of summary judgment, holding that Klock had the burden of responding to the motion with affidavits or other evidence proving that a genuine issue of material fact existed. The Supreme Court held that Klock had failed to meet that burden and noted as an example that in his appellate brief "statement of facts", Klock referred to arguments of his counsel in District Court on the summary judgment motion. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that Klock relied upon speculative and conclusory statements and did not meet his burden in response to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. Klock v. Cascade, 284 M 167, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997), followed in McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 72, 972 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

Dispositive Facts Undisputed — Standard of Review: When the dispositive facts surrounding a case are undisputed and both parties assert entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, the decision of the trial court to grant summary judgment to one of the parties is subject to review by the Supreme Court as to whether the trial court's conclusions of law constitute a correct interpretation of the law. Ash Grove Cement Co. v. Jefferson County, 283 M 486, 943 P2d 85, 54 St. Rep. 756 (1997).

Documents Evidencing Amount of Debt Incorporated Into Complaint and Effectively Put in Issue by Answer — Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Cross-Motions Not Proof of Absence of Genuine Issues of Fact: Montana Metal Buildings, Inc. (MMB), constructed a metal building for Shapiro at the Three Forks Airport and later served a notice of claim and construction lien upon

Shapiro for $26,889.43. MMB claimed that this amount was owed by Shapiro as the balance due for labor and materials necessary for construction of the building. MMB subsequently sued Shapiro for that amount in foreclosure of the lien, attaching copies of invoices to its complaint. MMB moved for summary judgment on all issues, and Shapiro moved for summary judgment on issues concerning the defectiveness of the lien. The District Court granted summary judgment on all issues for MMB. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment and that genuine issues of fact still existed in that when MMB attached copies of the invoices to its complaint, they became part of the complaint for all purposes. The amounts established by those invoices were effectively put into issue by Shapiro when, in his answer, he asserted that he owed no further payments to MMB. The Supreme Court held that at this point in their proceedings, MMB had the obligation, as the party moving for summary judgment on the issue of the amount owed, to come forward with other evidence in the form of affidavits, discovery documents, or otherwise to overcome Shapiro's denials and establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact. The only affidavit that was submitted by MMB, the Supreme Court noted, addressed the issue of the sufficiency of the property description for the purposes of the lien and did not present evidence as to the amounts owed by Shapiro. Citing Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268 (1993), the Supreme Court pointed out that MMB could not rely on arguments of counsel to overcome the existence of an issue of material fact. The Supreme Court further noted, citing Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), that because the invoices were not submitted or filed by MMB as part of its motion for summary judgment, the invoices are not evidence of what was contained in the invoices but merely allegations of the complaint and were insufficient to overcome Shapiro's denials in his answer. In response to MMB's argument that Shapiro waived any right to object to MMB's evidentiary basis for its motion, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no evidentiary basis for MMB's motion for summary judgment on the issue of the amount of the debt because the invoices were not submitted for the purposes of the motion but only for the purposes of the complaint and had been effectively addressed by Shapiro's answer. Citing Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), the Supreme Court also pointed out that just because both parties have moved for summary judgment does not alone establish the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, particularly when the motions are not on precisely the same issues, and the District Court therefore apparently assumed, incorrectly, that there were no such genuine issues. Mont. Metal Bldg., Inc. v. Shapiro, 283 M 471, 942 P2d 694, 54 St. Rep. 731 (1997).

Use of Appeal Affidavit Contradicting One's Trial Testimony to Create Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff against whom summary judgment was granted could not, on appeal, create a genuine issue of material fact as to his knowledge of his employer's personnel policy with an appeal affidavit that contradicted his testimony at trial. Fenger v. Flathead County, 277 M 507, 922 P2d 1183, 53 St. Rep. 823 (1996).

Federal Court Wrongful Discharge Case — Dismissal on Summary Judgment Held Res Judicata as to State Court Claims: Hollister brought an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 in federal District Court, seeking damages for being wrongfully discharged from her position with Rosebud County. The federal District Court held that Hollister did not have a sufficient property interest in her job to support an action based upon a denial of substantive due process of law and section 1983. The federal District Court therefore granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Hollister then filed a motion for relief from judgment in the federal District Court, pointing out that the Montana Supreme Court had since noted in Boreen v. Christiansen, 267 M 405, 884 P2d 761 (1994), that the federal District Court had misapprehended the law in her wrongful discharge suit. The state District Court dismissed, holding that it was barred, but the federal court would not reverse itself. Hollister then refiled her section 1983 claim in state District Court, but that court dismissed, holding that the federal District Court opinion was res judicata as to her section 1983 claim. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that an identical situation occurred in Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265 (1993). In that case, the Montana Supreme Court had also held a federal District Court opinion to be res judicata as to claims in state District Court, even though the state law had changed in the meantime. Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Burden-Shifting Analysis in Employment Discrimination Cases — Pretext for Discrimination: Under the rationale in Tex. Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089 (1981) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973)), according to the U.S. Supreme Court's burden-shifting analysis employed in discrimination cases, once a plaintiff has proved a prima facie case of employment discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reason offered by the defendant was not the true reason, but rather was a pretext for discrimination, and under St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 US 502, 125 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 2742 (1993), the reason cannot be proved to be a pretext for discrimination unless it is shown both that the reason was false and that discrimination was the real reason. At this point, the burden merges with the ultimate burden of persuading the court that the plaintiff has been a victim of intentional discrimination. The plaintiff succeeds either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence. The Montana Supreme Court held in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), that in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has the initial burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. This places the plaintiff, as nonmoving party in the summary judgment context, in the peculiar position of having to prove the case to survive the defendant's summary motion. The Kenyon requirements are thus overruled and the Burdine analysis adopted for employment discrimination cases. The plaintiff is required to raise an inference of pretext as opposed to proving pretext, so the burden is more aligned with the general requirement of raising a genuine issue of material fact to survive the motion for summary judgment. Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996), overruling Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992). Heiat was followed in Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Wrongful Discharge From Employment for Violation of Agency Rule — Suit Not Barred by Failure to Appeal Petition for Judicial Review Related to Challenge of Rule: Wadsworth, a real estate appraiser, sued the Department of Revenue for wrongful discharge from employment after being dismissed by the Department for failing to comply with the Department's conflict of interest rule. The rule prohibited Department employees from engaging in independent fee appraisals and other activities during off-duty hours. Prior to dismissal and the suit for wrongful discharge, Wadsworth had filed an administrative grievance challenging the validity of the rule. The grievance was ultimately dismissed by the District Court, and Wadsworth did not appeal. On appeal of the wrongful discharge from employment suit, the Department argued that the District Court erred in not granting the Department's motion for summary judgment based on Wadsworth's failure to appeal the petition for judicial review of the rule. The Supreme Court held that the action for wrongful discharge did not meet the criteria for application of the doctrine of res judicata. The District Court correctly denied the motion for summary judgment. Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996), distinguished in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Inconsistent Document Delivered by Defendant — Issues of Material Fact Preclude Summary Judgment: Plaintiff sued, alleging that defendant had breached an agreement to buy and sell certain mining properties and equipment. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that conflicting testimony concerning whether delivery of the stock to a third party constituted a material breach and that defendant's delivery of inconsistent documents that appeared to maintain that the contract was terminated by breach but, on the other hand, appeared to acknowledge the continuing existence of the contractual right of first refusal created material fact issues that cannot be disposed of by summary judgment. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc. v. ASARCO, Inc., 270 M 458, 893 P2d 325, 52 St. Rep. 284 (1995).

Summary Judgment — As Matter of Law: When there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, summary judgment should be granted as a matter of law. Lewis v. Nine Mile Mines, Inc., 268 M 336, 886 P2d 912, 51 St. Rep. 1283 (1994); Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994); Koepplin v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment — Right of Court to Deny Both Parties' Motions: Both parties in an insurance policy dispute filed motions for summary judgment. The District Court granted the motion of plaintiff's estate and denied insurer's motion. Insurer claimed that the court erred in ruling that the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment constituted an agreement that there was no dispute as to material fact. Under Heublein, Inc. v. U.S., 996 F2d 1455 (2nd Cir. 1993), neither party is barred from claiming the existence of facts sufficient to prevent entry of summary judgment against it in spite of simultaneous motions for summary judgment by opposing parties. The court found that plaintiff's death was accidental within the context of the insurance policy but that the insurer presented no evidence of any fact issues. The court's comments during the hearing on the cross-motions clearly demonstrated its understanding of its right to deny both parties' summary judgment motions absent sufficient proof of either party's case. Ike v. Jefferson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 M 396, 884 P2d 471, 51 St. Rep. 1097 (1994).

Statute of Limitations in Invasion of Privacy Action — Summary Judgment Proper: In 1988, Hentchel told Rucinsky that he had tape recorded her telephone conversations. She asked to hear them, and he agreed to play them, but neither party pursued the issue further. In 1992, Hentchel's wife found the tapes and notified Rucinsky, who brought a claim for invasion of privacy. The District Court granted Hentchel's summary judgment motion on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for an action on a liability not founded on an instrument in writing, as set out in 27-2-204, had run. Under 27-2-102, a cause of action accrues when all of its elements exist or have occurred, the right to maintain an action is complete, and a court is authorized to accept jurisdiction. Rucinsky claimed that because a reasonable person would not have taken Hentchel seriously when he originally confessed that the taping had occurred, the statute of limitations was tolled until the tapes were discovered. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment. That Rucinsky chose not to believe the confession did not negate the existence of the elements of her cause of action in 1988. She had the right to the cause of action when she was put on notice that the tapes existed, and the cause of action began regardless of whether she was convinced of the success of the action. Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994).

Collateral Estoppel — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The District Court's grant of summary judgment and dismissal of the complaint was proper when the plaintiff could not prove a cause of action without relitigation of factual issues that had been previously resolved in prior action between the parties. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Insufficient Evidence of Causation — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: Logan was discharged from her job at Metra and later obtained employment with the Yellowstone County Sheriff's office, where she suffered a repetitive motion injury. She sued Yellowstone County, claiming that the county breached her employment contract. The county moved for summary judgment, claiming that there was insufficient evidence of causation to support the action, and the District Court dismissed the action. The Supreme Court held that there was no substantial evidence from which the trier of fact could find that Logan's discharge from her job at Metra caused her repetitive motion injury because the injury was not foreseeable. Logan v. Yellowstone County, 263 M 218, 868 P2d 565, 51 St. Rep. 22 (1994).

Federal Court Summary Judgment Final — Subsequent State Court Action Barred as Res Judicata: Mills filed a claim in U.S. District Court against Lincoln County for negligence. The county filed a motion for summary judgment, claiming immunity under 2-9-111, and the court granted the motion. Shortly thereafter, the Legislature amended 2-9-111 to clarify that legislative immunity extended only to legislative bodies and to legislative actions taken by those bodies. Rather than filing a motion for reconsideration in federal court, Mills filed a complaint in state District Court, effectively precluding any relief from the federal system and rendering the federal court judgment final. A federal court summary judgment is a final judgment on the merits, and Mills' subsequent state action was therefore barred as res judicata. Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265, 50 St. Rep. 1552 (1993), followed in State ex rel. Harlem Irrigation District v. District Court, 271 M 129, 894 P2d 943, 52 St. Rep. 364 (1995), and Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Difference of Interpretation Not Issue of Material Fact: Kuhns argued that summary judgment was not proper because he and the defendant were in disagreement over the interpretation of a "reasonable efforts" clause in their contract. The Supreme Court held that a mere difference of interpretation does not amount to a genuine issue of material fact. Kuhns v. Scott, 259 M 68, 853 P2d 1200, 50 St. Rep. 685 (1993).

Initial Burden Met in Foreclosure Case — Remand to Consider Defense: The lower court, which found that the defendant borrowers executed notes, security agreements, and a mortgage upon which they defaulted, properly concluded that there was a prima facie case for foreclosure and that the plaintiff bank had met its initial burden on its summary judgment motion. Because the lower court concluded that res judicata barred contract-related defenses, it did not consider the question of whether those alleged defenses presented sufficient factual evidence to demonstrate a genuine issue of fact. The question remained to be decided by the lower court on remand. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Affidavits Inadequate: The Supreme Court, holding that three affidavits by university employees did not prove the complete lack of a genuine issue of material fact, overturned the lower court's grant of summary judgment. Moffatt v. Univ. of Mont., 254 M 285, 837 P2d 401, 49 St. Rep. 779 (1992).

Good Faith Considerations Improperly Considered in Context of Age Discrimination Claim: The District Court granted summary judgment to employer on an age discrimination claim, concluded that immunity under 2-9-111 did not apply, and then went on to grant summary judgment to the employer on a wrongful discharge claim based on its determination that the employee was terminated for good cause, as defined in 39-2-903. The good cause discussion and conclusion followed immediately upon the court's consideration of the employer's long-term dissatisfaction with the employee's work performance in the context of the age discrimination claim. The motion for summary judgment and supporting arguments on the wrongful discharge claim differed significantly from those relating to the age discrimination claim, and the good cause issue as it related to the wrongful discharge claim was not raised or argued by either party. By granting summary judgment on an issue not before it, the court effectively denied Kenyon notice and an opportunity to be heard on the issue. The case was remanded. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), overruled, with regard to plaintiff's burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext, in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996).

Supreme Court Power to Order Summary Judgment for Opposing Party: The Supreme Court has the power to reverse a District Court's grant of summary judgment and order it to enter summary judgment in favor of the opposing party as a matter of law when all facts bearing on the issue are before the Supreme Court and no genuine issues of material fact exist. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Genuine Issue of Fact — No Duty of Court to Anticipate: The failure of the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to either raise or demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact or to demonstrate that the legal issue should not be determined in favor of the movant is evidence that the party's burden was not carried. Summary judgment is then proper, the court being under no duty to anticipate proof to establish a material and substantial issue of fact. Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 251 M 39, 823 P2d 251, 48 St. Rep. 1151 (1991); Tucker v. Trotter Treadmills, Inc., 239 M 233, 779 P2d 524, 46 St. Rep. 1646 (1989); Larry C. Iverson, Inc., v. Bouma, 195 M 351, 639 P2d 47, 38 St. Rep. 1911 (1981); State ex rel. Burlington N. v. District Court, 159 M 295, 496 P2d 1152 (1972).

Failure to Provide Electricity to Farmer With Three Years of Unpaid Bills: Farmer's contract with electric company for irrigation pump electricity provided that no electricity would be provided if past due balances were unpaid. During a severe 1985 drought, company refused electricity because of unpaid balances totaling $3,737.50 for 1982 through 1984. Farmer's crops failed for lack of water, and farmer sued company for damages. Summary judgment for company on the claim was affirmed. Company had no duty to provide water in view of the unpaid balances. The contractual instrument between farmer and company was modified by a "member service policy" that provided that company may allow installment payment in special circumstances. The court held that the member service policy applied only to residential electricity contracts and that it was not unreasonable to refuse the electricity for the irrigation pumps, particularly because farmer, at times, had the money to pay his balances but chose not to and instead gambled that he would not need to irrigate in 1985. Farmer's allegation that he had $1,914.90 in capital credits was not considered because there was no evidence that farmer offered the credits as part payment or that farmer and company discussed the credits. Ballenger v. N. Lights, Inc., 249 M 327, 815 P2d 1156, 48 St. Rep. 767 (1991).

Issues of Negligence Not Ordinarily Susceptible to Summary Judgment: The plaintiff was involved in a motor vehicle accident with the defendant. The plaintiff, driving a semitrailer, struck the back of the defendant's vehicle, a round bale feeder. The Supreme Court, recognizing that issues of negligence are not usually susceptible to summary adjudication, affirmed the lower court's dismissal of the plaintiff's case on the basis that no evidence had been introduced showing that the defendant had violated any law by being on the highway or by driving at a slow rate of speed. Henrickson v. Pocha, 245 M 217, 799 P2d 1095, 47 St. Rep. 1995 (1990).

Summary Judgment Held Improper on Issue of Bad Faith: In an earlier action between the parties, the Supreme Court had reversed the lower court and ruled that the plaintiff had made a claim against the insurance company in a timely fashion. In a second trial on the issue of bad faith, the lower court granted the insurance company's summary judgment motion on the basis that if a previous court had ruled that there was no coverage, although reversed on appeal, then as a matter of law there were good faith arguments supporting the insurance company's denial. The lower court reasoned that if one judge could find in favor of no coverage, then the defendant had demonstrated that it had denied coverage in good faith and summary judgment was proper. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court, holding that questions of fact did exist with respect to alleged lack of good faith on the part of the defendant, regardless of any earlier rulings. Walker v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 241 M 256, 786 P2d 1157, 47 St. Rep. 208 (1990).

Summary Judgment Appropriate in Tort Cases: The plaintiff contended that tort actions in general are not properly disposed of by summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's dismissal of the suit, stating that the court had previously upheld summary disposition of tort claims, including those involving breaches of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. O'Bagy v. First Interstate Bank of Missoula, 241 M 44, 785 P2d 190, 47 St. Rep. 69 (1990).

Failure to File Brief Not Waiver of Right to Oral Argument: The Supreme Court ruled that the right to oral argument on a Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., motion cannot be waived by failing to file a brief. In some cases, the lower court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but in the ordinary case, the right to a hearing must be specifically waived by all parties. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989). However, see Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 254 M 208, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 703 (1992), in which case, after the granting of a summary judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants hired a new attorney who filed several motions and requested a hearing but failed to raise any factual matters relevant to issuance of the summary judgment. In this case, failure to raise any genuine issue of material fact relevant to the motion for summary judgment constituted waiver of a hearing.

Accepted Work Rule Doctrine — Contractor Nonliability: The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a contractor on the issue of negligence based on the accepted work rule doctrine. The doctrine, first recognized in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), is based on the rule that an independent contractor is not liable to third parties for injuries that occur after the work has been completed and turned over to and accepted by the employer. Instead, the person employing the contractor is substituted as the responsible party. The Supreme Court affirmed the doctrine by refusing to extend contractor liability to foreseeable injury caused by negligent construction. Harrington v. LaBelle's of Colo., Inc., 235 M 80, 765 P2d 732, 45 St. Rep. 2176 (1988), overruled in Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Contracts — Sufficient Ambiguity as Question of Law: In the interpretation of contracts, it is a question of law whether there is an ambiguity sufficient to submit the issue to a jury. Monte Vista Co. v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 522, 755 P2d 1358, 45 St. Rep. 809 (1988), citing Nordlund v. School District, 227 M 402, 738 P2d 1299, 44 St. Rep. 1183 (1987), followed in Audit Serv., Inc. v. Systad, 252 M 62, 826 P2d 549, 49 St. Rep. 137 (1992), and, with regard to admissibility of parole evidence in determining the intent of the parties when ambiguities exist in a contract, Molerway Freight Lines, Inc. v. Rite-Line Transp. Serv., Inc., 273 M 95, 902 P2d 9, 52 St. Rep. 839 (1995). Monte Vista Co. was also followed in Doble v. Bernhard, 1998 MT 124, 289 M 80, 959 P2d 488, 55 St. Rep. 489 (1998). See also In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997).

Summary Judgment Proper on Federal Question — Improper Failure to Consider Witness Depositions on State Question: A breach of employment contract action pursuant to the federal Social Security Act was properly dismissed by summary judgment because the violation did not give rise to a private civil cause of action. However, the District Court should have considered the depositions of three material witnesses before granting summary judgment on the question of whether there was a proper claim for tortious interference under state law. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 230 M 456, 750 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 349 (1988), distinguished, on grounds that defendant rather than plaintiff scheduled and conducted witness depositions and there was no waiver of the introduction and consideration of the depositions as relevant to the summary judgment issue, in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994). Following the St. Medical Oxygen decision, plaintiffs filed amended complaints in Cascade County and several other counties directly pleading tortious interference with a business relationship. The Cascade County case was summarily dismissed in favor of defendants on the grounds that because Medicare/Medicaid customers were free to choose any qualified oxygen supplier, plaintiffs were barred from a private cause of action as to that class of customers regardless of whether defendants acted tortiously. Defendants subsequently moved for summary dismissal in the other jurisdictions on grounds that the Cascade County decision was binding based on res judicata and collateral estoppel, and that motion was granted. However, the Cascade County decision was not a final judgment on the merits but rather a partial order. Because final judgment is a prerequisite to appeal and to the application of res judicata and collateral estoppel, the judgment was reversed and remanded for a final determination of the issues. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 256 M 38, 844 P2d 100, 49 St. Rep. 1126 (1992). On remand, the District Court properly granted American Medical Oxygen's motion for summary judgment because none of State Medical Oxygen's alleged factual issues were found to relate to the "without right or justifiable cause" element of State Medical Oxygen's action for tortious interference with business relations. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 267 M 340, 883 P2d 1241, 51 St. Rep. 1063 (1994).

Witness Credibility — Summary Judgment Improper: Where credibility, including that of defendant, is crucial, summary judgment becomes improper and a trial indispensable. Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073, 45 St. Rep. 188 (1988), following Arnstein v. Porter, 154 F2d 464 (2nd Cir. 1946).

Disposal of Personal Injury Case by Summary Judgment — Negligence as Matter of Law: Summary judgment is rarely proper in personal injury cases because of the peculiarly exclusive nature of the concept of negligence. Negligence is normally a question of fact; however, in certain cases in which reasonable minds cannot differ, the cause of an accident may be a question of law for the court to determine. In determining comparative negligence between a driver who passed while visibility in the left lane was obstructed and the state's obligation to provide and maintain safe highways, the only conclusion to be reached was that the driver's negligence exceeded that of the state. Summary judgment was proper in determining negligence as a matter of law. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), citing Hartley v. Wash., 698 P2d 77 (Wash. 1985), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988), Christopherson v. White, Inc., 250 M 118, 817 P2d 1165, 48 St. Rep. 891 (1991), and Pappas v. Midwest Motor Express, Inc., 268 M 347, 886 P2d 918, 51 St. Rep. 1288 (1994), and distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence. Dillard was followed in Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St.

Rep. 1395 (1996), and Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

No Abuse of Discretion in Reconsideration of Denial of Summary Judgment: Appellant, disabled by muscular atrophy, entered into an agreement allowing him to live in a cabin on respondent's property in exchange for his promise to inspect and maintain the property to the "best of his abilities". When a disagreement over the terms of the agreement ensued, appellant vacated the cabin and brought an action against the respondent. The District Court denied respondent's summary judgment motion. Prior to trial, however, the judge recused himself from the case. Subsequently, the newly assigned judge granted respondent's renewed motion for partial summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by reconsidering another judge's denial of summary judgment when additional deposition information upon which the order was based had been submitted. Rowland v. Klies, 223 M 360, 726 P2d 310, 43 St. Rep. 1788 (1986).

No Evidence of Fraud — Summary Judgment Appropriate: Since 28-2-404 does not preclude summary judgment when there is no evidence supporting a claim of fraud, under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), summary judgment was appropriate. Campbell v. Campbell, 223 M 124, 725 P2d 207, 43 St. Rep. 1584 (1986).

Summary Judgment — Failure to Show Proximate Cause: Dvorak was a welder for Beall, which repaired truck tankers used to haul commodities. Matador delivered to Beall for repairs a tanker that had hauled substances contaminated by toxic hydrogen sulfide. Despite Dvorak's discovery and report of remaining contaminants, a Beall foreman ordered him to enter the tank to complete the repairs. Dvorak subsequently collapsed and received injuries as a result of exposure to the hydrogen sulfide. Dvorak filed suit, claiming that Beall and Matador were liable under an intentional tort exception to the exclusivity provision of workers' compensation laws. The District Court granted Beall's summary judgment motion. On appeal, Dvorak argued that Matador was strictly liable for engaging in an abnormally dangerous activity and negligent for failing to warn of the protections needed against hydrogen sulfide dangers. The District Court granted Matador's summary judgment motion, concluding that Beall's conduct was the sole proximate cause of Dvorak's injuries. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that without Beall's negligent conduct Dvorak's injuries would not have occurred. Thus, Matador's failure to warn was not the proximate cause of the accident. Accordingly, since Beall's conduct proximately caused the accident, Matador was not strictly liable. Dvorak v. Matador Serv., Inc., 223 M 98, 727 P2d 1306, 43 St. Rep. 1562 (1986), followed in Bickler v. The Racquet Club Heights Associates, 258 M 19, 850 P2d 967, 50 St. Rep. 409 (1993).

Reversal of Summary Judgment — Exception to Exclusiveness of Workers' Compensation Remedy: A summary judgment was granted by the District Court for the stated reason that because of the employee's application for and receipt of workers' compensation benefits, remedies were exclusive to the Workers' Compensation Act. Application and receipt of benefits resulted in an election pursuant to 39-71-411, thereby barring a common-law tort action against the employer. In reversing the summary judgment, the Supreme Court held that a narrow exception to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy existed when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee. Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), in which Sitzman's "narrow exception" to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy, existing when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee, was used as precedent for the holding that although 39-71-413 provides for an action only against a fellow employee for intentional or malicious injury, such an action may be brought against an employer as well—in this case, a major oil company.

Equitable Easement — Insufficient Facts to Support Summary Judgment: In quiet title action, it was error for trial court to grant summary judgment when there were insufficient facts in the record to support the District Court's finding of an equitable easement. Penland v. Derby, 220 M 257, 714 P2d 158, 43 St. Rep. 342 (1986).

Grant of Summary Judgment to Party Not Answering Discovery Relating to Counterclaim — Matters in Requested Discovery Not Material as Res Judicata: A nonresident respondent brought an action in Montana District Court seeking the balance of an amount owing from a judgment rendered in Florida. The appellant counterclaimed, alleging fraud and other matters relating to the underlying action adjudicated in Florida. The respondent moved for summary judgment but did not answer extensive discovery submitted by the appellant. Both the District Court and the Supreme Court held that the unanswered discovery related to matters covered by res judicata; therefore, as a matter of law, it was not discovery necessary to determine material facts of the case. Thus, the grant of summary judgment to the nonanswering party was not barred by this rule. O'Neal, Booth & Wilkes, P.A. v. Andrews, 219 M 496, 712 P2d 1327, 43 St. Rep. 120 (1986).

Subdivision Review of Four-Plex Apartments Unnecessary: Appellants brought an action to stop construction of an apartment building for failure of its builders to comply with subdivision review. The lower court granted the county's summary judgment motion based on the fact that 40 A.G. Op. 57 (1984) was rendered after construction began. During the pendency of the action, 76-3-204 was amended to clarify that new apartment buildings are exempt from subdivision review. Since an appellate court must apply the law in effect at the time it renders its decision, the Supreme Court upheld the lower court decision because the law as amended makes subdivision review unnecessary for the respondents' four-plex apartment building. Lee v. Flathead County, 217 M 370, 704 P2d 1060, 42 St. Rep. 1258 (1985), affirmed as law of the case in Paulson v. Lee, 229 M 164, 745 P2d 359, 44 St. Rep. 1864 (1987).

Negligence — Summary Judgment Appropriate When Plaintiff Cannot Recover as a Matter of Law: Summary judgment is inappropriate in negligence cases when the contested facts actually involve the issue of a negligent breach of a legal duty requiring application of the reasonable person standard. However, a "summary judgment motion in favor of defendant should be granted in those cases in which there is no genuine issue as to any fact that is crucial to plaintiff's cause of action so that as a matter of law he cannot recover". 10 A. Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure sec. 2729 (1983). Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Alleged Oral Modification of Written Real Estate Contract Not Sufficient to Prevent Summary Judgment: Real estate agent sued to recover remainder of his broker's commission on sale of ranch which fell through. District Court granted agent summary judgment, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found there were no material issues of fact in dispute, and an allegation that the agent orally waived the remainder of the fee in return for the opportunity to relist the property was insufficient to prevent summary judgment because the alleged waiver was not in writing. Taylor v. Weingart, 214 M 282, 693 P2d 1231, 41 St. Rep. 2474 (1984).

Motion for Summary Judgment — Judge's Discretion to Allow Late Briefs and Arguments: The District Court did not err by allowing defendants to submit briefs and argue plaintiffs' summary judgment motion late upon learning why defendants' counsel originally overlooked the matter. Although there are no Montana cases on point, the Supreme Court analogized the judge's discretion to set aside judgments under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., as basis for judges' discretion to allow late briefs and arguments. Todd v. Berner, 214 M 263, 693 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 2462 (1984).

Summary Judgment on Compromise Settlement Note Proper Regardless of Enforceability of Underlying Contract: Parties to a real estate transaction executed a promissory note in compromise and settlement of a dispute over the property. The sellers filed a complaint to recover on the promissory note. The defendants asserted two affirmative defenses seeking rescission of the note. The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that plaintiffs' relinquishment of their claim against defendants, even though the claim may not have been ultimately proved valid, was sufficient consideration on the promissory note. Ultimate unenforceability of the buy/sell agreement was immaterial under the circumstances. Todd v. Berner, 214 M 263, 693 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 2462 (1984).

Annexation Agreement — Issue of Intent One of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: The term "Residential Purposes" in a "Waiver of Right to Protest Annexation and Agreement on Non-Conforming Use" was not so clear on its face as to preclude multifamily residential purposes. Supreme Court held that District Court erred in granting summary judgment for city based on the District Court's determination of the intention of the parties and remanded the case for trial on the issue of intent. Issue of intent is one of fact and cannot be decided on summary judgment. Derrenger v. Billings, 213 M 469, 691 P2d 1379, 41 St. Rep. 2276 (1984).

Advisory Comments on Summary Judgment Appeal: On appeal from and reversal of grant of summary judgment, it was premature for the court to advise the parties and the trial court on the possible application of Montana law. The case was not completely before the Supreme Court, and when all pertinent facts are known, the trial court is the forum for initial application of the law. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Decision on Issues of Fact Improper: Trial court's decision on several issues of fact on a motion for summary judgment was improper. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Motion for Summary Judgment Treated as Motion for Directed Verdict: When a defendant at the close of trial and after submission of all evidence moved under this rule for summary judgment on its counterclaim, the Supreme Court held that the proper procedure would have been to make the motion under Rule 50(b), M.R.Civ.P., but that since the questions to be answered are the same under either motion, the motion made would be considered the equivalent of a motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court further ruled that on the basis of the record, the defendant was entitled to judgment on its counterclaim. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Depositions Not Before Court — Summary Judgment Improper: In a libel and slander action, the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants. At the time, the court did not have before it the depositions of the four defendants. This was unknown to counsel until the record on appeal was prepared. Because the District Court possibly did not have all the facts before it, the Supreme Court returned the case for further consideration. Rasmussen v. Bennett, 207 M 33, 672 P2d 278, 40 St. Rep. 1849 (1983).

Consideration of Matters Outside Pleadings on Motion to Dismiss — Conversion to Summary Judgment: Reversible error was committed when matters outside the pleadings were considered in conjunction with defendant's motion to dismiss complaint and the court did not notify plaintiff that the effect of such consideration was conversion of the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff was entitled to reasonable opportunity to present all materials pertinent to a motion for summary judgment. Though plaintiff must be presumed to have knowledge of the automatic conversion requirements of the rule governing a motion to dismiss, since the court had discretion as to whether or not it would exclude extra-pleading materials, it was incumbent on the court to affirmatively notify the parties that the materials were not excluded and that the conversion of the motion to dismiss into a summary judgment motion was effected. Gebhardt v. D. A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855, 40 St. Rep. 521 (1983). See also Wood v. Den Herder, 277 M 147, 920 P2d 105, 53 St. Rep. 646 (1996).

Contractor Liability — Speculation Insufficient to Raise Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff was injured when the car in which he was sleeping crashed into a concrete retaining wall at the end of a dead-end street in Helena. The alleged liability of the defendant was based on the assertion that in working on an SID, defendant's crew had removed a dead-end street sign. Defendant was granted summary judgment based on the holding of Ulmen v. Schweiger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932). On appeal, plaintiff contended that Ulmen no longer represented the modern view of contractor liability. The Supreme Court did not reach this issue, finding that the record indicated no genuine issue of material fact existed upon which defendant's liability could be predicated. No testimony directly connecting defendant with removal of the sign was given except for speculation. Speculation is not a sufficient basis on which to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Fauerso v. Maronick Constr. Co., 203 M 106, 661 P2d 20, 40 St. Rep. 327 (1983), followed in Gen. Ins. Co. of Am. v. Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 27, 692 P2d 427, 41 St. Rep. 2292 (1984).

Opposing Party — Speculative Statements Insufficient: A party opposing a summary judgment motion must present facts of a substantial nature, and speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

What Constitutes "Public Figure" for Purpose of Libel Defense — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The plaintiff, a commodities broker who had some public notoriety within the state as a result of his membership in and speeches to political organizations and as a result of articles about him appearing in national publications, brought a libel action against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant, holding the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law (and therefore requiring actual malice to be proven by the plaintiff), as there was no absolute prohibition in the Montana Constitution against granting summary judgment in a libel case and because the plaintiff had a general fame or notoriety in the state and exhibited pervasive involvement in the affairs of society. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982), followed in Lence v. Hagadone Inv., 258 M 433, 853 P2d 1230, 50 St. Rep. 601 (1993).

Conclusory Statements Not Sufficient in Opposition: In opposing a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff merely made conclusory statements in support of its positions that factual issues were still unresolved. The court held that the appellant's conclusions of law would clearly not be admissible into evidence at trial and were not properly before the court. The plaintiff's opposition to the motion was not sufficient to defeat the motion. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982).

Test for Grant of Summary Judgment: The purpose of summary judgment is to encourage judicial economy by eliminating unnecessary trials, and it is proper only when there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Movant has the burden of showing a complete absence of any genuine issue as to all facts considered material in light of the substantive principles that entitle the movant to a judgment as a matter of law, and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the offered proof are to be drawn in favor of the opposing party. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981), followed in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), Nichols v. Corntassel, 258 M 173, 852 P2d 583, 50 St. Rep. 483 (1993), and in Smith v. Kerns, 281 M 114, 931 P2d 717, 54 St. Rep. 86 (1997).

Refusal to Consider Untimely Filed Affidavits — No Error Found: A seller of real property sought summary judgment in an action based on the contract of purchase, and the buyer's attorney failed to file an affidavit and brief opposing the seller's motion for summary judgment until the day of the hearing. The seller's counsel pointed out the untimeliness of the filing, and the trial court refused to consider the affidavit. On appeal, no abuse of discretion was found. The Supreme Court noted, too, the unwarranted delays previously caused by the buyer in the case and the lack of any compelling excuse for the untimely filing. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981), followed in O'Neill v. St., 225 M 364, 732 P2d 1330, 44 St. Rep. 305 (1987), and in Wright v. St., 231 M 324, 752 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 652 (1988).

Denial of Defendant's Motion Reviewable Upon Judgment for Claimant: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnification against the previous owner, the trial court's order denying the county's motion for summary judgment was reviewable on appeal by the county because a final judgment was entered for the purchasers. Nonappealable interlocutory orders are reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Differing Considerations for Summary Judgment and Final Judgment: The considerations which result in a grant of summary judgment are not the same considerations relevant to an order of final certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Under summary judgment procedure, the essential inquiry is whether material facts are disputed. Under Rule 54(b) procedure, the inquiry is whether, after balancing the competing factors, finality of judgment should be ordered to advance the interests of sound judicial administration and public policy. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Alone Not Appealable: A summary judgment for plaintiff on the question of liability, reserving judgment as to the amount of damages, is interlocutory in character and hence is not appealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 187 M 453, 610 P2d 172 (1980).

Local Rule as Conflicting With Montana Rules of Civil Procedure: Local court Rule 3, Park County District Court, states in part that a party opposing a motion has 10 days after the filing and service of the moving party's brief to serve and file a reply brief. When applied to a motion for summary judgment, local Rule 3 conflicts with Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. Whenever a local rule conflicts with M.R.Civ.P., the local rule must be set aside. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 606 P2d 1082 (1980).

Summary Judgment Based on Matters Occurring After Pleadings: Sellers, under a contract for deed, sent a notice of default to the buyers. Buyers brought an action against the sellers for a declaratory judgment that buyers were not in default. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the sellers. The Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in giving outside the pleadings to consider matters occurring after they were filed and in granting summary judgment based on those matters. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Hoffman v. Byrne 185 M 56, 604 P2d 328 (1979).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Unnecessary:

Since the District Court has no duty to make findings of fact and conclusions of law when it grants a summary judgment, its failure to do so as to one issue when it has done so as to others is not a factor on review by the Supreme Court. Boise Cascade Corp. v. First Sec. Bank of Anaconda, 183 M 378, 600 P2d 173 (1979), followed in Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988).

Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, Rule 56, or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Eisemann v.

Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971). See also Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), and Lewis v. St., 207 M 361, 675 P2d 107, 41 St. Rep. 9 (1984).

Summary Judgment for Nonmoving Party: No formal cross motion is necessary for a court to enter summary judgment. The invocation of the power of a court to render summary judgment in favor of the moving party gives the court power to render summary judgment for his adversary provided the case warrants that result. However, the court must be very careful that the original movant had a full and fair opportunity to meet the proposition and that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and the other party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979), followed in Canal Ins. Co. v. Bunday, 249 M 100, 813 P2d 974, 48 St. Rep. 597 (1991), and In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), and distinguished in Truck Ins. Exch. v. Waller, 252 M 328, 828 P2d 1384, 49 St. Rep. 318 (1992), in which a misrepresentation counterclaim was not involved in cross-motions for summary judgment, but the initial motion for summary judgment specifically included the misrepresentation counterclaim.

Issues of Fact — Oral Motion: The District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff since genuine issues of fact were presented by the pleadings, responses to requests for admissions, and an affidavit opposing summary judgment. However, the District Court properly rejected defendant's contention that variance between the ground asserted in plaintiff's brief and the ground asserted at the hearing on the motion allowed plaintiff to make an oral motion for summary judgment in violation of this rule. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Haugen, 181 M 9, 591 P2d 1105 (1979).

Distinction Between Motion to Dismiss and for Summary Judgment: The District Judge did not reverse the previously disqualified District Judge's denial of defendants' motion to dismiss by granting defendants' motions for summary judgment and thereby improperly exercise appellate jurisdiction because the latter motion was a decision on the merits while the former was merely a determination of the sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Summary Judgment Granted on Appeal — No Motion: The Supreme Court has the power to order summary judgment for appellant although motion for summary judgment was not made by the appellant to the District Court. Treasure St. Indus., Inc. v. Welch, 173 M 403, 567 P2d 947 (1977).

Notice Requirement Waived: A party must timely object to a hearing scheduled before the required 10 days have run. Llera v. Wisner, 171 M 254, 557 P2d 805 (1976).

Summary Judgment on Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim — Notice Requirement: District Court erred in treating defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim as a motion for summary judgment without affording plaintiff notice and opportunity to oppose it because the court must give the parties notice of the changed status of the motion and a reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such motion so no one will be taken by surprise by the conversion. State ex rel. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences v. Livingston, 169 M 431, 548 P2d 155 (1976), followed in Hoveland v. Petaja, 252 M 268, 828 P2d 392, 49 St. Rep. 245 (1992).

Existence of Material Facts — Inconsistent Contentions: Summary judgment for donee was affirmed. A party may concede that there is no issue if his legal theory is accepted and yet maintain there is a genuine dispute as to material facts, if his opponent's theory is adopted. Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, 156 M 38, 473 P2d 503 (1970).

Oral Testimony Proper: Oral testimony is properly within the matters which the court may consider on motions for summary judgment. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Pleadings Not Controlling: On a motion for summary judgment the formal issues presented by the pleadings are not controlling, and the court must consider the depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, oral testimony, and exhibits presented. Hager v. Tandy, 146 M 531, 410 P2d 447 (1965).

Demand for Admissions — No Response — Summary Judgment: Because plaintiff failed to reply to the demand for admissions within the time stated, the court was bound to grant the motion for summary judgment. Naegli v. Daniels, 145 M 323, 400 P2d 896 (1965).

Extrinsic Evidence Proving Res Judicata: The pleadings on their face did not raise the defense of res judicata and, in view of this provision as to nonuse of affidavits, the defense seemingly is required to be specifically proved. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

GENUINE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT
PARTICULAR CASES

Failure to Prove Agency — Summary Judgment on Nonliability for Constructive Discharge by Alleged Agent Improper: Plaintiff sued defendant corporation American Music Co. (AMC) for constructive discharge based on individual defendant Kelman's tortious interference with plaintiff and AMC's business relationship. Kelman founded AMC and then transferred ownership to his daughters but remained a creditor of AMC and owned the building where the business was located. Plaintiff cited numerous instances of Kelman's intimidating and threatening behavior in the office, contending that Kelman's actions and AMC's failure to control Kelman impaired plaintiff's ability to function normally at work and resulted in plaintiff's constructive discharge. Kelman moved for summary judgment on grounds that Kelman was an agent of AMC and thus was privileged from claims of tortious interference. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment to Kelman and AMC. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Kelman was not employed by AMC and thus was not an actual agent, nor did ostensible agency exist because AMC never caused any third person to believe that Kelman was an AMC agent. Absent an agency relationship between Kelman and AMC, Kelman's claimed privilege from suit failed. In addition, constructive discharge is usually a question of fact for the trier of fact to decide and is not subject to summary judgment. Plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether a reasonable person would have felt forced to resign, so the grant of summary judgment to AMC was also reversible error. Bellanger v. Am. Music Co., 2004 MT 392, 325 M 221, 104 P3d 1075 (2004).

Montana Safety Act Not Limited to Workplace — Question of Employer's Duty to Protect Life and Safety Precluding Summary Judgment: Moore employed Peyatt to haul hay from North Dakota to Montana. When the hay was being loaded onto Peyatt's truck, he was seriously injured. Because there was no workers' compensation coverage for the injury, Peyatt brought a claim against Moore under the Montana Safety Act for failure to provide a safe workplace, adopt safe practices, and do anything else necessary to protect Peyatt's life, health, and safety. The District Court concluded that Peyatt's place of employment was the truck, not the loading environment at the farm, and that because Moore did not have the right to exercise control over the loading environment, Moore could not have breached the duty to provide a safe workplace. Summary judgment was granted to Moore, Peyatt appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. As a matter of law, Moore did not violate the duty to provide Peyatt with a safe workplace absent control over the location. However, the broad language of the Montana Safety Act does not limit the Act only to the workplace. Summary judgment also precluded Peyatt's claim under 50-71-201(4) to present evidence that Moore failed to do anything else necessary to protect Peyatt's life, health, and safety. Because there was a genuine issue of material fact whether Moore breached that duty, the case was remanded for a jury determination of whether Moore was liable for breach of that duty. Peyatt v. Moore, 2004 MT 341, 324 M 249, 102 P3d 535 (2004). See also Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175 (1996).

Sufficient Evidence of City's Willful or Wanton Misconduct to Preclude Summary Judgment — Negligence Claim Against City Barred by Recreational Use Statute: Plaintiff was injured on June 20, 2001, after falling through a damaged plank on the Polson city dock, and filed suit against the city for negligently maintaining the premises and for failing to warn of the unsafe condition. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on grounds that plaintiff failed to present evidence in support of the claim that the city was aware of the defective plank before June 20 or that the city acted willfully or wantonly. The court also concluded that plaintiff's negligence claim was precluded by 70-16-302, the recreational use statute. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts, when considered in a light most favorable to plaintiff, were sufficient to raise a genuine issue as to whether the city's failure to timely repair the damaged plank or warn plaintiff of the danger constituted willful or wanton misconduct, precluding summary judgment and warranting a trial on the issue. However, the Supreme Court agreed that the recreational use statute barred plaintiff's negligence claim. Jobe v. Polson, 2004 MT 183, 322 M 157, 94 P3d 743 (2004).

Attorney's Duty of Care Owed to Estate Beneficiary — Standing of Estate to Bring Legal Malpractice Action: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. Before granting summary judgment to the attorney, the District Court raised the issue of whether the estate and personal representative had standing to bring the suit, based on a questionable fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that as a representative of the decedent, the estate stood in the shoes of the decedent and was thus considered to be in privity with the attorney, so the estate had standing to bring a malpractice claim. Further, the question of whether the trust and the personal representative had standing was a question of fact to be determined at trial, so summary judgment was precluded and the case remanded for further proceedings. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim by Estate Not Barred by Res Judicata, Equitable Estoppel, or Judicial Estoppel: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. The trust beneficiaries brought a separate suit against the trustee. The District Court granted summary judgment for the attorney on grounds of res judicata, equitable estoppel, and judicial estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Res judicata and collateral estoppel did not apply because the subject matter and parties in the beneficiaries' suit were different. Equitable estoppel did not apply because the defendants did not present any evidence to establish that they relied on an act by the personal representative or changed their position for the worse because of that act. Judicial estoppel did not apply because the judicial admission in this case referred only to plaintiffs' legal theory and not to an unequivocal statement of fact and because of the absence of any evidence that defendants were misled by a judicial admission. Thus, summary judgment was inappropriate. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim Timely Filed — Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Date of Discovery and Accrual Disputed: The Watkins estate filed a legal malpractice claim against an attorney who set up the trust. The District Court found that the 3-year statute of limitations had run on filing the suit and granted summary judgment for the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. After concluding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied, the court examined the applicability of both rules. The claim was filed in 1997, but the estate did not discover the attorney's negligence until 1995, which was excusable because: (1) the trustee relied on the fiduciary relationship and trusted that the attorney's assertion that the trust was revocable was correct, even though it was irrevocable; (2) of the complexity of the estate plan, which was difficult even for experts to understand and was beyond the understanding of a layperson; and (3) the attorney may have fraudulently concealed the malpractice. Further, because the trustee continued to treat the trust as revocable in reliance on the attorney's advice, the estate did not sustain any actual damages until the irrevocable nature of the trust was discovered and trust beneficiaries brought suit to remove the trustee in 1996, well within the statute of limitations. The attorney's contention that res judicata and estoppel barred the present suit because the beneficiaries also maintained a separate suit for damages also failed because neither the parties nor the issues were the same. Summary judgment was thus improper, and the case was remanded. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004), following Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Summary Judgment on Breach of Contract Affirmed — Wrongful Discharge Claim Reversed for Determination of Whether Claimant Was Employee or Independent Contractor: Tvedt brought a claim for breach of contract, wrongful termination, and indemnification of expenses, alleging that defendant group had breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, waived the at-will clauses in their employment agreement, and mischaracterized Tvedt as an independent contractor, rather than an employee. Defendant group moved for summary judgment and filed a contingent counterclaim stating that in the event that Tvedt was found to be defendant group's employee, then defendant group's obligation to pay Tvedt the contract value should cease and all payments made to Tvedt should be returned. The District Court determined that Tvedt was not an employee and granted summary judgment to defendant group on all claims, and Tvedt appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment on the breach of covenant issue because Tvedt was given adequate notice of termination, defendant group was exercising the specific language of the at-will termination provision of the contract, and Tvedt did not demonstrate that defendant group had waived the right to enforce that provision. However, the court reversed summary judgment on the wrongful discharge claim because the District Court incorrectly applied defendant group's novation argument and because genuine issues of fact remained whether Tvedt was an employee or independent contractor and whether a manager's agreement that recognized Tvedt individually was in effect at the time of termination. Remand was ordered because the District Court never considered whether Tvedt was entitled to relief for wrongful discharge as a matter of law and, if so, whether the claim for indemnification was appropriate. Tvedt v. Farmers Ins. Group of Co., 2004 MT 125, 321 M 263, 91 P3d 1 (2004).

Improper Resolution of Disputed Issues of Material Fact Once Insurer's Duty to Defend Established — Reversible Error: A driver was injured when his vehicle struck a horse and filed a claim against Staples, who was allegedly pasturing the horse just prior to the accident. Staples then filed a third-party complaint against the horse owners, claiming that as the horse's custodian, he was an additional insured under the insurance policy of one owner and was entitled to a defense. Defendant insurer unilaterally decided that its insured was not the horse's owner and sought a declaration that it had no duty to defend or provide coverage to Staples. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court found that Staples might be an insured under the policy and that defendant had a duty to defend Staples, but then went on to conclude that because the policyholder did not own the horse at the time of the accident, Staples was not a third-party insured. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Having correctly determined that the insurer had a duty to defend, the District Court should have ended the analysis and concluded that because the insurer breached that duty, it was estopped from denying coverage and that Staples was entitled to coverage. It was error for the District Court to then proceed to resolve disputed issues of fact in ruling on the summary judgment motion in favor of the insurer. Staples v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 108, 321 M 99, 90 P3d 381 (2004), following Independent Milk & Cream Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 68 M 152, 216 P 1109 (1923), Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214 (1990), Grindheim v. Safeco Ins. Co., 908 F. Supp. 794 (D.C. Mont. 1995), Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 275 M 111, 911 P2d 209 (1996), Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 2003 MT 79, 315 M 43, 67 P3d 285 (2003), and Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

No Contemporaneous Impact Requirement for Determining Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress — Sacco Rule Applicable: Wages' son was injured by a vehicle driven by defendant's insured. Although Wages did not witness the accident, he sued defendant insurer for severe emotional distress as a result of the insured's negligent operation of the vehicle. Both parties moved for summary judgment. The District Court cited Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661 (1997), for the proposition that an individual who witnesses a family member sustain injury or death states a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress, but an individual who is not at the scene to witness the accident may state a claim for loss of consortium. The court granted summary judgment to defendant. Wages appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court distinguished Treichel and held that the District Court should instead have applied the rule from Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. Duty and foreseeability are inextricably linked, and both must be determined by the trial court. The case was remanded for further proceedings in light of Sacco. Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003).

Advance Insurance Payment Not Required When Liability Not Reasonably Clear: Plaintiffs' child was injured when run over by a car while sledding. Plaintiffs moved for summary judgment requiring the driver's insurer to advance payment for the child's medical expenses pursuant to 33-18-201. The insurer also moved for summary judgment of the issue, contending that an advance was not required because liability had not been clearly established. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that an advance is required when liability is reasonably clear, but in this case, there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the driver or the child was negligent. Because genuine issues of material fact existed regarding negligence and liability, summary judgment on the question of the advance was not required. The District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Travelers Indem. Co., 2003 MT 289, 318 M 73, 78 P3d 880 (2003), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Error in Failing to Consider Estoppel Related to Waiver of Right to Declare Contract Forfeiture — Summary Judgment Improper: When plaintiffs began experiencing financial problems, they notified defendants that they would not be able to make the annual payment on their property. Defendants allegedly told plaintiffs that they would have whatever time they needed to come up with the money, as long as they paid any additional interest and other expenses. Defendants subsequently sent plaintiffs a default notice and terminated the contract for deed. Plaintiffs contended that defendants waived the right to terminate the contract and should be estopped from forfeiting the contract. The District Court dismissed the waiver and estoppel arguments as an attempt to offer parol evidence to amend the contract and granted summary judgment to defendants. However, plaintiffs were not trying to amend the contract, but rather were simply trying to show that defendants waived the right to foreclose for at least a period of time, that plaintiffs relied on the waiver, and that defendants should be estopped from foreclosure. Because material questions remained as to whether a waiver occurred, summary judgment was improper and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Danelson v. Robinson, 2003 MT 271, 317 M 462, 77 P3d 1010 (2003).

Two-Month Lapse in Use of Road Insufficient to Demonstrate Intent of Abandonment — Summary Grant of Prescriptive Easement Reversed: The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on a prescriptive easement, based on the fact that plaintiffs did not continuously use a road for an entire 5-year period because they were out of state for 2 months, demonstrating an interruption or abandonment of the claimed easement. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the District Court misinterpreted the meaning of continuous and uninterrupted use, and the Supreme Court agreed. For purposes of a prescriptive easement, continuous use is use that is made often enough to constitute notice of the claim to the potential servient owner. Further, uninterrupted use is not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land or by voluntary abandonment by the party claiming the right. During the 5-year period in question, defendant did nothing to interrupt plaintiffs' use of the roads in question. The fact that plaintiffs were in Missouri for 2 months and did not use the road during that time may have cast some doubt on whether there was continuous use of the road, but a genuine issue of material fact remained as to whether plaintiffs continuously used the road. Because a question of genuine fact remained, summary judgment was improper, and the Supreme Court reversed for further proceedings, including plaintiffs' claims for infliction of emotional distress and punitive damages. Cook v. Hartman, 2003 MT 251, 317 M 343, 77 P3d 231 (2003). See also Restatement (Third) of Property, Servitudes 2.17.

Previously Raised but Unlitigated Alter Ego Claim Not Barred by Res Judicata: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court decided that res judicata did not bar Kimble's litigation of the alter ego claim. The action to pierce the H-D Irrigating corporate veil was neither previously adjudicated in District Court nor were the facts upon which the claim was based known to Kimble at the time that the counterclaim was filed or at any other time during the course of the previous action. The case was thus remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), applying Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

Material Question Regarding Insurer's Duty to Investigate Claim Information — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurer violated 33-18-201(4) by declining to investigate the accident or plaintiffs' injury claims and make advance payments to cover plaintiffs' medical expenses. The District Court determined that because the insurer had attempted to discover the amount of plaintiffs' outstanding medical expenses and had forwarded a check for $5,000 to cover outstanding expenses, which was rejected by plaintiffs, summary judgment for the insurer was appropriate. The Supreme Court reversed. A genuine issue of fact remained regarding whether the insurer conducted a reasonable investigation, so the issue was not properly resolved with summary judgment. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003).

Question of Material Fact Regarding Law Firm's Handling of Real Estate Contract — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Plaintiff sued its law firm for work performed in writing a contract for a real estate transaction. Plaintiff's expert opined that the firm violated the standard of care when it: (1) had a nonattorney with no contract drafting experience draft the initial agreement and insert an inaccurate legal description of the property obtained from plaintiff's own engineering firm; (2) used the phrase "more or less" to cure defects in the property description when the legal description was clearly deficient; (3) failed to include a provision that required the seller to sign future applications for a final plat; and (4) failed to execute proper escrow documents to prevent the seller from having veto power over any proposed development of the property. The law firm presented its own expert to refute the allegations. The District Court analyzed the allegations of negligence, applying the legal malpractice standards in Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335 (1989), and, finding no issues of material fact, granted the law firm's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed, finding that summary judgment was improper. The conflicting expert testimony itself raised a material issue of fact regarding the standard of care that required resolution by a trier of fact. Further, material questions remained concerning whether the law firm's independent failure to recognize a problem with the legal description contributed as a cause to plaintiff's damages, whether the firm followed the requisite standard of care in drafting the escrow agreement, and whether the purported terms of the escrow agreement satisfied the requisite standard of care. Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 M 364, 69 P3d 1145 (2003).

Question of Material Fact Concerning Potential Repossession of Business Property and Potential Breach of Duty Regarding Care of Collateral — Summary Judgment Improper: Defendant pledged personal property to plaintiff as collateral for loans. Defendant failed to make payments, and plaintiff notified defendant in 1998 that the property had been repossessed. The same day, several members of defendant's company resigned and formed a new company, to which defendant then leased its personal property for $100 a month. Two other codefendants also claimed an interest in the collateral and objected to the nonjudicial foreclosure of the property. As a result of the objections, plaintiff proceeded with a judicial foreclosure and later moved for summary judgment, claiming that it was entitled to foreclose on the property. Codefendants opposed the summary judgment motion on grounds that plaintiff breached 30-9-207 (repealed 1999) by not taking reasonable care in the custody and preservation of the collateral. The District Court found that although plaintiff sent a notice of repossession, it did not actually take possession of the property and thus did not violate 30-9-207, so summary judgment was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Possession is the triggering factor for the duties in 30-9-207, and material facts remained in dispute regarding plaintiff's potential possession of the property and potential breach of 30-9-207, so summary judgment was improper. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003).

Question Whether Holographic Document Intended as Codicil or List of Property to Be Dispensed — Testamentary Intent Question of Fact to Be Determined by Judge or Jury — Summary Judgment Improper: Johnson executed a formal will and also executed and signed a holographic document consisting of a handwritten list of possessions and names. The District Court concluded that the holographic document was a personal property list made pursuant to 72-2-533, rather than a codicil, and applied 72-2-523 in ordering distribution of the property because there was no intent by Johnson that the holographic document should constitute the complete will. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied 72-2-522, which deals with holographic wills, rather than 72-2-523. The three requirements for a valid holographic will are: (1) individuals must be at least 18 years old and of sound mind; (2) the material provisions of the will must be in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the testator; and (3) the individual must have testamentary intent that the document will dispose of the individual's property after death. Here, the first two elements were met, but a question of fact remained concerning Johnson's intent, precluding summary judgment. The case was remanded to give the parties an opportunity to present evidence concerning Johnson's intent so that the trier of fact could decide the issue under the correct standard. In re Estate of Johnson, 2002 MT 341, 313 M 316, 60 P3d 1014 (2002).

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67 (1988).

Material Fact Remaining Regarding Circumstances of Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment Improper: Contreras entered a highway from a side road and collided with Fitzgerald, who was passing a truck in the same lane that Contreras entered. Fitzgerald requested summary judgment regarding Contreras's negligence as a matter of law for failure to yield the right-of-way. The District Court found that whether Contreras was negligent was a question best left to the jury and denied the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although violation of a motor vehicle statute will not constitute negligence as a matter of law only under extremely limited circumstances, in this case, it was uncertain from the record about what occurred immediately preceding the accident. Evidence conflicted concerning when Contreras entered the highway, whether Contreras and Fitzgerald entered the same lane simultaneously, and how much time Contreras had to react and prevent the accident. These material questions of fact were for the trier of fact to decide, and summary judgment was not proper when these material fact questions remained. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002).

Ambiguity Regarding Whether Settlement Contingent on Alternate Financing — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff sought to foreclose on a loan made to defendant, alleging that defendant's liabilities exceeded the value of the collateral, resulting in default pursuant to the terms of the note. The parties made several attempts to settle the issue, resulting in defendant's payoff to plaintiff, but in an amount that the plaintiff claimed was insufficient. The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff and ordered enforcement of the settlement agreement. However, a letter memorializing the settlement agreement, when considered with the parties' other correspondence, created an ambiguity regarding whether the settlement was contingent on alternate financing. Because there was more than one reasonable interpretation regarding the parties' intention, the parties' affidavits and testimony were admissible to determine intention and raised an issue of fact that precluded summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Stockman Bank v. Potts, 2002 MT 178, 311 M 12, 52 P3d 920 (2002).

Wife Sued for Recovery of Medical Expenses of Estranged Husband — Material Question of Fact Whether Husband Abandoned Wife or Whether They Were Separated by Agreement as Precluding Summary Judgment: The husband moved from the family home, the wife filed for divorce, and the husband died a few weeks later after incurring $32,496 in medical expenses. The wife served as personal representative of her husband's estate and claimed the family allowance as his surviving spouse. Plaintiff was assigned the debt for medical services for purposes of collection. Citing Missoula YWCA v. Bard, 1999 MT 177, 295 M 260, 983 P2d 933 (1999), plaintiff argued that the medical expenses were necessaries of the family and that the wife was therefore responsible for the debt under 40-2-106, while the wife argued that she was not responsible because the parties were legally separated at the time that the expenses were incurred and because the husband had not supported the family during that time. The District Court concluded that because the wife acted as personal representative and received the family allowance as surviving spouse, she was estopped from arguing that she was not legally married and that because there were no factual disputes, plaintiff was entitled to summary judgment. The wife appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Nothing in statute precludes an abandoned or separated spouse from acting as personal representative of a deceased spouse's estate, nor does the role of personal representative preclude a spouse from arguing abandonment or separation by agreement. Section 40-2-104 provides an exception to liability imposed under 40-2-106 if a spouse has been abandoned or if spouses are living separately by agreement. Because a question of material fact existed as to whether the wife was abandoned or separated, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Balyeat Collection Professionals v. Garland, 2002 MT 167, 310 M 464, 51 P3d 1127 (2002).

No Assumption of Risk in Purchase of Damaged Real Property — Summary Judgment Reversed: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a nuisance complaint and a complaint seeking compensation from the companies for damages, after the Lewises acquired title to the inn in 1998. The District Court dismissed the Lewises' claim for damages arising after title was acquired on grounds that the Lewises had assumed the risk of those damages when they purchased the property. On appeal, the District Court was reversed on the issue of postpurchase damages. Under Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782 (1994), assumption of risk is no longer available as a separate affirmative defense in negligence cases. Instead, that defense now merges into the general liability scheme of comparative negligence in which the conduct of the parties is compared based on evidence of negligence and contributory negligence, as established by reasonable and prudent person standards. Here the questions of whether the Lewises negligently purchased an inn that they knew might be subject to future damages or whether those future damages were sufficiently foreseeable to be taken into account in the purchase price of the inn were questions of fact for a jury and should not have been dismissed by summary judgment. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Sufficient Evidence to Create Question of Fact Whether Employee Satisfactorily Performed Job — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Suit in Error: The District Court granted a motion by employer Plum Creek Manufacturing, L.P. (Plum Creek), for summary judgment on employee Andrews' wrongful discharge claim, concluding that although the discharge issue was a question of fact for a jury, even if a discharge had occurred, Plum Creek had good cause for the dismissal. The court declined to use the discharge element as a basis for granting the motion for summary judgment. Andrews argued on appeal that she was either actually or constructively discharged and maintained that any inadequacy on her part was a result of Plum Creek's failure to train her, define procedures, and appropriately supervise and evaluate her in her job. Plum Creek asserted that it had reasonable job-related grounds for dismissing Andrews based on economic grounds and Andrews' failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, regardless of who was at fault for that failure. The Supreme Court noted that District Courts may not adjudicate questions of fact on motions for summary judgment. There was conflicting evidence regarding the admission of failure to perform job duties and regarding performance of job duties, and it was the function of a jury, not the court, to weigh the evidence. Andrews presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether she had satisfactorily performed her job, and the District Court should have allowed the jury to decide if good cause existed to discharge Andrews. Granting of the motion for summary dismissal was erroneous, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings. Andrews v. Plum Creek Mfg., L.P., 2001 MT 94, 305 M 194, 27 P3d 426 (2001).

Liability Exemption Distinguished From Contractual Indemnification: Liss had a homeowner's policy with Safeco Insurance Co. (Safeco) that covered personal liability and medical payments to others. Liss shot Bruthers and claimed that it was an accident and that she was involuntarily intoxicated, but she was nevertheless convicted of aggravated assault after pleading nolo contendere. Bruthers was a nonresident and filed a federal action for compensation for physical injuries, emotional distress, and punitive damages, but eventually dropped the intentional tort claim. Liss gave Safeco a copy of the complaint, and Safeco provided Liss a defense under the personal liability provisions of the homeowner's policy. Safeco then filed a declaratory action, claiming that it had no duty to defend Liss in federal court or to indemnify Liss, based on its theory that: (1) Montana policy and 28-2-702 forbid the contractual indemnification of an individual for intentional and illegal acts; (2) the shooting did not constitute an occurrence as defined in the policy; (3) the intentional act and illegal act exclusions barred coverage; and (4) Liss was collaterally estopped to contest the issue based on the guilty plea. Safeco's motion was granted by summary judgment based on policy provisions excluding intentional and illegal acts from personal liability coverage and the undisputed fact that Liss pleaded guilty to aggravated assault. Both Liss and Bruthers appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a contract whose object is to exempt a person from future potential liability is clearly distinguishable from an insurance contract that indemnifies a person for another party's damages once liability is imposed. Therefore, Safeco's duty to defend and indemnify Liss could not be excused by a declaratory judgment based on public policy in 28-2-702. The question of whether the shooting incident constituted an insurable occurrence or accident remained shrouded in material facts and was inappropriate grounds for summary judgment. The shooting did not fall within the nexus of the per se intentional act case law, absent an admission or substantial evidence establishing the intent of the insured. Lastly, Safeco presented no evidence other than Liss's guilty plea to satisfy its burden of proof that Liss either intentionally shot Bruthers or that the shooting was an illegal act, so the Supreme Court addressed whether a nolo contendere guilty plea in a criminal matter is conclusive proof of intent or illegality and precludes relitigation of the issues in a subsequent civil proceeding. The court applied the three-part collateral estoppel rule in Teitelbaum Furs, Inc. v. Dominion Ins. Co., 375 P2d 439 (Calif. 1962), and Aetna Life & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 207 M 409, 673 P2d 1277 (1984), the second prong of which requires a final judgment on the merits. A guilty plea as a matter of law fails the test because a guilty plea does not constitute a final judgment, so in this case, the plea to aggravated assault carried no collateral estoppel effect in the subsequent civil proceedings. Summary judgment was improper, and the case was remanded. Safeco Ins. Co. of America v. Liss, 2000 MT 380, 303 M 519, 16 P3d 399, 57 St. Rep. 1621 (2000).

Forman Defense — Issues of Material Fact Regarding Whether Insurance Company Breached Duty to Inform Agent of Litigation Risks in Sale of Policy — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserts a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that, pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. The District Court found that Revere owed Deonier a fiduciary duty pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Agency 435 (1958), but, apparently applying 33-18-242, determined that Revere did not breach that duty, and dismissed the breach of fiduciary duty action by summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court found the application of 33-18-242 to be misplaced, the proper analysis being simply whether Revere breached Restatement (Second) of Agency 435 (1958). The Supreme Court agreed that a principal has no duty to inform its agent of unknown future legal positions, but in this case, the potential consequences of applying the Forman defense were not unknown, having been the subject of a Revere corporate counsel paper published in 1987, years before the disability policy at issue in this case was issued. The court also found Revere's argument based on Doettl to be without merit. Although Doettl applied some Montana law, it was not binding on the Montana Supreme Court. Because the issue was still one of first impression in Montana, Revere could not rely on Doettl to support its position that as a matter of uncontroverted fact and law, it had no knowledge of risk to its agents. Thus, the question of whether Revere breached its duty to inform Deonier of the risks of litigation involved issues of material fact, so the District Court's award of summary judgment to Revere was reversible error. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622, 57 St. Rep. 989 (2000).

Duty of City to Inspect City Property for Hazards: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. Plaintiff contended that the city was negligent in allowing a dangerous and hazardous condition to exist on a public right-of-way and guilty of negligence per se under 81-4-105 for allowing a public nuisance. The District Court granted summary judgment, determining as a matter of law that the city owed plaintiff no duty of care because: (1) she was not walking on a sidewalk, street, or path of any kind; (2) the city did not invite her to travel in that area; and (3) there were no city lights or signs in the vicinity. On appeal, plaintiff cited Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), contending that the city ignored its duty to maintain the public streets, sidewalks, and rights-of-way within corporate limits in a reasonably safe condition for public travel by never going onto the premises, mowing it, raking it, or removing debris and that if routine maintenance had been done, the wire would have been found and removed. The Supreme Court agreed. The city's contention that it did not owe a duty of care in this case, because there was nothing in the area suggesting that it was a walkway or inviting the public to use it as such, failed under the Richardson test because of the city's neglect in exercising ordinary care or skill in the management of its property. Reasonable minds could differ on whether the city should have taken some action to inspect or maintain the property, so summary judgment was improper and thus reversed for a jury determination of negligence, including possible contributory negligence. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Summary Judgment Based on Recreational Use Statute Inappropriate: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. The District Court allowed the city to assert an affirmative defense based on 70-16-302, which restricts the liability of a landowner when a person is injured while using the landowner's property for recreational purposes. Because plaintiff submitted no facts, arguments, or evidence to rebut the inference that she was on city property for recreational purposes, the District Court ruled that the city was immune from liability pursuant to the recreational use statute. Notwithstanding that plaintiff was precluded from arguing on appeal what was not raised at trial, the Supreme Court nevertheless considered the argument as part of its de novo review and disagreed that the city was entitled to judgment as a matter of law or that summary judgment was appropriate in this case. The court noted that although walking may in some circumstances be considered a recreational purpose, walking to and from one's home in a residential area of a city may not. Rather than a recreational purpose, walking to and from one's home is an everyday, ordinary, and expected use of city property by one of its citizens, and the District Court erred in applying the recreational use statute in these circumstances when granting summary judgment. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Double Analysis of Foreseeability in Dispute Over Intervening Act of Third Party — Duty of Police to Protect Hospital Worker From Intoxicated Person in Voluntary Custody: Havre police received a report of two girls fighting downtown. They responded and found two intoxicated women fighting, one of whom appeared to require medical treatment. LaTray was working as a nurse at a hospital emergency room when police officers delivered the woman for treatment, accompanied by her sister. The injured woman was placed in protective custody, but neither woman was arrested. When attempting to administer medical care to the injured woman, LaTray was intentionally assaulted and injured by the sister, and LaTray filed an action against the city police officers for negligently failing to exercise proper control over the sister. The District Court found that because the intentional assault was not reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law, there was no duty owed LaTray by the city, and summary judgment was granted to the city. The Supreme Court held that intervening criminal acts of third persons are not automatically unforeseeable as a matter of law, but rather must be addressed in the foreseeability context on a case-by-case basis (see Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018 (1997)). Although foreseeability is ordinarily analyzed only under the duty element of negligence, in a dispute over intervening criminal acts of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice: first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and, second, with regard to proximate causation (see Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999)). The city relied on Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), arguing that because LaTray did not claim the existence of a special relationship or otherwise show that the officers owed LaTray a greater duty of care than that owed to the general public, the city owed LaTray no duty of care. The Supreme Court noted that Phillips has been clarified in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), which stated that a duty to protect third persons arises only when a police officer actually makes an arrest or otherwise takes possession or custody of an individual. Although the officers did not actually arrest the sister or otherwise have a basis for taking her into custody in this case, the officers voluntarily undertook possession or custody in transporting her to the hospital and consequently harbored the ability to control her actions and prevent an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons like LaTray, who falls within the scope of the risk that negligent supervision would foreseeably entail. Thus, the Supreme Court held that, as a matter of law, the city owed a duty of reasonable care to adequately supervise the sister so as to prevent harm to a third person who would foreseeably be placed within the scope of risk arising from negligent supervision. Whether the city breached that duty is an issue for the jury because the causal issue of intervening acts of third parties normally involves questions of fact. Viewed in the light most favorable to LaTray, there was sufficient evidence of the sister's irascible conduct to raise a jury question as to whether she posed a danger to those around her on the day in question, and reasonable jurors could differ as to whether she presented a foreseeable risk of injury to persons in her immediate vicinity. These contested issues of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment as a matter of law, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000). See also Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988), and Estate of Strever v. Inherent Danger of Trenching Activity — Vicarious Liability of Employer for Injuries Caused by Subcontractor's Failure to Reduce Risks: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court found that trenching activity was not inherently or intrinsically dangerous and granted Butte-Silver Bow's motion for summary judgment. The court, citing Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270 (1986), ruled as a matter of law that trenching activities did not fall under the inherently dangerous exception because Beckman's injury could have been avoided through standard precautions. On appeal, the Supreme Court decided that the analysis of the inherently dangerous activity exception in Kemp was manifestly wrong, and overruled that case and its progeny. Instead, the court reaffirmed the holding in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), in which it was determined that the vicarious liability of an employer of a subcontractor was contingent on the nature of the work performed and not on the existence of standard precautions. An employer is therefore vicariously liable for injuries to others caused by a subcontractor's failure to take precautions to reduce unreasonable risks associated with engaging in an inherently dangerous activity. Risks associated with people working in trenches where a cave-in can cause death or serious bodily injury are well recognized in the construction industry as intrinsically or inherently dangerous and are recognized as such as a matter of law. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000), overruling Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990).

Material Question Whether County Negligently Exercised Control Over Subcontractor as Precluding Summary Judgment: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court cited Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990), in holding that the county did not assume a nondelegable duty of safety by contract, finding that Butte-Silver Bow never agreed to supervise the safety of the trenching operations and therefore did not assume a nondelegable duty based on contract that extended to Beckman. Thus, summary judgment was granted to Butte-Silver Bow. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court correctly recognized the distinction between a nondelegable contractual duty and a duty based on the negligent exercise of retained control. However, Micheletto and Kemp provide an incorrect statement of the doctrine of retained control. Here, despite the lack of a written contract, the county retained the means with which to both discover and cure any unreasonably dangerous conditions. The terms of the water mains extension document, which provided that the county may supervise the water extension project, required the county to furnish a qualified construction inspector to monitor work performed during the installation of the water supply system and required that the materials and methods of construction conform to county requirements. The terms, combined with the fact that county employees were present during the trenching operation, constituted sufficient facts to preclude summary judgment for the county. The case was reversed and remanded. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000). See also Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004), in which summary judgment was held to be proper under the Sherner standard absent evidence that an employer knew that an employee would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident.

Determination of Whether Publication of "Most-Wanted" List Considered Privileged — Abuse of Conditional Privilege as Jury Question: Hale brought defamation and negligence claims against the Billings Police Department for publishing Hale's photograph and personal information and broadcasting the information on a cable television most-wanted fugitive program. The District Court summarily dismissed Hale's claims on grounds that the communication between the police and the media was privileged, either as a proper discharge of an official duty or as part of a judicial proceeding pursuant to 27-1-804. However, the court neglected to determine as a matter of law whether the privilege was an absolute or conditional privilege. Absent a mandate by law that the police provide information regarding arrest warrants to crime prevention programs, the privilege was, at best, conditional. Thus, it was a matter for the jury to determine whether the discharge of the official duty exercised by the police in providing criminal information was proper to the extent that the police did not abuse the privilege. Further, under Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), statements made by the police as to the facts of the case or the evidence expected to be given are not yet part of the judicial proceeding and are not privileged. Summary judgment was improper. Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413, 56 St. Rep. 830 (1999), distinguishing Cox v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 222 M 527, 723 P2d 238, 43 St. Rep. 1476 (1986).

Public Airing of County's Most-Wanted Fugitive List — Material Facts as to Falsity of Statements Precluding Summary Judgment: Hale brought defamation and negligence claims against the Billings Police Department for publishing Hale's photograph and personal information and broadcasting the information on a cable television most-wanted fugitive program and for failing to pull the information from the program after Hale's arrest. The District Court summarily dismissed Hale's claims on grounds that the information was truthful or, if not truthful, then constitutionally protected and therefore not defamatory. Hale was depicted on the program as a potentially armed and dangerous fugitive. However, Hale's warrant for domestic abuse was chosen randomly from 3,000 to 5,000 outstanding warrants on file, and his whereabouts was known at all times by the police, suggesting that under the plain meaning of the terms, Hale was not accused of using a weapon and thus could not be considered "armed and dangerous", and was not a "most-wanted" suspect or a "fugitive" from justice. Clarifying Roots v. Mont. Human Rights Network, 275 M 408, 913 P2d 638, 53 St. Rep. 205 (1996), the Supreme Court held that it was improper for the District Court to create an artificial dichotomy by distinguishing statements of opinion from statements of fact, thereby granting unqualified immunity to the former. Citing Restatement (Second) of Torts 617 (1965), the court held that if an opinion is not based on disclosed facts and, as a result, creates the reasonable inference that the opinion is based on undisclosed defamatory facts, that opinion is not afforded constitutional protection. Without that protection, genuine issues of fact regarding the falsity of the statements made during the broadcast remained, making summary judgment improper. Further, the issue remained as to what constituted timely notification of Hale's arrest to the media by the police to avoid breach of their duty not to infringe on Hale's rights. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded. Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413, 56 St. Rep. 830 (1999), following Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co., 497 US 1, 111 L Ed 2d 1, 100 S Ct 2695 (1990).

Special Relationship of Custody or Control by Prerelease Center — Responsibility for Public Safety Within Zone of Risk — Foreseeability: A prerelease center entered into a contract with the Department of Corrections to supervise residents like Gardipee, who walked away from the center and subsequently injured Lopez. The District Court granted summary judgment for the center on grounds that the attack on Lopez was unforeseeable. Generally, there is no duty to protect others against harm by third persons, but in this case, the contract created a special relationship of custody or control, in turn creating a special responsibility upon the center to protect those members of the public who would be placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by negligent supervision of a prerelease resident. As a matter of law, the center owed a duty of reasonable care to all persons present within the zone of danger created by the center's failure to exercise reasonable care in supervising Gardipee. Here, reasonable minds could differ as to whether it was reasonably foreseeable by the center that a failure to supervise Gardipee could pose an unreasonable risk of harm to Lopez in particular. There was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the center knew or should have known that there was enmity between Gardipee and Lopez and a possibility of violence if Gardipee escaped, as well as whether Gardipee's attack was a superseding cause of the harm to Lopez. Both questions were suitable for resolution by a trier of fact, precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a trial on the merits. Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Actionable Section 1983 Claim Under State-Created Danger Theory: A government official who, while acting under color of state law, deprives an individual of constitutionally protected rights may be subject to personal liability for civil damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983. Generally, a government official's failure to protect an individual from harm does not constitute a due process violation. Inaction by the state, even when a danger is known, does not trigger a due process obligation except under the "state-created danger" theory, derived from DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services, 489 US 189, 103 L Ed 2d 249, 109 S Ct 998 (1989), which provides that a constitutional duty to protect may be imposed when state actors have affirmatively acted to create plaintiff's danger or to render plaintiff more vulnerable to it. Adopting the test in Huffman v. County of Los Angeles, 147 F3d 1054 (9th Cir. 1998), the Supreme Court held that to assert an actionable 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim under the state-created danger theory, plaintiff must demonstrate that the state acted affirmatively, with deliberate indifference, in creating a foreseeable danger to plaintiff, leading to deprivation of plaintiff's constitutional rights. In the present case, material facts existed as to whether an officer affirmatively and with deliberate indifference placed a woman in danger, increased her vulnerability to danger, or deprived her of her right to life; thus, summary dismissal of her husband's personal liability claim against the officer was reversible error. Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999). See also Wood v. Ostrander, 879 F2d 583 (9th Cir. 1989), and Kneipp v. Tedder, 95 F3d 1199 (3rd Cir. 1996).

Public Duty Doctrine as Applied to Law Enforcement Personnel — Exception in Cases of Special Relationship: Trina admitted that she had been drinking when stopped in her vehicle by Officer Driscoll, who nevertheless believed that sufficient probable cause did not exist to arrest the woman. Instead, thinking Trina might be impaired, the officer suggested a ride home or that Trina walk the 2-mile distance and warned Trina about returning to the vehicle. Trina decided instead to walk to a phone and call for a ride and was killed in traffic. Trina's husband brought suit for civil damages under 42 U.S.C. 1983, claiming that the officer breached the duty to protect, in violation of Trina's due process rights. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, holding that because no probable cause existed for Trina's arrest, the officer had no duty to protect Trina from harm and that without a duty, the action failed. The public duty doctrine provides that a police officer's duty to protect and preserve the peace is owed to the public at large rather than to a particular person, unless a special relationship exists, thus giving rise to a special duty that is more particular than that owed to the public. A special relationship is established: (1) by a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which the plaintiff is a member, from a particular type of harm; (2) when a government agent undertakes specific action to protect a person or property; (3) by governmental actions that reasonably induce detrimental reliance by a member of the public; and (4) under certain circumstances when the agency has actual custody of the plaintiff or of a third person who harms the plaintiff. Relying on Stewart v. Standard Publishing Co., 102 M 43, 55 P2d 694 (1936), the Supreme Court agreed that although the officer may not have initially owed Trina a duty to protect, that duty was assumed as a matter of law when the officer prevented the woman from driving her car and ensured that she did not attempt to drive. The question of whether the duty to protect was breached is a question of fact for the jury, so summary dismissal was improper. Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999), clarifying and distinguishing Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988). Nelson was followed in Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004), as to elements of exception to the public duty doctrine (nonlaw enforcement case), in Orr v. St., 2004 MT 354, 324 M 391, 106

P3d 100 (2004). See also Krieg v. Massey, 239 M 469, 781 P2d 277, 46 St. Rep. 1839 (1989), Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), and Eves v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 2005 MT 157, 327 M 437, 114 P3d 1037 (2005).

Extrinsic Evidence on Testamentary Intent Raising Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: Kuralt gifted Shannon with 20 acres along the Big Hole River, disguising the transaction as a sale. Shortly before he died, he sent Shannon a letter, which constituted a holographic will, suggesting that he intended to do the same with another 90 acres. The District Court allowed introduction of the letter as extrinsic evidence regarding testamentary intent, then granted summary judgment to the estate after finding that the letter contemplated a separate testamentary instrument not yet in existence to accomplish the transfer of the Montana property. Nevertheless, the letter raised a fundamental disagreement as to a genuine material fact—namely, whether Kuralt intended that the letter effect a posthumous disposition of the property. Regardless of whether the court admitted the evidence because it considered the letter ambiguous or because it agreed with Shannon that extrinsic evidence may be discretionarily admitted in holographic will disputes, the court nevertheless improperly resolved contested issues by granting summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for trial. In re Estate of Kuralt, 1999 MT 111, 294 M 354, 981 P2d 771, 56 St. Rep. 460 (1999).

Burden on County to Show Material Fact Regarding Height of Hedge — Nonconforming Use Not Proved — Summary Judgment Improper: A municipal code provision, passed in 1978, regulated, for traffic safety purposes, the height of hedges that could be grown on corners of intersections at 3 feet, but also permitted the existence of nonconforming uses prior to 1978. Ramirez was injured in a vehicle accident at an intersection where the hedge was taller than 5 feet and sought to hold the county accountable for failing its duty to enforce the ordinance. In granting summary judgment to the county, the District Court held the hedge to be a prior nonconforming use, noting that the hedge had been there since at least 1959. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the county had offered no proof that the hedge was either taller than 3 feet in 1978 or had not been trimmed since 1978. The county did not meet its burden of showing the absence of this genuine issue of material fact; thus, summary judgment was improper. Ramirez v. Hatch, 1999 MT 107, 294 M 316, 979 P2d 1281, 56 St. Rep. 441 (1999).

Genuine Issues of Fact Raised by Newly Discovered Evidence — Summary Judgment Precluded: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The newly discovered evidence, which Ranch Recovery should have been allowed to present in support of the amended counterclaim, raised genuine issues of material fact regarding First Security's compliance with a standby agreement upon which First Security relied for foreclosure against Ranch Recovery's interest. The existence of these issues of fact made summary judgment inappropriate, and the District Court was reversed. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Question of Duty of Highway Contractors to Maintain Road Construction Site in Reasonably Safe Condition — Summary Judgment Precluded: Schmidt was injured on his motorcycle in a road construction area. He sued the contractor, Washington Contractors Group, and the subcontractor, Alpine Construction, for personal injuries. The District Court entered summary judgment for Washington and Alpine, concluding that significant uncontroverted evidence supported the theory that neither breached its standard of care. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that both Washington and Alpine had a duty of ordinary care in maintaining the road construction site in a reasonably safe condition, not the duty of a possessor of premises as in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997), but rather the duty of acting as a reasonable, prudent person would under the circumstances. Questions of fact remained as to: (1) whether the contractors complied with the Manual of Uniform Traffic Control Devices (MUTCD) and, if so, whether mere compliance equated with the exercise of due care, given the condition of the exit ramp; (2) where warning road signs were placed and whether the placement complied with the MUTCD; (3) whether the pavement height differential was unreasonably dangerous to motorcycles; and (4) whether evidence of three other motorcycle accidents that happened at the same spot within 72 hours of Schmidt's accident was sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the contractors were on notice of an unreasonably dangerous condition that required remediation and possibly warnings over and above the requirements of the MUTCD. Reasonable minds could differ regarding whether a breach of the contractors' duty of ordinary care caused Schmidt's accident and subsequent damages; therefore, summary judgment was precluded, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Schmidt v. Washington Contractors Group, Inc., 1998 MT 194, 290 M 276, 964 P2d 34, 55 St. Rep. 814 (1998), distinguishing Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995).

Question of Whether Contract Was Orally Modified Sufficient to Preclude Summary Judgment: For an oral contract to effectively alter the terms of a written contract, the oral agreement must be fully executed on both sides of the agreement. Whether Bernhard and his attorney agreed to permit Doble to continue logging Bernhard's property until all harvestable timber was removed, thereby agreeing to effectively extend the terms of the logging contract, was a question of material fact that precluded an award of summary judgment in Bernhard's favor. Doble v. Bernhard, 1998 MT 124, 289 M 80, 959 P2d 488, 55 St. Rep. 489 (1998).

Reasonableness of Investigating Officers' Use of Deadly Force — Summary Judgment Precluded: The trial court granted the police officers' motion for summary judgment in a case involving the officers' use of deadly force, concluding that, as a matter of law, the officers reasonably feared the imminent use of deadly force against them and were thus justified in responding with deadly force. However, when presented with expert testimony and circumstantial evidence regarding the officers' veracity, jurors could differ as to whether the officers acted reasonably on the day of the shooting. These genuine issues of material fact precluded summary judgment. Scott v. Henrich, 1998 MT 118, 288 M 489, 958 P2d 709, 55 St. Rep. 457 (1998).

Weak Possibility of Manufacturing Defect and Product Liability — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court granted defendants' request for summary judgment on a manufacturing defect claim when the key piece of evidence was unavailable and the expert testimony was conflicting on whether or when a defect existed, concluding that plaintiffs' evidence suggested only a weak possibility that a manufacturing defect was present when the product was shipped from the manufacturer 30 years earlier. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court, considering the evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, concluded that a jury could reasonably find that a defect existed before the product left the manufacturer and that as long as a material issue of fact was in dispute, summary judgment was improper. Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Documents Evidencing Amount of Debt Incorporated Into Complaint and Effectively Put in Issue by Answer — Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Cross-Motions Not Proof of Absence of Genuine Issues of Fact: Montana Metal Buildings, Inc. (MMB), constructed a metal building for Shapiro at the Three Forks Airport and later served a notice of claim and construction lien upon Shapiro for $26,889.43. MMB claimed that this amount was owed by Shapiro as the balance due for labor and materials necessary for construction of the building. MMB subsequently sued Shapiro for that amount in foreclosure of the lien, attaching copies of invoices to its complaint. MMB moved for summary judgment on all issues, and Shapiro moved for summary judgment on issues concerning the defectiveness of the lien. The District Court granted summary judgment on all issues for MMB. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment and that genuine issues of fact still existed in that when MMB attached copies of the invoices to its complaint, they became part of the complaint for all purposes. The amounts established by those invoices were effectively put into issue by Shapiro when, in his answer, he asserted that he owed no further payments to MMB. The Supreme Court held that at this point in their proceedings, MMB had the obligation, as the party moving for summary judgment on the issue of the amount owed, to come forward with other evidence in the form of affidavits, discovery documents, or otherwise to overcome Shapiro's denials and establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact. The only affidavit that was submitted by MMB, the Supreme Court noted, addressed the issue of the sufficiency of the property description for the purposes of the lien and did not present evidence as to the amounts owed by Shapiro. Citing Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268 (1993), the Supreme Court pointed out that MMB could not rely on arguments of counsel to overcome the existence of an issue of material fact. The Supreme Court further noted, citing Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), that because the invoices were not submitted or filed by MMB as part of its motion for summary judgment, the invoices are not evidence of what was contained in the invoices but merely allegations of the complaint and were insufficient to overcome Shapiro's denials in his answer. In response to MMB's argument that Shapiro waived any right to object to MMB's evidentiary basis for its motion, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no evidentiary basis for MMB's motion for summary judgment on the issue of the amount of the debt because the invoices were not submitted for the purposes of the motion but only for the purposes of the complaint and had been effectively addressed by Shapiro's answer. Citing Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), the Supreme Court also pointed out that just because both parties have moved for summary judgment does not alone establish the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, particularly when the motions are not on precisely the same issues, and the District Court therefore apparently assumed, incorrectly, that there were no such genuine issues. Mont. Metal Bldg., Inc. v. Shapiro, 283 M 471, 942 P2d 694, 54 St. Rep. 731 (1997).

Question Over Existence of Links Between Feline and Plaintiff's Catapulting Down Stairs: Smith argued that Kerns was negligent in letting his cat have the run of his veterinary office because as she was leaving the office, she looked behind her to make sure that the cat was not going to run outside and fell down the stairs. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's grant of summary judgment dismissing Smith's claim, ruling that there was a question as to whether the cat moved, thereby distracting Smith and causing her to fall. Smith v. Kerns, 281 M 114, 931 P2d 717, 54 St. Rep. 86 (1997).

Foreseeability of Results of Practical Joke — Substantial Factor Test of Causation — Defense of Superseding Intervening Cause Unavailable: Codefendants Linda and David played an April Fools' Day joke on their friend Dennis by calling him at another friend's residence and feigning distress. In his rush to assist, Dennis was in a car accident and injured plaintiff Kolar. The District Court summarily dismissed Kolar's claim against Linda and David, holding that reasonable minds could not differ as to the issue of foreseeability and that although the results of the practical joke were tragic, they were not in any way foreseeable by Linda and David. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment, holding that Dennis's state of mind when he left the friend's residence and the extent to which Kolar's injuries should have been foreseeable by Linda and David were questions of fact for the jury, not susceptible to summary judgment. Because the case involved allegations of contributory negligence, multiple causes, and multiple defendants, the use of the substantial factor test of causation was appropriate. The affirmative defense of superseding intervening cause was not available to defendants involved in a practical joke. Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996).

Questions as to Buyer's Intent and Seller's Impossibility of Performance — Summary Judgment Improper: Seller sold 20 acres with a separate option agreement to reacquire 15 of the acres. The option agreement stated that if the option was not exercised within a year, buyer was to retain the 15 acres and the option was void. The buyer's affidavit stated that it was his intent to purchase 20 acres, subject to the option, and to retain all 20 acres if the option was not exercised in accordance with its terms. Because of a conflict between the local government master plan (now growth policy) and the zoning map for the area, which was not resolved within the year of the option, the option could not be exercised. The District Court granted seller summary judgment in the seller's action for declaratory relief, ruling that it was impossible for seller to comply with the option because of the conflict between the master plan (now growth policy) and the zoning map and that equity and good conscience required that seller be given reasonable additional time to comply with the option conditions. The language of the option agreement and the buyer's affidavit showed a genuine issue of material fact with regard to the parties' intent. In addition, the buyer's contention that seller was dilatory in exercising the option and that the delay caused the option to expire raised a genuine issue of material fact as to the question of impossibility of performance. Therefore, the grant of summary judgment was error. Furthermore, the District Court exceeded its authority in granting equitable modification of the express terms of the option contract to give seller additional time to perform. 360 Ranch Corp. v. R&D Holding, 278 M 487, 926 P2d 260, 53 St. Rep. 1038 (1996).

Negligent Failure to Illuminate Sidewalk as Question of Fact — Resolution by Jury Rather Than Summary Judgment: Brown was injured on Demaree's unlit sidewalk stepdown landing while delivering a newspaper. The trial court granted Demaree's motion for summary judgment, holding that while a property owner has a duty to maintain sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition and to warn of hidden and lurking dangers, Demaree had done all that society could reasonably ask in this regard. The court noted that Brown had carried a flashlight but chose not to use it and that requiring a home owner to constantly illuminate property would place an unreasonable burden on the home owner that the law did not contemplate. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment. In this case, reasonable minds could differ on whether Demaree should have illuminated the sidewalk or warned of the sidewalk stepdown landing and the question should have been resolved by a jury. The test to be applied by the jury is not whether some other landowner under different factual circumstances is or is not required to illuminate property, but rather whether the landowner keeps a premises reasonably safe and warns of hidden dangers while taking into consideration the use to which the property is put and its setting, location, and other physical characteristics, along with the type of person who would foreseeably visit the premises and the type of hazard or unsafe condition alleged. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Brown v. Demaree, 272 M 579, 901 P2d 567, 52 St. Rep. 819 (1995), following Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985), and distinguishing Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969). See also Welton v. Lucas, 283 M 202, 940 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 562 (1997).

Dismissal of Action for Tortious Interference With Business Relationship Improper: Farrington sued Buttrey for tortious interference with a business relationship because Buttrey's refusal to allow him to enter its stores for any purpose resulted in his being fired by a company that supplied food products to Buttrey. The lower court granted Buttrey's motion for summary judgment, ruling that because of previous dealings with Farrington when he had been employed by a different supplier, Buttrey was justified in excluding him from Buttrey store premises. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that Farrington's duties with the new supplier were different from the duties that he had with the first supplier and that a question of fact existed as to whether or not Buttrey was justified in excluding Farrington from store premises. Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277, 52 St. Rep. 667 (1995).

Evidence by Both Parties Regarding Elements of Liability — Summary Judgment Improper: When both parties produced evidence and testimony to support their arguments concerning the elements of negligence in contention, a summary or directed verdict was inappropriate. Because the determinative question was one of fact and both sides presented facts in support of their positions, the conflicting evidence on questions regarding duty, breach of duty, and causation precluded summary judgment in light of genuine issues of material fact. Contreras v. Vannoy Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 270 M 393, 892 P2d 557, 52 St. Rep. 246 (1995).

Standard of Care for Nonemergency Dental Care: Burlinghams sued dentist Mintz, alleging that Mintz's negligence caused Candance Burlingham's injury. Applying the standard of care set out in Negaard v. Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968), the District Court excluded two of Burlinghams' standard of care experts, one a suburban dentist from St. Louis and the other an oral surgeon from Albany, Oregon, on grounds that the experts had no idea of the standard of care in Eureka, Montana, or a similar community, and lacking expert testimony, the court summarily dismissed plaintiffs' case. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the standard of care enunciated in Negaard was no longer appropriate for nonemergency dental care in Montana. The Supreme Court noted that the foundation for testimony must necessarily include evidence that the witness is familiar with the standard of care at the time when and the place where the alleged act of negligence occurred. Expert testimony may consist of direct or indirect knowledge of the standard of care in the community where the act occurred or in a similar community and may be based on evidence that the standard of care for a procedure at issue is the same in all communities, regardless of size or location. If the basis of the witness's familiarity with the applicable standard of care is that the standard is uniform throughout the country and evidence to the contrary is presented, then the issue raised by the contrary evidence goes to the weight of the witness's testimony but does not preclude its admission. In the case at hand, Burlinghams presented two appropriate experts who were familiar with the applicable nonemergency standard of care for dentists in the community, by either direct or indirect knowledge, thereby meeting their burden of establishing a prima facie case. The District Court erred by excluding the experts and granting summary judgment. Burlingham v. Mintz, 270 M 277, 891 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 181 (1995), overruling, to the extent in conflict, Negaard v. Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968).

Questions Regarding Proper Settlement of Estate — Summary Judgment Precluded: An attorney employed to settle an estate contended that pleadings and supporting documents established that he had a right to funds he retained, based on the parties' agreement and the fact that he settled the case as requested. He also contended that plaintiffs could not establish the elements of ownership and damage essential to a claim for conversion and that he was thus entitled to summary judgment on the issue of conversion of funds from an estate settlement. Plaintiffs offered evidence that there was no such agreement and thus there was a factual issue regarding ownership and that the attorney's withdrawal of funds without consent was sufficient to establish damages. The Supreme Court found that sufficient genuine issues of material fact existed to preclude summary judgment. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Question Regarding Water Hookups and Conformance With Water Users' Bylaws — Summary Judgment Improper: In granting summary judgment, the trial court found that a water users' association had complied with its bylaws in restricting simultaneous use and transfer of memberships. However, there were disputed issues of fact regarding application of the bylaws that precluded summary judgment as a matter of law, and the Supreme Court reversed for further proceedings. Roe v. Corbin Water Users' Ass'n, 267 M 503, 885 P2d 419, 51 St. Rep. 1134 (1994), citing Edgewater Townhouse Homeowner's Ass'n v. Holtman, 256 M 182, 845 P2d 1224 (1993).

Alleged Invalidity of Promissory Notes — Summary Judgment Improper — Stockholder Status Not Prerequisite for RICO Claim: In a suit seeking payment on promissory notes, the first of which was executed in exchange for 1,500 shares of stock, the validity of the note was challenged on the grounds that it was in violation of 35-1-606 (now repealed), which provided that neither promissory notes nor future services constitute payment for shares of a corporation. The Supreme Court held that it was error for the lower court to grant summary judgment when the record did not contain sufficient facts to allow a determination of the invalidity of the promissory notes at issue and that it was further error to dismiss defendant's RICO counterclaims because stockholder status is not a prerequisite for standing to bring a RICO claim. Kuhns v. Koessler, 266 M 339, 880 P2d 1293, 51 St. Rep. 800 (1994).

Failure to Comply With Provisions of Federal Act Incorporated by Reference Into Contract — Affirmative Defense: The Farm Credit Bank instituted suit to foreclose on a loan agreement with the Graveleys and filed for summary judgment. The Graveleys argued that the bank was estopped from foreclosing because it had not complied with the restructuring provisions of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, which had been incorporated by reference into the parties' agreement. The Supreme Court held that the Graveleys were entitled to assert as an affirmative defense the failure of the bank to follow the provisions of the Act and that allowing the defense was not synonymous with allowing a foreclosure court to substitute its judgment for that of the bank's loan officers. The Supreme Court also held that the lower court had correctly denied the motion for summary judgment on the basis that factual issues existed with respect to the merits of the Graveleys' affirmative defense. State ex rel. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. District Court, 267 M 1, 881 P2d 594, 51 St. Rep. 709 (1994), following Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Parsons, 758 F. Supp. 1368 (D.C. Mont. 1990), followed in AgAmerica, FCB v. Robson, 272 M 413, 901 P2d 100, 52 St. Rep. 800 (1995).

Act Within Scope of Employment and Authority — Summary Judgment Improper: Cloutier arranged to have a pickup truck owned by State Medical Oxygen & Supply, a company of which he was an officer and director, used to haul mattresses and employees of Cay Enterprises, a company of which he was also an officer and director. A Cay Enterprises employee who was injured in the move sought damages from State Medical Oxygen & Supply, alleging negligence in supplying the vehicle. The District Court dismissed the claim by summary judgment, improperly applying Restatement (Second) of Torts 390 (1965), which deals with supplying a chattel to a person incompetent to use it safely. The more proper application was Restatement (Second) of Torts 308 (1965), which deals with the use of a thing or engaging in an activity under the control of an actor if the actor knows that the use or activity might create an unreasonable risk of harm to others. Cloutier was operating within the course and scope of his employment with both companies, thus his knowledge as agent was imputed to the company as principal. That knowledge was a question of fact to be determined by a trier of fact. Summary judgment was improper given that issues of negligence remained to be decided. Williams v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 265 M 111, 874 P2d 1225, 51 St. Rep. 458 (1994).

Skier Responsibility Law — Questionable Skiing Conditions as Precluding Summary Judgment: Mead was injured in a skiing accident, but the District Court summarily dismissed his damages claim because the injury resulted from inherent risks of skiing, as set forth in 23-2-736. However, disputed questions of fact existed as to whether the injury was a result of variations in skiing terrain and whether Mead was skiing beyond the designated trail. Those questions were issues to be decided by the finder of fact after consideration of all the evidence; therefore, summary judgment was inappropriate. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Factual Issues Involving Loaned Title and Adverse Possession — Summary Judgment Precluded: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Both parties sought a declaration of ownership in a quiet title action. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied Anderson's motion for summary judgment because there were genuine issues of material fact as to the parties' oral agreement, as to the conditions under which Anderson occupied the property, and as to which of the two deeds controlled the transaction. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Part-Time Employee Fired After Taking Second, Full-Time Job — Mitigation of Damages: It was error to find that a part-time Burger King employee fired shortly after she took a second job at the Black Angus mitigated any wrongful discharge damages by working full-time at the Black Angus and earning more than she earned at Burger King. It was also error to find that defendant was entitled to summary judgment because employee suffered no damages. The work hours at the two places were presumably compatible, so she could have worked both jobs. Therefore, she suffered the loss of her Burger King earnings. Morton v. M-W-M, Inc., 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576, 51 St. Rep. 39 (1994).

Restaurant Employee Fired After Taking Second Job at Another Restaurant While on Vacation: A Burger King assistant manager was fired. Defendant's motion for summary judgment in the wrongful discharge proceeding claimed that plaintiff requested vacation to tend to her family and used it to work at the Black Angus, that she was thus dishonest, and that the Black Angus was a Burger King competitor. Burger King permitted moonlighting with a noncompetitor. Summary judgment for defendant was reversed because plaintiff raised issues as to whether her vacation request was made according to Burger King policy, whether she had misled Burger King to obtain vacation time to work at a second, new job, and whether her two employers were competitors. Morton v. M-W-M, Inc., 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576, 51 St. Rep. 39 (1994).

Question of Potentially Defective and Dangerous Marshmallows — Summary Judgment Improper: After a small child aspirated a piece of marshmallow and suffered brain damage, the family sued the manufacturer and attending physician, contending that the marshmallows were defective and unreasonably dangerous because they lacked an effective warning. In summarily dismissing the issue, the trial court relied on Comment j, Restatement (Second) of Torts 402A, for the proposition that a seller is not required to warn with respect to products that are only dangerous when consumed in excessive quantities if that danger is generally known and recognized. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erroneously resolved questions of fact regarding the chemical properties of marshmallows, the foreseeability of the danger of aspiration in children, and causation. Summary judgment was therefore improper, and the case was remanded for trial. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Issues of Fact Regarding Damages From Fish Kill — Summary Judgment Improper: Hagens sought damages when over 8,000 pounds of trout in their fish farm died after the county weed management district applied a weed poison adjacent to the ditch that supplied water to the farm. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the district and the chemical manufacturer, concluding that Hagens had failed to submit sufficient evidence to establish that exposure to the weed poison caused the death of the fish. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that although a plaintiff does not meet the burden of proof by merely establishing that an incident occurred, in actions dealing with product liability, sufficient evidence to make a prima facie case may consist of establishing the circumstances of the incident, similar occurrences under similar circumstances, and elimination of alternative causes. Substantial questions of fact existed as to the cause of death, including contrasting expert testimony, to preclude summary judgment on the issues of liability and punitive damages. Hagen v. Dow Chem. Co., 261 M 487, 863 P2d 413, 50 St. Rep. 1421 (1993).

Genuine Issue Whether Employee Fired for Cause or for Reporting Crimes at Workplace: An auto dealer employee reported apparent illegal drug activities by several dealership employees to state authorities and at their request agreed to continue to provide such information and to attempt to purchase illegal drugs. There was no evidence that he was to be paid for this. He was fired 6 days later, allegedly because, as stated in a recorded phone call he made to his boss, he was "a [expletive deleted] snitch and we don't want you around here . . . . Every time we make a move, you call the [expletive deleted] FBI." Several weeks later, he was paid $40 for the information provided. Summary judgment for the employer in a wrongful discharge action thwarted the very purpose of the statute, which provides that a discharge in retaliation for reporting a violation of public policy is a wrongful discharge, and was reversed, although denial of employee's motion for summary judgment was affirmed because employer alleged reasons that if proved would support employee's dismissal. The case was remanded to determine whether the discharge was for good cause or for reporting a violation of public policy. Krebs v.

Ryan Oldsmobile, 255 M 291, 843 P2d 312, 49 St. Rep. 1016 (1992), followed in Motarie v. N. Mont. Joint Refuse Disposal District, 274 M 239, 907 P2d 154, 52 St. Rep. 1209 (1995).

Material Question of Value of Profit Share Granted Employee as Element of Termination Agreement — Summary Judgment Improper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for a distribution to him of a share of company profits, both prior to and after the termination of employment. Any issue of profit distributions prior to termination was barred by a waiver of claims. However, a question of material fact regarding the calculation of and disproportionate nature of the profit sharing distribution after termination was sufficient to preclude summary judgment because the amount to be paid was unknown to both parties at the time of termination. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Questions of Proper Adherence to Personnel Policies as Precluding Summary Judgment on Issue of Wrongful Discharge: The existence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding personnel policies in effect at the time of an employee's alleged wrongful discharge, coupled with denial of the employee's opportunity to enter into evidence written personnel policies purported to be in effect at the time of discharge, effectively denied the employee a hearing on the issue and precluded summary dismissal of the employee's wrongful discharge claim. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992).

Issues of Fact Arising From Separation Agreement — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: A separation agreement provided that the husband's partnership interests be liquidated and the proceeds be placed in trust for the payment of child support. When the interests had not been liquidated or child support paid in full 37 months after dissolution, the District Court granted summary judgment, holding husband responsible for $52,200 in support. Reversing and remanding, the Supreme Court found summary judgment inappropriate when issues of fact remained as to the value of the partnership, reasons for failure to liquidate, and husband's capacity to pay the support obligations. In re Marriage of Wilsey, 253 M 85, 831 P2d 590, 49 St. Rep. 406 (1992).

Failure to Consider Affidavit of Expert on Value of Farm Equipment — Question of Whether Sales Were Commercially Reasonable as Precluding Summary Judgment: The District Court granted summary judgment to creditor who sold farm equipment to satisfy deficiencies, finding that the sales were commercially reasonable because the creditor properly notified debtor Michels of the pending sales pursuant to 30-9-504 (now repealed). In opposing summary judgment, Michels submitted the affidavit of a former farm implement dealer who was familiar with the equipment and who testified that the amount sought through the sales was far below the value of the equipment. The affidavit raised a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether the sales were commercially reasonable that was sufficient to constitute error in the grant of summary judgment. Agricredit Acceptance Corp. v. Michels, 250 M 23, 817 P2d 704, 48 St. Rep. 874 (1991).

Summary Judgment Improper — Terms of Purchase Agreement Unclear: The defendant had entered into an agreement with the bank to purchase certain real estate from the bank and had placed $50,000 in escrow as earnest money. The buyer refused to go through with the sale on the basis that the mortgage presented by the bank at the time of sale differed from terms agreed to in the buy-sell agreement. The lower court granted the bank's motion for summary judgment and awarded the bank the earnest money and attorney fees. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the terms of the mortgage were different from the terms set out in the buy-sell agreement and that therefore the summary judgment was improper. Payne Realty & Housing, Inc. v. First Sec. Bank of Livingston, 247 M 374, 807 P2d 177, 48 St. Rep. 234 (1991). On remand, the District Court reasoned that the bank, as both lender and seller, did not offer the buyer financing terms consistent with the buy-sell agreement and that because there was no meeting of the minds, summary judgment was proper and the buyer was entitled to return of the earnest money, together with interest and attorney fees. The bank appealed, contending that genuine issues existed precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court agreed, concluding that the buyer had not established an absence of factual issues with regard to his allegation that the buy-sell agreement was not binding or that if the contract was binding, the bank was the breaching party. Further, contradictory evidence showing the possibility of issues of prevention of contract performance, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, promissory estoppel, and negligent misrepresentation also made summary judgment improper. The case was remanded again for resolution of the factual issues. Payne Realty & Housing, Inc. v. First Sec. Bank of Livingston, 256 M 19, 844 P2d 90, 49 St. Rep. 1098 (1992).

Dispute as to Existence of Oral Contract: When there was a dispute as to the existence of an oral contract and as to whether, if there was such a contract, it was capable of performance within a year, it was error to grant summary judgment. Beaverhead Bar Supply, Inc. v. Harrington, 247 M 117, 805 P2d 560, 48 St. Rep. 117 (1991).

Control by General Contractor With Subcontractor Consent: It was error to grant summary judgment in an action for a work-related accident when the employee alleged that the general contractor had exercised direct control of the employee with the consent of the employee's employer, the subcontractor. Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519, 48 St. Rep. 59 (1991).

Refusal to Grant Defendant's Motion for Ruling of No Liability — Plaintiff's Motion for Ruling of Liability Not Automatically Granted: In a wrongful discharge case, the defendant brought a summary judgment motion seeking a ruling that it was not liable as a matter of law. The lower court refused to grant the motion. The plaintiff then moved the court for a ruling that the defendant was liable as a matter of law, and the lower court granted the motion, stating that it was compelled to grant the motion because it had denied the defendant's motion for a ruling of no liability. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the denial of the defendant's motion only meant that the defendant's nonliability could not be determined as a matter of law but that the defendant could still argue its case during trial. The ruling against the defendant did not mean that the lower court had to grant the plaintiff's motion on the opposite side of the question. State ex rel. First Bank System v. District Court, 240 M 77, 782 P2d 1260, 46 St. Rep. 1956 (1989).

Ambiguity of Draft Purporting to Be Release That Is Also Receipt — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court improperly granted summary judgment for an insurance company after finding plaintiff had signed a release from suit. The Supreme Court found a contractual ambiguity existed because the release language was contained in a $1,500 draft that purported to be a release but was also a receipt in certain situations. The District Court adopted verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions presented by the insurer, which put it in the position of a trier of factual issues rather than determining whether genuine issues of material fact existed on the motion for summary judgment. Existence of ambiguity precluded summary judgment. Buskirk v. Nelson, 237 M 455, 774 P2d 398, 46 St. Rep. 964 (1989).

Challenge of Validity of Release on Basis of Unconscionability — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff signed a release for personal injuries with an insurance company in exchange for $8,900. Plaintiff later sued insureds, who were granted summary judgment after pleading the affirmative defense of release. However, a release is governed by contract law and may be rescinded for the same reasons that allow rescission of a contract. Therefore, the validity of a release may be challenged on the basis of unconscionability. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment after finding the release was unconscionable based on: (1) plaintiff's dire financial situation, lack of education and legal advice, and vulnerability; (2) substantial uncertainty as to the extent of injury and future prognosis at the time of settlement; and (3) haste in executing the release. Taken together, the circumstances raised an issue of fact whether justice was done, precluding summary judgment. Kelly v. Widner, 236 M 523, 771 P2d 142, 46 St. Rep. 591 (1989).

Nonstatutory Exceptions to At-Will Termination of Employment — Reversal of Summary Judgment: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment dismissing employee's suit, holding that factual questions existed on whether the termination fell under one of the four nonstatutory exceptions to the right of the at-will employer to discharge an employee. The court stated that the exceptions were: (1) the discharge violates public policy; (2) the discharge breaches an express or implied promise of job security; (3) the discharge breaches the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and (4) negligent discharge. Prout v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 236 M 152, 772 P2d 288, 46 St. Rep. 257 (1989).

Issue of Material Facts as to Plaintiff's Mental Illness — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Nearly 8 years after the plaintiff was discharged from his employment, his guardian ad litem filed a complaint against his former employer alleging wrongful discharge and claiming that the 3-year statute of limitation was tolled due to the plaintiff's mental illness. Upon the employer's motion for summary judgment, the trial court dismissed the complaint as untimely filed. In response to the employer's contention that the plaintiff's pursuit of other benefit claims demonstrates an absence of mental illness, the Supreme Court held that that is an issue to be decided at trial, not on a motion for summary judgment, because it is not an issue that is susceptible to resolution based on written affidavits without the benefit of cross-examination in court. Therefore, the matter was remanded because there is a material issue of fact concerning the plaintiff's mental condition that precludes summary judgment. Bestwina v. Village Bank, 235 M 329, 767 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 27 (1989).

Question of Encroachment in Sale of Property — Summary Judgment Improper: A grant of summary judgment was improper on a claim for breach of contract for sale of real property because neither party submitted proof as to whether there was a legal right of encroachment, and this fact question was material to the outcome. D'Agostino v. Schapp, 230 M 59, 748 P2d 466, 45 St. Rep. 14 (1988).

Responsibility of Defendant or Third Party — Issue of Fact: Defendant city contracted with third party consultant to provide engineering services for a pumphouse project. The pumphouse was allegedly built on the land of another property owner. The trial court adopted the city's contention that, as engineer, the consultant was responsible for the error. Summary judgment was granted. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, finding a contested question of fact concerning whether the city or the consultant had the responsibility to locate and actually did locate the pumphouse site. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Parol Evidence Necessary to Determine Intention When Latent Ambiguity Exists: A party transferred property back to sellers in lieu of foreclosure. The transfer arguably constituted a technical conveyance. "Conveyance" had different meanings for the parties and therefore was to be interpreted in accord with the manifest intent of the parties. Parol evidence was necessarily admissible to demonstrate and explain this latent ambiguity, and summary judgment on the issue was improper. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987), followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Agency Relationship of National Realty Organization With Locally Owned Franchisee as Question of Fact: Summary judgment was improper where a genuine issue as to a material fact existed regarding home buyers' reliance on the name and reputation of a national realty organization despite an "independently owned and operated" disclaimer displayed on materials furnished by the local franchisee. Burkland v. Electronic Realty Associates, Inc., 228 M 113, 740 P2d 1142, 44 St. Rep. 1384 (1987).

Question Whether Checks Cashed Without Authorization — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court improperly granted summary judgment to bank when it assumed, absent evidence in the record, that checks were cashed by an unauthorized signer. The determination that the signature was unauthorized could not be made without dealing with the rights and liabilities between the signer and the person to whom the checks were originally made out. First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 44 St. Rep. 407 (1987).

Nonapplicability of North Dakota Dram Shop Law to Montana Bar — Liability Under Montana Law Not Litigated in North Dakota: In a wrongful death action, the personal representative filed suit in North Dakota and Montana. The North Dakota Supreme Court dismissed the action with prejudice, narrowly holding that a Montana bar could not be liable under the North Dakota Dram Shop Act; however, the issue of liability under Montana law was never litigated. The Montana Supreme Court held that, under the Full Faith and Credit Clause, Art. IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., and under 26-3-203, relitigation of the issue of extraterritorial effect of the North Dakota Dram Shop Act was barred by res judicata. However, factual questions precluded summary judgment in Montana, and as the liability issue was not litigated, Montana courts were free to examine the issue. Thoring v. LaCounte, 225 M 77, 733 P2d 340, 44 St. Rep. 264 (1987). See also Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329, 43 St. Rep. 93 (1986), and Thoring v. Bottensek, 350 NW 2d 586 (N.D. 1984).

Questions of Anticipated Harm and Duty of Ordinary Care as Material Issues of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In reversing a summary judgment as improper, the Supreme Court found that material questions of fact for a jury existed on the issues of whether: (1) the town of Whitehall should have anticipated that harm would be caused by the condition of the sidewalk despite the knowledge and obviousness of the condition; and (2) the town of Whitehall exercised ordinary care to keep the sidewalk reasonably safe. Even if it appeared that recovery under these issues was very remote, they constituted genuine issues of material fact; therefore, summary judgment was not appropriate. Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986).

Interpretation of Deed Reservation — Summary Judgment Improper: When a royalty reservation in a deed was ambiguous and the true intent of the parties was discernible only with reference to extrinsic evidence and not from the deed alone, it was error for the trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of the mineral owners against the royalty owners. Proctor v. Werk, 220 M 246, 714 P2d 171, 43 St. Rep. 333 (1986), distinguished in Ferriter v. Bartmess, 281 M 100, 931 P2d 709, 54 St. Rep. 79 (1997).

Summary Judgment Erroneous on Damage Issue — Affidavit Not Considered: Appellants requested the lower court to wait until an engineer's affidavit was submitted before ruling on the county's motion for summary judgment on a road damage issue. The court ruled on the motion without waiting for the affidavit. The Supreme Court remanded for consideration of the affidavit by the court. Lee v. Flathead County, 217 M 370, 704 P2d 1060, 42 St. Rep. 1258 (1985), distinguished in Carelli v. Hall, 279 M 202, 926 P2d 756, 53 St. Rep. 1116 (1996).

Issue of Fact — Capacity in Which Promissory Note Signed: Summary judgment was not proper in an action on a promissory note when defendants had been sued individually but claimed, despite the appearance of the note, to have executed the note in their capacity as officers of a landscaping company. Although generally an unambiguous note cannot be varied by parol evidence, 30-4-403 specifically allows proof beyond the provisions of the note itself; thus, defendants' contentions established the existence of an issue of material fact. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank v. Papp, 215 M 494, 698 P2d 851, 42 St. Rep. 577 (1985).

Insurance Coverage — Family Relationship — Implied Consent — Issue of Material Fact: The son ran away from home with his parents' vehicle and subsequently was involved in a one-car accident. The trial court erred in granting summary judgment, holding that there was no liability insurance coverage for the insureds' minor son under the parents' policy. Because a family relationship exists between the insureds and the vehicle's driver, the parents' implied consent to their son's use of the vehicle remains a genuine issue of material fact. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Janzer, 215 M 260, 697 P2d 460, 42 St. Rep. 337 (1985).

Attorney's Obligation to Deal in Good Faith: Because of the inequality that exists between attorney and client in bargaining over a fee, attorney has an obligation to deal fairly and in good faith when negotiating, charging, and collecting a fee. In a fee dispute over handling of dissolution, client pleaded sufficient facts to raise question whether there was a breach of the obligation owed to deal fairly and in good faith. District Court erred in granting summary judgment for attorney. Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial, giving client leave to amend counterclaim to specifically describe a breach of the implied covenant. Morse v. Espeland, 215 M 148, 696 P2d 428, 42 St. Rep. 251 (1985).

Effect of Guaranty on Promissory Note — Issue of Material Fact: The District Court erred in granting summary judgment because material issues of fact emerged at the hearing on motion for summary judgment. The parties to a loan guaranty both had a different idea concerning the amount of the loan proceeds being guaranteed by plaintiffs. Summary judgment is usually inappropriate where the intent of the contracting parties is an important consideration. Twite v. First Bank, 214 M 348, 692 P2d 471, 41 St. Rep. 2518 (1984), followed in Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

Priority of Interests in Receivership Property: In proceeding relating to the priority of interests in the property of entity in receivership, summary judgment for plaintiffs was improper where several important issues of fact remained, especially concerning the validity of the security interests held by certain creditors. The judgment was reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Doubt Resolved in Favor of Party Opposing: Reagan's predecessor in interest converted his "net proceeds interest" in certain oil and gas leases into a "general obligation and liability" of Union Oil and Montana Power. Reagan brought suit alleging that Union Oil and Montana Power had improperly withheld portions of Reagan's annual payment for payment of taxes. The District Court erred in granting Reagan's motion for summary judgment as there was a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether the conversion to a general obligation and liability created an "economic interest". In addition, the conduct of the parties in the execution and acquiescence to the terms of the division orders created a genuine issue of fact. The party opposing a motion for summary judgment must be afforded the benefit of all reasonable inference which may be drawn from the offered proof. Reagan v. Union Oil Co., 208 M 1, 675 P2d 953, 41 St. Rep. 131 (1984). See also Dare v. Mont. Petroleum Marketing Co., 212 M 274, 687 P2d 1015, 41 St. Rep. 1735 (1984), and Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Negligence — Judgment Based on Facts Deemed Admitted Due to Failure to Respond to Request for Admission: On June 29, 1979, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging that in July 1977, defendants negligently caused herbicides to be sprayed in a springwater ditch leading to plaintiff's pond and that the herbicides killed 32,411 rainbow trout which plaintiff was raising in his pond for commercial resale. On June 3, 1981, plaintiff filed a request for admission of facts and genuineness of documents under Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P. Defendants failed to respond within 30 days of service. Defendants did not answer the complaint until July 29, 1981, 1 day after plaintiff moved for a default judgment. On June 15, 1982, plaintiff moved for summary judgment, alleging that no genuine issue of material fact existed since each of the matters set forth in his request for admission was deemed admitted and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The court gave defendants 1 week from June 30, 1982, to file a brief in opposition to the motion for summary judgment. No brief was filed until the day before a hearing scheduled by the court in February 1983. In opposition to the motion, defendants argued that summary judgment was improper because plaintiff had not established each of the elements of negligence and that genuine issues of material fact existed. The District Court ruled in favor of plaintiff, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Because defendants had admitted each fact necessary to sustain plaintiff's negligence claim against them, plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Further, defendants had not properly raised any additional material factual issues. The initial burden of proof in summary judgment matters rests with the moving party, but that burden shifts when the record discloses no genuine issue of material fact. Detert v. Lake County, 207 M 460, 674 P2d 1097, 41 St. Rep. 76 (1984).

Issue of Fact as to Whether Promissory Note Procured by Fraud: In 1978, plaintiff had leased a number of mink to defendants in return for payment by defendants of a portion of the annual kit crop. At the time of the lease, plaintiff strongly suspected that a small percentage of the mink were infected with Aleutian Disease (AD), a disease impairing mink productivity and resistance to other diseases. In December 1980, after 2 years of greater than normal losses among the leased mink, the parties replaced the lease with a promissory note containing a clause releasing plaintiff from any liability arising out of the lease. After the promissory note had been made, plaintiff informed defendants that tests of his mink in November 1980 indicated that 30% were infected with AD. Subsequent testing of defendants' mink revealed that 70% had AD. Defendants made no payments on the note. In a suit on the note, defendants counterclaimed, alleging that the note had been procured by fraud. The District Court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that defendants' affidavit indicated an issue of material fact, i.e., whether defendants learned that the mink had AD before or after the note was signed, and that the plaintiff had not met the burden of establishing that there was no issue of material fact. Rogers v. Swingley, 206 M 306, 670 P2d 1386, 40 St. Rep. 1676 (1983).

Negligence Issue — Not Normally Susceptible to Summary Judgment: Plaintiff was injured when a car struck her as she was crossing a street at an intersection. Plaintiff sued the driver of the car and a beer distributing company whose truck was at least partially blocking one of four lanes of traffic and the intersection. The District Court granted summary judgment to the distributor. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's decision, holding that issues of negligence are not ordinarily susceptible to summary judgment. There was a material issue of fact as to whether the truck was illegally parked, and if so, whether the truck's position was a proximate cause of the accident. Hendrickson v. Neiman, 204 M 367, 665 P2d 219, 40 St. Rep. 909 (1983).

Insurance Coverage — Accidental Death Benefits: It was error to grant summary judgment to the insurers when material issues of fact remain regarding the policy, premiums, coverage, and the insured's knowledge of such matters. Darrah v. Milbank Mut. Ins. Co., 202 M 323, 658 P2d 374, 40 St. Rep. 117 (1983).

Failure to Hear Liability Issue — Summary Judgment Denial of Due Process: A complaint for an injunction was filed, and a temporary restraining order was granted. On defendant's appeal of denial of his motion to quash, the order was upheld and the case remanded "with directions to expedite the trial of the cause for damages". Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment based on the Supreme Court opinion was granted, the court stating that the Supreme Court had affirmed its judgment and directed the District Court to have a hearing on damages following remand. There was in fact never a hearing or trial on the merits of the issue of liability, and it is clear that the District Court misconstrued the language of the Supreme Court opinion, which had not decided the issue of liability but had merely decided it was proper to continue the temporary restraining order and had remanded for an expedited trial. The foreclosure of defendant's opportunity for a hearing denied him due process, and the summary judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a trial on the merits. Boyer v. Kargacin, 202 M 54, 656 P2d 197, 39 St. Rep. 2323 (1982).

Swimming Pool Accident — Negligence of Pool Owner: A father suing for alleged injury to his son found submerged in defendant's swimming pool was properly denied summary judgment where defendant presented a number of genuine issues of material fact, including the question of whether defendant provided a sufficient ratio of lifeguards to pool users, the question of how long the son was under the water, and the question of whether defendant had properly instructed its patrons in pool use. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982), distinguished in Schwabe v. Custer's Inn Associates, 2000 MT 325, 303 M 15, 15 P3d 903, 57 St. Rep. 1370 (2000).

Construction of Terms of Agreement — Factual Issue Precluding Summary Judgment: A June 1976 agreement between the parties provided that plaintiff would advance money for the downpayment in the purchase of real property in Billings and would receive certain benefits, including a 50% interest in the property, in return. Plaintiff was to control any contractual arrangements until defendant had contributed, by payment of the monthly installments, a sum equal to the downpayment. In 1977, prior to the equalization of contributions, plaintiff entered negotiations to sell the property. No agreement between plaintiff and defendant was reached regarding the sale, and plaintiff filed suit seeking specific performance of the agreement. Plaintiff was granted summary judgment allowing him exclusive control of contract negotiations concerning the land for 1 year. Defendant contended on appeal that summary judgment was improper as there were factual controversies as to whether he had ever received an offer to sell the property and whether "control of any contractual arrangements" contemplated selling the property. Where, as here, the written agreement was imprecise and not artfully drawn, reference to extrinsic evidence indicating the intention of the parties would be proper, particularly since the same attorney represented both parties. Factual issues existed, and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. Downs v. Smyk, 200 M 334, 651 P2d 1238, 39 St. Rep. 1786 (1982).

Issue of Fact as to Existence of Grantor Support Agreement: Over a period of years, grantor, a 95-year-old woman, had deeded various parcels of land near her home to several relatives. She filed a complaint against grantees, alleging that the land had been conveyed in return for their promise to support her and that they had failed to live up to their agreement. As relief, grantor sought either damages or, in the event that the agreement was determined to be unenforceable under the Statute of Frauds, return of the land. Grantees denied the existence of any agreement and pleaded the Statute of Limitations as a defense. The District Court granted grantees' motion for summary judgment and further ruled that grantor's claims were barred by the Statute of Limitations. The Supreme Court reversed in part, ruling that grantor was entitled to present evidence on two of her claims because Montana law provides for the enforcement of a grantor support agreement, that there was a genuine issue of fact as to whether or not such an agreement had been made, and that the trial court's ruling on the Statute of Limitations was premature. Additionally, the court ruled that grantor had no claim for return of the land since, if an agreement existed, grantor's partial performance of that agreement rendered the Statute of Frauds inapplicable, and if no agreement existed, grantor was not entitled to any relief. Sands v. Nestegard, 198 M 421, 646 P2d 1189, 39 St. Rep. 1101 (1982).

Breach of Stockbroker's Duty: A customer of a stock brokerage firm brought a negligence action alleging the firm's failure to disclose the true risks involved in a commodity straddle. Summary judgment was inappropriate, there being issues of material fact regarding breach of duty by the broker and proximate cause of the customer's injuries. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Negligent Misrepresentation: A stockbroker testified that what he told a customer regarding the risk of a transaction was what he believed to be true. The customer testified that he did not believe he had been deliberately misinformed by the broker. A prima facie case of negligent misrepresentation having been made, summary judgment was improper. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Stockbroker's Duty to Execute Order: Because of a deteriorating commodity spread position, a customer instructed his stockbroker to "lift a leg". The broker would not immediately execute this order until the risk could be explained to the customer. Whether or not the broker's duty to execute an order within a reasonable time was breached was a genuine issue of material fact for which summary judgment should not have been granted. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Property Settlement Agreement: The intent of the parties as to the finality of their property settlement agreement, the effect of the husband's failure to disclose an insurance policy, and the intent of the husband's beneficiary designation on the life insurance policy in light of the property settlement agreement were factual issues making the trial court's entry of summary judgment premature. Soha v. West, 196 M 95, 637 P2d 1185, 38 St. Rep. 2153 (1981), distinguished in Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 308 (1993).

Summary Judgment Improper if Proven Allegations Would Show Breach of Duty: When a duty is imposed upon defendant and plaintiff's allegations, if proven, would support a finding of breach of the duty, summary judgment for the defendant is improper. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981). See also Abell v. Reno, 204 M 156, 663 P2d 335, 40 St. Rep. 738 (1983).

Issue of Conspiracy of Government Officials Not Resolvable by Summary Judgment: Where the defendant state and federal livestock officials revoked the right of the plaintiffs to carry on a portion of their veterinary practice, the court refused to grant the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the issue of the conspiracy to deny the plaintiffs their constitutional rights. Questions of material fact remain as to certain conversations between and actions by the defendants that cannot be resolved by summary judgment. Doran v. Houle, 516 F. Supp. 1231, 38 St. Rep. 1086 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Issue of Qualified Immunity of Government Official Not Resolvable by Summary Judgment: Where the defendant state and federal livestock officials revoked the right of the plaintiffs to carry on a portion of their veterinary practice, the court could not, on the basis of the affidavits submitted by one defendant, find that he was entitled to qualified immunity. That immunity is available to executive officers who act within the scope of their discretion and who have a good faith belief of that fact. In this case, material issues of fact remained in question and summary judgment was therefore inappropriate. Doran v. Houle, 516 F. Supp. 1231, 38 St. Rep. 1086 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Abuse of Deposition Process — Basis for Tort of Abuse of Process: The plaintiff and his wife were divorced in 1976. The plaintiff sought to have the property agreement set aside as unconscionable and failed. In 1979, he filed a fraud action against his ex-wife and her attorney in conjunction with the dissolution. The ex-wife petitioned the court to hold plaintiff in contempt for failure to comply with the dissolution decree. Plaintiff, residing in Idaho, was served, failed to appear, and was held in contempt. The judge issued a bench warrant for his arrest. Defendants, counsel for the ex-wife in the fraud case, set a time to take plaintiff's deposition in Bozeman. Subsequent to noticing the deposition, defendants notified the District Court Judge that plaintiff would be in Bozeman that day. After taking plaintiff's deposition, defendants notified the judge, who had plaintiff arrested. Plaintiff filed suit against defendants for the tort of malicious abuse of process, and defendants moved for summary judgment. The federal court held that abuse of the power granted under Rule 30, M.R.Civ.P., relating to depositions can serve as the basis for the tort of abuse of process. Factual issues existed, so that the summary judgment motion was denied. Hopper v. Drysdale, 524 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 1970 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Cost of Overrun — Material Issue of Reliance on Plans: Kalispell argued that contract documents plainly advised all bidders to make their own determination as to the amount of material to be moved and not to rely on the figures on the city's plans and specifications. By entering into the contract, allegedly the bidders bound themselves to do the rough grading at the price bid and should get no additional compensation for overrun. However, the District Court rejected the city's argument that the plaintiffs' complaint, therefore, failed to state a claim and that there could be no issues of material fact before the District Court. Based on a recent line of cases from the Supreme Court, the District Judge determined that the factfinder had to hear the evidence in order to find whether or not the contractors justifiably relied on the plans. Stenerson v. Kalispell, 193 M 8, 629 P2d 773, 38 St. Rep. 938 (1981).

Livestock on Roadway — Persons Protected by Statute — Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Plaintiff sued defendant, alleging the injuries he sustained in a motorcycle accident were caused by the presence of defendant's goats on the road. Defendant contended that 81-4-201 and 81-4-202, enacted in 1895, were enacted to protect the property of landowners, and therefore motorists were not a protected class under the statutes. Defendant moved for summary judgment. The court found that the continuing in effect of these statutes and their amendment in 1945 were part of the historical process of conforming the open-range law to the needs of the modern world. The court held that the complaint stated a cause of action and denied the motion for summary judgment. Read v. Buckner, 514 F. Supp. 281, 38 St. Rep. 735 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Materiality of Facts in Negligence Action — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: In an action for damages caused by the wrongful death of the plaintiff's son as a result of the negligent operation of the defendant's automobile, the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The affidavits submitted by the parties show discrepancies in whether there were other children on the highway where the decedent was struck and as to the location where the decedent, a 5-year-old boy, ran onto the highway. Contrary to defendant's assertions, these facts are material to the case as they bear upon the defendant's ability and duty to exercise due care. Because material facts are in dispute, the motion was improperly granted. Big Man v. St., 192 M 29, 626 P2d 235, 38 St. Rep. 362 (1981).

Piercing Corporate Veil — Fraud — Agency — Factual Issues: In an action on a promissory note given on a contract for deed involving multiple corporate identities of defendant Ming, who was the real estate agent for seller and who was the purchaser of the property, denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment was entirely proper where the following factual issues were in dispute and could only be resolved by a trial on the merits: (1) whether defendant operated certain corporations as his personal businesses; (2) whether defendant fraudulently represented to plaintiffs that he would be liable on the contract and notes; (3) whether defendant acted as an agent for the defendant corporations; and (4) whether the corporate veils should be pierced so as to hold defendant liable on the notes. Flemmer v. Ming, 190 M 403, 621 P2d 1038, 37 St. Rep. 1916 (1980).

Obligation to Insure and Defend Under Ambiguous Contract — Genuine Issue: In an action based on the obligation to insure and defend in a lawsuit by a subcontractor's employee for injury caused by the plaintiff's employees, the Supreme Court found a genuine issue of material fact in the question of whether the work being performed by the plaintiff's employees at the time of the accident was undertaken pursuant to Contract No. 2081, whose language "risks of any kind relating to construction" was the focal point of the duty to insure and defend. Determination of the intent of the parties regarding such ambiguous or uncertain language was precluded by the erroneous grant of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Anaconda Co. v. Gen. Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 189 M 447, 616 P2d 363, 37 St. Rep. 1589 (1980).

Issue of Fact as to the Existence of an Oral Contract: Defendant/respondent contends on appeal that evidence defendant submitted in trial court to prove existence of an oral contract was sufficient to exclude any real doubt as to the existence of an issue of fact regarding the existence of an oral contract. The Supreme Court held where defendant submitted as evidence an affidavit alleging existence of a contract, a letter from plaintiff to defendant referring to an agreement, on admission from plaintiff with confused information and where the two parties disagree as to the existence of the contract, defendant had not met his burden of establishing the absence of an issue of fact as to the existence of the oral contract as alleged. Reaves v. Reinbold, 189 M 284, 615 P2d 896 (1980).

Issue of Fact as to Whether a Written Agreement Supersedes an Oral Agreement: Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment was properly denied where there was some question of fact as to whether one written agreement, signed by plaintiff as agent for his company by the company vice president, and by defendant entitling defendant to a salary advance supersedes a prior oral agreement allegedly made between plaintiff and defendant in which plaintiff personally guaranteed a salary to defendant. Reviewing the relationship of the two agreements in the light most favorable to the defendant, the alleged oral agreement is collateral to the written contract is distinct, involves a different party, and is able to stand independent of the other. Reaves v. Reinbold, 189 M 284, 615 P2d 896 (1980).

Petition for Real Estate Commission — Broker/Buyer's Duty to Disclose: Plaintiff employed defendant, a real estate broker, to sell his ranch. Defendant produced some willing buyers who were rejected by the plaintiff. Defendant then found a purchaser willing to buy the machinery and cattle but not the land. Defendant contacted several neighbors, each of whom were willing to buy a portion of the ranch. Defendant did not disclose this to plaintiff. Defendant then made an offer in conjunction with the buyer of the machinery and cattle in anticipation of selling the ranch in parcels to the neighbors. Defendant did not disclose that he was one of the offerors or that he had made contacts with other potential buyers after his offer was made. The court held that defendant had a duty of full disclosure until he was legally bound to buy the property, the day on which the buy/sell agreement was signed. It was improper to grant defendant summary judgment in this situation. First Trust Co. of Mont. v. McKenna, 188 M 534, 614 P2d 1027 (1980).

Consumer Protection Act Violation Alleged as Cause of Accident — Agency Rule Not in Conflict With Federal Law — Causation for Jury: The District Court properly denied summary judgment on plaintiff's count which claimed misrepresentation as to the odometer reading on a used car sold to her by defendant corporation as the proximate cause of her accident and subsequent injury. A state agency rule adopted pursuant to 30-14-104 was not inconsistent with the rules and decisions of the FTC and the federal courts, although the rule deals with sales and the main purpose of the federal law is to prevent unlawful restraint of trade. Whether the alleged violation was a cause of plaintiff's damages was a jury issue. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

Requirement for Payment of Insurance — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: The contract for the retail installment purchase of a mobile home contained a clause stating that credit life and disability insurance was not required by the seller. The buyer, now deceased, applied for the insurance and paid the first premium. The retail installment sale contract was assigned to the First National Bank, making it a creditor. An employee of the seller decided the buyer was not eligible for insurance and never forwarded his application to the parent company. Buyer's premium payment was not returned to him until the attorney for his estate requested payment on the insurance. If the payment by the buyer was required, 33-21-206(3) applies, and the seller was required to give written notice to the buyer which was not done. If no payment was required, 33-21-206(3) does not apply. This is a genuine issue of material fact and therefore summary judgment was improperly granted. Cameron v. First Nat'l Bank, 186 M 345, 607 P2d 1113 (1980).

Uncontroverted Issues Not Established by Invalid Collateral Judgment: When a contempt citation was issued in a separate, but related action, because of defendant's violation of Writs of Attachment and Execution, it was proper in a collateral attack to show that plaintiff had failed to comply with statutory requirements for attachment of property and hence void the underlying judgment upon which the contempt was based. As a result of the error in finding the defendant in contempt, the contempt order had no preclusive effect on the present case and it was error to strike defendant's defenses and grant plaintiff summary judgment upon the theories of res judicata, collateral estoppel, and collateral attack. Phillips v. Loberg, 186 M 331, 607 P2d 561 (1980).

Fact Issue as to Boundary Line Agreement in Adverse Possession Case — Summary Judgment Improper: In a case involving a contention of adverse possession, a genuine issue of material fact existed, namely whether an agreement existed between the parties which extended the boundary line between their properties to include the disputed portion of land. Therefore, the motion for a summary judgment was granted in error. Nott v. Booke, 183 M 260, 598 P2d 1137 (1979).

Facts Showing Laches Not Contained in Record: Laches means negligence to the assertion of a right and exists where there has been a delay of such duration as to render enforcement of an asserted right unenforceable. A complainant can be charged with laches if, but only if, he was either actually or presumptively aware of his rights. A complainant is presumptively aware of his rights where the circumstances of which he is cognizant are such as to put a man of ordinary prudence on inquiry. Here, summary judgment is not supported by the record because the record does not contain facts establishing that the appellant had knowledge of his rights. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Issue of Fact as to Applicability of Insurance Coverage Exclusion: In this case the District Court failed to determine the factual issue of whether the insured, Phalen, expected or intended Thu Duc Vo's injuries. The applicability of coverage provision of the insurance policy excluded those cases where the insured's deliberate acts or assaults resulted in injuries that would be expected or intended by him to result from his deliberate acts. The applicability of Northwestern National's coverage could not be determined until the factual issues concerning the intention and expectation of Phalen as to Vo's injuries was decided in the tort action. Therefore, summary judgment in favor of Northwestern in the declaratory judgment case at bar was improper. NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979), distinguished under the rationale of USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988).

Removal of Impediment — Common-Law Marriage — Fact Question: Ralph, the deceased, married Fern and then married Elsie while married to Fern. Fern died in 1973 and Ralph died in 1976. Ralph's will, executed in 1975, failed to mention Elsie or the two children he had by her. Elsie filed a petition for spouse's elective share. Summary judgment against Elsie was reversed and remanded because factual issues existed regarding whether Fern's death removed the impediment to Ralph's second marriage resulting in common-law marriage and whether the two children were issue of the decedent. Estate of Schanbacher, 182 M 176, 595 P2d 1171 (1979).

Question of Fraud — No Summary Judgment: When a lessee alleged fraud in the termination of his lease, he was not entitled to a summary judgment since fraud is always a question of fact. Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 237 (1979).

Proximate Cause at Issue: In a wrongful death action in which plaintiff's husband struck a stalled truck and trailer, the trial court erroneously granted defendants' motions for summary judgment since there existed a genuine issue of fact as to proximate cause. McAlpine v. Dahl, 179 M 23, 585 P2d 1307 (1978).

Notice of Intent to Withdraw From Bargaining: The court erred when it granted the employer's motion for summary judgment in an action for employer contributions to Montana Laborers' Trust Fund because the employer, during collective bargaining negotiations, failed to communicate an unambiguous or unequivocal notice of intent to withdraw from collective bargaining. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Brasel & Sims Constr. Co., 176 M 1, 575 P2d 908 (1978).

Interest in Insurance Proceeds — Issue of Law: Summary judgment was improperly granted when the record disclosed, as a matter of law, that plaintiff had a possessory interest in a building on the property in dispute at time of destruction by fire, giving plaintiff a corresponding right to the insurance proceeds less the unpaid balance of the purchase price. This result was based on an implied waiver of a contract default provision by defendant county's failure to timely repossess. Hansen v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 175 M 273, 573 P2d 663 (1978).

Injured Workman — Third-Party Action: The Supreme Court vacated a lower court grant of summary judgment to a third-party defendant who was joined in an action for personal injuries sustained by an employee whose immediate employer elected to be covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Ass'n, 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978), overruling Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974).

Intent of Contracting Parties: Because the intent of the parties and other questions remained at issue, summary judgment was improperly granted. Engebretson v. Putnam, 174 M 409, 571 P2d 368 (1977).

Ambiguous Insurance Policy: Summary judgment on a claim for loss by theft of a commercial carpet cleaner was improperly granted defendant insurer when the policy of insurance was ambiguous as to exclusions from coverage. The particular exclusionary clause was subordinate to the general intent of the contract. Alpha Real Estate Dev., Inc. v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co., 174 M 301, 570 P2d 585 (1977).

Negligence Action: The court improperly granted a motion for summary judgment made by the defendant in a negligence action because the conclusions of law were based upon determinations of fact involving the character of the instrumentality which caused the injury and plaintiff's ability to observe, understand, appreciate, and avoid the danger. Mascarena v. Booth, 174 M 11, 568 P2d 182 (1977).

Specific Performance of Lease Option — Conditions Precedent: The court properly denied plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on an action for specific performance of a lease option agreement when he failed to show that he fully and fairly performed conditions precedent. Seifert v. Seifert, 173 M 501, 568 P2d 155 (1977).

Contract — Ambiguous Language: The disputed language in a contract reflecting intent of the parties was held ambiguous. Hence, there were material facts in dispute and summary judgment was improper. S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977).

Third-Party Complaint: Third-party defendants to an action under 50-77-101 through 50-77-106 (50-77-106 now repealed) were not entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law because issues of material fact remained unresolved. Bonawitz v. Bourke, 173 M 179, 567 P2d 32 (1977).

Error in Awarding: The court erred in granting summary judgment because the record was replete with fact questions. Equity Co-op Ass'n v. Bechtold, 173 M 103, 566 P2d 793 (1977).

Competency of Expert Medical Witness: The testimony of an expert medical witness concerning the required standard of care of treatment in a locality and its breach by defendant are matters to be decided by the jury and cannot be resolved by summary judgment since they involve genuine issues of material fact. Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 356 (1977), locality rule modified in Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

Determination of Rights and Reasonable Costs: Entry of summary judgment for plaintiffs constituted error because genuine issues of fact had not been resolved. Guthrie v. Dept. of Social & Rehabilitation Services, 172 M 257, 563 P2d 555 (1977).

Fraud — Summary Judgment Not Proper: Conflicting contentions regarding a brochure allegedly misrepresenting land indicate issues of fact precluding summary judgment. Bails v. Wheeler, 171 M 524, 559 P2d 1180 (1977).

Summary Judgment — Fraud: Summary judgment for defendant in fraud case was reversed. Defendants were not entitled to summary judgment because there were fact issues to be resolved. Bails v. Gar, 171 M 342, 558 P2d 458 (1976).

Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Determination — Record: When in a medical malpractice action a deposition of defendant disclosed his opinion that it was not advisable for a patient, described hypothetically, to walk on a healing leg but plaintiff alleged that defendant said to use the leg, there was an issue of material fact. Summary judgment is not a substitute for trial and it is error for a court to determine that contributory negligence exists when issues of material fact are raised. However, when counsel filed amended answers to interrogatories after summary judgment was entered, the court could not be held in error due to documents not before it at the time of its ruling. Baylor v. Jacobson, 170 M 234, 552 P2d 55 (1976).

Loaned Servant Doctrine: Court erred in granting summary judgment because defendant failed to meet the burden of proving his employee was the borrowed servant of plaintiff. Storrusten v. Harrison, 169 M 525, 549 P2d 464 (1976).

Theory of Recovery Determinative of Factual Issues: Negligent entrustment by defendant does not create factual issues where defendant did not have a superior legal right to the object entrusted. Bahm v. Dormanen, 168 M 408, 543 P2d 379 (1975), followed in Williams v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 265 M 111, 874 P2d 1225, 51 St. Rep. 458 (1994), applying Restatement (Second) of Torts 308 (1965). Williams was followed in McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 72, 972 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

Genuine Issues as to Damages: Where plaintiff sought damages against railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act, it was error for District Court to deny railroad's introduction of evidence to establish plaintiff's possible contributory negligence in diminution of damages where court granted partial summary judgment as to railroad's liability so that the only triable issue was damages. Dissent by Justices Daly and John C. Harrison asserting summary judgment is not appealable. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 167 M 485, 540 P2d 298 (1975).

Genuine Issues Not to Be Determined: On summary judgment the question to be decided is whether there is a genuine issue of material fact, not how such issue should be determined. Where police officer allegedly wounded plaintiff, it was error for trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of police officer based on sovereign immunity as plaintiff was not seeking to impose liability on county or state for conduct of police officer, neither being named as a defendant, but on police officer as an individual, therefore creating genuine issues of material fact concerning whether police officer wounded plaintiff; whether such action was reasonable under the circumstances; and whether his actions were done in good faith. Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975).

Intent of Contracting Parties Important — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to limited partners' declaratory judgment action, as to management fees charged by general partners for long-range renovation and improvement, where written partnership agreement was silent as to such fees and limited partners claimed an alleged oral agreement and that conduct of the parties modified the written agreement to a maximum fee, because a court considering the motion for summary judgment cannot go outside the written agreement to determine the intent of the contracting parties as this involves disputed questions of material fact which renders summary judgment inappropriate. Fulton v. Clark, 167 M 399, 538 P2d 1371 (1975).

Burden of Establishing Absence of Issue: The burden of establishing the absence of any issue of material fact is on the party seeking summary judgment, and when the ultimate legal issue of substantial compliance with the Tort Claims Act turned on the resolution of the factual issues of actual knowledge of an injury and claim by a city, there was a substantial issue of material fact barring summary judgment. State ex rel. Bozeman v. District Court, 166 M 234, 531 P2d 1343 (1975).

Prior Knowledge of Injury — Summary Judgment Precluded: Although plaintiff had not filed formal claim against city within the time limits prescribed, issues of fact as to the fact and extent of knowledge by city that plaintiff had been injured precluded summary judgment. State ex rel. Bozeman v. District Court, 166 M 234, 531 P2d 1343 (1975).

Sufficiency of Evidence: When the record contained insufficient evidence to support a finding that an 8-year-old boy had the capacity for contributory negligence, it was an error to grant summary judgment for the defendant. Ranard v. O'Neil, 166 M 177, 531 P2d 1000 (1975).

Negligence — Causation — Summary Judgment Improper: Liability cannot be adjudicated upon motion for summary judgment where factual issues concerning negligence and causation are presented. Duchesneau v. Silver Bow County, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971), followed in Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 273 M 408, 903 P2d 1374, 52 St. Rep. 1035 (1995). Duchesneau was followed, with regard to applicability of liability for involuntary action rule, in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Summary Judgment Improper — Negligence: Summary judgment was improper because, among other issues, negligence is a jury question and not subject to determination by the judge on a motion for summary judgment. Duchesneau v. Mack Trucks, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971); Kober v. Stewart, 148 M 117, 417 P2d 476 (1966). Duchesneau was followed, with regard to applicability of liability for involuntary action rule, in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Third-Party Defendant — Negligence — When Dismissal Proper: Court erred in dismissing seller and manufacturer of truck as party defendants when many issues of material fact remained to be determined. Duchesneau v. Mack Trucks, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971).

Municipal Vacation of Streets: Summary judgment was not proper where pleadings in declaratory judgment action to invalidate municipal vacation of streets left triable issues of fact as to whether plaintiffs' easements would be impaired by vacation. Kemmer v. Bozeman, 158 M 354, 492 P2d 211 (1971).

Genuine Issue of Fact Found: Summary judgment was reversed because cognizance was not taken of amended allegation raising a genuine issue of fact. Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

No Duty to Anticipate Proof: Although fact that both parties moved for summary judgment does not establish that all factual questions have been answered, trial court need only consider evidence and issues presented and has no duty to anticipate possible proof that might be offered under the pleadings. Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, 156 M 38, 473 P2d 503 (1970).

Summary Judgment Dismissing Third-Party Complaint Reversed: Supreme Court rejected proposition that Workers' Compensation Act is exclusive liability of employer and reversed summary judgment dismissing third-party complaint. DeShaw v. Johnson, 155 M 355, 472 P2d 298 (1970).

Consideration of Oral Testimony: Where trial court was present during taking of depositions, facts heard by court were properly considered on motion for summary judgment pursuant to this section since oral testimony is properly within matters which court may consider under such motion. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969).

Action on a Lease — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Trial court, in action on farm lease construing lessor's motion for dismissal as motion for summary judgment, improperly granted summary judgment where lessor failed to sustain burden of showing absence of any genuine issue as to material facts; record on appeal was replete with issues of fact determinable by jury. Byrne v. Plante, 154 M 6, 459 P2d 266 (1969).

Negligence — Third-Party Complaint: Summary judgment should not have been granted in favor of third-party defendant on third-party complaint initiated by hospital, sued for negligence by minor patient burned by defective television switch while in hospital, where third-party complaint raised genuine issue of material fact as to whether minor patient was injured solely through negligence of third-party defendant who had leased television equipment to hospital. Crosby v. Billings Deaconess Hosp., 149 M 314, 426 P2d 217 (1967), distinguished in Auto. Club Ins. Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 166 M 221, 531 P2d 1337 (1975).

Agent or Independent Contractor: In suit by guardians of patient for personal injuries sustained when patient was being X-rayed, District Court erred in granting defendant-hospital's motion for summary judgment where there was an issue of fact as to whether radiologist was an independent contractor rather than an agent of the hospital. Kober v. Stewart, 148 M 117, 417 P2d 476 (1966).

Summary Judgment Reversed — Taxation: Summary judgment for county and others was reversed, and summary judgment for taxpayer was ordered. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R. v. Bennett, 145 M 191, 399 P2d 986 (1965).

NO GENUINE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT
PARTICULAR CASES

Dismissal of Complaint as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Although Xu received timely notice of the need to respond in writing to defendants' discovery requests within 30 days, Xu filed incomplete, inappropriate, and unacceptable responses, and ultimately defendants sought an order compelling Xu's responses. Then, after defendants' unsuccessful attempts to schedule a deposition, defendants timely notified Xu of their intent to take Xu's deposition on May 11, 2004. Without response or explanation, Xu did not attend the deposition, so defendants sought an order compelling Xu's deposition and requesting sanctions, including dismissal of Xu's claims for failure to attend the May deposition. At a hearing, the District Court carefully explained to Xu the obligation to answer discovery and attend depositions. The court gave Xu an additional 3 weeks to provide discovery answers and be deposed. In response, Xu filed a pleading to reschedule the deposition, but failed to complete discovery or to attend the court-ordered deposition. On defendants' motion, the court then dismissed Xu's action with prejudice for failing to attend the depositions. Xu appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding from the record that Xu knowingly and repeatedly refused to cooperate with discovery request, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Xu's claim as a sanction. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Second Suit Based on Same Facts as Case Dismissed With Prejudice Properly Dismissed as Res Judicata: While a first employment termination claim was pending, Xu filed another claim based on the same facts. The first claim was ultimately dismissed with prejudice for Xu's failure to comply with discovery, and the District Court then summarily dismissed the second case based on res judicata and collateral estoppel. Xu appealed on grounds that it was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss the second case because the second case contained a new claim of defamation and because there was no final adjudication on the merits of the first claim. The Supreme Court disagreed. Res judicata applied not only to the issues that were raised in the first claim, but also to issues that could or should have been raised in the first litigation. Collateral estoppel applied because a dismissal with prejudice constituted an adjudication on the merits. Summary dismissal of the second case was therefore affirmed. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Coverage for Transported Property Valid: Plaintiffs were transporting snowmobiles on a trailer when they were involved in a multiple vehicle accident that resulted in damage to their vehicle and the destruction of the trailer and snowmobiles. The insurer covered the loss of the trailer, but declined to compensate for the loss of the snowmobiles on grounds that they were excluded from policy coverage, and plaintiffs filed suit to recover damages. The District Court held that the policy exclusion for damage to property being transported was valid and granted the insurer summary judgment. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the policy provision violated 61-6-301, which mandates motor vehicle insurance. The Supreme Court agreed that an exclusion to mandatory coverage is void and unenforceable absent a statutory exclusion, but then noted that the statutory exclusion in 61-6-103 allows a policy exclusion for damage to property transported by the insured. The court held that the exclusion in 61-6-103 is not inconsistent with the purpose and intent of 61-6-301 and that because the policy provision was not void, there was no genuine issue of material fact and summary judgment was proper. Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005). See also Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153 (1986), and Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32 (1997).

Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Affirmed Absent Showing of Breach of Duty of Care: Bonilla claimed that the University of Montana was negligent in providing a chair at a concert that Bonilla attended when the chair broke and Bonilla was injured. Ordinarily, the determination of whether a defendant breached a legal duty is not susceptible to summary judgment unless the evidence is undisputed or susceptible to only one conclusion by reasonable people. However, Bonilla failed to produce any evidence explaining how or why the chair broke and whether it was due to the breach of any duty by the University. Bonilla never reported the incident, so the University had no record of the incident. The only evidence offered to support a negligence claim was Bonilla's own testimony that the chair would not have broken unless there was a problem with it. University officials explained their policy of assuring the safety of their chairs and of selecting chairs for durability and quality. The University met its burden of demonstrating the absence of material fact regarding any breach of a duty of care, while Bonilla did not meet the burden of showing that the University breached a duty of care. Summary judgment for the University was affirmed. Bonilla v. Univ. of Mont., 2005 MT 183, 328 M 41, 116 P3d 823 (2005).

No Montana Personal Jurisdiction Over Regional Out-of-State Insurer: Carter, a part-time "snow bird" resident of Montana, was injured in an automobile accident in Montana shortly after moving from Mississippi. Carter filed a declaratory judgment action against the defendant, a regional out-of-state insurer that did not do business in Montana, requesting interpretation of an insurance contract issued on Carter's vehicles in Mississippi. The insurer contested Montana's exercise of personal jurisdiction and moved for summary judgment. The District Court concluded that it did not have personal jurisdiction and granted summary judgment. Carter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court cited Bahn v. Chicago Motor Club, 634 A2d 63 (Md. 1993), for the holding that although an insurer's promise to provide nationwide coverage may establish that the insurer has agreed to submit to jurisdiction in any forum that has jurisdiction to adjudicate claims against its insured, this agreement does not imply a further agreement to allow the insured to bring suit against the insurer in any state. Even though the insurer could reasonably anticipate that the insured could suffer an injury within the insurer's 50-state coverage, that foreseeability, without more, was not sufficient to subject the insurer to personal jurisdiction in Montana courts. The underlying dispute related to coverage and had nothing to do with the fact that the accident occurred in Montana or that Carter was living in this state at the time. Thus, although Carter had every right to sue the insurer over its coverage issues, in this case, Montana courts did not have personal jurisdiction over the insurer that was required as a predicate to maintenance of an action in Montana. Summary dismissal was proper. Carter v. Miss. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2005 MT 74, 326 M 350, 109 P3d 735 (2005). See also Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154 (1998).

Landowner Subdivision Rights Precluded by Restrictive Covenants — No Oral Contract Without Consideration — Statute of Frauds Applied: Plaintiffs subdivided about 80 acres into a 40-acre water ski lake and five residential lots. Restrictive covenants provided that no more than six landowners would be allowed to use the lake, that five landowners would be owners of lots in the subdivision, and that one landowner would be the owner of a single family dwelling built on property immediately west of the lake. Plaintiffs initially intended to build on the west side of the lake and become the sixth landowner but changed their minds, sold the west side property, and decided to build on the south side instead. Four of the five landowners filed an affidavit that when they purchased their lots, they understood that plaintiffs would be the sixth landowner and that they had orally approved the relocation of plaintiffs' residence to the south shore. After plaintiffs' home was built on the south side, they sought a declaratory judgment that they were the sixth landowner under the restrictive covenants and thus had the right to use the lake. One dissenting landowner opposed the declaratory judgment and moved for summary judgment on grounds that the restrictive covenants prohibited plaintiffs from use of the lake. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that there was no evidence of consideration given to the landowners for modification of the covenants and that as a result, the modification benefited plaintiffs only. The right to use the lake ran with the land and was therefore a real property interest, and under the statute of frauds, any transfer of the right from one parcel to another had to be in writing or altered by an executed oral agreement. However, without consideration, there could be no oral contract, and without an oral contract, there could be no executed oral contract. Plaintiffs' argument that because they relied on oral agreements, equitable estoppel should prohibit defendants from denying plaintiffs' use of the lake also failed because equitable estoppel does not apply under the statute of frauds except when the statute would operate to perpetuate a fraud. The District Court was affirmed. Hanson v. Water Ski Mania Estates, 2005 MT 47, 326 M 154, 108 P3d 481 (2005).

No Federal Civil Rights Privacy Claim Against State or Municipal Entities: Barr sued the state and a municipal airport authority for violating his civil rights under 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 42 U.S.C. 1985 when the airport failed to hire him as a permanent security officer after discovering Barr's past public criminal record. The District Court summarily dismissed the claims, and the Supreme Court affirmed. In order for the municipality to be liable under the federal statutes, it was necessary for Barr to show that the municipality had a policy or custom that inflicted the injury of which Barr complained, which Barr could not show. Further, Barr's civil rights claims stemmed from a privacy invasion that did not occur, so he was unable to establish a federal privacy violation. Barr's claim against the state was also barred because states are not persons for purposes of the federal statutes. Barr v. Great Falls Int'l Airport Authority, 2005 MT 36, 326 M 93, 107 P3d 471 (2005). See also Monell v. Dept. of Social Services, 436 US 658 (1978), and Will v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 491 US 58 (1989).

No Right to Expectation of Privacy in Public Criminal Records or Negligence in Use of Records: In 1998, Barr applied for a part-time airport security officer position and consented to a background check. A 10-year check revealed no arrests, and Barr was hired. About 1 month later, another security officer requested a criminal background check on Barr, which revealed a 1968 arrest in Alaska for criminal nonsupport. Prior to the end of Barr's probationary period, his employment was terminated, and he sued the airport authority. Barr's claim was summarily dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that under 44-5-103, Barr's Alaska arrest was public information that anyone could access and its dissemination was not improper and that coupled with Barr's consent to the background check, Barr had no constitutional expectation of privacy in the criminal record. Barr's negligence claims also failed because he failed to offer proof of all elements of common-law negligence. Summary judgment for defendants was affirmed. Barr v. Great Falls Int'l Airport Authority, 2005 MT 36, 326 M 93, 107 P3d 471 (2005).

Possible Deferred Prosecution Agreement Not Considered Confidential Criminal Justice Information — Discussion by Prosecutor With Newspaper of Possible Deferred Prosecution Agreement Not Privacy Violation or Breach of Duty: Plaintiff alleged that the County Attorney negligently breached a legal duty and violated the Montana Criminal Justice Information Act of 1979 when the County Attorney told a local newspaper that plaintiff was considering a deferred criminal prosecution agreement. Plaintiff asserted that the information was confidential and that dissemination of the information was tortious. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that criminal justice information is defined as information relating to criminal justice that is collected, processed, or preserved by a criminal justice agency and held that mere discussion of a possible deferred criminal prosecution agreement does not constitute a discussion of criminal justice information. Although there may be circumstances in which a person suspected of having committed a crime has a reasonable expectation that the person's privacy will not be violated by the release of details of an investigation, plaintiff here could not seriously claim a privacy violation when it was already public knowledge that the allegations were against her, what the allegations were, who was involved as complainants, that she was the subject of a school board investigation concerning the allegations, and that her intended retirement from teaching was connected to the allegations. There was no material issue of fact concerning whether the County Attorney negligently breached a duty owed to plaintiff by discussing a possible deferred criminal prosecution agreement with the newspaper or by releasing a copy of the initial offense report, and summary judgment was affirmed. Svaldi v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 2005 MT 17, 325 M 365, 106 P3d 548 (2005), following Great Falls Tribune Co., Inc. v. Sheriff, 238 M 103, 775 P2d 1267(1989), and Citizens to Recall Mayor James Whitlock v. Whitlock, 255 M 517, 844 P2d 74 (1992).

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

No Factual Issue of Waiver Under Contractual Consent to Assignment Clause — Summary Judgment Proper: The Nicholsons entered a contract option with J.G.L. Distributing (JGL) that gave JGL 5 years to purchase the Nicholsons' property. The option contained a consent to assignment clause that required JGL to obtain the Nicholsons' written consent before assignment to a third party. JGL subsequently assigned an interest in the property to plaintiff but did not notify the Nicholsons. Plaintiff spent money improving the property but missed a payment. The Nicholsons then notified JGL that the option expired and that they intended to sell the property to someone else. Plaintiff sued JGL and the Nicholsons, JGL counterclaimed against plaintiff and filed cross-claims against the Nicholsons, the Nicholsons counterclaimed against JGL, and all three parties moved for summary judgment. The District Court dismissed plaintiff's claim because plaintiff was not a party to the contract. The court also held that the consent to assignment clause was valid and enforceable, but that even though JGL breached the agreement by not notifying the Nicholsons of the assignment and by missing a payment, the breach was not material and did not serve to terminate JGL's right to exercise the option. The court then concluded that forfeiture would be too harsh a remedy, excused the forfeiture, and granted JGL 20 days to pay the Nicholsons the full purchase price. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to show a genuine issue of material fact that the Nicholsons waived their rights under the consent to assignment clause. The breach of contract by JGL was incidental rather than material, so the District Court's holding that forfeiture would be too harsh was not erroneous. Thus, the District Court correctly applied the antiforfeiture statute when it granted JGL equitable relief under 28-1-104 because JGL's breach was not grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent. It was only when the Nicholsons discovered that they could sell the property at a greater profit that they acted to strictly enforce the timely payment provision of the contract, so application of the antiforfeiture statute was appropriate to avoid an unjust result. Mere Denial of Public Nature of Road Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Public Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The District Court found that the elements of a prescriptive easement over a road on defendants' property were satisfied and granted summary judgment to plaintiff county. Defendants contended that disputed issues of fact existed regarding proof of a prescriptive easement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The county proved that use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutorily required period. The only evidence in support of defendants' position was a conclusory hearsay statement claiming that the previous owners had indicated that the road was not public. Defendants' mere denial of the public nature of the road was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Powell County v. 5 Rockin' MS Angus Ranch, Inc., 2004 MT 337, 324 M 204, 102 P3d 1210 (2004), following Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002).

Failure to Notify Current Occupant That Tax Deed May Issue — Quiet Title Deed Properly Voided: Under 15-18-212, notice that a tax deed will be issued unless a property tax lien is redeemed must be made to each interested party and to the current occupant. In this case, defendant knew that plaintiff was the current occupant and knew where plaintiff was located but simply did not provide the requisite notice. Additionally, because plaintiff did not receive adequate notice, the county was without jurisdiction to issue defendant a quiet title decree. Every essential and material step of the tax deed statutes must be strictly followed. Thus, the District Court correctly voided defendant's quiet title decree and granted summary judgment to plaintiff because no genuine issue of material fact existed. Gentry Mont. Enterprises, Inc. v. McDonald, 2004 MT 322, 324 M 67, 101 P3d 767 (2004), following Moran v. Robbin, 261 M 478, 863 P2d 395 (1993).

Employer Unaware That Employee Would Be Injured During Routine Job Activity — No Showing of Employer Malice Under Sherner Standard: Olszewski was seriously injured while loading building trusses onto a flatbed truck. Olszewski recovered workers' compensation benefits but also brought an action alleging that the injury was covered under the 1999 intentional act exception in 39-71-413, which was in effect when the injury occurred. The District Court found no showing of malicious action on the part of the employer or foreman and granted summary judgment to the employer and foreman. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the malicious intent standard in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), and affirmed. Olszewski was unable to provide evidence that the employer knew that employees would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident, and absent a showing of that material fact, the statutory exception did not apply and summary judgment was proper. Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004).

Sledding in City Park Considered Recreational Purpose for Which City Immune From Liability: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. The trial court held that the city was immune from liability pursuant to 70-16-302. Citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), plaintiff contended that because city parks are freely available to the public, it was unnecessary for the law to encourage availability by limiting a city's tort liability. The Supreme Court disagreed and distinguished Dobrocke, holding that the use of city parks is discretionary, unlike the use of city streets and boulevards that was at issue in Dobrocke, so the legislative rationale behind 70-16-302 to encourage the availability of recreational areas applied. Winter sports, such as sledding, are explicitly listed in the statute as a recreational purpose, so summary judgment for the city was affirmed. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

No Showing of Malicious Act or Omission by Coworker in Death of Employee — Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Doctrine Applicable under 1999 Statute: Under the 1999 version of 39-71-413 and Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), a plaintiff was required to show both an intentional and malicious act or omission in order to avoid the workers' compensation exclusivity doctrine (revised in 2001 to require only the showing of an intentional act or omission). Here Everhard, a mine worker, was killed by a train driven by Aafedt after signaling that Aafedt could proceed. Everhard's estate sued Aafedt and the mining company. The District Court concluded that Aafedt's conduct was intentional when he moved the train without seeing Everhard, but there was no showing that Everhard suffered an injury caused by actual malice by Aafedt or the company, so summary judgment was granted to defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed. As a matter of law, it could not be said that Aafedt deliberately proceeded to act in conscious or intentional disregard or even indifference to the high probability of injury to Everhard under the definition of actual malice, so the estate failed to overcome the workers' compensation exclusive remedy rule, and summary judgment was proper. Blain v. Stillwater Min. Co., 2004 MT 141, 321 M 403, 92 P3d 4 (2004).

Speculation That Subcontractor's Work Caused Building Defect — Summary Judgment Proper: A contractor filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against a subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for some tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The contractor failed to present a genuine issue of material fact that the subcontractor's work was the cause of a purported bulge in the tennis court. Because implicating the subcontractor's work as the cause of the defect required speculation, summary judgment was proper because causation is a material element in sustaining a cause for negligence or breach. Glacier Tennis Club at The Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co, Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Wage Claims Precluded by Separation and Release Agreement — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs were terminated from employment with defendant and signed a separation and release agreement that released defendant from all claims related to the employment and termination. Plaintiffs then sued defendant for wrongful discharge, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, contract interference, and tortious conduct. Defendant requested and was granted summary judgment based on relinquishment of claims in the separation and release agreement, and plaintiffs appealed, asserting that the agreement was void under 39-3-208. The Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs' affidavit in response to defendant's summary judgment motion made general allegations regarding both wage and hour violations and insufficient consideration, but despite the fact that plaintiffs had over 2 years to do so, the affidavit did not set forth specific facts to support either claim. Absent proof of the existence of any genuine issue of material fact regarding the validity of the agreement, summary judgment was proper. Old Elk v. Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies, Inc., 2003 MT 167, 316 M 320, 73 P3d 795 (2003), following Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532 (1985).

No Genuine Issue of Fact Regarding State Land Lessee's Rental of Property in Contravention of Zoning Regulations — Summary Judgment Proper: Stewart leased a parcel of state land for a residence in an area that was zoned for single-family dwellings. The state commenced a civil action challenging Stewart's use of a single-family unit as a multiple-family unit and seeking injunctive relief. The District Court granted the state's motion for summary judgment and issued an injunction against Stewart, and Stewart appealed. Stewart maintained that the residence had not been modified in any way following approval of architectural plans, so the residence was still in compliance with zoning restrictions. The state responded that it was not the structure itself but Stewart's use of the structure that violated zoning regulations. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. Testimony of former residents confirmed that Stewart's home was being used as a multiple-family residence, and Stewart offered no proof other than mere denial and speculation that a material question of fact existed regarding use of the structure as a multiple-family residence. Thus, summary judgment for the state was proper, and the grant of injunctive relief against Stewart was affirmed. St. v. Stewart, 2003 MT 108, 315 M 335, 68 P3d 712 (2003).

Duty of Railroad to Construct and Maintain Safe Railroad Crossing — Summary Dismissal of Liability Case Against County for Road Construction Proper: The North Alaska road crossing was built in the early 1920s through the cooperative efforts of the county and the railroad. The crossing was entirely on railroad property, and the railroad allowed access to the county over the years to maintain the road and to erect signs on the railroad's right-of-way. Fisch was injured in 1998 when his dump truck was struck by a train at the crossing. The railroad sought to ascribe liability to the county for negligent design and construction of the crossing. The county denied all allegations of negligence, and the District Court granted summary judgment to the county on the issue of liability. The railroad appealed on grounds that ARM 18.6.311 required the county to construct and maintain the roadway through the crossing in a safe manner. The Supreme Court disagreed. The clear intent of the administrative rule was to limit application of the rule to projects arising from the state's allocation of federal funds made available to improve the safety of railroad crossings and did not address road-rail alignment or crossing design. The historical ambiguity of whether the railroad or the county chose the exact location for the crossing raised no genuine issue of material fact and was irrelevant to the question of which entity had the duty to construct and maintain the crossing. Rather, under 69-14-602, that duty was statutorily assigned to and rested clearly with the railroad. Thus, summary dismissal of the liability claim against the county was proper. Fisch v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2003 MT 76, 315 M 13, 67 P3d 267 (2003).

Disclosure of Building Leakage and Source of Water Not Material Fact: Plaintiffs purchased a building in Philipsburg for use as a residence. Water began seeping into the basement a couple of years later, and plaintiffs sued the sellers for breach of the warranty of habitability and the city because the source of the water may have been from a broken water line nearby. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim against the sellers because the sellers' knowledge of prior leakage was not a material fact and because the question of the source of the water was not material to the transaction between the parties. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs all but conceded that the prior leakage was not important when they did not disclose the leakage to the bank when they refinanced the property. Further, plaintiffs' initial claim against the sellers was for nondisclosure of the leakage without regard to the source, so summary judgment was not precluded because the source was not essential to the case against the sellers. Bond v. Philipsburg, 2003 MT 74, 315 M 7, 67 P3d 255 (2003).

Breach of Subordination Agreement — Failure to Respond — Summary Judgment Proper: After submitting evidence in support of its motion, defendant moved for summary judgment because plaintiff breached a subordination agreement. The burden shifted to plaintiff to respond, but instead of filing a response brief, plaintiff filed two depositions and a set of discovery answers at the hearing and relied on oral argument. After consideration, the District Court granted summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, contending that summary judgment was improper because the depositions and discovery answers proved the existence of an intercreditor agreement between defendant and a codefendant, establishing a question of fact whether defendant received all funds to which it was entitled and thus whether defendant had any claim against plaintiff. The Supreme Court disagreed. Breach of the subordination agreement occurred before the intercreditor agreement existed, so the facts presented by plaintiff did not establish a material fact regarding the subordination agreement, and summary judgment was appropriate. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003).

No Requirement That Private Property Be Available for Public Use Before Landowner Liability Shield Applies — Landowner Immune From Suit Absent Consideration or Evidence of Misconduct: Saari went inner tube sledding with a church group on a hill at a ski resort after the resort was closed for the day. The group paid no fees to use the hill and did not rent or purchase equipment from the resort operator. During that evening, Saari lost control and crashed in a creek bed, suffering injuries which subsequently caused Saari's death. Saari's estate sued the resort operator on six negligence counts, including survival action, wrongful death, negligence, premises liability, attractive nuisance, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that 70-16-302 precluded liability by the operator because there was no duty of care owed to Saari and granted summary judgment to the operator on all counts. The estate appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By its terms, 70-16-302 provides for landowner liability when a recreational user gives valuable consideration to the landowner in exchange for using the property or when the landowner acts with willful or wanton misconduct. While conceding that Saari paid no consideration for use of the ski hill, the estate nevertheless argued that the operator generally benefited from after-hours sledders, which constituted consideration. However, no legal authority was advanced for the proposition that economic benefits received at a different point in time constituted valuable consideration given by Saari on the night in question, and these speculative statements did not give rise to a genuine issue of material fact. Moreover, the operator's failure to prevent or supervise after-hours sledding did not constitute willful or wanton misconduct. An absence of evidence cannot establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Finally, the estate cited Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), for the proposition that a question of fact existed regarding whether the property was open to the public. Under Simchuk, if the land upon which an injury occurs is not available for public use, the landowner does not enjoy the limited liability afforded by 70-16-302. However, a public use requirement would essentially negate the "without permission" language of the statute and exceed the parameters of the statute, and because the statute contains no express language that property be open for public use before the liability shield applies, the Supreme Court overruled Simchuk to that extent. Summary judgment on all counts was proper. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003).

Development and Use Agreement Not Precluding City From Entering Agreement for Construction Project on Public Property — Franchise Agreement Outside Scope of Citizen Group's Agreement With City: A citizen's group entered a franchise agreement with a professional baseball organization to bring a team to Missoula. After two potential sites were rejected, the city of Missoula accepted a gift of property upon which to construct a baseball facility and granted the citizen group the right to finance and construct the stadium on the property and to convey the completed facility to the city. The citizen group moved to enjoin the city from development of the proposed civic baseball stadium because of the city's failure to comply with statutory requirements for planning, funding, and managing the facility. All claims were dismissed on summary judgment, and the citizen group appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The development and use agreements in this case did not preclude the city from executing an agreement with another entity for the construction of a similar facility on public property or from leasing a city-owned facility for baseball games or any other purpose. Any franchise agreement between the baseball organization and the citizen group was outside the scope of the group's agreement with the city, so the voter-approval provisions of 7-5-4321 did not apply. The citizen group's argument that the city was required to comply with urban renewal laws also failed. The decision whether to proceed with development under the urban renewal statutes was up to the city, and the fact that the city designated the capital improvements associated with the stadium construction as an urban renewal project did not require that the citizen group's building project come under the same purview. Rather, under 7-16-4106, the city is permitted to obtain an athletic field and civic stadium through purchase, donation, or condemnation and to regulate its use, but nothing in the statute prohibits the city from designating a stadium project as an urban renewal project or mandates that the project be designated as an urban renewal project. The District Court properly found that the city appropriately exercised its administrative authority in accepting the gift property and then leasing the site to the citizen group for purposes of constructing a stadium using private financial resources. The citizen group failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Fair Play Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula, 2002 MT 179, 311 M 22, 52 P3d 926 (2002).

Statute of Limitations Tolled Until Discovery of Self-Concealing Injury — Exposure to Farm Chemicals and Injection: While assisting her former husband with farm duties in 1989, Elizabeth Nelson was exposed to farm chemicals and pesticides and was accidentally injected with bovine ecthyma vaccine. She lost consciousness briefly following the injection but recovered and continued assisting with sheep inoculations the rest of the day. From 1989 through 1998, Elizabeth received extensive medical evaluations and treatments for numerous physical ailments that either surfaced or worsened subsequent to the exposure to chemicals and the vaccine, but doctors were unable to pinpoint the cause and effect relationship between the ailments and the exposure until 1996. Elizabeth filed a complaint in 1998, but her former husband moved for summary judgment because Elizabeth allegedly knew of her injuries for more than 3 years before the action was filed. The District Court agreed that the claim was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204. Elizabeth appealed. In Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the onset of the statute of limitations is determined by applying the discovery rule and establishing when the injured person knew, or in the exercise of due diligence should have known, of the facts constituting the cause of action. However, the District Court distinguished Hando because Elizabeth's injuries following the injection were obvious and immediate, unlike the self-concealing injuries in Hando that developed over time. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although Elizabeth suspected the cause of the injuries and diligently sought medical treatment and diagnosis, there was no genuine issue of material fact that the actual causal connection was not discovered until 1996, well within the 3-year period prior to the filing of the claim. Thus, the complaint was timely filed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was improper, so the case was reversed for trial on the merits. Nelson v. Nelson, 2002 MT 151, 310 M 329, 50 P3d 139 (2002).

Failure to Prove Conduct a Cause in Fact of Alleged Damage — Summary Judgment Proper: Abraham's townhouse basement flooded, so Nelson, the builder of the townhouse, was sued for negligently designing and building the residence, breaching implied warranties of quality workmanship, good construction, and habitability, and causing the basement to flood. Causation is one of four elements that must be proved in a negligence action, and except in cases of intervening cause, proof of causation is satisfied by proof that a party's conduct was a cause in fact of the damage alleged. Here, when Nelson presented Abraham's deposition testimony that Abraham did not know the cause of the flooding, Nelson met the initial burden of demonstrating that no material question of fact existed regarding the element of causation, and the burden shifted to Abraham to provide facts to prove causation. However, Abraham could not merely point to lack of evidence as the factor creating a material question, nor did Abraham's suspicions or unsupported conclusory or speculative statements raise a genuine issue of material fact. Abraham could not merely rest on evidence of Nelson's negligence, but rather was required to show that Nelson's negligence was the cause in fact of Abraham's injury. Abraham failed to submit facts to create a material question upon which the District Court could determine whether Nelson's actions in designing and building the townhouse were the cause in fact of the flooding, so summary judgment for Nelson was proper. Abraham v. Nelson, 2002 MT 94, 309 M 366, 46 P3d 628 (2002). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), and Gentry v. Dismissal of Counterclaims by Summary Judgment Proper When All Prior Claims Resolved by Memorandum of Understanding: Defendant filed several counterclaims stemming from an agricultural lease. The District Court held that the underlying dispute regarding the parties' obligations applicable to the lease was settled by a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU), and dismissed the counterclaims as a matter of law. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The MOU was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories, and the District Court did not err in summarily dismissing the counterclaims. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

Statements of Intent to File Grievance Not Considered Formal Grievance — Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Warranting Summary Judgment: Offerdahl was notified by a supervisor that, based on complaints of inappropriate behavior toward a subordinate employee and the Department's investigation of the complaints, Offerdahl's employment would be terminated. Following a pretermination hearing that Offerdahl did not attend, his employment was terminated on September 15. He was notified of his right to respond or pursue a grievance in accordance with the state's grievance policy, which required that a formal grievance be filed within 15 working days after the grievable event. On September 19, Offerdahl sent the Department a letter indicating that he would not attend any other termination hearings and that he intended to follow the grievance procedure as directed in the September 15 letter. Offerdahl eventually mailed a written grievance on October 7 that was filed on October 8, but the grievance was denied as untimely. Offerdahl appealed to the District Court, but the court granted the state's motion for summary judgment on grounds that Offerdahl had failed to exhaust administrative remedies. Offerdahl appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Neither Offerdahl's oral statement to another Department employee that he intended to file a grievance, nor the September 19 letter of intent to file a grievance, met the requirements of a formal grievance. Offerdahl was required by the policy to file a formal grievance by October 6, but his grievance was not filed until October 8. Thus, Offerdahl's failure to timely pursue administrative remedies for termination of his employment barred pursuit of the claim, and the motion for summary judgment was properly granted. Offerdahl v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2002 MT 5, 308 M 94, 43 P3d 275 (2002).

Mortgage Against Party's Interest in Property Granted Pursuant to Dissolution — No Tortious Interference With Business, Prima Facie Tort, or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: When George and Joyce were divorced, the District Court granted George exclusive possession of the ranch until it could be sold and the proceeds divided between the parties. During the course of the dissolution proceedings, Joyce took out several loans for living expenses. After the dissolution, Joyce consolidated the $150,000 in loans, and the bank executed a mortgage on Joyce's interest in the ranch to secure the loan. When George found out about the mortgage and security interest, he became distraught because he believed that he would not be able to obtain loans on the property to enable him to conduct ranch obligations and meet his operations. George subsequently filed suit against Joyce, the bank, and the bank president, who was Joyce's son-in-law, alleging tortious interference with business relationships, prima facie tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, and George appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277 (1995), the court concluded that the acts of Joyce and the bank were legal and that, standing alone, the acts did not give rise to any presumption or inference that the acts were done to harm George. The court also declined to recognize a separate cause of action for prima facie tort under the facts of this case. Applying Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the court further concluded that because the defendants' acts were legal, no claim for emotional distress could arise from those acts. Absent material facts evidencing malicious intent or damages, summary judgment was proper. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Sale of Property Contingent on Financing — Financing Contingent on Grant of Contract — Oral Agreement to Purchase Additional Property Contingent on Initial Sale — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Genuine Issue of Fact: Community, Counseling, and Correctional Services, Inc. (Community), agreed to purchase Albright's property for a prerelease center. An additional oral agreement provided that Community would also purchase furnishings on the property when the sale was completed. The sale was contingent on Community's ability to obtain financing, and financing was contingent upon a grant for the prerelease center to Community from the Department of Corrections. Ultimately, the Department declined to issue the contract for prerelease services, Community was unable to obtain financing, and Albright was unable to sell the property or furnishings. Albright sued Community for breach of contract. The District Court granted summary judgment to Community, holding that under the plain language of the contract, the offer terminated when the Department did not issue the contract. Albright appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. No question of fact existed with respect to the conditions for the agreement because the agreement conditioned formation of any contract to buy the real property on Community's ability to obtain financing and Community could not obtain financing without the Department contract. Further, Albright's own affidavit stated that the oral agreement to purchase the furnishings was contingent on purchase of the property, so no issue of fact existed regarding the sale of the furnishings either, and that issue was also properly disposed of by summary judgment. Albright v. Community, Counseling, & Correctional Serv., Inc., 2001 MT 272, 307 M 289, 37 P3d 675 (2001).

Denial of General Liability Coverage Based on Liquor Liability Exclusion — Failure to Raise Alternative Negligence Theory — Summary Judgment Proper: Cusenbary was injured when a bar patron drove a car through the wall of Mortensen's tavern. Mortensen was covered by USF&G Co. under a general liability policy, but the insurance included a liquor liability exclusion. When Mortensen tendered the claim to USF&G Co. for defense, the company denied coverage and refused to defend based on the exclusion, so Cusenbary's claim was tried to a jury and Mortensen was found guilty of negligence (see Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351 (1999)). Mortensen then assigned all rights to coverage under the general liability policy to Cusenbary. Cusenbary then sued USF&G Co., contending that the company had a duty to indemnify Mortensen for negligent behavior in management of the bar, separate from the negligent conduct of serving alcohol to an intoxicated patron, because the separate conduct was not excluded by the liquor liability exclusion. The District Court granted summary judgment for USF&G Co., holding that the separate conduct related directly to the improper service or sale of alcohol and that Mortensen failed to set forth evidence supporting an alternative negligence theory, so as a matter of law, Mortensen's judgment was excluded by the express language of the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669 (1988). All claims and arguments at trial were related to Mortensen's negligence in serving alcohol, and no assertion was ever made that the proposed evidence was relevant to any other theory of negligence or to any other theory. All of the claims arose from serving alcohol and were thus excluded from coverage. Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

Absence of Genuine Issue of Material Fact Regarding Negligent Installation of Septic System — Summary Judgment Proper: Prior to the Sherrards' purchase of property for building a home and horse arena, they had the county sanitarian issue a resite evaluation that addressed ground water levels and designated appropriate septic systems to service each building. The sanitarian approved a permit for a shallow cap system for the horse arena. The system was subject to state regulations requiring minimum 12-inch trenches and prohibiting installation where the water table reached within 5 feet of the natural ground surface. The Sherrards contracted with Prewett to install the system. Prewett dug a hole for the septic tank, dug 36-inch deep trenches for lateral pipes in the drain field, placed washed gravel and pipes in the trenches, and prepared the system for inspection. The next day, the new county sanitarian inspected the system, found standing ground water in the septic tank and observed water in the lateral trenches, fixed the ground water level at 27 inches below the natural surface, and because the ground water level was too high to meet county and state requirements, revoked the Sherrards' permit. The Sherrards then sued Prewett for negligent installation of the system. The District Court determined that because the ground water depth was less than 5 feet and the shallow cap system could not meet regulations, the object of the contract between the parties was illegal and the Sherrards could not proceed with their contract-based claim. Therefore, the court concluded that no genuine issue of material fact existed and granted summary judgment for Prewett, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Sherrards' bare denial of the 27-inch ground water level and their speculation about the ground water level at the time that the original permit was issued, were insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact because they constituted mere denial, speculation, or conclusory statements. The material fact was not whether the ground water level was precisely 27 inches below the surface, but whether it was 5 feet or more below the surface as required by state regulations. To prevail, the Sherrards needed to come forward with substantial and material evidence with regard to the ground water level at the horse arena, but they failed to do so, so summary judgment was proper. Sherrard v. Prewett, 2001 MT 228, 306 M 511, 36 P3d 378 (2001).

Failure to Produce Evidence in Contradiction of Investigating Officer's Conclusions Regarding Cause of Accident — Summary Judgment Proper: Ten-year-old Vivier was riding her bicycle and, turning unexpectedly in front of a vehicle, was struck and injured. Vivier's parents sued the state Department of Transportation and Lewis and Clark County for negligently failing to make the road safe. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county on grounds that the county did not have a duty with respect to the design and construction of the road and granted summary judgment to the Department on grounds that the Department did not have a duty to undertake road reconstruction simply because standards of construction had changed since the road was originally constructed. The court also determined that the Viviers failed to submit evidence tending to show that the accident was caused by a design or construction problem. The Viviers appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A cause of action for negligence has four elements, including duty, breach, causation, and damages, and summary judgment is proper if the moving party establishes that one element lacks any genuine issue of material fact and the nonmoving party does not come forward with proof that a genuine issue exists. In this case, regardless of whether the county or the Department had a duty to improve the road, the evidence showed that the accident occurred because the child turned in front of the vehicle before the driver had a chance to react, not because the condition of the road prevented the driver from maneuvering to avoid the accident. The Viviers failed to produce any facts to contradict the investigating officer's conclusions with regard to the cause of the accident, and the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the county and Department was correct. Vivier v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 221, 306 M 454, 35 P3d 958 (2001).

No Standing to Recover Damages by Party Not Owner of Property — Fax Not Considered Valid Assignment of Damage Claim: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a complaint seeking compensation from the companies. Dale's parents eventually filed for bankruptcy, and the Lewises finally became the owners of record in 1998. When the companies discovered that the Lewises were not the owners of the inn at the time that the suit was filed, they moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court on grounds that the Lewises had no standing to assert a claim for damages arising before they acquired title. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited the general rule that persons cannot recover for damages to property that they do not own. Further, even though property damage claims have long been recognized as assignable, the fax did not meet the statutory requirements of a valid assignment and was unenforceable. Thus, on the issue of prepurchase damages, no material question of fact existed regarding ownership or assignment, so the Lewises had no standing to bring a claim for damages prior to their ownership of the inn. Summary judgment was affirmed. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Claim of Omitted Child Summarily Dismissed — Failure to Present Evidence of Mistaken Belief of Death of Child: Scotty Prescott married Howard Putman in 1946, and they had a son, William, in 1949. Scotty later found out that Howard's previous marriage had not been dissolved when they married, and Scotty was granted an annulment in 1954. She remained in Montana, attending Montana State College, and Howard moved to California with William. Aside from two letters in 1954, there was no evidence of any contact among Scotty, Howard, and William. William had no independent recollection of his mother and never attempted to contact her during the remaining 42 years of her life. Scotty executed a will in 1985, bequeathing the profits from the sale of her ranch to the college, the remainder of her estate to the Museum of the Rockies, and nothing to William, who later asserted that he was entitled to a share of the estate pursuant to 72-2-332 because Scotty mistakenly believed that he was dead. In a nonsubstantial revision of the will in 1991, Scotty had stated that "the line of succession for this branch of the Prescott family ends with me", which William contended raised a question of material fact as to whether his mother believed him to be dead. However, the statement was not made until 6 years after the will was executed and was consistent with the separate way that they lived their lives. Further, the record was replete with uncontroverted proof that the disposition of Scotty's estate was consistent with her intention stated as early as 1964 to endow the college and did not indicate that William was omitted from the will solely because Scotty believed him to be dead. In the absence of sufficient evidence required by 72-2-332(3) proving that William was an omitted child, the District Court correctly dismissed William's claim by summary judgment. In re Estate of Prescott, 2000 MT 200, 300 M 469, 8 P3d 88, 57 St. Rep. 779 (2000).

Lack of Meritorious Argument on Appeal of Summary Judgment: Kinsey-Cartwright and Burleson had a dispute over an easement across Kinsey-Cartwright's property. Burleson took his attorney, Brower, to investigate the disputed easement, during which time a confrontation occurred, resulting in a complaint against Brower for assault and trespass. The District Court granted Brower's request for summary judgment, and Kinsey-Cartwright appealed. With the exception of four sentences in her reply brief, Kinsey-Cartwright's entire argument was devoted to arguing that no easement burdened her land. However, the appeal was related to the complaint of assault and trespass, not the validity of an easement. The four sentences were simply a collection of conclusions and contained no discussion of the law relating to trespass or assault, no citation to legal authority or to the record, and no application of the law to the facts. It is not the obligation of the Supreme Court to formulate arguments or locate authorities for parties who appeal. Thus, absent any meritorious argument to consider on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court award of summary judgment. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000). See also St. v. Blackcrow, 1999 MT 44, 293 M 374, 975 P2d 1253 (1999).

Error in Denial of Opportunity to Respond to Amended Requests for Admission — Late Discovery Responses Properly Denied: Defendant neglected to respond to requests for admission within 30 days. On defendant's motion for summary judgment, the District Court amended two requests for admission, which nullified the matter contained in the requests as being conclusively established. Plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to respond to the amended requests and the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing plaintiff the chance to respond. The Supreme Court reversed the portions of the summary judgment that corresponded to the amended requests for admission, but, in accord with Easton v. Cowie, 247 M 181, 805 P2d 573 (1991), the portions of the summary judgment based on admissions demonstrating no genuine issue of material fact were affirmed because plaintiff did not respond in a timely manner to the discovery requests. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641, 57 St. Rep. 674 (2000).

No Duty Constituting Negligence When Danger or Risk Unforeseeable — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Material Fact Regarding Legal Duty: The father could not reasonably foresee that, by giving his child permission to go to a friend's house to play, the child would go to the house of a different friend, participate along with other children in burning a photograph using gasoline, and be burned when another friend accidentally kicked the container of flaming gasoline onto his child. The duty element of negligence turns primarily on foreseeability, and if a reasonably prudent defendant can foresee neither any danger of direct injury nor any risk from an intervening cause, there is no negligence. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment, but in this case, reasonable minds could not differ regarding the absence of material fact regarding any duty owed by the father, so summary judgment was proper as a matter of law. Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000), following Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999).

Doctrine of Reasonable Expectations Inapplicable When Policy Language Excludes Coverage — Liability Coverage on Borrowed Horse Trailer Limited to Policy Terms: Babcock borrowed a horse trailer from her neighbor, and even though the trailer ball on Babcock's truck was too small for the trailer hitch, she attempted to tow the trailer anyway. The trailer came unhooked, left the road, and struck a fence. Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) paid Babcock the full cost of the fence repair. Babcock requested that Farmers also pay for damages to the trailer. Farmers paid $500 toward the trailer, which constituted Babcock's policy limit for collision and comprehensive coverage. Babcock sued, claiming that Farmers was required to pay for the trailer damage under the liability coverage. The District Court granted summary judgment for Farmers, concluding that the plain policy language limited coverage to $500. Babcock appealed, asserting that the policy language was ambiguous but nevertheless created a reasonable expectation that a trailer was covered and that the exclusion for damage "to property owned or being transported by an insured person" did not apply because the trailer was not being "transported" when it was damaged, having separated from the truck. Farmers argued that, under Babcock's interpretation, a passenger ejected from a car would have no claim for medical payments because the passenger did not "occupy" the vehicle at the time of injury. The Supreme Court agreed. The doctrine of reasonable expectations does not apply to create coverage when the terms of the policy clearly demonstrate an intent to exclude particular coverage. In this case, the policy language clearly excluded liability coverage for the borrowed trailer because it was in Babcock's charge and she was transporting it at the time of the accident. Babcock v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2000 MT 114, 299 M 407, 999 P2d 347, 57 St. Rep. 479 (2000).

Failure to Timely File Discrimination Complaint With Commission — Prosecution in District Court Precluded: Skites filed a claim against her employer with the Montana Human Rights Commission 225 days after the most recent or continuing act of employment discrimination. Under 49-2-501, a complaint must be filed within 180 days after the unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered, and if the complaint is not timely filed, it may not be considered by the Commission. Further, pursuant to Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), timely filing before the Commission is a prerequisite to filing an employment discrimination complaint in District Court because Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, is the exclusive remedy for employment discrimination under Montana law. Skites' complaint was not timely filed with the Commission, thus her ability to prosecute the discrimination complaint in District Court was precluded. The District Court did not err in determining that no genuine issue of material fact existed that would preclude summary judgment for the employer. Skites v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Mont., 1999 MT 301, 297 M 156, 991 P2d 955, 56 St. Rep. 1213 (1999).

Existence of Promissory Notes Creating Rebuttable Presumption of Sufficient Consideration — Speculative Statements Insufficient to Demonstrate Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Defendant Moon contended that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff on promissory notes because there was a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the notes were unenforceable for lack of consideration. However, 26-1-602 creates a rebuttable presumption arising from the fact of the promissory note itself that the note was given for sufficient consideration. Under Rule 301(b)(2), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), Moon was required to show a preponderance of evidence contrary to the presumption in order to overcome it, otherwise the court was bound to find the assumed fact in accordance with the presumption. Moon's conclusory and speculative statements in the pleadings, briefs, and affidavits did not constitute sufficient factual evidence to demonstrate that a genuine issue of material fact existed contrary to the presumption of valid consideration, so the grant of summary judgment was proper. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

No Requirement That Adulterated Food Poses Danger to Human Health — Embargo Justified — Summary Judgment Proper: The dairy filed a complaint against the state, challenging the state's embargo of the dairy's milk products following the discovery of a black substance in the milk. The dairy claimed that in order for milk to be contaminated, and thus adulterated, it must be dangerous to human health. The Supreme Court held that under the plain meaning of 50-31-509, there is no requirement that adulterated food be adulterated so as to be dangerous or fraudulent in order for it to be embargoed or detained. It is sufficient that the food is adulterated. When there was no evidence raising genuine issues of material fact concerning the scope of the embargo or the quantity and identity of the black substance, the District Court did not err when it granted summary judgment to the state on these issues. Clover Leaf Dairy v. St., 285 M 380, 948 P2d 1164, 54 St. Rep. 1203 (1997).

Grant of Equitable Relief From Forfeiture — Conditions: Defendant defaulted on a contract to operate a coal mine. The District Court granted summary judgment, finding no genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's unlawful detainer. Defendant sought equitable relief pursuant to 28-1-104. The Supreme Court may, under appropriate circumstances, equitably relieve a party from the harsh effects of a forfeiture. Circumstances warranting equitable relief must not only meet the statutory requirements of tendering full compensation within a reasonable time after service of notice of default and not acting in a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent manner, but the party seeking relief must also assert facts that appeal to the conscience of the court of equity. Mere financial inability is not sufficient to appeal to the court's conscience. In this case, defendant's request for equitable relief was deficient because it did not meet statutory and common-law criteria, so the grant of summary judgment was affirmed. Glacier Park Co. v. Mtn., Inc., 285 M 420, 949 P2d 229, 54 St. Rep. 1222 (1997), following Kovacich v. Metals Bank & Trust Co., 139 M 449, 365 P2d 639 (1961), distinguishing Parrott v. Heller, 171 M 212, 557 P2d 819 (1976), and followed in Weter v. Archambault, 2002 MT 336, 313 M 284, 61 P3d 771 (2002).

Attorney Duty of Care — Facts Indicate No Breach of Duty: Seeley argued that the lower court erred in dismissing his suit against a law firm because the facts showed that the attorneys should have known that he wanted them to deliver the earnest money on certain real property on his behalf before the result of the title search was known. The Supreme Court held that common sense dictated that the facts could only be interpreted that the earnest money was to be delivered if there was no problem with the title, otherwise Seeley could have delivered the money himself prior to the results of the title search. Seeley v. Davis, 284 M 517, 946 P2d 119, 54 St. Rep. 1006 (1997).

Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Properly Granted: After examining the facts regarding Walker's undisputed breach of contract in the purchase and renovation of a house, the District Court granted Gierkes a partial summary judgment on the issue of liability. During a subsequent trial on the issue of damages, Walker alleged as an affirmative defense that Gierkes failed to adequately mitigate their damages. The Supreme Court found no genuine issue of material fact and affirmed the summary judgment as a matter of law. Further, the court also affirmed the trial court finding that Gierkes took reasonable and appropriate steps to mitigate their damages in requiring that Walker cease the renovation work and in denying him access to the property. Gierke v. Walker, 279 M 349, 927 P2d 524, 53 St. Rep. 1181 (1996).

Vehicle Owner Not Liable for Adult Daughter's Accident — Speculative and Conclusory Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact: The plaintiff sued the owner of a vehicle driven by the owner's adult daughter. The District Court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was proper because the plaintiff failed in the burden to raise any genuine issue of material fact that the daughter was the owner's agent at the time of the accident or that the owner negligently entrusted the vehicle to the daughter. As a matter of law, the owner was not liable for the daughter's alleged negligence merely by being the owner of the vehicle. Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937, 52 St. Rep. 1198 (1995).

Retaliatory Employment Requirement — Not Relevant to Requirement's Constitutionality: The date on which the state began to require that its firefighters protecting civilian and National Guard aircraft be members of the National Guard was not a material issue of fact precluding a summary judgment that the requirement was unconstitutional. The date was relevant to the petitioner firefighter's claim that the requirement was in retaliation for a firefighters' wage and hours suit against the state, but whether the requirement was in retaliation for the suit was not relevant to the issue of whether the requirement was constitutional. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

Land Lease Provisions Regarding Volunteer Crop: The provisions of an agricultural lease provided that defendant would lease the premises during the 1989, 1990, and 1991 crop seasons and deliver to plaintiff one-fourth of all crops produced on the land, except defendant was to receive the entire 1989 crop. A volunteer crop was harvested in 1989. Plaintiff contended that the crop was actually planted in 1987 for harvest in 1988, but due to a hail storm in 1988, the volunteer crop sprouted in 1989. Nevertheless, the agreement was clear on its face that defendant was to receive the 1989 crop, and the District Court properly granted summary judgment to defendant on the issue of ownership of the volunteer crop. Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Collision With Moose Not Itself Evidence of Negligence: Lynds's motor home collided with a moose, leaving the animal on the highway. The moose was then struck by another vehicle driven by Murdock. White, a passenger in the Murdock vehicle, brought a negligence action against Lynds, Murdock, and the state, alleging negligence in Lynds's failure to remove the injured moose from the highway, in Murdock's failure to see the injured moose before striking it, and in the state's failure to sign the area as a moose crossing. The District Court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that according to the trial evidence, there was insufficient time for Lynds to remove the moose from the highway before it was struck by Murdock, that there was nothing in the evidence produced by White in opposition to the motions upon which a jury could conclude that Murdock failed to act reasonably, and that posting of moose crossing signs would not have prevented the accident. Therefore, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not err in ruling that White failed to establish a material question of fact. White v. Murdock, 265 M 386, 877 P2d 474, 51 St. Rep. 547 (1994).

Enforcement of Bond Covering Sale of Horses — Summary Judgment Proper: Parks contracted with Michael to purchase 96 thoroughbred horses, paying $1,000 down, executing a promissory note for the remaining $1,749,000, and securing the note through a bond issued by Glacier General Assurance Company (Glacier). The bond required Michael to assign his security interest in the horses to Glacier in the event that performance on the bond was required. Parks failed to make the first installment payment, so Michael sent notice of default and acceleration to Parks. Michael also notified Glacier of the default, requested performance, and indicated the expectation that Glacier take possession of the horses or reimburse the costs of holding them. Glacier agreed that the horses would be sold at private auction. Michael subsequently received an opinion from a Kentucky court that he was entitled to summary judgment and liquidated damages against Glacier in the amount of $2,220,484.86, of which $1,749,000 represented Glacier's liability on the bond and the remainder reflected Michael's expenses for the maintenance, upkeep, and sale of the horses, less the sale proceeds. While Michael's litigation was proceeding in Kentucky, Glacier filed a petition for liquidation in Montana. The State Auditor was appointed liquidator. Michael filed a proof of claim with the liquidator, but the claim was denied. Michael died, but the estate filed a complaint requesting a Class 3 payment priority and an order that the liquidator proceed with payment. The liquidator appealed, asserting nine affirmative defenses, including allegations that enforcement of the sales agreement was unconscionable, that the claim should be assigned Class 4 priority as a general creditor's claim, and that the amount of the claim on the bond should be offset by the proceeds from the sale of the horses. The District Court granted summary judgment to the estate, holding that the claim was valid in the amount of the bond and assigning the claim Class 3 priority in the distribution of Glacier's assets. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that a disparity between the horses' market value and the purchase price was immaterial to the conscionability of enforcing the sales contract. The liquidator raised no issues of material fact, and the estate was properly entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. In re Estate of Michael v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 264 M 261, 871 P2d 272, 51 St. Rep. 252 (1994), distinguishing Morrow v. FBS Ins., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988).

Complete Absence of Evidence of Sexual Assault — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs alleged that their 4-year-old daughter was sexually assaulted during gym class at preschool by R.B., an aide in another class at the school. There was no clear physical evidence that a sexual assault occurred because the examining physician testified that the child could have been injured by other means, both innocent and accidental. The child's verbal and cognitive skills were insufficiently developed to allow a conscious and knowing identification of R.B. as the perpetrator. There was no testimony from anyone present during the gym class that the child showed any outward signs of injury, pain, or trauma. The direct, uncontradicted testimony of the child's teacher was that R.B. had no contact with the child whatsoever. Because the allegations against R.B. were based on conclusory and speculative statements insufficient to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact, summary dismissal was proper. S.M. v. R.B., 261 M 522, 862 P2d 1166, 50 St. Rep. 1437 (1993).

Speculative and Conclusory Statements Not Basis for Issue of Fact: Nelson sued Montana Power Company for negligence in shutting off a gas valve at the scene of a fire in Nelson's store, which Nelson claimed resulted in more extensive fire damage than would otherwise have been caused. Nelson based his theory upon statements by fire personnel made during discovery that it was "possible" that the fire was being fed by another fuel source other than the building itself. The Supreme Court noted that a suspicion and speculative and conclusory statements are not sufficient evidence to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Nelson v. Mont. Power Co., 256 M 409, 847 P2d 284, 50 St. Rep. 126 (1993).

Employment Termination Agreement Constituting Relinquishment of Potential Claims — Summary Judgment Proper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for termination, compensation, medical insurance for himself and his wife, and a waiver of claims wherein both parties voluntarily waived and relinquished future employment-related claims and released one another from "all actions, suits, debts, agreements, obligations, costs, expenses and other liabilities" related to the employment relationship. Summary judgment on an employment-related claim brought 1 year after the agreement was entered was proper in light of employee's failure to raise any issue of material fact with regard to execution of the valid and enforceable termination agreement. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Inference of Age Discrimination — Failure to Present Facts Indicating Dismissal a Pretext — Summary Judgment Proper: In the context of a summary judgment motion in an age discrimination action under 29 U.S.C. 621, et seq., the plaintiff need only adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference of the denial of an employment opportunity because of discriminatory age criteria. If that burden is met, the employer must rebut the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons that the plaintiff was not hired or was terminated. Upon such a showing, the burden shifts back to the employee to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. In this case, Kenyon was in the protected age class, met the minimum job qualifications, and was discharged and replaced by a younger woman, which was sufficient to support a reasonable inference of age discrimination. The employer then established that there were problems with Kenyon's work performance, number of absences, and time spent on nonprofessional duties over a long period of time and that there was a documented probation for poor work performance. Kenyon admitted by deposition that her employer's dissatisfaction with her work performance was apparent by his yelling at her on an almost daily basis. This evidence was sufficient to rebut the inference of discrimination. Kenyon subsequently failed to present specific facts that indicated that the employer's explanation for her dismissal was a pretext, relying only on conclusory assertions of discrimination raised in her affidavit. Kenyon therefore failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to her age discrimination claim, and summary dismissal in favor of the employer was proper. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), following Foster v. Arcata Assoc., Inc., 772 F2d 1453 (9th Cir. 1985).

Conclusory Statements Not Considered Material Facts: Mere disagreement about the interpretation of a fact does not amount to a genuine issue of material fact. When appellant recited facts with his own interpretations and conclusions that only carried the title of disputed issues of material fact, such conclusory statements, amounting to mischaracterization and selective quotation, were only his rendition of the facts and did not rise to the level of genuine issues of material facts. Sprunk v. First Bank Sys., 252 M 463, 830 P2d 103, 49 St. Rep. 369 (1992), followed in State ex rel. Scanlon v. Nat'l Ass'n of Ins. Comm'rs, 265 M 184, 875 P2d 340, 51 St. Rep. 480 (1994), Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994), and Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 975 P2d 1242, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999).

Fatal Flaw in Amended Complaint — Summary Judgment Affirmed: Summary judgment was proper as a matter of law because plaintiff's amended complaint was fatally flawed by: (1) seeking to retroactively apply a workers' compensation statute that was previously held inapplicable to accidents occurring prior to its enactment; and (2) failing to allege that job-related accidents were proximately caused by negligence of defendant employer. Donahue v. Convenience Disposal, Inc., 250 M 261, 818 P2d 839, 48 St. Rep. 916 (1991).

Conspiracy, Fraud, and Bad Faith — Summary Judgment Proper: The plaintiff sued a medical company and various employees on the basis that they had conspired to complete a medical evaluation of him that would result in his losing his workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court held that absolutely no evidence had been introduced to support the plaintiff's claims. Grenz v. Medical Management NW., Inc., 250 M 58, 817 P2d 1151, 48 St. Rep. 855 (1991) (Grenz III). See also Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 2001 MT 8, 304 M 83, 18 P3d 994 (2001), in which the court enjoined the claimant from filing further civil appeals until the sanction was paid.

Prior Oral Agreement Extinguished by Doctrine of Merger: The plaintiff, Eiselein, argued that the lower court had erred in granting the bank's motion for summary judgment. The lower court ruled that even if the bank had made an oral promise to lend Eiselein $150,000, that agreement was extinguished by a subsequent written agreement under which the bank lent the plaintiff only $35,000. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision on the basis that even if there had been a prior oral agreement, the subsequent writing between the parties would extinguish the oral agreement pursuant to the doctrine of merger. Eiselein v. Mont. Bank of Roundup, 250 M 71, 818 P2d 365, 48 St. Rep. 826 (1991).

No Retaliation in Discharge of Company President — Summary Judgment Proper: Mannix, terminated as president of Butte Water Company, appealed a District Court order granting summary judgment to defendant. Mannix alleged that facts supported his claim that his discharge was against the best interests of the water company and was in retaliation for refusing to sign a note. However, Mannix failed to present facts supporting his argument that his termination was against the best interests of the company or that defendant acted in retaliation in removing him as president of the water company. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 249 M 372, 816 P2d 441, 48 St. Rep. 782 (1991).

Parked Trailers Unattached to Insured Tractors — No Coverage Under Unambiguous Policy Provisions: The District Court found an insurance policy to be ambiguous regarding coverage for trailers that had been used to haul beer but that were parked and used for storage at the time they were accidentally run into and granted summary judgment for insurer based on that ambiguity. The Supreme Court found no ambiguity in policy language that clearly covered only trailers that were attached to an insured tractor. Citing its authority in Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979), the Supreme Court reversed and granted summary judgment to the nonmoving party based on the fact that the unambiguous policy language created no genuine issue of material fact. Canal Ins. Co. v. Bunday, 249 M 100, 813 P2d 974, 48 St. Rep. 597 (1991).

Allegations of Constructive Fraud and Visitation Interference Unsubstantiated by Fact — Summary Judgment Proper: Appellant alleged that a counselor's testimony at a dissolution hearing was a misrepresentation constituting constructive fraud and that her observations and professional opinions affected the outcome of the visitation order to the point of visitation interference. However, the allegations were based on appellant's own speculation and opinion rather than substantial objective evidence contained in the record. Absent any genuine issue of material fact, summary judgment on both questions was proper. Thomas v. Hale, 246 M 64, 802 P2d 1255, 47 St. Rep. 2261 (1990), followed in Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Creation of Issue of Fact by Contradiction of Previous Testimony Not Allowed: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the plaintiff's contradiction between his deposition testimony and his subsequent affidavit did not create a genuine issue of material fact. The Supreme Court stated that to allow such a practice would permit any party to head off a summary judgment by supplementing previous depositions with a new affidavit. Stott v. Fox, 246 M 301, 805 P2d 1305, 47 St. Rep. 2040 (1990), followed in Kaseta v. NW. Agency of Great Falls, 252 M 135, 827 P2d 804, 49 St. Rep. 183 (1992), Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996), and Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Wobbly Fence Not Hidden or Lurking Hazard: The plaintiff argued that the defendant's wooden fence constituted a hidden hazard because it wobbled when he put his hand on the top of it and he injured himself attempting to jump over it. The Supreme Court held that it was not persuaded by the plaintiff's erroneous if not completely arcane reasoning that a wooden fence is a hidden or lurking hazard merely because it wobbles when one jumps over it. Berens v. Wilson, 246 M 269, 806 P2d 14, 47 St. Rep. 2009 (1990).

General Liability Umbrella Policies Precluding Coverage for Sexual Molestation: Defendant sexually molested his daughter over a period of 10 years. His daughter brought a civil action seeking damages for economic loss, medical treatment, and emotional distress. Defendant tendered the suit to his insurer to defend and indemnify in the event the daughter recovered damages. Policies in effect were: (1) a farm-ranch comprehensive general liability umbrella policy, limited to accidental injury; and (2) a commercial umbrella policy, limited to damages for personal injury caused by an occurrence that was neither expected nor intended from the standpoint of the insured. Based on these clear and unambiguous policy exclusions, the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the insurer because both policies were clearly intended to deny coverage for intentional misconduct, such as that resulting from intentional and ongoing sexual molestation. N. H. Ins. Group v. Strecker, 244 M 478, 798 P2d 130, 47 St. Rep. 1736 (1990). The two-pronged Strecker test was applied in Am. States Ins. Co. v. Willoughby, 254 M 218, 836 P2d 37, 49 St. Rep. 708 (1992), in which case it was held that when the insured's acts were intentional and evinced an intent to injure by their very nature, an insurance policy exclusion clause precluded coverage for intentional bodily injury.

Slip and Fall — No Breach of Duty by Landowner: The plaintiff did not dispute the facts as presented by the defendant in its summary judgment motion. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the undisputed facts indicated that as a matter of law, the defendant did not breach its reasonable duty of care in maintaining its parking lot and was not liable for the injuries suffered when the plaintiff slipped on ice in the lot. Blaskovich v. Noreast Dev. Corp., 242 M 326, 790 P2d 977, 47 St. Rep. 740 (1990), overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

No Material Fact to Support Fraud Claims:

When a lender brought suit to foreclose on a promissory note, defendant filed counterclaims, alleging fraud and economic duress. Summary judgment in favor of the lender was proper because the defendant did not make an issue of material fact for fraud. The lender's alleged withdrawal of a promise to add delinquent payments to the end of the contract does not amount to fraud. Avco Financial Serv. v. Foreman-Donovan, 237 M 260, 772 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 785 (1989).

Plaintiff brought action for fraud, both actual and constructive, as well as undue influence, arising out of a promise by his mother to compensate plaintiff, upon sale of the family corporation's assets, for a portion of value attributable to plaintiff's stock and partnership interest conveyed to corporation for cancellation of promissory note executed by plaintiff for a loan from the corporation. The respondent mother was granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that plaintiff failed to establish a fraud claim because of admissions that his mother did not intend to deceive him and that he never relied on his mother's promise to compensate. His claims were also barred by the Statute of Limitations. Fleming v. Fleming Farms, Inc., 221 M 237, 717 P2d 1103, 43 St. Rep. 776 (1986).

Ostensible Agency Not to Be Based on Agent's Statements Alone: A manufacturing company received a federal contract to produce combat helmets. Farmers State Bank supplied a letter to the Department of Defense stating that Farmers Bank and First National Bank of Missoula would provide the necessary financing. Neither bank funded the project, and the company sued under tort and contract law. The Supreme Court affirmed a summary judgment in favor of First National, ruling that Farmers Bank could not be held to be First National's agent based solely on statements made by Farmers Bank in its letter to the Department of Defense. NW. Polymeric, Inc. v. Farmers St. Bank, 236 M 175, 768 P2d 873, 46 St. Rep. 275 (1989).

Promissory Note — Foreclosure of First Trust Indenture: A second lienholder whose lien is extinguished by the foreclosure of a first lien may maintain a direct action on the note. The bank, which held a promissory note secured by a junior trust indenture, was entitled to sue directly on the note after foreclosure by the holder of the senior trust indenture. Summary judgment for the bank was proper when there was no genuine issue of any material fact and when the bank was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. First Interstate Bank of Kalispell v. Wann, 235 M 111, 765 P2d 749, 45 St. Rep. 2232 (1988).

Wrongful Discharge — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff in a wrongful discharge action alleged a public policy violation by employer in not adhering to the employee discipline procedure outlined in its personnel policy. However, plaintiff failed to show that employer had violated its alternative discipline procedure, and summary judgment for employer was proper because there was no genuine issue of material fact indicating a public policy violation by employer. Rupnow v. Polson, 234 M 66, 761 P2d 802, 45 St. Rep. 1734 (1988).

No Duty to Protect Absent Probable Cause to Arrest — No Police Negligence: A car driven by Buffalohorn entered an intersection against a red light and collided with a car occupied by Phillips and Hake, who suffered injuries. Buffalohorn was intoxicated at the time of the accident. About 2 hours prior to the accident, police detained and questioned Buffalohorn in connection with another accident, but at that time it was determined that Buffalohorn was not involved or extremely intoxicated. The Supreme Court rejected Phillips' argument that under Restatement (Second) of Torts, sec. 319 (1965), the officers had a duty to control Buffalohorn's potentially dangerous actions because imposition of a duty under sec. 319 depends on the ability to control the third person. Absent probable cause to arrest, no duty flowed from the officers to Phillips to protect Phillips from later actions of Buffalohorn, and Phillips' claim of police negligence was summarily dismissed. Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1463 (1988), followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996). Phillips was distinguished in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999), clarifying that the imposition of a duty to protect under Restatement (Second) of Torts 319 (1965) depends on whether the officer takes charge of the alleged dangerous person and that the officer's duty to protect is owed to third persons, not to the person with whom the officer has a custodial relationship.

Summary Judgment Proper on Question of Existence of Employment Relationship: A quarrel developed between a store employee and the prospective new store owner over dress policy. The employee walked out and later filed wrongful discharge allegations. The charges were summarily dismissed on the grounds that no employment relationship existed at the time of termination after it was determined that: (1) the prospective owner did not own or control the store on the day of termination; (2) the employee's wages were paid for that day by the former owner; and (3) the employee refused to give the store keys to the prospective owner, claiming they still belonged to the former owner. Janz v. Quenzer, 232 M 439, 756 P2d 1174, 45 St. Rep. 1178 (1988).

Extrinsic Evidence Unnecessary When Devise Clear: The language of a devise bequeathed property, if any, left in a partnership at the time of testator's demise. The District Court found the partnership to be a conduit through which the partners conducted their tenancy-in-common business and reported income for tax purposes; however, absent any partnership interest in real property, the court determined no property should pass and properly granted summary judgment. Because the testator's intention could be ascertained from the plain language of the devise alone, it was not necessary or proper for the court to receive extrinsic evidence in making its determination. In re Estate of Greenfield, 232 M 357, 757 P2d 1297, 45 St. Rep. 1112 (1988).

Summary Judgment Proper on Unsupported Claims of Economic Advantage, Bad Faith, Civil Conspiracy, and Punitive Damages: Plaintiff mining company by amended complaint brought claims of economic advantage, bad faith, civil conspiracy, and punitive damages. Defendant mining company filed a motion for a more definitive statement. In response, plaintiff filed a 35-page brief with 43 attached exhibits but again neglected to address defendant's request for specificity or counter defendant's legal arguments. Summary judgment was proper after a finding that plaintiff: (1) repeatedly failed to provide, with particularity, factual support for its allegations of fraud; (2) repeatedly failed to provide the District Court with a simple, concise, and direct pleading; and (3) failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact, relying instead on lengthy but unsupported allegations. Monte Vista Co. v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 522, 755 P2d 1358, 45 St. Rep. 809 (1988).

Conclusory or Speculative Statements Concerning Mental Intricacies Insufficient to Raise Material Fact: Conclusory or speculative statements concerning the psychological intricacies of the mind in general were not sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988).

Undisputed Facts Surrounding Arrest — Question of Law: Defendant argued that the question of whether probable cause existed for his arrest was a question of fact entitling him to a jury trial and precluding summary judgment. However, where facts were undisputed, the question of whether an arrest was legal or illegal became a question of law for the court. Wright v. St., 231 M 324, 752 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 652 (1988).

Animal on Highway — Failure to Establish Duty of Highway Employee: Summary judgment was properly granted to the state in a wrongful death action where a motorist was killed after striking a horse on the highway. Plaintiffs cited no authority that a highway maintenance employee had a duty to remove live animals from the roadway or to ensure that animals did not come back onto the highway. Whitfield v. Therriault Corp., 229 M 195, 745 P2d 1126, 44 St. Rep. 1896 (1987), followed in Lindey's Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 449, 872 P2d 764, 51 St. Rep. 317 (1994).

No Fraud in Representation of Debt: Debtor alleged that he signed a release in favor of the bank in total ignorance of his liabilities and defended his ignorance on the grounds that the bank misrepresented his debt to it. However, the record disclosed that the language of the release agreement, debtor's participation in a conference call in which reaffirmation of a loan was discussed, notice to debtor's attorney regarding the nature of indebtedness, and financial statements estimating debtor's liabilities all indicated debtor's knowledge of his debt load. There was no material question of fraudulent misrepresentation, and summary judgment was proper. Sprunk v. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula, 228 M 168, 741 P2d 766, 44 St. Rep. 1429 (1987), affirmed on separate grounds in Sprunk v. First Bank Sys., 252 M 463, 830 P2d 103, 49 St. Rep. 369 (1992), and followed in Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 975 P2d 1242, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999).

Ranch Owner Not "Keeper" of Dog — Summary Judgment Proper: A meter reader bitten by a dog while delivering a company calendar sued both the ranch foreman who owned the dog and the ranch owner, contending the ranch owner was jointly responsible as "keeper" of the dog. The District Court found that the ranch owner was not the "keeper" of the dog, as described in 3A C.J.S. Animals 205(b), since he did not own, have possession of, manage, control, or care for the animal as owners are accustomed to do. Since the ranch owner had provided materials to the foreman to build a fence and dog pen and an agreement was made to keep the dog in the pen unless accompanied by the foreman, the ranch owner clearly met the duty of reasonable and ordinary care required of Montana landowners. There being no factual question whether the ranch owner was the animal's "keeper", summary judgment was proper. Criswell v. Brewer, 228 M 143, 741 P2d 418, 44 St. Rep. 1408 (1987).

Summary Judgment Granted Before Discovery Complete: Summary judgment was granted before plaintiff received answers to two sets of interrogatories, two requests for production, and a request for an admission. The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had sufficient information before it to determine that plaintiff had presented no factual situation that would allow him to pursue a separate claim against a parent company and that nothing in the discovery requests was aimed at bringing forth information regarding the critical question of whether plaintiff was entitled to be provided a safe workplace by the parent company rather than the subsidiary by which he was employed. Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Libel Action — Communications Made in Proper Discharge of Official Duties — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs filed a libel action against the state of Montana, its agencies, and its agents for alleged libelous statements published in various Montana newspapers. The newspaper reports were based on a letter written by a state employee and submitted into evidence in a relicensure hearing. The District Court granted defendants an order for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court held that all statements made by defendants were communications made in the proper discharge of their official duties. Plaintiffs did not sustain their burden of proof that genuine issues of material fact existed to be tried, and therefore defendants were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Denny Driscoll Boys Home v. St., 227 M 177, 737 P2d 1150, 44 St. Rep. 991 (1987), followed in Wolf v. Williamson, 269 M 397, 889 P2d 1177, 52 St. Rep. 51 (1995).

Wrongful Death Action — No Issue of Material Fact: When a helicopter pilot died in a crash while picking up members of a survey crew on a steep hillside, the District Court did not err in granting defendant's summary judgment motion after plaintiffs failed to show the existence of any material fact that defendants' negligence proximately caused or was a substantial factor in the helicopter crash. Schellinger v. Marschall, 225 M 400, 733 P2d 346, 44 St. Rep. 349 (1987).

Summary Judgment Proper Upon Failure to Show Evidence of Due Care: When a fire, caused by a floating power line, burned plaintiff's house and property, the District Court granted partial summary judgment, ruling that Montana Power Company (MPC) negligently failed to exercise the proper duty of care in the inspection and maintenance of its utility lines. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the grant of summary judgment, ruling that when the defendant has a high standard of care and the plaintiff provides clear evidence of negligence, it becomes incumbent upon the defendant to provide evidence to show due care was exercised. If the defendant fails to provide such evidence, summary judgment is proper. Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 44 St. Rep. 330 (1987); on reconsideration, opinion withdrawn and replaced by Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 229 M 387, 747 P2d 201, 44 St. Rep. 2068 (1987).

Representation of Mentally Ill Person on Criminal Charges — Civil Procedural Rights Inapplicable — Summary Judgment Proper: A $30 million damage suit brought against court-appointed attorneys after defendant was found not guilty of intimidation and criminal mischief by reason of mental disease or defect was properly dismissed by summary judgment after the District Court found the attorneys had not violated defendant's rights under 53-21-115 through 53-21-119, since those statutes involve civil commitments and do not apply to criminal proceedings. Kerr v. Wilcox, 225 M 313, 731 P2d 1326, 44 St. Rep. 260 (1987).

No Property Damages in Changing Golf Handicap or in Letter of Reprimand — Summary Judgment Proper: Summary judgment was proper absent any showing of property damages resulting from lowering of a golfer's handicap or from the sending of a letter of reprimand by the board of directors of a private golf corporation. District Court held, and the Supreme Court affirmed, that: (1) a golfer had no right to a specific handicap but rather must earn one in accordance with standards and procedures of the U.S. Golf Association; and (2) in the absence of a clear allegation and convincing proof of fraud or bad faith, the actions of a duly delegated board of a private social club shall not be reviewed by the courts. Johnson v. Green Meadow Country Club, Inc., 222 M 405, 721 P2d 1287, 43 St. Rep. 1368 (1986).

Valid Security Agreement — Subjective Intent Immaterial: A security agreement which was valid and unambiguous, which set forth a description of the collateral, and which clearly covered future indebtedness whether joint or several was held to clearly show the obligations and rights arising from the agreement; therefore, evidence of the subjective intent of the parties was not a material fact issue, and summary judgment was properly granted. Wagner v. Glasgow Livestock Sales Co., 222 M 385, 722 P2d 1165, 43 St. Rep. 1352 (1986).

Issue of Whether Motion Properly Served — Not Appealable: The issue of whether there was a contested issue of fact regarding whether a motion for summary judgment was properly served is a question for the District Court and cannot be raised on appeal. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986), citing In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Summary Judgment — Unlawful Detainer: Appellant who refused to respond to requests for admissions thereby admitted he had no permission or legal right to reside on the property. Respondent followed proper statutory procedure in attempting to have appellant quit the property; therefore, District Court properly granted summary judgment to respondent concerning appellant's unlawful detainer. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986).

Business Pursuits — Steer-Roping Contest: Insured's policy on his ranch excluded business pursuits other than, among other things, farming. For 3 years he held three or four steer-roping contests a year in an arena he built. Nonprofessionals paid a fee and there was prize money, with insured keeping some of the fee money. Insured's own testimony showed he was regularly engaged in the contests for profit and thus was engaged in a business pursuit excluded from policy coverage. A summary judgment for insurer was therefore proper in insured's suit for failure to defend insured and pay an injured steer roper because there was no issue of material fact. Heggen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 220 M 398, 715 P2d 1060, 43 St. Rep. 475 (1986).

Obligation to Refund Payment for Gas Field Option: Plaintiff corporation rescinded a gas field option upon which it had paid $50,000 to defendant. After defendant failed to refund money due, plaintiff filed suit and was granted summary judgment for $71,320.55. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that, based upon the exhibits, affidavits, and briefs before the lower court, there was no evidence of a genuine issue of material fact. The escrow agreement and release based upon plaintiff's rescission were supported by adequate consideration since release from contract obligations and forbearance to sue are both adequate consideration. Ayers Oil and Gas, Inc., was a party to both the option and the release agreements as evidenced by Ayers' signature as president. Devon Oil & Gas Co., Inc. v. Ayers, 218 M 223, 707 P2d 523, 42 St. Rep. 1536 (1985).

Summary Judgment Granting Attorneys Amount Billed Under Retainer Agreement: On appeal from summary judgment granting attorneys amount billed under retainer agreement, the Supreme Court held that when an attorney entered into a contingent fee arrangement based on a percentage of the judgment or award recovered by the client, there was no genuine issue of material fact as to the amount owing. The total amount recovered properly included interest, and the attorney was entitled not only to a percentage of the actual damages recovered but also to a percentage of the prejudgment and postjudgment interest recovered. Although the court agreed to treat appellants' counterclaim as an affirmative defense, it held that the affirmative defense did not foreclose a summary judgment determination of attorney fees. Smith v. Howery, 217 M 23, 701 P2d 1381, 42 St. Rep. 995 (1985).

Contract for Deed — Forfeiture Clause — Failure to Make Timely Payment: The purchasers of real estate assumed a contract for deed containing a forfeiture clause. They failed to make one of the payments under the contract. The sellers complied with the notice provisions required to enforce the forfeiture clause. The purchasers failed to tender the overdue installment within the grace period set forth in the default clause. Under these facts there existed no genuine issue of material fact on whether a forfeiture should be granted. Summary judgment was properly entered. Massar Cattle Co. v. Reese, 216 M 22, 699 P2d 87, 42 St. Rep. 609 (1985).

Implied Warranty of Habitability — Privity of Contract Not Required: Sale of a lot to plaintiffs was contingent upon plaintiffs' agreement to allow seller to contract with Mora Bros., Inc., for the construction of their home. When the land beneath their new home began to slide downhill, plaintiffs sued for damages. District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment against seller and Mora Bros., Inc., as builder-vendors on the theory of breach of implied warranty of habitability, but denied plaintiffs' motion against Mora Bros., Inc., on the issue of negligence. Supreme Court affirmed District Court's finding that Mora Bros., Inc., is liable to plaintiffs under theory of implied warranty of habitability. The warranty does not depend on a contract for its existence, therefore privity of contract is not required. Once plaintiffs showed that house moved, defendant had to provide an explanation to create a genuine issue of fact. Defendant failed to provide an explanation, so summary judgment was proper. Degnan v. Executive Homes, Inc., 215 M 162, 696 P2d 431, 42 St. Rep. 262 (1985).

Certainty as to Terms of Contract Required — Summary Judgment: In suit for breach of alleged oral contract between law partners to find "a place" in the law firm for any of their children who might wish to become lawyers, District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Supreme Court affirmed and held that the contract was unenforceable for lack of certainty as to its terms. Defendant's daughter's work for the firm as a law clerk did not perfect the alleged agreement. Plaintiff failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact to preclude entry of summary judgment. Bishop v. Hendrickson, 215 M 158, 695 P2d 1313, 42 St. Rep. 259 (1985). See also Janz v. Quenzer, 232 M 439, 756 P2d 1174, 45 St. Rep. 1178 (1988).

Summary Judgment Proper — No Substantial Evidence Provided: Following an automobile accident in which Morales was killed when a vehicle went off the road into an irrigation ditch, his parents and personal representatives filed a wrongful death and survivorship action against Sally Tuomi, the alleged operator of the vehicle, and her father, the owner of the vehicle. Plaintiffs alleged that Sally Tuomi had negligently caused the death of Morales through her careless operation of the vehicle at the time of the accident. Defendants moved for summary judgment and filed five affidavits in support of the motion. The affidavits, including an affidavit from Sally Tuomi, supported defendants' claim that Morales, not Tuomi, had been the driver of the vehicle. Plaintiffs subsequently submitted an affidavit of their attorney and supplementary answers to interrogatories that indicated that testimony of a forensic pathologist and two deep-sea divers would support plaintiffs' assertion that Tuomi, not Morales, was the driver. Defendants then filed an affidavit from the pathologist, in which he stated that he was unable to form an opinion as to whether Morales was a driver or a passenger, and an affidavit from a diver, in which he stated that the physical evidence at the scene was not inconsistent with Morales being the driver of the vehicle. The District Court granted defendants' summary judgment motion and the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that with the final two affidavits defendants had discharged their burden under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., and that plaintiffs had failed to come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985). See also Carl v. Chilcote, 226 M 260, 735 P2d 266, 44 St. Rep. 638 (1987).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Summary Judgment — Dearborn River: The District Court properly granted the coalition for stream access and two state departments summary judgment on the issue of navigability of the Dearborn River in 1889 for title purposes. The affidavits and depositions of plaintiffs' two competent historians were admissible because the historians were qualified experts who provided evidence of the history of the river, their affidavits and depositions disclosed circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and the facts and data they relied on were of a type reasonably relied on by experts in their field; the facts and data did not themselves have to be admissible. The affidavits of defendant landowner's witnesses were worthless, were not admissible, and did not create any genuine issue of material fact concerning the navigability of the river at the time Montana became a state in 1889. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Summary Judgment — Failure to Set Forth Specific Fact Issue: Fourteen months after the case was remanded for trial and after appellants had failed to respond to the District Court's two requests for submission of a triable issue and to respondents' motion for summary judgment on the ground that there was no triable issue of material fact, the District Court found that the underlying issue was moot and ordered summary judgment in favor of respondents. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court, noting that the appellants had failed to set forth specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial, as is required by this rule. Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 204 M 75, 666 P2d 1214, 40 St. Rep. 673 (1983).

Contractor Liability — Speculation Insufficient to Raise Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff was injured when the car in which he was sleeping crashed into a concrete retaining wall at the end of a dead-end street in Helena. The alleged liability of the defendant was based on the assertion that in working on an SID, defendant's crew had removed a dead-end street sign. Defendant was granted summary judgment based on the holding of Ulmen v. Schweiger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932). On appeal, plaintiff contended that Ulmen no longer represented the modern view of contractor liability. The Supreme Court did not reach this issue, finding that the record indicated no genuine issue of material fact existed upon which defendant's liability could be predicated. No testimony directly connecting defendant with removal of the sign was given except for speculation. Speculation is not a sufficient basis on which to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Fauerso v. Maronick Constr. Co., 203 M 106, 661 P2d 20, 40 St. Rep. 327 (1983), followed in Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995), and distinguished in Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 273 M 408, 903 P2d 1374, 52 St. Rep. 1035 (1995).

Opposing Party — Speculative Statements Insufficient: A party opposing a summary judgment motion must present facts of a substantial nature, and speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

Lack of Actual Malice Toward Public Figure — Summary Judgment Upheld: Where the defendant issued a press release claiming that the plaintiff had been "indicted" for violations of federal securities laws when in fact he had only been "charged" with such violations and the District Court held the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law, the District Court was correct in awarding summary judgment for the defendant, holding that there was no actual malice by the defendant. The difference between the legal words "indicted" and "charged" is relatively minor in the minds of the average Montana citizen, and the defendant stated that he did not know the difference. There was simply no evidence that the defendant's statement was made with actual malice. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

What Constitutes "Public Figure" for Purpose of Libel Defense — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The plaintiff, a commodities broker who had some public notoriety within the state as a result of his membership in and speeches to political organizations and as a result of articles about him appearing in national publications, brought a libel action against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant, holding the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law (and therefore requiring actual malice to be proven by the plaintiff), as there was no absolute prohibition in the Montana Constitution against granting summary judgment in a libel case and because the plaintiff had a general fame or notoriety in the state and exhibited pervasive involvement in the affairs of society. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Waiver of Provision in Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Affirmatively Pleaded: A declaratory judgment action was brought to construe a collective bargaining agreement. The plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment. The defendant opposed the motion and filed an affidavit in support of its opposition. The plaintiff argued that the affidavit submitted by defendant was inadmissible as a violation of the parol evidence rule. The trial court concluded that no material factual issue existed but denied the motion because of waiver by the plaintiff. The waiver issue was addressed in the affidavit but not in any of the other pleadings. The Supreme Court held that the waiver issue was not properly before the trial court and ordered the trial court to reconsider its denial of the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court also said that the defendant could amend its answer to affirmatively plead waiver. Butte Teachers' Union v. Bd. of Trustees, 201 M 482, 655 P2d 146, 39 St. Rep. 2248 (1982).

Retention of Passport Execution Fees by Clerk of District Court: Because the execution of passport applications is not an official duty imposed upon a Clerk of District Court by state statute and since the Legislature has not enacted a specific statute with regard to the disposition of execution fees, the Clerk has no duty to remit the fees to the county general fund. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the summary judgment granted by the District Court. Platz v. Hamilton, 201 M 184, 653 P2d 144, 39 St. Rep. 2041 (1982).

Conclusory Statements Not Sufficient in Opposition: In opposing a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff merely made conclusory statements in support of its positions that factual issues were still unresolved. The court held that the appellant's conclusions of law would clearly not be admissible into evidence at trial and were not properly before the court. The plaintiff's opposition to the motion was not sufficient to defeat the motion. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982).

Summary Judgment Proper — Improperly Endorsed Check Admittedly Negotiated by Bank: Plaintiff drew a check on her account at defendant bank payable to a building supply store to be used for supplies specifically listed on the face of the check and gave it to a contractor who was working for her. Contractor, unknown to plaintiff, endorsed the check "for exchange only" to the supply store. Based on this endorsement, defendant bank issued a new check payable to the supply store but without restriction on its face. Contractor applied the check to his own account with the supply store, rather than using it to buy materials for plaintiff. Several weeks later, the same thing was done with a check made payable to another building supply store. Plaintiff sued defendant bank for conversion. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's denial of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment because the undisputed evidence showed that the defendant bank accepted and negotiated two checks that were not endorsed by the payees or by anyone clothed with apparent or actual authority to act for them. Eatinger v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 199 M 377, 649 P2d 1253, 39 St. Rep. 1465 (1982).

Requests for Admissions Deemed True for Failure to Answer — Basis for Summary Judgment: Summary judgment was properly granted plaintiff suing for delinquent payments under lease of bar and lounge equipment where all issues of material fact were resolved when a request for admissions relating to those facts was sent defendants by plaintiff and was not answered for 15 months and the trial court deemed the facts in the request for admissions as true for failure to answer the request within the required 30-day period after service of the request and where defendants did not give any evidence to raise an issue of material fact. All-States Leasing Co. v. Top Hat Lounge, 198 M 1, 649 P2d 1250, 39 St. Rep. 425 (1982).

Fire Damage — No Negligence as a Matter of Law: A slag pile started burning prior to 1950. For several years red embers were visible, but in later years the embers disappeared. In 1961, when a highway was built through a portion of the pile, the fire was apparently dead. In 1979, during a windstorm, a fire started near the slag pile and spread onto the plaintiff's land. Plaintiff sued defendant for the negligent use of its land. Based on the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, the court concluded that the defendant's conduct in leaving the slag pile untouched until 1979 was reasonable, prudent, and did not create an unreasonable hazard. The court properly granted summary judgment to the defendant. Belue v. St., 199 M 451, 649 P2d 752, 39 St. Rep. 1516 (1982).

Intention of Deceased Maker of Life Insurance Policy — No Genuine Issue of Fact of Intent: The plaintiffs brought an action against their stepmother to recover the proceeds of their deceased father's life insurance policy which had been paid to the defendant in accordance with the terms of the policy but contrary to a divorce decree. The District Court relied upon attorney Sternhagen's file in the prior divorce proceeding to determine the intent of the deceased with respect to his children. The District Court properly granted summary judgment for the plaintiff children as there was no genuine issue of fact as to the deceased's intention to maintain the children as beneficiaries of the policy until their majority. The divorce file is replete with evidence that the attorneys in the divorce proceeding and the court simply incorporated the deceased's agreement with his former wife into the terms of the divorce decree. Herrig v. Herrig, 199 M 174, 648 P2d 758, 39 St. Rep. 1274 (1982).

Canceled Airline Flight — Summary Judgment Properly Issued: Where defendant airline canceled flight, causing plaintiff to arrive 8 hours late at his destination and allegedly causing loss of earnings, summary judgment in defendant's favor was properly granted as a matter of law where weather prevented landing at destination point and Civil Aeronautics Board regulations clearly permit flight cancellation under such conditions. Johnson v. NW. Orient Airlines, 197 M 318, 642 P2d 1067, 39 St. Rep. 594 (1982).

Consent to Withdraw Funds From Joint Account: A stock brokerage firm obtained consent from the husband to withdraw funds from a joint ready asset account established by the husband and his wife. Because the firm could not be held liable by the wife for failing to obtain her consent to withdraw the funds, summary judgment was properly granted. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Specific Performance of Contract for Deed — Summary Judgment Held Proper: Plaintiffs, purchasers under contract for deed, tendered the balance due under the contract. Sellers were unable to provide clear and merchantable title. The Supreme Court held plaintiffs entitled to summary judgment granting specific performance against assignee of original buyer. Pond v. Lindell, 194 M 240, 632 P2d 1107, 38 St. Rep. 1276 (1981).

Real Estate Sale Including Subordination Agreement — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Found: Where the plaintiff sold her house and adjoining lot to the developers of a housing project, agreeing under the terms of the sale to subordinate her interest in the lot to the interest of the bank financing the construction of the project, the District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment to force the developers to make the final contract payment to the plaintiff. Summary judgment is to be granted where there is no genuine issue of material fact. The fact that certain questions remained as to payment of advanced construction costs would not bar the issuance of summary judgment, for sufficient money appears from affidavits to be available to pay the plaintiff and other construction creditors. Byrd v. Bennet, 193 M 237, 631 P2d 695, 38 St. Rep. 1083 (1981).

State Easement for Fishing Access — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: A landowner brought an action to prevent the state from opening a fishing access site and from paving a road to the site, based on a claimed fee title to the roadway. The District Court granted the state a summary judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court found the landowner's interest was an ordinary easement. The words "private road" did not clearly indicate intent to create in him an "exclusive" easement. The state's use of the road cannot be declared inconsistent with the landowner's on the basis of speculation. Furthermore, under various statutory provisions, the state obtained the land lawfully. The plaintiff had not yet been deprived of his property interest. Any damages remained speculative at the time of the decision. The summary judgment was, accordingly, affirmed. Titeca v. St., 194 M 209, 634 P2d 1156, 38 St. Rep. 1533 (1981).

Illegal Receipt of Fee by Official — Factual Issue Not Material: In a case in which a Sheriff was charged with receiving a fee in violation of law, the State urged on appeal that a summary judgment was precluded by the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. The Supreme Court agreed there were factual issues involved in the case, but because the reward money received by the Sheriff was not a fee under the statute with which the Sheriff was charged, the factual issues were not material to the case since their resolution could not affect the result of the case. The Sheriff was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. St. v. DeMers, 192 M 367, 628 P2d 676, 38 St. Rep. 877 (1981).

Summary Judgment Granted on Basis of a Signed Release: The District Court acted properly in granting defendant's motion for summary judgment based on defendant's contention that a release entered into between plaintiff and defendant bank bars any action by plaintiff in attempting to recover trust fund money from defendant. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 627 P2d 1202, 38 St. Rep. 594 (1981).

Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien) — Sufficient Property Description in Affidavits — Summary Judgments: In this case on a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), the issue on appeal was whether the description of the subject property in the notice of the lien filed with the County Clerk and Recorder was legally sufficient to identify the property for purposes of enforcing the lien. The appeal was taken on cross-motions for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found error in granting summary judgment to the property owners and held that the supplier seeking the lien was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Noting that the procedural requirements of 71-3-511 (since repealed) have been held strictly enforceable, the court held that the statutes are to be construed liberally so as to give effect to their remedial character once the procedure has been fulfilled. Although the land on which the structure stood was covered by the lien on the structure, the land did not need to be described. When, as here, the land was described, the erroneous part of the description was to be rejected. If a sufficient description remained to identify the particular property sought to be charged, the lien would be upheld. Other documents filed with the notice of lien could be used to identify the building. In this case, those documents and photographs of the property in question sufficed to form a proper basis for summary judgment against the property owners. Gen. Elec. Supply v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981), followed in Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999).

Summary Judgment for Prescriptive Public Easement — Estoppel From Denying County Ownership: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnity against the previous owner, the trial court did not err in denying the county's motion for summary judgment and granting the motions of the plaintiffs and sellers for summary judgment. On a motion for summary judgment the movant has the burden of establishing prima facie the absence of any genuine issue of material fact, and when the movant does so, the party opposing the motion must come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. The sellers presented evidence in support of their motion showing a prescriptive public easement and estoppel against the county and former owner. The county failed to present evidence to meet its burden. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

No Error Where Claim of When Action Accrued Not Before Court: In an action for compensatory and exemplary damages for wrongful conversion of plaintiff's merchandise stored in defendant's warehouse, the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the basis that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff's claims for recovery accrued 4 years previously, when the defendant warehouse sold plaintiff's merchandise, not, as plaintiff claimed, when plaintiff discovered upon demand that defendant sold the merchandise. In this instance the allegation of knowledge, demand, and then refusal to return the goods was not raised in the complaint, the answer, the interrogatories, or in any affidavit properly before the District Court at the time summary judgment was granted, and thus plaintiff's allegations as to when the action accrued will not be considered on appeal. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc. v. Hardee Foods, 190 M 508, 621 P2d 1097, 38 St. Rep. 60 (1981).

Motion Granted — Preclusion of Child Custody Challenge by Estoppel and Laches: The mother of the child over whom a custody dispute arose was precluded from having set aside the child custody provision in the default marriage dissolution decree awarding custody to the respondent. The mother was barred by estoppel, laches, and res judicata from asserting that the respondent was not the child's natural parent. Morrell v. Giesick, 188 M 89, 610 P2d 1189 (1980).

Construction of Instruments — Not a Factual Issue: When a summary judgment was granted plaintiff in an action for conversion based upon corporate documents, bank loan contracts, and security agreements, defendants could not prevail an appeal on the theory that questions regarding the content of these documents were questions of material fact because under 1-4-101 the construction of instruments is a matter of law. Therefore, the granting of the summary judgment under this rule was correct. Farmers St. Bank v. Johnson, 188 M 55, 610 P2d 1172 (1980).

Employment Contract Controls — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact: There was no need for further interpretation or parol evidence of an employment contract which expressly exempted appellant from recovering overtime compensation. There was no need for construction of any implied contract since there can be no express and implied contract for the same thing existing at the same time. Thus, summary judgment was appropriate. Weston v. Mont. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150 (1980).

Interpretation of Contract — Motion Properly Granted: Where appellant and respondent entered into an agreement in which the contract provided that in consideration for making the downpayment on certain property, respondent would receive a 50% interest in the property, the court properly granted respondent's motion for summary judgment since the language of the contract itself shows that there was no genuine issue of fact and because appellant failed to come forward with substantial evidence showing the existence of such a genuine issue. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979).

Plumbing Regulation — No Genuine Issue: Plaintiff's claim that since the Board of Plumbers allegedly could not have inspected every plumbing installation during a set period of time, there remained a genuine issue of material fact that precluded entry of judgment on the pleadings. The claim was unfounded since inspections were not mandatory and were intended to be selective. Billings Associated Plumbing, Heating, & Cooling Contractors v. Bd. of Plumbers, 184 M 249, 602 P2d 597 (1979).

Insufficient Showing of Fact Issue — Existence of Joint Venture: Plaintiff's allegation that the defendant was liable for money owed to plaintiff by a corporation because the defendant and the corporation were engaged in a joint venture, was not sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff's allegations were supported only by the fact that the defendant and the corporation had been issued a joint venture license from the State of California and that the plaintiff would rely on the testimony of certain contractors. The mere issuance of such a license is insufficient to indicate that it was actually used or that a joint venture existed, and the statement that certain contractors would testify is an unsupported conclusion. Nat'l Gypsum Co. v. Johnson, 182 M 209, 595 P2d 1188 (1979).

Prior Knowledge of Condition: Plaintiff rented a residence from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The BIA replaced the front steps of the residence with steps that were not as long horizontally. Plaintiff caught her foot in the depression remaining from the old steps and fractured her ankle. Her knowledge of the condition prior to the injury precludes her recovery, and summary judgment must be rendered in favor of the defendant. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Issue of Fact — Real Estate Transaction: In view of the record indicating that a real estate transaction did not close until between July 28 and July 30, appellant's simple assertion that the transaction closed on July 20 will not serve to create an issue of fact merely to avoid summary judgment. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Issue of a Substantial Nature: The trial court properly granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment since defendants failed to present a genuine issue of material fact and of a substantial nature, not fanciful, frivolous, gauzy, or merely suspicious. Cheyenne W. Bank v. Young v. Zastrow, 179 M 492, 587 P2d 401 (1978). See also Kimble Properties, Inc. v. St., 231 M 54, 750 P2d 1095, 45 St. Rep. 425 (1988).

Injury by Coemployee Covered by Workers' Compensation: In an action for damages for personal injuries in which defendants were coemployees of plaintiff and plaintiff's injury arose out of an industrial accident for which he received workers' compensation, the defendants carried the burden of showing a complete absence of any genuine issue as to material facts. Forrester v. Kuck, 177 M 44, 579 P2d 756 (1978).

Modification of Listing Agreement and Failure to Provide Copy: A seller's alleged verbal consent to a broker's unsubscribed and unexecuted modification of a listing agreement was not a factual issue precluding summary judgment in light of the statutory and decisional law which is uniformly suspicious of such modifications. As a matter of law, the broker's failure to provide the seller with a copy of the listing agreement also supported the granting of summary judgment. Carnell v. Watson, 176 M 344, 578 P2d 308 (1978).

Withdrawal From Hospital District: Because uncontradicted testimony before the Board of County Commissioners showed a petitioning area would not be benefited by remaining in the county's hospital district, the District Court properly ruled the Board had abused its discretion in denying the withdrawal petition and summary judgment was proper. Sorenson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 176 M 232, 577 P2d 394 (1978).

Claim Against Estate — Statutory Period: In action to recover from an estate for services performed for decedent, the court did not err in denying plaintiffs' motion to amend and supplement a complaint based on contract to include gift theory because the services were performed without expectation of payment and the claim sued upon (gift theory) was not filed within the statutory period. Summary judgment was proper. Zeigler v. Kramer, 175 M 236, 573 P2d 644 (1978).

Lack of Consideration or Setoff: There was no issue of material fact precluding summary judgment, either of lack of consideration or of setoff, because the express language of the note sued on stated that consideration existed, and the second action was a personal claim unrelated to the note. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Easement by Prescription — Not Triable Issue: The evidence established existence of an easement by prescription and defendant failed to meet his burden of showing that a triable issue of fact remained. Yecny v. Day, 174 M 442, 571 P2d 386 (1977).

Laches and Statute of Limitations Adequately Plead: Plaintiffs' suit for rescission was barred by laches and their action for damages for breach of contract was barred by the 4-year Statute of Limitations. Since defendant's affirmative defenses revealed that plaintiffs had adequate notice of the defenses of laches and Statute of Limitations, although not specifically denominated as such, summary judgment was properly granted to defendants. Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 M 63, 568 P2d 547 (1977).

Group Libel Rule: The court did not err in granting defendants' motions for summary judgment in a libel action because the allegedly defamatory statements could not reasonably be interpreted as applying specifically to plaintiffs. The common-law group libel rule precluded their recovering in a defamation action. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Specific Performance of Lease Option — Laches: As a result of plaintiff's negligence in asserting his rights and the change in defendant's circumstances, the ends of justice were served by granting defendant's motion for summary judgment. Seifert v. Seifert, 173 M 501, 568 P2d 155 (1977).

Misrepresentation Action in Real Estate Sale: The court properly awarded summary judgment to defendants in a misrepresentation action under 37-51-321 when the record indicated that no fraudulent representations were made by defendants and the Statute of Limitations had expired, notwithstanding the "discovery" exception. Anderson v. Applebury, 173 M 411, 567 P2d 951 (1977).

Products Liability Action: Summary judgment was properly granted defendants in a products liability action when plaintiff failed to demonstrate that the alleged defect existed when the product left the hands of the manufacturer. Duncan v. Rockwell Mfg. Co., 173 M 382, 567 P2d 936 (1977).

Statute of Limitations Bars Tort Claims: A review of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions show there was no genuine issue of material fact and defendants were entitled to summary judgment on claims sounding in tort because the Statute of Limitations was a bar. Kearns v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 173 M 239, 567 P2d 433 (1977).

Laches: Summary judgment was proper when laches was established as a defense to the enforcement of a trust. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 150, 561 P2d 917 (1977).

Intent Irrelevant if Agreement Clear and Specific — Subordination: Summary judgment is correct when subordination agreement does not present an issue of fact. The plain and clear meaning of the instrument controls and the intent of the parties is ascertained from the instrument. Batey Land & Livestock Co. v. Nixon, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1334 (1977).

Summary Judgment for Defendant in Malpractice Action: Summary judgment for dental malpractice was affirmed. Llera v. Wisner, 171 M 254, 557 P2d 805 (1976).

Products Liability — Burden of Proof: Summary judgment for defendant was proper when plaintiff failed to prove that product was defective at the time it left manufacturer's hands. Barich v. Ottenstror, 170 M 38, 550 P2d 395 (1976).

Burden — Motion for Summary Judgment: Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment because plaintiff presented no evidence of a material and substantial nature raising a genuine issue of fact. Taylor v. Anaconda Fed. Credit Union, 170 M 51, 550 P2d 151 (1976), followed in Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Presence of Gates — Presumption of Permissive Use: Summary judgment for defendant was proper because plaintiff failed to establish an easement by prescription to a road crossed at several points by fences with closed gates owned and controlled by defendant. The presence of gates that must be opened by the user was strong evidence of permissive rather than adverse use since it tended to establish "total dominion" over the roadway by defendant. Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976).

Purpose of Rule: The general purpose of this rule is to dispose promptly of actions in which there is no genuine issue of fact, thereby eliminating unnecessary trial, delay, and expense. Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), followed in Westmont Tractor Co. v. Continental I, Inc., 224 M 516, 731 P2d 327, 43 St. Rep. 2380 (1986).

Medical Malpractice Case — Standard of Care: The defendants, hospital and doctors, are entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law because plaintiff failed to carry burden of initial evidentiary obligation of establishing standard of care against which the acts or omissions of defendants can be measured to establish negligence on their part. Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976), followed in Estate of Nielson v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994), and Seal v. Woodrows Pharmacy, 1999 MT 247, 296 M 197, 988 P2d 1230, 56 St. Rep. 959 (1999). See also Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 M 452, 15 P3d 1189, 57 St. Rep. 1320 (2000).

Finding of Permissive Use — Summary Judgment Properly Granted in Easement by Prescription Action: Where plaintiff's use of trail was a matter of neighborly cooperation between friendly ranchers, trial court's granting of defendant's motion for summary judgment was proper as the accrual of a right-of-way easement by prescription requires that the usage made of the claimed right-of-way be adverse and hostile, not permissive. Ewan v. Stenberg, 168 M 63, 541 P2d 60 (1975).

Conduct Amounting to Contributory Negligence as a Matter of Law: Trial court erred in not granting defendant's motion for summary judgment where plaintiff testified he was looking straight ahead, rather than where he was walking, when he slipped and fractured an ankle and twisted his back on oil spot approximately 6 feet long. State ex rel. NW. Airlines v. District Court, 167 M 464, 539 P2d 714 (1975).

Negligent Wounding of Bystander: It was proper for trial court to grant summary judgment to defendant where plaintiff, a bystander, was wounded while observing a disturbance and claimed defendant, a police officer, negligently and carelessly shot him, as the ballistics report established that the plaintiff was wounded by a bullet fired from a Colt revolver and defendant was carrying a .357 Smith & Wesson pistol. Plaintiff failed to present any evidence of a material and substantial nature raising a genuine issue of fact that defendant wounded him. Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975).

Summary Judgment — Depositions — Exhibits: The depositions of witnesses as well as exhibits introduced for the purposes of deposition were a sufficient basis for the court to conclude that there was no genuine issue of material fact regarding the lack of control of the city over an intersection. The court should have granted the city's motion for summary judgment. State ex rel. Helena v. District Court, 167 M 157, 536 P2d 1182 (1975).

No Violation of Safety Code — No Issue of Negligence: Defendant, whose electrical powerlines were installed in compliance with the minimum safety requirements of the national safety code, was entitled to summary judgment in negligence action brought by plaintiff who, although aware of overhead powerlines, was severely shocked when he hoisted a long metal pole into contact with the lines while drilling a well. Sprankle v. DeCock, 165 M 274, 530 P2d 457 (1974).

Oral Contract for Broker's Commission: Where it was agreed that there was no written agreement to pay the broker's commission, but only an oral promise by the administrator of estate to petition court for allowance of commission, summary judgment was proper; nor did the plaintiff's presentation of various legal theories on which relief might be granted raise any genuine issue of fact. Meech v. Cure, 165 M 49, 525 P2d 546 (1974).

Action to Rescind Contract: No genuine issue of fact was raised in action for rescission of contract to purchase motel, where seller had represented that motel was "capable" of producing a certain income; and although seller had failed to deliver bill of sale for motel furnishings, there was no resulting damage upon which rescission could be based. Beierle v. Taylor, 164 M 436, 524 P2d 783 (1974), followed in Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Statute of Frauds — Listing Agreement: Potential buyer was properly granted summary judgment for return of earnest money when defendant realtor could produce no written documents to support his claims relative to listing property for sale and acting as real estate agent for property owners. Pack River Co. v. Young, 162 M 271, 511 P2d 12 (1973).

Contract Prohibiting Competing Businesses: Summary judgment for defendant was proper where contract clearly prohibited competing activities only on specific premises, and plaintiff admitted in his answers to interrogatories that the activities he sought to prevent were outside the premises. Matteucci's Super Save Drug v. Hustad Corp., 158 M 311, 491 P2d 705 (1971).

Summary Judgment Upheld — Bank Charter — Use of Affidavits: Summary judgment was proper for proponents of new bank charter and superintendent of banks against bank seeking to prevent proponents from receiving charter. Motion to strike affidavit of superintendent contained in appellate record was granted because it was not before lower court and this rule specifically prohibits the use of affidavits. Miners & Merchants Bank v. Dowdall, 158 M 142, 489 P2d 1274 (1971).

Negligence — Causation — Summary Judgment Proper: In an action for injuries allegedly caused by negligence of contractor and his agents, trial court properly granted summary judgment pursuant to this section where record revealed total absence of negligence on part of defendant or its employees, and record revealed that nothing defendant did or failed to do was proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Flansberg v. Mont. Power Co., 154 M 53, 460 P2d 263 (1969).

Summary Judgment for Defendants — Mechanics' Liens (Now Construction Liens): Because lien was not filed within 90 days after last item in open account was delivered, summary judgment for defendant was proper. Am. Homes v. Broadmoor Corp., 153 M 184, 455 P2d 334 (1969).

Insurance Agreements: When an insurer is obligated to defend, refuses to do so after notice, makes no protest to a settlement agreement, and fails to show that the settlement was unreasonable, the insured is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Wash. Water Power Co. v. Morgan Elec. Co., 152 M 126, 448 P2d 683 (1968).

Summary Judgment for Defendant — Failure to Pay Corporate License Taxes — Effect on Contract's Enforcement: Summary judgment for defendant was proper when assignee of accounts receivable and assignor/corporation which failed to pay corporate license taxes were barred from claiming rights under contractual provisions which were unenforceable due to failure to pay taxes notwithstanding subsequent payment. Mfr. Acceptance Corp. v. Krsul, 151 M 28, 438 P2d 667 (1968).

Negligence — Principal and Agent: Purported agent and principal were entitled to summary judgment where plaintiff wholly failed to establish prima facie case of negligence on the part of either, even though evidence raised question of fact as to existence of agency, since it would be impossible to impute negligence to principal where negligence had not been established against supposed agent. Knowlton v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968).

Appellate Review — Proof of Issue of Fact Required at Trial: Motion for summary judgment was properly granted where it was apparent from record that there was no genuine issue as to any material fact, notwithstanding aggrieved party's argument on appeal that had he been allowed to go to trial he would have presented proofs establishing genuine issue of fact, since aggrieved party presented no such proofs at hearing on original motion nor at hearing on motion to vacate judgment. Brown v. Thornton, 150 M 150, 432 P2d 386 (1967).

Support Proceedings: Defendant was properly granted motion for summary judgment in action to enforce amount agreed upon for support in separation agreement which had been reduced by subsequent court modifications. Gessell v. Jones, 149 M 418, 427 P2d 295 (1967).

Summary Judgment Upheld for Taxpayer: Summary judgment for taxpayer based upon statutory assessment scheme for motor vehicle taxation was upheld. Swartz v. Berg, 147 M 178, 411 P2d 736 (1966).

Summary Judgment for Plaintiff Upheld — Unlawful Trespass: Defendants committed a naked and unlawful trespass on property belonging to plaintiffs, and summary judgment for plaintiff was correct. Schell v. Peters, 147 M 21, 410 P2d 152 (1966).

Purpose — Proof — Deed's Validity Upheld: The purpose of this rule is to promptly dispose of actions in which there is no genuine issue of fact. The court has no duty to anticipate possible proof that might be offered under the pleadings. Judgment against party seeking cancellation of deed and reconveyance of property was upheld. Silloway v. Jorgenson, 146 M 307, 406 P2d 167 (1965).

Summary Judgment Reversed — Taxation: Summary judgment for county and others was reversed, and summary judgment for taxpayer was ordered. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R., v. Bennett, 145 M 191, 399 P2d 986 (1965).

BURDEN OF PROOF

No Showing That Defendants' Actions in School Bus Incident More Than Likely Caused Student's Physical and Mental Injuries — Factors in Judicial Determination of Duty of Care — Summary Dismissal of School District Liability Proper: A student returning home on a school bus from a performance with the school pep band asked the director to stop the bus so that the student could use the restroom, but the director refused. The student was subsequently disciplined by the school for various actions related to the incident and soon after became seriously ill. The student and his parents filed an action against the school district, the director, and the bus driver, alleging that various breaches of the duty of care triggered or accelerated the student's development of diabetes and caused his posttraumatic stress disorder. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The existence of a duty of care depends on the foreseeability of the risk and on a weighing of the policy considerations for and against the imposition of liability, including: (1) moral blame attributable to defendant's conduct; (2) prevention of future harm; (3) extent of the burden placed on defendant; (4) consequences to the public of imposing a duty; and (5) availability of insurance for the risk involved. Further, the law of torts holds a defendant liable only for injuries to others that were to the defendant at the time reasonably foreseeable. A defendant owes a duty with respect to risks and hazards whose likelihood made the conduct unreasonably dangerous and hence negligent in the first instance. The specific injury need not be foreseeable, rather the question is whether defendant could have foreseen that the conduct would result in injury to plaintiff. The District Court here concluded that defendants owed no duty of care because the student's injuries were not foreseeable, which was an erroneous focus on the particular injury rather than on the foreseeability that defendants' conduct could result in the injury. However, if a plaintiff fails to offer proof of any one of the elements of negligence—duty, breach, causation, and damages—then summary judgment in favor of defendant is proper. The question remained whether plaintiffs' experts adequately established causation, and the Supreme Court held that they did not. The experts testified that defendants' conduct could have caused or accelerated the student's injuries, but under Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 M 452, 15 P3d 1189 (2000), the testimony did not meet the threshold of establishing that defendants' actions more than likely caused the injuries. Absent a causal connection between defendants' actions and the student's injuries, summary judgment for defendants was proper. Hinkle v. Shepherd School District No.

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Adequacy of Swimming Pool Depth for Diving — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff was injured diving into a municipal swimming pool and sued the city for negligence and strict liability. Administrative rules adopted in 1985 set standards articulating board lengths for various pool depths, but the rules apply only to pools constructed or remodeled after June 28, 1985, and the pool in question was constructed in 1972, so the rules did not apply. Further, 50-53-107 does not define a particular standard of conduct to which public pool operators must conform, but rather imposes a general duty on a city to keep a pool safe. Absent an applicable standard, plaintiff was required to present expert testimony to assist jurors in determining whether the pool depth was unreasonably dangerous for the diving board length. Plaintiff offered no expert testimony on the subject, thus failing to establish a prima facie case of liability, so the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the city. Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 M 301, 80 P3d 1218 (2003).

No Common-Law Duty of County to Notify Tenant of Release of Detainee: Leanne Miller obtained a protective order prohibiting her husband, Tommy, from contacting Leanne, her property, or her children. When Tommy was arrested following multiple violations of the restraining order, Leanne requested that the Gallatin County detention center notify her upon Tommy's release. However, the center did not contact Leanne when Tommy was released. Tommy then went to Leanne's rental home, killed her, and set fire to the home. The landlord filed a negligence action against the county for damages to the property resulting from the county's failure to notify Leanne, asserting that the county had a common-law duty to the landlord. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, and the landlord appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The complaint was couched in terms of the county's duty to Leanne, but cited no independent common-law duty extending to the landlord. Without a prevailing common-law theory, the cause of action derived solely from 46-24-104 and 46-24-203, regardless of whether those sections were cited or not. Therefore, under 46-24-105, the landlord was precluded from recovering against the county based on the failure to notify Leanne of Tommy's release, and summary judgment was proper. Bos v. Gallatin County, 2003 MT 162, 316 M 292, 71 P3d 1209 (2003).

Voluntary Dismissal of Injunction Not Per Se Equivalent to Wrongful Issue of Injunction: The Osmolaks were granted a temporary restraining order against the Olsons in connection with a land deal, but before the show cause hearing, the Osmolaks were assured that the Olsons intended to perform as agreed in the buy-sell agreement, so the Osmolaks, convinced that there was no need to continue litigation, dismissed the action. The Olsons then sought attorney fees and costs for wrongful injunction, arguing that the voluntary dismissal had the same effect as a court decision finding that the Osmolaks were not entitled to the injunction. In defense, the Osmolaks sought to introduce into evidence the reasons why they had voluntarily dismissed the suit, but the District Court disallowed the evidence, holding that dismissal prior to an adjudication on the propriety of the injunction was an admission that the restraining order was without merit, entitling the Olsons to summary judgment and damages. The Osmolaks appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. An order of dissolution in such cases is not per se equivalent to a court determination of wrongful injunction, but is only prima facie evidence that the injunction was improperly issued and may be rebutted by the party against whom damages are sought. The District Court erred in resolving the case on summary judgment because the Osmolaks should have been allowed to introduce evidence that their voluntary dismissal was justified, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Olson v. Osmolak, 2003 MT 151, 316 M 216, 70 P3d 1242 (2003), following Stewart v. Miller, 1 M 301 (1871), and distinguishing Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937), and Sheridan County Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Absence of Evidence Cannot Establish Existence of Material Fact: An absence of evidence cannot, under law or common sense, establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003), followed in Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

Payment for Attorney Who Voluntarily Withdraws From Contingent Fee Case Before Occurrence of Contingency Based on Good Cause for Withdrawal — Modern Majority Rule: Sullivan retained plaintiff Bell & Marra, pllc, to represent him in an employment termination case, entering a contingent fee agreement for payment. Plaintiff represented Sullivan through two trials and settlement negotiations, after which it sent Sullivan a letter stating that it could not continue under the written 40% contingent arrangement and demanding that, in order to continue representation, Sullivan deposit $2,000 to cover costs of appeal transcripts and agree to pay plaintiff a percentage of all settlement proceeds, judgment damages, and other consideration recovered from the employer in the amount of 50% for appeal and subsequent trial for discrimination or wrongful discharge and an additional 5% for each appeal thereafter. Sullivan declined the ultimatum and hired new counsel. Upon settlement of Sullivan's employment claim, plaintiff filed: (1) a lien foreclosure action for payment of fees involving the employment claim, including advanced costs plus 40% of the recovery or the quantum meruit value of the legal services performed computed on an hourly basis; (2) a contract action related to fees incurred during representation of Sullivan's dissolution proceedings; and (3) a claim against Sullivan's employer requesting that settlement proceeds be held or paid to plaintiff according to the lien against Sullivan. Sullivan asserted affirmative defenses, including fraud, unavailability of quantum meruit damages because of plaintiff's repudiation of the fee agreement, and breach of fiduciary duty, as well as counterclaims for breach of contract, conversion, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of fiduciary duty. The District Court concluded that whether plaintiff withdrew or was fired was irrelevant and that the parties simply terminated the attorney-client relationship. The court then denied Sullivan's motions and counterclaims and granted summary judgment to plaintiff on all issues, awarding plaintiff attorney fees for the employment-related litigation at the contract rate of 40% minus the amount in the fee arrangement with Sullivan's subsequent attorney; fees and costs incurred during Sullivan's dissolution action; outstanding costs for the employment litigation; prejudgment interest on the damage awards; and plaintiff's attorney fees and costs incurred in pursuing the foreclosure action. Sullivan appealed the summary judgment. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the modern majority rule, which holds that an attorney who voluntarily withdraws from a contingency fee case without good cause forfeits recovery of compensation for services performed, but if withdrawal was for good cause or was justified, the attorney may recover based on quantum meruit. Whether good cause exists depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. Good cause exists when a client has engaged in culpable conduct, when continued representation would violate an attorney's ethical obligations, or when an attorney lacks the resources to pursue litigation. However, a client's refusal to accept a settlement offer does not constitute good cause, nor is it justifiable for an attorney to withdraw if the attorney does not believe that the negotiated contract is sufficiently compensatory. In the present case, plaintiff withdrew because continued representation had become a financial burden, which is a good cause for withdrawal under the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct, but not necessarily one entitling an attorney to compensation. Faced with being forced to enter into a new and unacceptable fee agreement when the time for pursuing an appeal was running, Sullivan's decision to reject plaintiff's ultimatum resulted in plaintiff's voluntary withdrawal. In light of the modern majority rule, plaintiff did not have good cause to withdraw that would justify compensation, so the District Court's summary judgment was reversed. Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2000 MT 206, 300 M 530, 6 P3d 965, 57 St. Rep. 810 (2000), following Ausler v. Ramsey, 868 P2d 877 (Wash. Ct. App. 1994). See also Augustson v. Linea Aerea Nacional-Chile S.A., 76 F3d 658 (5th Cir. 1996).

Failure to Disclose Experts by Scheduled Date — Inadequate Testimony to Establish Prima Facie Case: Romans was required by the original and amended scheduling orders to disclose experts by certain dates. Romans failed to do so, and the District Court twice ordered him to disclose. Expert disclosure was ultimately filed after the final date set by the court and was of record but not noticed when the District Court summarily dismissed the case for failure to produce the expert testimony needed to establish a prima facie case. Even though filing was not timely, the Supreme Court considered whether the filing was sufficient to avoid summary judgment, agreeing that because the testimony failed to address the standard of care applicable to the administration of a functional capacities evaluation, which was the basis of the suit, a prima facie case was not established by the expert testimony and summary judgment was proper. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000).

Plaintiff's Burden to Establish Prima Facie Case Not Relieved by Res Ipsa Loquitur: In order for the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to apply, permitting an inference of negligence on the part of one in control of an instrumentality that causes injury, not only must the elements of the doctrine be met, but plaintiff also has the burden of making a prima facie case that defendant breached a duty of care. Here, plaintiff did not establish the standard of care applicable to administration of a functional capacities evaluation through expert testimony, nor did plaintiff establish a breach of the standard by the person who administered the test. Absent a prima facie case, res ipsa loquitur did not apply and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000). See also Clark v. Norris, 226 M 43, 734 P2d 182, 44 St. Rep. 444 (1987).

Burden on County to Show Material Fact Regarding Height of Hedge — Nonconforming Use Not Proved — Summary Judgment Improper: A municipal code provision, passed in 1978, regulated, for traffic safety purposes, the height of hedges that could be grown on corners of intersections at 3 feet, but also permitted the existence of nonconforming uses prior to 1978. Ramirez was injured in a vehicle accident at an intersection where the hedge was taller than 5 feet and sought to hold the county accountable for failing its duty to enforce the ordinance. In granting summary judgment to the county, the District Court held the hedge to be a prior nonconforming use, noting that the hedge had been there since at least 1959. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the county had offered no proof that the hedge was either taller than 3 feet in 1978 or had not been trimmed since 1978. The county did not meet its burden of showing the absence of this genuine issue of material fact; thus, summary judgment was improper. Ramirez v. Hatch, 1999 MT 107, 294 M 316, 979 P2d 1281, 56 St. Rep. 441 (1999).

Deliberate Indifference Element Not Met in Section 1983 Liability Claim Against Government Entity — Summary Judgment Proper: Police officers searched Dorwart's home pursuant to writs of execution and seized his personal property, but without Dorwart's permission or a search warrant. Dorwart brought a claim, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983, against the county and the Sheriff. Generally, claims under that section are brought against public officials in their individual capacities for their actions taken under color of state law, but municipalities and local government entities may also be sued as persons under the section. As set out in Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994), a local government entity may be held liable under section 1983 only when it is shown that the entity itself caused the constitutional violation through implementation of a policy or custom of that entity that amounts to deliberate indifference to plaintiff's constitutional rights. A supervisor cannot be held liable unless the supervisor approved of or authorized the policy. Deliberate indifference occurs only when the need for different action is so obvious and when the inadequacy of the procedure used is so likely to result in violations of constitutional rights that it is reasonable to say that the policymakers were deliberately indifferent to the need to change the policy. In this case, the constitutional inadequacy of the county's customary procedures for executing a writ of execution was not obvious, so the county and the Sheriff could not be held to be deliberately indifferent to the need to remedy the policy inadequacies. Summary judgment was proper in light of Dorwart's failure to establish deliberate indifference. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Failure to Prove Illegal Voting — Summary Judgment Proper: Walker claimed that illegal votes were cast by five voters who were not residents of the town of Darby. Higgins established that they were each registered to vote in Darby and that their names appeared on the precinct voting register, which constitutes prima facie evidence of the right to vote. Despite residency questions, Walker failed to produce material and substantial evidence that votes were illegally cast, and summary judgment for Higgins was proper. Walker v. Higgins, 277 M 443, 922 P2d 1154, 53 St. Rep. 719 (1996).

Speculative, Conclusory Allegations of Fraud — Summary Judgment Proper: Berglee claimed that fraud in the making of Lien's will resulted in Berglee's exclusion from the will's provisions. However, the fraud allegations were speculative, conclusory, and in the nature of suspicious statements supported only by the allegations in the complaint repeated in Berglee's deposition. Absent affirmative evidence to defeat the testator's motion for summary judgment, the motion was properly granted. In re Estate of Lien, 270 M 295, 892 P2d 530, 52 St. Rep. 190 (1995), followed in Carelli v. Hall, 279 M 202, 926 P2d 756, 53 St. Rep. 1116 (1996).

Burden of Producing Evidence on Opposing Party: When record discloses no genuine issue as to any material fact, burden is upon party opposing entry of summary judgment to present evidence of a material and substantial nature raising a genuine issue of material fact. Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994); State ex rel. Scanlon v. Nat'l Ass'n of Ins. Comm'rs, 265 M 184, 875 P2d 340, 51 St. Rep. 480 (1994); Sprunk v. First Bank Sys., 252 M 463, 830 P2d 103, 49 St. Rep. 369 (1992); Mayer Bros. v. Daniel Richard Jewelers, Inc., 223 M 397, 726 P2d 815, 43 St. Rep. 1821 (1986), cited in Wangen v. Kecskes, 256 M 165, 845 P2d 721, 50 St. Rep. 6 (1993); Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986); Barich v. Ottenstror, 170 M 38, 550 P2d 395 (1976); Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976); Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976); Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975); Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972).

Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Burden of Proof:

Conclusory or speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of establishing the absence of any genuine issue of fact, and the party opposing the motion must supply evidence supporting the existence of a genuine fact issue. Eitel v. Ryan, 231 M 174, 751 P2d 682, 45 St. Rep. 521 (1988); Pretty on Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979); Mustang Beverage Co. v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 162 M 243, 511 P2d 1 (1973). See also Singleton v. L.P. Anderson Supply Co., Inc., 284 M 40, 943 P2d 968, 54 St. Rep. 738 (1997).

Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted because the record before the District Court did not show a breach of duty owed to the plaintiff. Plaintiff had the burden of coming forward with evidence that would place a genuine issue of fact before the court. Kronen v. Richter, 211 M 208, 683 P2d 1315, 41 St. Rep. 1312 (1984), followed in Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St. Rep. 484 (1994), and Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310, 52 St. Rep. 714 (1995).

Motion Supported by Unanswered Request for Admissions and Failure to Oppose Motion: Grant of plaintiff's summary judgment motion was affirmed because facts that sufficiently supported the motion were considered admitted and true when defendant failed to make a timely reply to plaintiff's request for admissions. At the hearing on the motion, defendant did not appear but merely filed a pro se brief opposing the motion. Defendant's brief was not accompanied by affidavits or controverting evidence in any admissible form. Defendant received notice of the motion 15 days before the scheduled hearing, although only 10 days' notice is required. Defendant's claim that the motion was granted without adequate opportunity for him to be heard was denied. Wight v. Gonzales, 249 M 268, 815 P2d 598, 48 St. Rep. 745 (1991).

Mere Denial or Speculation Insufficient: A person who moves for summary judgment must demonstrate that there is no genuine issue as to all facts considered material in light of the substantive principles entitling the movant to judgment as a matter of law. If that burden is met, the other party must demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact. Mere denial or speculation by the other party does not suffice. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

Contested Trust — Summary Judgment Appropriate: Summary judgment in a case contesting a trust agreement was proper when Taylor failed to demonstrate a material fact issue regarding the naturalness of the disposition. Mere allegation that because her brother was acting as the decedent's fiduciary and that because of alleged animosity between her and her brother, he exercised undue influence over the decedent to have her left out of the will was insufficient to meet her burden of showing disputed material facts regarding whether the disposition was unnatural. Taylor v. Koslosky, 249 M 215, 814 P2d 985, 48 St. Rep. 649 (1991), overruled, to the extent that a court is not required to but may consider the criteria in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978), in determining the existence of undue influence, but the five criteria need not all be proved to show undue influence in any given case, in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

Substantial Showing by Defendants of No Material Issue of Fact — Burden of Proof Shifts to Plaintiff: The defendants brought a summary judgment motion for dismissal on the grounds that no material fact issues existed. The motion was supported by briefs, exhibits, and affidavits. The plaintiffs merely reiterated the factual allegations in their complaint, arguing that the burden was on the defendants to disprove the plaintiffs' case. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision in favor of the defendants, holding that once the defendants make a sufficient showing of no material fact issues, then the burden shifts to the plaintiffs to show that the summary judgment is not warranted. Thelen v. Billings, 238 M 82, 776 P2d 520, 46 St. Rep. 1108 (1989), followed in Lachenmaier v. First Bank Sys., Inc., 246 M 26, 803 P2d 614, 47 St. Rep. 2244 (1990), and in Alexander v. McCauley, 250 M 216, 819 P2d 176, 48 St. Rep. 798 (1991). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Burden of Proof on Moving Party: The moving party for a summary judgment has the burden of showing the absence of any genuine factual issue. Mogan v. Harlem, 238 M 1, 775 P2d 686, 46 St. Rep. 1043 (1989); Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986); Baylor v. Jacobson, 170 M 234, 552 P2d 55 (1976); Storrusten v. Harrison, 169 M 525, 549 P2d 464 (1976); Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975); Uhl v. Abrahams, 160 M 426, 503 P2d 26 (1972); Kober v. Stewart, 148 M 117, 417 P2d 476 (1966). Uhl was overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Implied Warranty of Habitability — Privity of Contract Not Required: Sale of a lot to plaintiffs was contingent upon plaintiffs' agreement to allow seller to contract with Mora Bros., Inc., for the construction of their home. When the land beneath their new home began to slide downhill, plaintiffs sued for damages. District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment against seller and Mora Bros., Inc., as builder-vendors on the theory of breach of implied warranty of habitability, but denied plaintiffs' motion against Mora Bros., Inc., on the issue of negligence. Supreme Court affirmed District Court's finding that Mora Bros., Inc., is liable to plaintiffs under theory of implied warranty of habitability. The warranty does not depend on a contract for its existence, therefore privity of contract is not required. Once plaintiffs showed that house moved, defendant had to provide an explanation to create a genuine issue of fact. Defendant failed to provide an explanation, so summary judgment was proper. Degnan v. Executive Homes, Inc., 215 M 162, 696 P2d 431, 42 St. Rep. 262 (1985).

Test for Grant of Summary Judgment: The purpose of summary judgment is to encourage judicial economy by eliminating unnecessary trials, and it is proper only when there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Movant has the burden of showing a complete absence of any genuine issue as to all facts considered material in light of the substantive principles that entitle the movant to a judgment as a matter of law, and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the offered proof are to be drawn in favor of the opposing party. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981).

Genuine Issue of Fact — No Duty of Court to Anticipate: The failure of the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to either raise or demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact or to demonstrate that the legal issue should not be determined in favor of the movant is evidence that the party's burden was not carried. Summary judgment is then proper, the court being under no duty to anticipate proof to establish a material and substantial issue of fact. Larry C. Iverson, Inc., v. Bouma, 195 M 351, 639 P2d 47, 38 St. Rep. 1911 (1981); State ex rel. Burlington N. v. District Court, 159 M 295, 496 P2d 1152 (1972).

Summary Judgment for Prescriptive Public Easement — Estoppel From Denying County Ownership: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnity against the previous owner, the trial court did not err in denying the county's motion for summary judgment and granting the motions of the plaintiffs and sellers for summary judgment. On a motion for summary judgment the movant has the burden of establishing prima facie the absence of any genuine issue of material fact, and when the movant does so, the party opposing the motion must come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. The sellers presented evidence in support of their motion showing a prescriptive public easement and estoppel against the county and former owner. The county failed to present evidence to meet its burden. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Burden of Proving Nonexistence of Genuine Issue: It is clear in this case that because plaintiff did not initially demonstrate with appropriate proof an absence of a genuine issue of material fact with regard to the defendant's affirmative defense, the latter was not compelled to produce counterproof to avoid a grant of summary judgment. Mathews v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 184 M 368, 603 P2d 232 (1979), followed in Minnie v. Roundup, 257 M 429, 849 P2d 212, 50 St. Rep. 342 (1993).

Burden Shifts to Opposing Party: Summary judgment is appropriate when the moving party shows a complete absence of any genuine issue of fact. The initial burden attaches to the moving party, but the burden shifts where the record discloses no genuine issue of fact. Once the burden has shifted, the party opposing the motion is held to a standard of proof which is as substantial as that initially imposed on the moving party. Rumph v. Dale Edwards, Inc., 183 M 359, 600 P2d 163 (1979).

Material and Substantial Facts: An order granting summary judgment will be upheld in those cases in which the complaining party fails to demonstrate the existence of material and substantial facts that would alter the decision made below. W. Sign, Inc. v. St., 180 M 278, 590 P2d 141 (1979), following Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976).

Burden of Plaintiff: Where defendant satisfied burden by placing sufficient facts before the court which vitiated plaintiffs' contentions, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to come forward with proof of contentions to show that a genuine material fact issue existed. Roberts v. Burlington N. R.R., 171 M 143, 556 P2d 1243 (1976).

Defendant's Burden of Proof — Shift of Burden: Defendant, in seeking summary judgment, had initial burden of showing absence of any issue of material fact remaining, but burden then passed to carpenter to raise such material issue of fact. DeWinter v. Capp Homes, Inc., 162 M 19, 507 P2d 1061 (1973).

PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Landlord Who Fails to Provide Safe Rental Property Negligent Per Se — Summary Judgment on Liability Proper: Plaintiff was injured in a fall in the staircase of a rental home because the stairwell light was not functional. Plaintiff claimed that the defendant landlord was negligent for failing to provide a safe and habitable premises and moved for partial summary judgment on the liability issue. The trial court denied the motion, and the jury found for defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Under 70-24-303, a landlord is required to keep rental premises in a fit and habitable condition and to maintain electrical facilities in good and safe working order. Defendant could have avoided liability by entering a separate written agreement signed by all parties in which plaintiff agreed to repair the light, but no such agreement existed, so defendant was negligent per se, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Defendant's attempt to shift responsibility to plaintiff for failing to notify defendant of the inoperative light was misplaced because the duty of repair is on the landlord and there is no duty of the tenant to notify. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, __P3d__ (2005).

Discretion of District Court Whether to Void School Board Decision: Motta filed a pro se lawsuit against a school district board, contending that the district did not have an appropriate procedure in place for public participation in the decisionmaking process and that because the school board did not adequately publicize a series of negotiation sessions and a special meeting to approve a negotiated agreement between the board and the teachers' union, results of the meeting should be void. The District Court found that the board violated state open meeting laws, granted partial summary judgment for Motta, and ordered that the district submit copies of its public participation procedures and maintain minutes consistent with applicable statutes, but the court did not void the agreement. On appeal, Motta argues that the District Court erred and moved the Supreme Court to void the agreement. The Supreme Court declined. Under 2-3-213, the decision whether to void any decisions reached at a meeting held in violation of state open meeting laws is clearly within the discretion of the District Court, and because that discretion was not abused, the partial summary judgment was affirmed. Motta v. Philipsburg School Bd. Trustees, District No. 1, 2004 MT 256, 323 M 72, 98 P3d 673 (2004).

No Award of Attorney Fees on Partial Summary Judgment in Pro Se Case Proper — Remand for Determination of Costs: The District Court awarded Motta partial summary judgment in an action to determine whether a school board violated state open meeting laws. Even though he was the prevailing party, Motta was not entitled to attorney fees because Motta acted pro se throughout the proceeding. However, the District Court failed to address whether Motta was entitled to costs. Although it is within the District Court's discretion whether costs are awarded, an outright denial of costs without a sufficient rationale is an abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court remanded so that the District Court could consider costs and set forth a rationale if costs were denied. Motta v. Philipsburg School Bd. Trustees, District No. 1, 2004 MT 256, 323 M 72, 98 P3d 673 (2004). See also Gaustad v. Columbus, 265 M 379, 877 P2d 470 (1994).

Duty of State to Maintain University Library in Safe Condition: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Just weeks before, another child fell thorough the same stairway. In determining negligence, the District Court granted plaintiff partial summary judgment on the issue of duty of care and breach of the duty. The state appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the state had a duty of ordinary care to prevent children from falling through the railing at the public building and that the state breached that duty because the state had notice from the previous accident that there was a defect, yet the state did not cure, remove, or warn of the defect. Foreseeability was established at the time of the previous accident, so the state was liable despite a relatively accident-free history at the library and the fact that the building was grandfathered in under an older version of the building code in effect when the building was constructed. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), following Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995).

Question of Validity of Offset Moot — Dismissal of Counterclaim and Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Proper: A promissory note related to a stock sale provided for acceleration upon notice of default. Following defendants' default, plaintiff paid an escrow agent an amount that satisfied plaintiff's obligation under the sale agreement, and the agent then deducted from that payment the amount owed by defendants under the promissory note, transferred the balance back to plaintiff in satisfaction of the note, and forwarded the balance of plaintiff's payment to defendants. Defendants filed a counterclaim and moved for partial summary judgment based on the validity of the offset. The District Court dismissed both, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Because both parties received the money owed to them, and because the acceleration and offset were appropriate, the issues raised by defendants lost any practical purpose. The issue of the validity of the offset was moot, and the Supreme Court declined to address the issue further. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002).

Improper Grant of Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Whether Train Crew Gave Adequate Auditory Warning at Railroad Crossing: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. In its order granting partial summary judgment to MRL, the District Court ruled, as a matter of law, that the MRL train crew had properly sounded the train whistle and bell, in accordance with 69-14-562, and that because Mickelson had no memory of the accident, he could not produce any specific facts that presented a genuine issue worthy of trial. In the brief opposing summary judgment, Mickelson pointed out several inconsistencies in the testimony of the train crew that raised factual and credibility issues concerning the crew's story about how the accident occurred, particularly with regard to Mickelson's prior common practice of loading the fire truck in a particular manner, which conflicted with the crew's story. The Supreme Court held that the trial court committed reversible error by preventing the jury from deciding crucial factual and credibility issues regarding adequate auditory warnings, citing several cases that precluded summary judgment on whistle issues because of disputed facts. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000). See also Easterwood v. CSX Transp., Inc., 933 F2d 1548 (11th Cir. 1991), Bowman v. Norfolk S. Ry. Co., 832 F. Supp. 1014 (D. S.C. 1993), and Borden v. CSX Transp., Inc., 843 F. Supp. 1410 (M.D. Ala. 1993).

Element of Identity of Issues Not Present on Question of Collateral Estoppel — Partial Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Anderson sought judicial review of the seizure and suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403, which limits review to three underlying issues. The District Court's findings on these issues served as the bases for making the ultimate determination of whether Anderson was entitled to a license or whether his license was subject to suspension. After the District Court found that Anderson was entitled to a license, Anderson moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of the state's civil liability based on the doctrine of collateral estoppel. However, the question of liability was never considered as part of the judicial review proceeding, so denial of the partial summary judgment motion was proper on the grounds that the crucial estoppel element of identity of issues did not exist. Anderson v. St., 250 M 18, 817 P2d 699, 48 St. Rep. 871 (1991), distinguished in Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Summary Judgment Motion Taken Under Advisement — Constitutes Hearing: Defendant in a mechanics' lien foreclosure moved for partial summary judgment that the lien was invalid because it was not verified by affidavit. Through a series of delays and transfer of the case to a new judge, no hearing was held on the motion. At the beginning of trial, plaintiff moved to set aside summary judgment, contending that no proper motion was before the court and that a hearing on the motion was necessary. The trial court heard arguments, took the issue under advisement, and in its findings and conclusions reaffirmed the partial summary judgment. The Supreme Court found no reversible error in this procedure since the trial court's reconsideration prior to trial constituted a hearing on the motion. A.A. Quality Constr. v. Thomas, 224 M 108, 728 P2d 416, 43 St. Rep. 2055 (1986).

Construction of Insurance Contract: In construction of an automobile insurance contract, an ambiguity regarding nonowned vehicles was construed in favor of the insured. Thus, partial summary judgment for the insured was proper. Fitzgerald v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 186, 577 P2d 370 (1978).

Appealability and Appropriateness of Partial Summary Judgment: Although a partial summary judgment granting specific performance of an option contract was designated as interlocutory, it was a final and appealable transfer of property. Furthermore, the summary judgment was improperly granted when based upon a determination in a hearing on motion to dismiss that there were no issues of material fact, depriving defendant the opportunity to effectively resist the summary judgment motion. Graveley v. MacLeod, 175 M 338, 573 P2d 1166 (1978).

Partial Summary Judgment Order Nonappealable: An order granting partial summary judgment on the issue of liability alone, being interlocutory in nature, will not become final and appealable until damages are assessed. Link v. Dept. of Fish & Game, 173 M 127, 566 P2d 806 (1977).

Genuine Issues as to Damages: Where plaintiff sought damages against railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act, it was error for District Court to deny railroad's introduction of evidence to establish plaintiff's possible contributory negligence in diminution of damages where court granted partial summary judgment as to railroad's liability so that the only triable issue was damages. Dissent by Justices Daly and John C. Harrison asserting summary judgment is not appealable. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 167 M 485, 540 P2d 298 (1975).

Appeal of Judgment on Liability: Summary judgment on issue of liability only was "interlocutory in character" and not appealable until damage issue had been resolved. Time for taking appeal did not run from entry of summary judgment on liability, but would commence upon entry of final order. Schultz v. Adams, 161 M 463, 507 P2d 530 (1973).

Differing Considerations for Summary Judgment and Final Judgment: The considerations which result in a grant of summary judgment are not the same considerations relevant to an order of final certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Under summary judgment procedure, the essential inquiry is whether material facts are disputed. Under Rule 54(b) procedure, the inquiry is whether, after balancing the competing factors, finality of judgment should be ordered to advance the interests of sound judicial administration and public policy. Declaratory Judgment — All Issues Not Considered: In declaratory judgment action in which notice of reclassification was found not to comply with statutory requirements, District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff-landowners' motion for summary judgment without considering further issues on the power to reclassify since plaintiffs lacked standing as to those issues. Case Notes

Breach of Subordination Agreement — Failure to Respond — Summary Judgment Proper: After submitting evidence in support of its motion, defendant moved for summary judgment because plaintiff breached a subordination agreement. The burden shifted to plaintiff to respond, but instead of filing a response brief, plaintiff filed two depositions and a set of discovery answers at the hearing and relied on oral argument. After consideration, the District Court granted summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, contending that summary judgment was improper because the depositions and discovery answers proved the existence of an intercreditor agreement between defendant and a codefendant, establishing a question of fact whether defendant received all funds to which it was entitled and thus whether defendant had any claim against plaintiff. The Supreme Court disagreed. Breach of the subordination agreement occurred before the intercreditor agreement existed, so the facts presented by plaintiff did not establish a material fact regarding the subordination agreement, and summary judgment was appropriate. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003).

Exhibits Properly Excluded as Inadmissible Hearsay in Summary Judgment Proceeding: During summary judgment proceedings, parties must limit affidavits to evidence that would be otherwise admissible pursuant to evidentiary rules. The first admissibility requirement in this rule is that affidavits must be based on personal knowledge, and the personal knowledge requirement has been extended to attached exhibits as well. In this case, the District Court properly struck six challenged exhibits because they did not set forth facts within the affiants' personal knowledge and because a foundation was not laid for their consideration based on any exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence. Further, the court did not err in failing to take judicial notice of one of the exhibits—a motion to dismiss in a prior criminal proceeding—because the exhibit was not a form of law cognizable under Rule 202, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The exhibits were properly dismissed as inadmissible hearsay. Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002).

Premises Liability — Conflict Between Deposition and Affidavit of Same Witness — Affidavit Not Based Upon Personal Knowledge: Herron sued Columbus Hospital, alleging that he had been injured by a malfunctioning automatic door in the hospital's professional building and that the hospital had knowledge of the defective condition of the door. The hospital moved for summary judgment, and Herron opposed the motion. In support of his opposition to the hospital's motion, Herron filed an affidavit of Lyle Skinner, a maintenance employee, alleging that the hospital knew of the defective condition of the doors. The hospital then deposed Skinner and filed parts of his deposition in further support of its motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court pointed out that Skinner's affidavit and his deposition conflicted as to what doors in which building Skinner had performed maintenance on and also conflicted as to which doors Skinner had discussed with his superiors. Skinner's affidavit also stated that the doors would frequently malfunction, but his deposition showed that Skinner had not worked on the doors in question. Citing In re Estate of Michael v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 264 M 261, 871 P2d 272 (1994), the Supreme Court held that when there is a conflict between an affidavit and the same witness's deposition, the affidavit statements do not raise a genuine issue of material fact for the purposes of summary judgment proceedings. Regarding those portions of the affidavit that did not conflict with the deposition, the Supreme Court, relying upon Cooper v. Sisters of Charity, 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352 (1994), held that an affidavit submitted for the purpose of summary judgment must be based upon personal knowledge of the affiant and that if the affidavit does not meet that requirement, it does not raise a genuine issue of material fact. Because Herron provided no evidence to resist the hospital's motion for summary judgment other than Skinner's affidavit, the Supreme Court held that Herron had not met his burden in the summary judgment proceeding and held that the District Court had properly granted the hospital's motion. Herron v. Columbus Hosp., 284 M 190, 943 P2d 1272, 54 St. Rep. 840 (1997).

Failure of Insufficient Affidavit to Raise Issue of Material Fact: Cooper, in support of her contention that an issue of material fact existed, submitted a compound affidavit signed by herself and her ex-husband. The Supreme Court found the affidavit did not contain the elements necessary to conform to this rule, noting: (1) the affidavit was signed by both Cooper and her ex-husband; (2) the affidavit did not specify which statements were based on her personal knowledge and which were based on the ex-husband's knowledge; (3) most of the alleged facts set out in the affidavit were only opinions; and (4) neither Cooper nor her ex-husband could offer testimony on the issue in question because neither was an expert in the field, rendering the testimony inadmissible. As a matter of law, the affidavit failed to raise an issue of material fact. Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St.

Rep. 484 (1994), followed in Herron v. Columbus Hosp., 284 M 190, 943 P2d 1272, 54 St. Rep. 840 (1997).

Failure to Lay Foundation for Hearsay Affidavit — Failure to Carry Burden Proving Material Facts: Thornton offered to purchase certain real property by executing a buy/sell agreement. The evidence showed that Thornton knew that half of the property was held in trust by Norwest and half was owned by Songstad and her sisters. Thornton obtained the signature of Songstad (representing her sisters) on the buy/sell agreement, but not that of Norwest. In response to Norwest's motion for summary judgment, Thornton submitted an affidavit containing his own hearsay statements that an unidentified trust manager at Norwest had agreed to be bound by the desire of Songstad to sell her half of the property. Citing Eberl v. Scofield, 244 M 515, 798 P2d 536 (1990), and Passovoy v. Nordstrom, Inc., 758 P2d 524 (Wash. 1988), the Supreme Court held that because Thornton's affidavit failed to lay a foundation for the use of the trust manager's statements, the affidavit did not qualify as a statement of a party opponent, an exception from the hearsay rule, and therefore did not meet the requirements of this rule by putting into dispute issues of material fact. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was therefore correct in granting Norwest's motion for summary judgment. Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Affidavit Containing Only Hearsay Stricken: The District Court did not err in striking an affidavit that contained only hearsay statements relating to an issue on which summary judgment was granted. Eberl v. Scofield, 244 M 515, 798 P2d 536, 47 St. Rep. 1780 (1990).

Speculative Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Fact: The petitioner was a nephew of the decedent who left his entire estate to two children's homes. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had properly dismissed the petitioner's case by summary judgment because the affidavits presented by the petitioner on the question of the decedent's competency were from people who had little contact with the decedent and were therefore speculative in nature. In re Estate of Luger, 244 M 301, 797 P2d 229, 47 St. Rep. 1642 (1990).

Allowing Supplemental Affidavits Not Improper: In a slip and fall case, the plaintiffs argued that the lower court erred in dismissing their case when the court relied on supplemental affidavits that the plaintiffs had moved to have stricken. The Supreme Court ruled that it was in the lower court's discretion to allow the additional affidavits. Blaskovich v. Noreast Dev. Corp., 242 M 326, 790 P2d 977, 47 St. Rep. 740 (1990).

Easement by Prescription — Burden of Proof: In a quiet title action, once defendant filed affidavits reciting facts that would fulfill the requirements for a prescriptive easement, it became the duty of the plaintiff not to rest upon mere allegations or denials but to respond by affidavit or otherwise, setting forth specific facts showing there was a genuine issue of material fact for trial. It was the plaintiff's burden to show that defendant's use was permissive. Summary judgment for the defendant was proper due to the plaintiff's failure to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

No Response From Opposing Party: Summary judgment was proper in this case as plaintiff failed to respond to defendant's motion. Plaintiff's contention that affidavits in opposition were not available is untenable because he could have, but failed to, file a responsive brief, attorney affidavit, or affidavits pursuant to Rule 30(e), M.R.Civ.P. If a party moves for summary judgment and the opposing party fails to respond, summary judgment is proper. Payne v. Stratman, 229 M 377, 747 P2d 210, 44 St. Rep. 2059 (1987), followed in Joyner v. Onstad, 240 M 362, 783 P2d 1383, 46 St. Rep. 2195 (1989).

Adverse Party May Not Rely on Mere Allegations of His Pleadings: The initial burden of establishing absence of any issue of material fact is on the party seeking summary judgment, but when the record discloses no genuine issue as to any material fact, then the burden shifts to the party opposing the motion to present evidence of a material and substantial nature to raise a genuine issue of fact. Conclusory or speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Here, plaintiff repeated the initial allegations contained in the complaint. She may not rest upon the mere allegations of her pleadings but has an affirmative duty to respond by affidavits or reference to sworn testimony with specific facts that show there is a genuine issue for trial. When plaintiff presents evidence of damages which are purely speculative, summary judgment is appropriate. Martin v. St., 698 P2d 399, 42 St. Rep. 272 (1985) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports). See also Mayer Bros. v. Daniel Richard Jewelers, Inc., 223 M 397, 726 P2d 815, 43 St. Rep. 1821 (1986).

Allegations Insufficient: Plaintiff served in the capacity of deputy clerk of the Supreme Court for 20 years. He ran for the Clerk of Court position but was defeated. The newly elected Clerk terminated plaintiff and appointed a new deputy. Plaintiff contended that he was terminated because of his political beliefs, age, or sex. The only indications the Supreme Court found in the record that any discrimination might have occurred were the allegations in plaintiff's complaint. No evidence of discrimination was put forth in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment. The court relied on State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 159 M 295, 496 P2d 1152 (1972), to find that in the absence of a factual showing summary judgment was proper. Conboy v. St., 214 M 492, 693 P2d 547, 42 St. Rep. 120 (1985), followed in Pipinich v. Battershell, 232 M 507, 759 P2d 148, 45 St. Rep. 1237 (1988).

Failure to Oppose or Defend: Summary judgment for plaintiff on one count of the complaint was proper where court had before it the complaint, answer, 20 requests for admissions and defendants' answers thereto, and plaintiff's supporting affidavit and defendants failed to conduct any discovery or file any opposing affidavits. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

Opposing Party to Present Material Facts of Substantial Nature: Facts presented by a party in opposition to a motion for summary judgment must be material and of a substantial nature, not fanciful, frivolous, gauzy, or merely suspicious. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien) — Sufficient Property Description in Affidavits — Summary Judgment: In this case on a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), the issue on appeal was whether the description of the subject property in the notice of the lien filed with the County Clerk and Recorder was legally sufficient to identify the property for purposes of enforcing the lien. The appeal was taken on cross-motions for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found error in granting summary judgment to the property owners and held that the supplier seeking the lien was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Noting that the procedural requirements of 71-3-511 (since repealed) have been held strictly enforceable, the court held that the statutes are to be construed liberally so as to give effect to their remedial character once the procedure has been fulfilled. Although the land on which the structure stood was covered by the lien on the structure, the land did not need to be described. When, as here, the land was described the erroneous part of the description was to be rejected. If a sufficient description remained to identify the particular property sought to be charged, the lien would be upheld. Other documents filed with the notice of lien could be used to identify the building. In this case, those documents and photographs of the property in question sufficed to form a proper basis for summary judgment against the property owners. Gen. Elec. Supply v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981).

Refusal to Consider Untimely Filed Affidavits — No Error Found: A seller of real property sought summary judgment in an action based on the contract of purchase, and the buyer's attorney failed to file an affidavit and brief opposing the seller's motion for summary judgment until the day of the hearing. The seller's counsel pointed out the untimeliness of the filing, and the trial court refused to consider the affidavit. On appeal no abuse of discretion was found. The Supreme Court noted, too, the unwarranted delays previously caused by the buyer in the case and the lack of any compelling excuse for the untimely filing. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Burden of Proving Nonexistence of Genuine Issue: The moving party must first support his contentions with an appropriate evidentiary basis before the opposing party must do more than simply rest upon the allegations contained in his pleadings. It is only when the moving party has properly supported its motion that the burden is shifted to the opposing party to provide counterproof rather than being permitted to rest solely on the allegations contained in its pleadings. Mathews v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 184 M 368, 603 P2d 232 (1979), followed in Minnie v. Roundup, 257 M 429, 849 P2d 212, 50 St. Rep. 342 (1993).

Evidence Submitted to Be Timely and in Proper Form: Plaintiff submitted a letter from the State Compensation Insurance Fund in support of a motion to set aside the judgment. The letter was included improperly in appellant's brief for the following reasons: (1) it was not presented in the proper affidavit form as required by Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P.; (2) the opinion set forth in the letter could easily have been presented in timely fashion in opposition to respondent's motion for summary judgment rather than subsequently in support of a motion to set aside the verdict which had been granted on the merits; and (3) the letter sets forth a generalized opinion offered without either foundation or regard to the facts of the case. Since the letter was not in proper form it cannot be considered under Rule 803(a), Montana Rules of Evidence. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150 (1979).

Insufficient Showing of Fact Issue — Existence of Joint Venture: Plaintiff's allegation that the defendant was liable for money owed to plaintiff by a corporation because the defendant and the corporation were engaged in a joint venture was not sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff's allegations were supported only by the fact that the defendant and the corporation had been issued a joint venture license by the State of California and that the plaintiff would rely on the testimony of certain contractors. The mere issuance of such a license is insufficient to indicate that it was actually used or that a joint venture existed, and the statement that certain contractors would testify is an unsupported conclusion. Nat'l Gypsum Co. v. Johnson, 182 M 209, 595 P2d 1188 (1979).

Summary Judgment — Depositions — Exhibits: The depositions of witnesses as well as exhibits introduced for the purposes of deposition were a sufficient basis for the court to conclude that there was no genuine issue of material fact regarding the lack of control of the city over an intersection. The court should have granted the city's motion for summary judgment. State ex rel. Helena v. District Court, 167 M 157, 536 P2d 1182 (1975).

Genuine Issue of Fact Found: Summary judgment was reversed because cognizance was not taken of amended allegation raising a genuine issue of fact. Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Oral Testimony Properly Considered: Where trial judge was present during taking of depositions, facts heard by judge were properly considered on motion for summary judgment pursuant to this section since oral testimony is properly within matters which court may consider under such motion. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Pleadings Not Controlling: On a motion for summary judgment the formal issues presented by the pleadings are not controlling, and the court must consider the depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, oral testimony, and exhibits presented. Hagar v. Tandy, 146 M 531, 410 P2d 447 (1965).

Summary Judgment Not Res Judicata: Where parties went beyond pleadings and introduced other material in support of their motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, there was justification for treating the court's order as a judgment upon the merits. However, since summary judgment procedure was not followed in this case the principle of res judicata should not apply. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Case Notes

Failure to Disclose How Further Discovery Could Preclude Summary Judgment — Request for Further Discovery Properly Denied: The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff. Defendant Moon contended that summary judgment was premature because of an inadequate opportunity for Moon to conduct further discovery and depose various persons or to obtain documents that might demonstrate whether the promissory notes in question were paid and in what manner. Moon had the burden of showing what new facts could have been obtained through further discovery that could defeat the summary judgment motion, but neither his briefs nor his counsel's supporting affidavit established how the proposed discovery could do so. Therefore, the District Court did not err in conducting the summary judgment hearing and ruling on the summary judgment motion without allowing Moon the opportunity for further discovery. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

Cutting Off Discovery Appropriate: The plaintiffs had diligently sought to take depositions but were unable to do so because of scheduling problems. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in granting the defendants' summary judgment motion because the plaintiffs did not sufficiently establish how the proposed discovery would preclude summary judgment. Howell v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 240 M 383, 785 P2d 1018, 46 St. Rep. 2216 (1989), followed in J.L. v. Kienenberger, 257 M 113, 848 P2d 472, 50 St. Rep. 182 (1993), and Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 970 P2d 1044, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999).

Discovery Not "Cut Off" Prematurely by Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended defendants resisted taking of depositions of witnesses favorable to plaintiffs' cause and thus the court's granting defendants' motion for summary judgment "cut off" discovery prematurely. The court held that plaintiffs failed to present an affidavit as required by Rule 56(f), M.R.Civ.P., stating why depositions could not be taken; nor did plaintiffs exercise their prerogative under Rules 30, 31, or 37, M.R.Civ.P., at any time during the year or more after the complaint was filed. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Rule 56(g). Affidavits made in bad faith.

Case Notes

Issue of Fact: In view of the record indicating that a real estate transaction did not close until between July 28 and July 30, appellant's simple assertion that the transaction closed on July 20 will not serve to create an issue of fact merely to avoid summary judgment. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Rule 57. Declaratory judgments.

Commission Notes

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule, except that reference is made to the Montana Declaratory Judgment Act instead of the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act, and except that the words "subject to the provisions of section 93-8909, Revised Codes of Montana, 1947 [now codified as 27-8-302, MCA]," are inserted in the first sentence. These words are inserted to make it clear that only issues of fact may be tried by a jury in a declaratory judgment action.

Case Notes

Mootness — No Appeal Absent District Court Ruling on Declaratory Judgment: The high school sports association decided that Grabow was ineligible to play basketball because his eligibility pursuant to the semester rule had elapsed while Grabow was an exchange student in Germany. Grabow filed a complaint in District Court asking for a declaratory ruling that the association lacked rulemaking and adjudicatory authority and requested a hearing on whether a preliminary injunction should be issued precluding enforcement of the association rule until the case could be adjudicated on its merits. After deciding that it was unlikely that Grabow would ultimately prevail, the District Court denied the injunction. Grabow appealed. The Supreme Court granted the injunction pending final disposition of the appeal, and Grabow played basketball during his senior year. The Supreme Court found that the 1999-2000 season was the only one in which Grabow claimed that he had a right to participate and that because the season was completed, the initial grounds for application of the mootness doctrine to the preliminary injunction issue were met. The declaratory judgment issue was not one capable of repetition, but was one that would evade review, so the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of Grabow's complaint for declaratory judgment, which would then be subject to appeal following final judgment by the District Court. Grabow v. Mont. High School Assn., 2000 MT 159, 300 M 227, 3 P3d 650, 57 St. Rep. 654 (2000). See also Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150 (1999).

Declaratory Judgment — Interpretation of Land Exchange Agreement: Shortly after entering into a land purchase agreement, the parties changed the agreement into a tax-free land exchange agreement. The new agreement gave buyer 3 ½ years to acquire like-kind property to be exchanged for seller's ranch. The like-kind property was to be purchased with funds placed periodically by buyer in an escrow account. Several years later a dispute arose concerning the nature and timing of the payments. Buyer submitted the questions to the District Court in a declaratory judgment action. The District Court interpreted the contract in a manner generally favorable to seller, and buyer appealed, claiming that the District Court's decision was unreasonable, contrary to the parties' intentions, and improper under the rules of construction of contracts. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the District Court's interpretation had not been unreasonable since: (1) its decision on the timing of the rental payments was reflective of the parties' intentions as shown by their past performance; (2) its decision on the timing of the amortization payments was consistent with the rule of construction requiring that a contract be construed in such a way as to give effect to all of its provisions; and (3) its ruling on the intention of the parties was supported by the evidence. Finally, 28-3-206 did not entitle buyer to have ambiguities construed in his favor; even though buyer claimed that the nature of the agreement was changed solely for seller's benefit, the agreement was prepared by an attorney for both parties, not by one party alone. Lewis v. Murphy, 199 M 368, 649 P2d 740, 39 St. Rep. 1459 (1982).

Issue of Fact as to Applicability of Insurance Coverage Exclusion: In this case the District Court failed to determine the factual issue of whether the insured, Phalen, expected or intended Thu Duc Vo's injuries. The applicability of coverage provision of the insurance policy excluded those cases where the insured's deliberate acts or assaults resulted in injuries that would be expected or intended by him to result from his deliberate acts. The applicability of Northwestern National's coverage could not be determined until the factual issues concerning the intention and expectation of Phalen as to Vo's injuries was decided in the tort action. Therefore, summary judgment in favor of Northwestern in the declaratory judgment case at bar was improper. NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979), distinguished under the rationale of USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988).

Rules Not Designed to Promote Litigation: When defendant in a personal injury accident attempted to compel a potential litigant to appear and bring suit by naming her as a defendant in a third-party declaratory judgment action, the trial court properly dismissed the complaint since the third-party defendant was not an indispensable party or compelled to litigate a claim which she had no intention of pursuing. If equity was to be done in a situation such as this, attorney fees were properly awarded the third-party defendant. Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978).

Justiciable Controversy: Under this rule there must be a justiciable controversy which: is existing and genuine; the judgment of the court may effectively operate upon; and is a judicial determination having effect upon the rights, status, or legal relationships of a real party in interest. Or, if lacking these qualities, the case must be of overriding public import. In re Grand Jury, 170 M 354, 553 P2d 987 (1976).

Landowners — Taxpayers: Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction of proceeding by owners of timberlands for a declaratory judgment and ancillary relief to, among other things, compel valuation and assessment of timberlands for taxation as directed by the Board of Equalization (functions transferred to Director of Department of Revenue and State Tax Appeals Board). State ex rel. Conrad v. Managhan, 157 M 335, 485 P2d 948 (1971).

Review of Declaratory Judgments: In a declaratory judgment action, the court determines issue of facts in the same manner as any other civil action and the Supreme Court will review the judgment in the same manner as any other case. Highway Comm'n v. Flood Control & Drainage District, 155 M 157, 468 P2d 753 (1970).

Exercise of Jurisdiction — Discretion — Procedure: Although the necessary elements for jurisdiction over a declaratory judgment exist, a court is not compelled to exercise it. Dismissal of an action for declaratory judgment lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge. The procedure to be used in determining whether to grant a motion for declaratory judgment is the same as for a motion for summary judgment. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 147 M 396, 412 P2d 569 (1966).

Declaratory Injunction Upheld — Water Rights: Declaratory judgment in favor of landowner maintaining that railroad had affirmative duty to maintain a ditch, although land had been sold, was affirmed. Harrer v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 130, 410 P2d 713 (1966).

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule except for the omission of the sentence, "The notation of a judgment in a civil docket as provided by Rule 79(a) constitutes the entry of the judgment; and the judgment is not effective before such entry." Rule 79 is not being proposed for adoption at this time.

Compiler's Comments

Amendments to Federal Rule: The above commission note refers to Federal Rule 58 as it stood before a 1963 amendment thereof. The 1963 amendment rewrote the first sentence with no material change in substance, and inserted sentences requiring the judgment to be set forth in a separate document, and prohibiting attorneys from submitting forms of judgment except upon direction of the court. As of May 1, 1990, the preceding comment was still applicable.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

General 1061
Delay in Entry of Judgment 1062

GENERAL

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Motion Objecting to Costs — No Suspension of Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Order Not Appealable When Judgment Never Docketed in Record: The District Court made an express order that the Clerk of Court enter final judgment in a case certified for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., but a final judgment was never docketed in the record. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide an appeal. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Disqualification of Judge After Entry of Findings and Conclusions: Defendants filed affidavits of disqualification of the District Judge in a property dispute case after the entry of the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Defendants contended that the filing precluded the judge from entering judgment in accordance with his findings and conclusions. The disqualification was attempted under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (since superseded), which was in effect at the time. The findings and conclusions entered by the judge prior to the filing of the affidavit of disqualification expressly directed that a judgment be prepared "in accordance with" the findings and conclusions. Under these circumstances, the judgment was a part of the findings and conclusions. Accordingly, although the disqualification prevented the District Judge from ruling on posttrial motions under Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., and from withdrawing the findings and conclusions previously entered, it was not effective to prevent entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with findings and conclusions entered prior to the filing of the affidavit for disqualification. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Final Judgment at Time of Entry: Judgment became final on April 20, 1959, when entered by the Clerk of the District Court, although appellant's counsel moved to modify the judgment on May 21, 1959, and the trial court overruled the motion on August 14, 1959. Hursh v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 139 M 302, 363 P2d 485 (1961).

Jury Award as Final: Where, in an action to recover a money judgment for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident, the evidence was conflicting and the plaintiff's damages unliquidated, and the jury's verdict assessed the plaintiff's damages and judgment was entered in conformity to the verdict, neither the trial court nor the Supreme Court possessed the power to delete from the jury's verdict the words and figures denoting the assessed damages. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Attack on Verdict by Motion for New Trial: After a case has been submitted to the jury and a verdict returned, accepted, and filed at the direction of the court and the jury discharged from the case, the only way to reach the verdict, if insufficient or against the law, is by a timely and proper motion for a new trial. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Law Case — Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Not Allowed: It is not permissible in this state to move for a judgment non obstante veredicto in a law case. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Special Verdict: The ministerial act of the clerk in recording a general verdict constitutes the rendition of judgment, to the entry of which the signature of the judge is not essential, but when the court directs the jury to return special findings, the announcement of his decision in open court and the entry of it in the minutes constitute the rendition of the judgment. McIntyre v. N. Pac. Ry., 58 M 256, 191 P 1065 (1920), distinguished in Lynch v. Butte, 99 M 287, 43 P2d 652 (1935).

Clerk Without Power to Make Additions to Judgment: While the Clerk of the District Court may enter a decree, he had no power to sign it, thus virtually rendering a judgment in a suit to foreclose mortgages on real and personal property, adjudging, among other things, that plaintiff recover principal, interest, and attorneys' fees, holding defendants personally liable therefor, etc., where the trial judge had done no more than transmit to him his findings of fact and conclusions of law, without any further directions in the matter. State ex rel. Reser v. District Court, 53 M 235, 163 P 1149 (1917).

Stay of Judgment Improper: There cannot be a stay of judgment in aid of a new trial. Such a stay is properly granted only after notice of intention to appeal has been given, and notice of intention cannot be given until judgment has been entered. State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

Judgment as Act of Court: The entry of the judgment is the act of the clerk, but when entered becomes the judgment of the court. Hynes v. Barnes, 30 M 25, 75 P 523 (1904), distinguished in Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

DELAY IN ENTRY OF JUDGMENT

Twenty-Day Delay — Effect: Failure to have judgment entered until 20 days after verdict does not affect the validity of the judgment, the only penalty for delay being dismissal of the action if not entered within 6 months after verdict. Coover v. Davis, 112 M 605, 121 P2d 985 (1941).

Impossibility of Judgment: A case tried by a jury may be reserved for argument only when the judgment does not necessarily follow the verdict, as for instance in equity suits, or where after discharge of the jury the verdict is claimed to be unresponsive to the issues, or is so ambiguous or informal that no judgment, proper under the issues, could be entered in conformity with it. State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

Delay Not to Cause Substantial Damage: It is not the intention of the law that a judgment will follow so far behind the verdict as to be the cause of substantial damage, this being apparent from the former code provision requiring the entry of judgment within 24 hours after verdict. Chesnut v. Sales, 49 M 318, 141 P 986 (1914).

Rule 59. New trials — amendment of judgment

Case Notes

No Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: About 2 weeks after defendant filed a notice of entry of judgment, plaintiff filed a motion to amend the original complaint, and the District Court granted the motion. About 3 weeks after the amended complaint was filed, the court entered an order nunc pro tunc stating that it no longer had discretionary authority to grant leave to amend because it lost jurisdiction when defendant filed the notice of entry of judgment. The court held that the order allowing plaintiff's motion to amend was void and should be stricken. Plaintiff appealed the nunc pro tunc order, and the Supreme Court reversed. The filing of a notice of entry of judgment starts the clock running for the time to appeal, but does not divest the District Court of jurisdiction. Rather, the District Court loses jurisdiction when a notice of appeal is filed. Thus, the order issued nunc pro tunc was based on a mistaken interpretation of law because when the motion to amend was granted, the District Court still had jurisdiction. Kruckenberg v. Kalispell, 2004 MT 185, 322 M 177, 94 P3d 748 (2004). See also McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), Hankinson v. Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P.: (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Cumulative Errors Inapplicable in Civil Cases — New Trial Not Warranted: In a wrongful termination action, the District Court erroneously granted a motion for a new trial to the employer based on the cumulative effect of six alleged errors. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the doctrine of cumulative error, while applied in criminal cases, is not extended to civil cases. Because none of the errors considered individually warranted a new trial, the lower court erred in ordering a new trial on the cumulative effect of six errors. Baxter v. Archie Cochrane Motors, Inc., 271 M 286, 895 P2d 631, 52 St. Rep. 444 (1995).

Jury Finding of Lack of Negligence Not Overturned on Grounds of Passion or Prejudice: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others, alleging negligence. The jury found that there was no negligence. Buhr argued that despite the jury's interpretation of the evidence, the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice. The Supreme Court noted that it must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that its role was not to retry a case based upon one party's view of the evidence and that it was within the jury's province to adopt testimony presented by one party to the exclusion of testimony presented by another. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

New Trial Granted Because of Intervenor's Failure to Serve All Parties: In a dissolution action, Keaster and his ex-wife stipulated that he was not the natural parent of her child. The ex-wife subsequently named Fleming as the natural father, and the Child Support Enforcement Division initiated proceedings to collect support payments from Fleming. Fleming intervened in the dissolution proceedings without giving notice to Keaster. The lower court reinstated Keaster's support payments and denied Keaster's motion for a new trial on the basis that it had not been timely made. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's decision and held that by rule, Fleming had to serve all parties to the action in which he was intervening. In re Marriage of Keaster, 259 M 48, 853 P2d 1191, 50 St. Rep. 669 (1993).

Motion for Modification of Child Custody Decree: Wife filed for modification of a child custody order, and the subsequent order issued by the court affected only the terms of the original custody decree that relate to the notice required prior to visitation and to allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that wife's motion for modification should be denied because it was not properly filed under the time limitations established in this rule or Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., the court held that the motion was filed under 40-4-217, which contains no time limitations. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Unless posttrial motions are made by the losing party under Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the losing party is not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal until proper service of notice of entry of judgment is made. This rule applies to orders that may become final as well as to judgments. In this case, notice of entry of judgment was not served and no posttrial motions were made. The time for appeal did not begin to run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict — New Trial Inappropriate: When a jury verdict is appealed, the appellate court's function is to determine whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the verdict. The lower court's discretion to grant a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence is exhausted when it finds substantial evidence to support the verdict. The court may not grant a new trial only on the basis that it chose to believe one line of testimony different from that which the jury believed. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Disqualification of Judge After Entry of Findings and Conclusions — Ruling on Motions Prohibited: Defendants filed affidavits of disqualification of the District Judge in a property dispute case after the entry of the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Defendants contended that this precluded the judge from entering judgment in accordance with his findings and conclusions. The disqualification was attempted under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (since superseded), which was in effect at the time. The findings and conclusions entered by the judge prior to the filing of the affidavit of disqualification expressly directed that a judgment be prepared "in accordance with" the findings and conclusions. Under these circumstances, the judgment was a part of the findings and conclusions. Accordingly, although the disqualification prevented the District Judge from ruling on posttrial motions under Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., and from withdrawing the findings and conclusions previously entered, it was not effective to prevent entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with findings and conclusions entered prior to the filing of the affidavit for disqualification. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

COMMISSION NOTE

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule, except that subdivision (a) has been rewritten to adapt it to state practice.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO DECEMBER 31, 1975, AMENDMENT

Halsey v. Uithof, 166 Mont. 319, 532 P 2d 686, 32 St. Rep. 89 (1975), requires a motion for new trial to set forth the grounds with particularity, and just using the statutory grounds is not sufficient. The Montana Supreme Court relied upon Rule 7(b) as the basis for this requirement. Rule 7(b) requires that all motion shall state with particularity the grounds therefor, but this has not always been followed, particularly with Rule 12 motions. Thus, as a matter of practice, the Rule 7(b) requirement has carried the implication "where necessary".

Rather than broaden the technical operation of Rule 7(b), the Advisory Committee felt that the changes in practice regarding motions for new trials in the district courts, initiated by Halsey, should be incorporated in Rule 59.

The additional amendment requiring that orders granting new trials shall set forth the grounds with sufficient particularity to apprise the parties and the appellate court of the the trial court's rationale is for the express purpose of narrowing the issues on appeal and obviating the need to read the entire record on appeal to find the rationale underlying the trial court's ruling. This does not limit the parties or the appellate court in the scope of appellate argument or review, e.g., a new trial properly granted but based on an erroneous rationale.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The above commission note was written prior to the amendments of 1969 and 1975. The amendment of May 21, 1969, made no change in this rule.

The amendment of December 31, 1975, inserted the present second paragraph.

GENERAL

Stipulation to Not Mention Suspended Driver's License at DUI Trial — Mention of Expired Driver's License Cured by Jury Admonition: Brady was charged with DUI, fourth or subsequent offense, arising from circumstances surrounding a single-vehicle accident in which Brady swerved off the highway, hit a rock wall, and rolled the vehicle. The information also charged Brady with three misdemeanors: driving while his license was suspended or revoked, failure to provide proof of insurance, and failure to give notice of an accident by the quickest means. Shortly before voir dire, Brady stated that he would plead guilty to the misdemeanors and moved that the state's witnesses not mention any of the offenses to which Brady would plead guilty. The state did not object to the motion. The third witness for the state, a deputy who was at the wreck scene, testified that he found a wallet near the vehicle that contained an expired driver's license. Brady moved for mistrial on grounds that the state violated the judge's order not to mention an expired license. The state countered that the stipulation was that the state would not mention that the license was suspended, but that mention of an expired license was not covered. The District Court found that there was a difference between the jury knowing that Brady's license was suspended, which suggested criminal activity, and knowing that the license was expired, which is not in itself criminal. The court then admonished the jury to disregard the testimony regarding the expired license as irrelevant to the case. Brady was convicted of DUI and appealed on grounds that denial of his motion for a mistrial was reversible error because the state's witness deliberately violated an order in limine to which the state previously stipulated. Granting a mistrial is appropriate when a reasonable possibility exists that inadmissible evidence might have contributed to the conviction. The strength of the evidence against the defendant, together with the prejudicial influence of the inadmissible evidence and whether a cautionary jury instruction could cure any prejudice, must be considered in determining whether a prohibited statement contributed to the conviction. A mistrial should be denied for technical errors of defects that do not affect the defendant's substantial rights and when the record is sufficient to establish guilt. The Supreme Court agreed that there is a difference between an expired license and a suspended license with regard to implications of guilt. Here, any potential prejudice that might have resulted from testimony about the expired license was sufficiently cured by the admonition to the jury, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for mistrial. St. v. Brady, 2000 MT 282, 302 M 174, 13 P3d 941, 57 St. Rep. 1178 (2000), distinguishing St. v. Partin, 287 M 12, 951 P2d 1002 (1997).

Mistrial Determinations — Trial Court and Supreme Court Standards: The Supreme Court recently clarified the standard to be applied by a trial court considering the grant of a mistrial by stating that a mistrial should be granted either when there is a demonstration of a manifest necessity or when a party has been denied a fair and impartial trial. The Supreme Court now adopts the rule that the manifest necessity part of the standard should be applied only if the trial court considers the grant of a mistrial when the allegedly injured party does not request or consent to a mistrial and that the denial of a fair and impartial trial part of the standard applies when the allegedly injured party does request or consent to a mistrial. As to the Supreme Court's standard of review of the District Court's ruling, the Supreme Court will no longer apply the standard of clear and convincing evidence that the trial court's ruling is erroneous. The standard to be applied is whether the trial court abused its discretion, clarifying St. v. Ford, 278 M 353, 926 P2d 245, (1996), St. v. Romero, 279 M 58, 926 P2d 717 (1996), and St. v. Walker, 280 M 346, 930 P2d 60 (1996). St. v. Partin, 287 M 12, 951 P2d 1002, 54 St. Rep. 1474 (1997), followed in St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998), St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 1, 972 P2d 827, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999), and St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003). See also St. v. Duffy, 2000 MT 186, 300 M 381, 6 P3d 453, 57 St. Rep. 734 (2000), in which it was held that the District Court did not err when it denied defendant's motion for mistrial based on trial testimony that the court had previously excluded in its order in limine because the objectionable testimony was not prejudicial, and St. v. Long, 2005 MT 130, 327 M 238, 113 P3d 290 (2005).

Evidence of Existence of Pain and Suffering Uncontroverted by Evidence of Causation and Evidence of Extent of Damages: Thompson's automobile was rear-ended by a Bozeman police car, and Thompson filed suit against the city. The city admitted negligence and causation, and the action went to trial on the issues of whether Thompson suffered damages and the amount of those damages. The jury returned a verdict of $2,800 in damages for medical expenses and lost wages but awarded no damages for pain and suffering, loss of ability to pursue an occupation, loss of future wages, loss of ability to pursue an established course of life, and future medical expenses. Thompson moved for a new trial, arguing that there was insufficient evidence for the jury to award no damages, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court noted that it had addressed the issue of zero damage awards in light of uncontroverted evidence in Gehnert v. Cullinan, 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352 (1984), and Brockie v. Omo Constr., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167 (1994). In those cases, the Supreme Court explained that it had held that the jury did not have any choice but to award some damages when the evidence was uncontroverted that the plaintiff had suffered some damages. It is only when the evidence of the existence of damages is controverted, the Supreme Court said, should a court defer to the judgment of the jury in refusing to award any damages at all. The Supreme Court then reviewed the testimony offered by the city and held that the evidence presented addressed the issue of the extent of damages and not whether any damages at all were caused. The Supreme Court analyzed the case of Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726 (1984), relied on by the city, and noted that the case stood for the proposition that when a jury awards at least some damages based upon its assessment of conflicting evidence, a court may not substitute its judgment for the jury's judgment based upon the court's view of what evidence is most believable. In the case before it, the Supreme Court noted that the city did not controvert Thompson's evidence that at least some pain and suffering occurred and it was therefore correct for the District Court to grant a new trial when the jury awarded no damages other than medical expenses and lost wages. Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of New Trial — Jury or Bailiff Misconduct: In the two most recent cases in which jury or bailiff misconduct was the basis for granting or denying a new trial, the Supreme Court stated that the standard is that the decision is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of manifest abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court reaffirmed this standard and overruled those cases with a different standard. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

No Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Grant Mistrial Because of Testimony Concerning Costs and Attorney Fees: In the course of a lawsuit against his insurer for failure to settle a claim resulting from hail damage to his wheat crop, Dees testified that he had incurred substantial expense for costs and attorney fees in bringing the action against the insurer. The insurer moved for a mistrial, which was denied, and the jury subsequently awarded Dees a large punitive damages judgment. The Supreme Court held that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny the motion for a mistrial. The District Court's findings and conclusions attributed the punitive damages award to the insurance company's dogmatic position that the crop was not damaged by hail and to the haughtiness of its witnesses. Because the District Court observed the trial, it is reasonable to infer that the District Court Judge considered the reference to costs to be comparatively insignificant. The District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a mistrial. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Time Allowed for Filing Motion for New Trial: Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., provides that a motion under this rule for a new trial must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. The day of mailing is excluded under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Because notice of entry of judgment was served by mail, 3 days are added under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. The combined total of days allowed under Rules 59(b) and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., is 13 days. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Use of Juror Affidavits in Attempt to Prove Irregularity or Accident Improper: In moving for a new trial, plaintiffs submitted juror affidavits as evidence that the jury was misled in its duties, asserting that constituted an irregularity or accident preventing plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. However, this tactic was an attempt to use juror affidavits to impeach the jury's own verdict. If a motion for a new trial is to be granted, an irregularity or accident in jury proceedings must exist independent of juror affidavits. Use of juror affidavits to prove irregularity or accident is clearly improper. The alleged misunderstanding of the jurors in this case did not fit any of the exceptions enumerated in Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). Motion for a new trial was properly denied. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

Discretion of Court: The granting of a new trial is within the sound discretion of the court and will be reversed only for manifest abuse of discretion. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990); Jankovich v. Neill, 153 M 337, 457 P2d 475 (1969); Kincheloe v. Rygg, 152 M 187, 448 P2d 140 (1968); Benner v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 150 M 97, 430 P2d 648 (1967); In re Maricich, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965); Herren v. Hawks, 139 M 440, 365 P2d 641 (1961).

Instructions Based on Out-of-State Supreme Court Decision Rather Than Appellate Court Decision — No Error: Plaintiff complained that the District Court erred in refusing to give three jury instructions based on a Washington appellate court decision and in giving instead an instruction taken from the Washington Supreme Court appeal of the same case, which modified the appellate court decision. The District Court did not err in refusing to give instructions based on a theory of law rejected by the Washington Supreme Court. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990).

Irregularities in Jury Proceedings — Juror Affidavit — New Trial Denied: To support their motion for a new trial in District Court, plaintiffs submitted an affidavit of one juror, alleging that certain statements made by the bailiff during jury deliberations misled the jury and prevented clarification of the issue of proximate cause. Juror affidavits are admissible to show grounds upon which a new trial may be granted when a juror has personal knowledge of an alleged irregularity in the proceedings and the only other individual who has personal knowledge of the facts surrounding the irregularity is the individual who committed the alleged infraction. Only the facts upon which the alleged irregularities are based are admissible. Any allegations regarding the inner workings of the jury deliberations are inadmissible. The Supreme Court will not overrule the District Court's refusal to grant a new trial unless the evidence is clear and convincing that the trial court erred. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988), overruled as to standard of review in Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995), and distinguished in State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Contract Providing Attorney Fees as Part of Record — Fees Mentioned in Pretrial Order: A motion to amend pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., to include attorney fees was denied on the basis that defendants abandoned their claim for attorney fees by neglecting to state a claim in their pretrial order and because no evidence relative to fees was introduced at trial and therefore could not be added as a posttrial issue. The Supreme Court noted that attorney fees were contractually agreed to by the parties, so the issue of whether fees should be awarded was not one that would have been argued at trial. Further, since the contract was before the court as evidence and since the issue of attorney fees was raised twice in the pretrial order, the issue was not outside the court's record. The case was remanded for determination of reasonable attorney fees. Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788, 44 St. Rep. 1467 (1987).

Grant of New Trial Not a New Action: The grant of a new trial by a District Court or the Supreme Court is not the filing of a new action and is limited to the original pleadings. Town Pump, Inc. v. District Court, 180 M 358, 590 P2d 1126 (1979).

Scope of New Trial: Under certain circumstances a District Court may order a new trial limited to the issue of damages. Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117, 35 St. Rep. 1878 (1978).

Motion Inadequate: Defendants' motion for new trial was inadequate and defective in its essential elements because it merely recited the statutory language of 25-11-102 without stating with particularity the precise facts or circumstances being relied upon in support of their motion. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978).

Distinction — Reopening Case: The time for filing motions under this rule applies when a party desires a new trial, not when a case is reopened to take further testimony which is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. Compton v. Alcorn, 171 M 230, 557 P2d 292 (1976).

Recomputation of Hours Not to Include New Evidence: Hearing on a case remanded for recomputation of hours worked by the plaintiff should not include the reception of new evidence, but merely a recalculation of evidence already in the records. Glick v. Dept. of Institutions, 165 M 307, 528 P2d 686 (1974).

Motions — Directed Verdict — New Trial — Relationship: Motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict raise the same question. They both question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict. Appeal will be accepted based upon insufficiency of the evidence notwithstanding failure to move for a new trial if motion was made for directed verdict. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

New Evidence Insufficient: Ex parte affidavit which alleged newly discovered evidence but was only cumulative in nature was insufficient in light of the record to authorize a new trial. Fisher v. Mitzel, 158 M 265, 491 P2d 186 (1971).

Motion Viewed in Light Most Favorable to Party Directed Against: The court must view motions for directed verdict and for new trials in light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is directed. Dieruf v. Gallaher, 156 M 440, 481 P2d 322 (1971).

Loss of Jurisdiction — Divorce Proceeding: The court exceeded its jurisdiction by determining paternity after entry of the original divorce decree. Relief was not sought under Rule 59 or Rule 60 as it could have been. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Effect of District Court Rules: Notwithstanding the fact that court rule considered failure to file a brief in support of a motion for new trial an admission that the motion was without merit, the court has the discretion to proceed with the motion in accordance with its own opinion. Crissey v. Highway Comm'n, 147 M 374, 413 P2d 308 (1966).

No Retroactive Effect of Rule: Defendant was entitled to appeal in spite of time limitation of section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P.), for filing bill of exceptions where motion for new trial was combined with motion to amend findings and request for review of facts, conclusions of law, and judgment since limitation under section 93-5606 did not apply prior to enactment of new Rules of Civil Procedure. Crissey v. Highway Comm'n, 147 M 374, 413 P2d 308 (1966).

Order Denying New Trial — Misstatement in Order: When motion for new trial would have been correct because it was not served within 10 days, but court's order stated that motion was dismissed because not "filed" within 10 days, order was correct because court understood grounds for dismissal. Clark v. Worrall, 146 M 374, 406 P2d 822 (1965).

Rules 59 and 62 Distinguished: The denial of a motion for new trial is not in effect a denial of a stay of proceedings to enforce a judgment. State ex rel. Dawson v. Butte, 145 M 316, 400 P2d 629 (1965).

Retrial of Summary Judgment: Propriety of motion for a new trial in a summary judgment proceeding was not questioned on appeal. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Disqualification — New Judge to Consider Motion: Where District Court did not grant a new trial on its own initiative but relators filed affidavits of disqualification against District Judge under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Supreme Court Rule No. 34), the District Judge was in error in not calling another judge to consider motions for new trial filed by defendants. State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963).

Erroneous Order — Corrected Nunc Pro Tunc: Court's nunc pro tunc order correcting erroneous contempt judgment was not in violation of Supreme Court's writ because the order was made before the writ was issued. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Time for Disqualification of Judge: Neither Rule 59 nor Rule 50(b) deals with the disqualification of a trial judge. A trial judge may be disqualified after the return of a verdict and before the motion for a new trial has been made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962).

NEW TRIAL GRANTED — PARTICULAR CASES

Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Limiting Damages to Past Medical Expenses but Not Pain and Suffering: Renville was injured as a passenger in an automobile accident in 1995, and liability was not contested. Evidence was uncontroverted that Renville had subsequently experienced pain and suffering as a result of the accident. The jury was instructed to award damages for past and future medical expenses, loss of earnings and earning capacity, pain and suffering, and loss of the ability to pursue an occupation and an established course of life. However, the jury limited its verdict to only past medical expenses, so Renville sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the award and irregularities in the proceedings. On review, the Supreme Court noted that a jury may not disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion evidence. The court applied Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), in holding that if a jury fails to award damages when the only evidence of record supports an award, that verdict is not supported by substantial evidence and may be set aside. Renville was entitled to some award for damages for proved pain and suffering, and the Supreme Court remanded for new trial limited to the issue of damages. Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400, 57 St. Rep. 864 (2000). On remand, the District Court concluded that factual issues still existed as to the amount of Renville's past medical expanses and that the issues must be determined by a jury on retrial. The court found that the effect of the decision in Renville I, id., was to remand the entire issue of damages for a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. The decision in Renville I clearly stated that the award was limited to Renville's past medical expenses, which had been proved and awarded. Therefore, the law of the case precluded the District Court from revisiting the issue of Renville's past medical expenses on remand. It was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny Renville's motion for summary judgment and request for declaratory judgment on the issue of past medical expenses. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003). See also St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001).

Irrelevant and Prejudicial Evidence of Consumption of Alcohol by Plaintiff: Violette pulled out of a store's parking lot in front of Havens, and the two collided. Havens sued the state, claiming negligent failure to place a stoplight at the parking lot entrance. It was not error to deny Havens' motion to exclude evidence of his alcohol consumption before the accident when the state opposed the motion by stating that it would show that the consumption was a cause of the accident. However, this forced Havens to introduce evidence of, and to address, his alcohol consumption. In addition, the state offered no evidence that Havens' alcohol consumption helped cause the accident and the state's medical expert and a law enforcement officer both testified that Havens was not negligent. Evidence of the alcohol consumption prejudiced the whole trial. It was reversible error to deny a motion for a new trial. Havens v. St., 285 M 195, 945 P2d 941, 54 St. Rep. 1108 (1997), followed in St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998).

Jury's Use of Dictionary Definitions Conflicting With Instructions: The jury used an ordinary dictionary and a legal dictionary, improperly given to the jury by the bailiff at the jury's request, to look up the terms "proximate cause" and "prudent". The definitions relating to causation did not contain the foreseeability element that was contained in an instruction given to the jury. The jury's conduct constituted improper independent research on extraneous material that redefined the critical element of causation by effectively eliminating from the instruction any reference to foreseeability. This was sufficient to demonstrate probable prejudice and potential injury to defendant, against whom the jury returned a verdict in this action. At the very least, there was a reasonable probability that the jury's misconduct influenced its decision, and as a consequence, defendant's substantial rights were compromised, along with his right to a fair trial. The trial judge's denial of a new trial was reversed, and the case was remanded. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Motion for New Trial Not Denied When Opposing Party's Argument Based on Semantics: Riverview Lounge argued that Peck's motion for a new trial should have been denied because Peck's attorney listed the alleged particular grounds for a new trial under a section of his motion designated "Brief" rather than under the section designated "Motion". The Supreme Court held that such a technical flaw was not fatal to Peck's motion and that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion. Peck v. Riverview Lounge, Inc., 272 M 152, 900 P2d 270, 52 St. Rep. 678 (1995).

Newly Disclosed Evidence Wrongfully Withheld by Employer and Showing Wrongful Discharge: The trial court, in which a wrongful discharge plaintiff was granted a $70,000 jury verdict for damages, properly granted a new trial on the issue of damages on the basis that documents in the employer's files, requested by the plaintiff and not produced by the employer, but anonymously mailed to the plaintiff after the trial, showing that the employer had planned for some time to terminate the plaintiff, would have affected the damages award had they been available for the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Agreement by Lower Court That Its Instructions Constituted Error: In a personal injury suit, the lower court granted the plaintiffs' motion to exclude all references to the findings of the OSHA administrative law judge so long as the plaintiffs did not question their experts on possible OSHA violations by the defendant. The judge allowed the defendant to cross-examine the plaintiffs' experts about possible conformance with OSHA standards by the defendant, and the judge submitted instructions to the jury presented by the defendant pertaining to those standards. After a verdict in favor of the defendant, the lower court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the basis that the instructions on OSHA standards were in error. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in granting a new trial. Griffith v. Mont. Power Co., 243 M 246, 794 P2d 692, 47 St. Rep. 1213 (1990). See also Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004), in which the District Court erred by not granting plaintiffs a new trial when defendant took unfair advantage of a motion in limine to preclude plaintiffs' line of questioning after defendant opened the door to the issue addressed in the motion. Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004).

Inconsistent Jury Findings — New Trial Granted: The District Court did not err in granting a new trial after finding that the jury was confused, that jury findings were inconsistent or in disregard of the court's instructions, and that it was too difficult to speculate as to how the jury arrived at its conclusions. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Motion for New Trial Erroneously Granted: A statement by defense counsel to jury in closing argument suggesting that "a fair verdict would be $30,000" was not a statement against interest setting lower limits of a verdict at $30,000. The District Court erred in granting a new trial on grounds that the $25,000 jury award to the plaintiff constituted inadequate damages when there was substantial credible evidence to support the verdict of the jury. Brown v. Markve, 216 M 145, 700 P2d 602, 42 St. Rep. 708 (1985). See also White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Jury Verdict Internally Inconsistent: The Supreme Court will not disturb a trial court's ruling regarding a motion for a new trial in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. In a nuisance action filed by home owners residing near a city dump, it was proper to order a new trial; the jury found that the city dump was the proximate cause of the nuisance but then found the home owners 90% comparatively negligent. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 211 M 430, 685 P2d 350, 41 St. Rep. 1471 (1984). A later appeal of a District Court ruling that the City of Great Falls was not negligent was affirmed in Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987).

Accident or Surprise — Change of Key Witness' Testimony: The ultimate issue in motor vehicle accident case was what caused tractor-trailer combination to overturn and slide into the other lane. Plaintiff introduced an accident scene diagram drawn by a state engineer from figures obtained by the investigating highway patrolmen. It placed the tractor-trailer's skid marks in the early part of the curve in which the overturn occurred, where the curve's radius was less than it was later in the curve, thus buttressing plaintiff's theory of the case. At trial, defendants recalled a highway patrolman, who testified that the patrolmen had incorrectly placed the skid marks on the diagram and that they should be placed farther into the curve, where the radius of the curve was sharper. The placement of the skid marks and the sharpness of the curve at the point of the skid were essential to resolution of the ultimate issue. Plaintiff was properly granted a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against because: (1) it was clearly shown that he was actually surprised; (2) the facts causing the surprise had a material bearing on the case; (3) the verdict or decision resulted mainly from those facts; (4) the surprise did not result from plaintiff's inattention or negligence; (5) plaintiff acted promptly and claimed relief at the earliest opportunity; (6) plaintiff used every means reasonably available at the time of the surprise to remedy it; and (7) the result of a new trial without the surprise would probably be different. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984), followed in In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988).

References to Matters Not Within Record Included in Closing Argument — New Trial Ordered: The Supreme Court ordered a new trial in a wrongful death action on the grounds that the final argument of a defense counsel to the jury was improper because reference was made to: (1) matters withdrawn from the record by instruction to the jury; (2) matters withdrawn from the record by order in limine; (3) facts never entered into the record; and (4) facts irrelevant to the legal issues involved in the case. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984). Despite repeated attorney misconduct warranting sanction on retrial, the District Court ruled that the misconduct was not of the magnitude of that found in Kuhnke I, supra, and that viewed in the context of the entire trial, the improper conduct did not impact the jury to such an extent as to require a new trial. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the verdict reached by two juries on two separate occasions hearing the same facts and noted that it was unlikely a third trial before a third jury would produce a different result. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 227 M 62, 740 P2d 625, 44 St. Rep. 895 (1987).

Trailer Swinging Into Wrong Lane When Driver Swerves to Avoid Collision — No Negligence — No New Trial: Undisputed evidence showed plaintiff was partly in defendant's lane on two-lane road while driving through a curve and that the approaching defendant responded by swerving to the right to avoid a head-on collision. The swerve caused a trailer that defendant was hauling behind his tractor-trailer truck to swing into plaintiff's lane and collide with plaintiff. There was no evidence that defendant was driving unsafely prior to that or that he was in any way negligent. Defendant acted reasonably and prudently, and plaintiff's actions supported a finding that he was the proximate cause of his injuries. The jury verdict found defendant was not negligent. It was an abuse of discretion and reversible error for the court to grant plaintiff a new trial, for there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 668 P2d 228, 40 St. Rep. 1349 (1983).

Motion for New Trial Erroneously Granted: Although the testimony of witnesses conflicted, substantial credible testimony elicited from on-the-scene witnesses corroborated defendant's version of a collision with the deceased pedestrian. The lower court erred when it granted plaintiffs' motion for new trial and to set aside the verdict of the jury because the judge relied on a line of conflicting testimony different than the testimony relied on by the jury. Yerkich v. Opsta, 176 M 272, 577 P2d 857 (1978).

Mistake or Inadvertence: Grant of new trial to permit plaintiff to give additional testimony on issue of damages only was not improper, notwithstanding that ground for relief was mistake or inadvertence and should have been given pursuant to Rule 60(b), where no intervening rights had attached in reliance upon judgment and no actual injustice would ensue. John J. Ming, Inc. v. District Court, 155 M 84, 466 P2d 907 (1970).

Erroneous Instructions — New Trial Based Upon: Court was correct in granting new trial because instructions on assumption of risk had been erroneously given. Jankovich v. Neill, 153 M 337, 457 P2d 475 (1969).

Inadequacy of Award — Abuse of Discretion: Court abused discretion in granting new trial "upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict in that the verdict awarded by the jury to the plaintiff is wholly inadequate" where there was conflict in evidence and where it was question for jury whether injuries suffered by passenger were caused by grossly negligent operation of car or whether passenger assumed risk of going into car driven by man who had several drinks. Heen v. Tiddy, 151 M 265, 442 P2d 434 (1968).

Jury Misconduct: New trial was properly granted when foreman of jury made independent investigation of accident scene after hearing testimony and informed other jury members of the results. Goff v. Kinzle, 148 M 61, 417 P2d 105 (1966), distinguished in Highway Comm'n v. Roth, 159 M 268, 496 P2d 1136 (1972).

Condemnation Proceeding: In condemnation proceeding where State appraised land at $18,000, condemnee appraised it at $95,000 and jury awarded condemnee $21,000, granting of new trial because award was inadequate was not such an abuse of trial judge's discretion as to warrant reversal in spite of the fact there was no rebuttal of State's only expert witness. Highway Comm'n v. Greenfield, 145 M 164, 399 P2d 989 (1965).

NEW TRIAL DENIED — PARTICULAR CASES

Jury Award Based on Contested Expenses — Sufficient Evidence to Support Verdict: Plaintiffs asserted that a new trial was warranted because the jury in a personal injury case returned a verdict of $9,873, which amounted to significantly less than plaintiffs' evidence of past and future medical expenses, loss of past and future wages, and pain and suffering. However, the District Court denied a new trial, and the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that if a jury award is insufficient to cover uncontested expenses, then it is not supported by substantial evidence, but that was not the case here. Evidence presented by both parties revealed a significant dispute in the nature, cause, and severity of the injury, the need for future treatment, the existence and amount of past and future wage loss, and pain and suffering. Based on the record of disputed expenses, there was substantial evidence to support the jury award, and the Supreme Court declined to retry the case or disturb the judgment, especially when the District Court had already upheld the sufficiency of the evidence on motion for a new trial. Jenks v. Bertelsen, 2004 MT 50, 320 M 139, 86 P3d 24 (2004).

Strongly Conflicting Evidence — Within Jury's Province to Determine Credibility: The Satterfields argued that there was not sufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict in a contract dispute over the construction of a house. The Supreme Court held that there was strongly contradictory evidence given by the two sides in the case, that apparently the jury had believed the Satterfields' opponent, and that there was substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict. Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff was injured when a donkey savagely bit her arm. Defendant treated her at the local hospital. Plaintiff endured several surgeries and eventually lost her arm below the elbow. She sued defendant, claiming that defendant's negligence subjected her to an increased risk of harm and lessened her chances for a better result. The jury found that defendant was negligent but that the negligence did not cause injury to plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence in the record to support the jury's verdict. Much of the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness was contradicted by defendant's expert witnesses. An attack upon a jury verdict alleging that it is not supported by the evidence is proper only when there is a complete absence of any credible evidence in support of the verdict. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to alter or amend the judgment or for a new trial. Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 1137 (1998).

New Evidence of One Witness's Schizophrenia and Another's Night Blindness: New evidence of one witness's schizophrenia and of another's night blindness served only to impeach their credibility. Neither piece of evidence, a 1969 letter mentioning schizophrenia and undocumented and unsupported information as to night blindness, was so probative as to make a material difference in a jury's assessment of the credibility of the witnesses. Thus, the evidence was not so material that it would probably produce a different result upon a new trial. In addition, the night blindness evidence could have been discovered before trial. Therefore, it was not error to refuse a new trial because of the evidence. St. v. Lawrence, 284 M 140, 948 P2d 186, 54 St. Rep. 1082 (1997). See also companion case, St. v. Jenkins, 285 M 131, 948 P2d 204, 54 St. Rep. 1078 (1997).

Statements Regarding Value of Partnership Assets No Barrier to Presentation of Evidence — New Trial Denied: Wife argued for a new trial based on conflicting information compiled after trial regarding the value of the marital estate. With the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence could have been discovered prior to trial. Husband's trial statements concerning partnership assets did not materially thwart wife's ability to present her case, indicating lack of fraud, so a new trial was unwarranted. In re Marriage of Barnes, 251 M 334, 825 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 67 (1992).

Finding of Negligence Not Necessary in Every Accident: Plaintiff was a passenger in a truck involved in a collision in which each driver claimed the other was negligent, but the jury attributed negligence to neither. Plaintiff cited Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925 (1985), in claiming he was entitled to a new trial because that kind of accident cannot happen absent negligence and because a violation of basic traffic rules constitutes negligence per se. The Supreme Court distinguished Aemisegger because in that case, there was clear evidence of fault. The Supreme Court noted that simply because there is an accident does not mean someone must be negligent. The trial court did not err in refusing plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis that defendants were negligent as a matter of law. Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64, 48 St. Rep. 418 (1991).

Jury Instructions Not Founded in Evidence or Misstatement of Law — New Trial Denied: Plaintiffs sought a new trial on grounds that the trial court improperly refused to give plaintiffs' proffered instructions on termination of power of attorney, warranty, and fraudulent conveyance. However, the instructions were correctly refused because: (1) there were undefined legal terms in the instructions on termination of power of attorney that rendered the instructions ambiguous or unintelligible; (2) the giving of non-Uniform Commercial Code warranty instructions in a Uniform Commercial Code case was a technical defect and did not constitute a misstatement of law affecting the plaintiffs' rights; and (3) there was no evidence of fraudulent conveyance, rendering that instruction improper. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Personal Injury Award: Plaintiff, who turned down a $20,000 settlement offer and recovered only $7,800 from the jury, moved for a new trial on the basis that the verdict was contrary to the evidence presented at trial. The lower court's finding that substantial evidence existed to support the award (thereby exhausting its discretion to grant a new trial) was affirmed on appeal. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

No Objection to Jury View — New Trial Not Granted: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not granting a new trial when the jury was allowed to view the property prior to the time the plaintiff rested her case and in not giving a cautionary instruction. However, the record showed that plaintiff's counsel made no objection to the jury view and did not request a cautionary instruction. The Supreme Court found no District Court error for a procedure to which plaintiff did not object. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Right to Jury Trial — Equity Claim and Claim for Damages Tried in Single Proceeding: The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new nonjury trial, ruling that an action under Title 49, ch. 2, is equitable in nature and implies no right to a trial by jury in a federal suit under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Act). Plaintiffs contended that the only damages sought were backpay and reinstatement. The Supreme Court found that the record disclosed that plaintiffs submitted evidence of damages other than backpay and reinstatement and concluded that a claim for relief under the Act and a legal claim for damages as a result of unlawful discharge were tried in a single proceeding, each claim arising out of common fact issues. The court held that the right to a jury trial encompassed both the claims under the Act and the legal claims for damages, and that the trial judge was bound by the jury's determination of facts on all issues. The Supreme Court further held that the District Court erred in granting a new nonjury trial, and the case was remanded with instructions to reinstate the jury verdict and enter judgment accordingly. Breese v. Steele Mtn. Enterprises, Inc., 220 M 454, 716 P2d 214, 43 St. Rep. 522 (1986).

Failure to Produce Evidence of Poor Health — Specious Allegation on Appeal: Husband's contention that the award of maintenance to his wife places a financial burden on him that he is unable to comply with is without merit. The sole basis of his motion for a new trial was his contention that he was not in good health. None of the statutory requirements for a new trial were presented, nor did the husband produce any evidence at trial that would establish his poor health. In re Marriage of Yadon, 216 M 59, 699 P2d 75, 42 St. Rep. 638 (1985).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Award — Error to Grant New Trial: District Court committed error when it granted a new trial based on inadequacy of damages when jury awarded plaintiff $2,000 of which no more than $700 was for pain and suffering caused by injuries received in automobile accident. In reversing the grant of new trial and ordering entry of judgment on the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court stated that the jury is not compelled to believe plaintiff's testimony and that to allow the District Court to simply substitute its judgment for that of the jury when there is substantial evidence to support the jury award would "create a bench supremacy and sap the vitality of jury verdicts". Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726, 41 St. Rep. 1800 (1984), distinguished in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Juror Affidavit Alleging Compulsion, Belief in Innocence, and Improper Belief in Effect of Hung Jury: A new trial was not required when defendant offered an affidavit in which a juror stated: (1) her belief that defendant was innocent; (2) that the verdicts were the result of pressure against her and other jurors to end deliberation; and (3) her belief that if a new trial was ordered defendant would be convicted anyway. St. v. Anderson, 211 M 272, 686 P2d 193, 41 St. Rep. 1357 (1984).

Child Custody Dispute — Allegedly Unsafe Condition of Custodian's Yard Knowable Before Trial: There was no merit to husband's claim that new evidence warranted a new trial of divorce proceeding. Wife was granted custody of the child of the marriage, and the asserted new evidence, that part of the backyard where wife lived was bounded by a ditch, was available at the time of the trial and could have been ascertained by husband. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Divorce Proceeding — Counselor Testimony Available at Trial: Husband argued that a new divorce trial was justified by the fact that a psychiatrist who had counseled both parties prior to the dissolution of their marriage decided to testify. He refused to testify at the original hearing because the parties agreed that the information obtained by him in counseling would not be used in court. However, he was later willing to testify. He was available at the time of trial and could have been subpoenaed. The evidence did not come to the knowledge of husband after the trial, and husband lacked diligence as to the testimony. The materiality of the evidence was not so great as to produce a different result by the District Court. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying a new trial. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Lack of Diligence: Plaintiff who knew witness was crucial and could have learned the location of the witness by questioning his other witnesses was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of the fact that plaintiff located the witness after the trial. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

"Newly Discovered Evidence" — Prior Knowledge: Buyer looked at horse for sale, suggested it had a navicular disease, called seller later in the day to say he would take the horse, and the sale was concluded 2 days later. Upon discovering that the horse would not perform as advertised by seller, buyer returned the horse and sued for the purchase price. Defendant received a jury verdict, and buyer moved for a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of a veterinarian's finding, after buyer retrieved the horse after the trial, that the horse had a navicular disease and should not be ridden. Denial of a new trial was proper. Buyer initially suspected the disease existed, yet did not have the horse inspected. Fordyce v. Hansen, 198 M 344, 646 P2d 519, 39 St. Rep. 1043 (1982), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993).

Conflicting Though Substantial Evidence of Reason for Collision — New Trial Denied: The plaintiff and the defendant collided on the highway. At trial, the defendant successfully counterclaimed and the plaintiff appealed, claiming that there was insufficient evidence to support the jury verdict. An order denying a new trial will not be reversed when the evidence is conflicting if there is substantial evidence to support the verdict. When the surrounding circumstances make the testimony of a witness highly improbable or incredible, that testimony is not "substantial evidence". Here, the appellant argued that the physical evidence showed the respondent must have seen his turn signal and thus was at fault in running into the appellant's vehicle. The Supreme Court disagreed. It discussed several reasons why the inconsistencies between the testimony and the physical evidence might have occurred. The Supreme Court concluded that there was substantial evidence to support the jury verdict. Burns v. U & R Express, 191 M 343, 624 P2d 487, 38 St. Rep. 302 (1981), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992).

Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence — No New Trial: A new trial may not be granted by the trial court when it finds substantial evidence in the record to support the verdict. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980). See also Pfau v. Richland County, 227 M 362, 739 P2d 950, 44 St. Rep. 1150 (1987).

"Newly Discovered Evidence" — Motion Properly Denied: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law, and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which at best was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977), followed in In re Marriage of Burner, 246 M 394, 803 P2d 1099, 48 St. Rep. 7 (1991).

Action on Contract to Enforce Payment — Denial of Motion: Substantial evidence to support the jury verdict and no abuse of discretion in denial were found in denying motion for new trial. Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), followed in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

False Testimony: When verdict was based upon false testimony, it was error to deny motion for new trial. Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., Inc., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

New Trial — Properly Denied — Negligence: Court interpreted law correctly and properly denied motion for a new trial. Gunderson v. Brewster, 154 M 405, 466 P2d 589 (1970); Knowlton v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968).

GENERAL

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect on Motion for New Trial: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made; thus the court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Motions — Directed Verdict — New Trial — Relationship: Motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict raise the same question. They both question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict. Appeal will be accepted based upon insufficiency of the evidence notwithstanding failure to move for a new trial if motion was made for directed verdict. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. And, see State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial. Disqualification, preventing a ruling on posttrial motions, after entry of findings and conclusions, was most recently allowed in Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Motion Ineffective as to Jurisdiction: If notice of intention to move for a new trial is given either after the time has expired or before the time has commenced to run, it is ineffective for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction. Calvert v. Anderson, 78 M 334, 254 P 184 (1927).

Purpose of Notice — Statutory Procedure Exclusive: The procedure to be followed in connection with a motion for new trial prescribed is exclusive, the notice of intention being the step initiating the proceeding, the chief function of which is to bring within the jurisdiction of the court those parties to the original action whose interests would be adversely affected by the granting of the motion. Calvert v. Anderson, 78 M 334, 254 P 184 (1927).

Jurisdiction Lost by Improper Timing — Orders Void: Where notice of intention to move for a new trial was not filed until 11 days after return of the verdict, the court was without jurisdiction to entertain it, and any orders made by it thereafter upon the assumption that the motion for new trial was still pending were void. Hence, an order made thereafter granting movant an extension of time within which to file his bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) was null, rendering the bill subject to a motion to strike from the record. Stabler v. Adamson, 73 M 490, 237 P 483 (1925).

Presumption of Regular Service: The presumption is that the notice of intention to move for new trial was served and filed in time unless the contrary affirmatively appears from the record. Best Mfg. Co. v. Hutton, 49 M 78, 141 P 653 (1914); State ex rel. Cohn v. District Court, 38 M 119, 99 P 139 (1909).

Withdrawal of Motion or Notice: Where a written motion for a new trial has been made, its withdrawal and the substitution of another after the time for filing a notice had expired does not constitute, in effect, a withdrawal of the notice of intention to move so as to operate as an abandonment of the proceeding. Wastl v. Mont. Union Ry., 13 M 500, 34 P 844 (1893).

TIME OF MOTION OR NOTICE

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

Calculating Time for Service of Motion — Days Before Saturday Christmas and New Year's Day Not Holidays: Burlington Northern alleged that it had timely served its motion for a new trial, thereby tolling the 30-day period for appealing the jury verdict in favor of Dunkelberger. The railroad argued that Christmas and New Year's Day had fallen on Saturday and, since the courts were closed on the preceding Fridays, those Fridays were holidays and were not to be counted in determining whether the motion for new trial had been served within the required 10 days. The Supreme Court held that the fact that those Fridays were holidays for state workers did not make them statutory holidays and that those Fridays counted as part of the 10-day period. Dunkelberger v. Burlington N. RR Co., 265 M 243, 876 P2d 218, 51 St. Rep. 499 (1994).

Time Allowed for Filing Motion for New Trial: This rule provides that a Rule 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., motion for a new trial must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. The day of mailing is excluded under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Because notice of entry of judgment was served by mail, 3 days are added under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. The combined total of days allowed under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule is 13 days. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Belated Expert Opinion Constituting Newly Discovered Evidence: When presented with the question of whether an opinion of a trial expert, offered for the first time after final judgment and based on a fact asserted by the plaintiff and within her knowledge prior to judgment, constituted newly discovered evidence, the court declined to distinguish between opinion evidence and other kinds of evidence because the opinion evidence met the tests ordinarily required of newly discovered evidence. The failure to produce the evidence at trial must not have been caused by the moving party's lack of due diligence. The evidence must be admissible, credible, and of such a material and controlling nature as will probably change the outcome. Halse v. Murphy, 237 M 509, 774 P2d 418, 46 St. Rep. 1009 (1989), distinguished, on grounds of failure to exercise due diligence in producing required expert testimony, in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994).

Time for Motion to Amend Motion: Neither a motion to amend findings nor a motion for a new trial may be amended after the time allowed for filing the original motion has passed. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Time for Making — Failure to Serve as Effecting Denial: A motion for new trial may be made before or after entry of judgment subject to the limitation of 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. If not served within the 10-day period, the motion is considered denied under the provisions of the last paragraph of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Untimely Motion Equivalent to Motion for Relief From Judgment: A motion for new trial that is not timely may be considered as a motion under Rule 60 when it states grounds for relief under that rule. Nomenclature is unimportant. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

New Trial Motion Untimely: The District Court erred in granting a motion for new trial because the requirements of Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., were not complied with. The notice of entry of judgment, although prepared and signed by Gilbert, was served on the Gordons by the Clerk of the Court on July 25, 1979. The motion for a new trial, however, was not filed or served on opposing counsel until January 1980, some 6 months later. This court will not disregard the 10-day time limitation. Additionally, there is no requirement that the notice of entry of judgment be signed by the Clerk or be prepared and given to the Clerk by the "prevailing party". In re Gordon, 192 M 499, 628 P2d 1117, 38 St. Rep. 887 (1981).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Suspended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Service After Findings and Before Judgment: Where movant filed a notice of motion to move for new trial 5 days after service of notice of the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law upon him, the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law, though not constituting a judgment, were equivalent to a decision and therefore, the notice of motion was timely. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939).

Intent of Rule: The clear intendment of section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P.), providing that notice of motion of a new trial must be served and filed within 10 days after return of the verdict (referring to a jury trial), or within 10 days after receiving notice of the decision of the court (referring to a trial without a jury), was that the notice be given only after all the issues of fact necessary to a determination of the whole case upon the pleadings have been determined. Calvert v. Anderson, 78 M 334, 254 P 184 (1927).

Notice of Motion May Be Stricken: A party desiring to move for a new trial must, under section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P.), serve his notice of motion upon the adverse party within 10 days after verdict. If not served within that time it may be stricken from the files. La Bonte v. Mut. Fire & Lightning Ins. Co., 75 M 1, 241 P 631 (1925).

Notice on Same Day as Judgment: Though the notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on the same day that judgment was entered, with a fraction of a day intervening, such notice is not abortive because it was served and filed before the judgment was actually spread upon the judgment book. Where no question of priority arises it will be presumed that the clerk did his duty. State ex rel. Brown v. District Court, 55 M 158, 174 P 601 (1918).

Time for Service of Notice: A party intending to move for a new trial may do so by serving his notice within 10 days after notice of the entry of judgment, but not before. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

PARTIES SERVED

Definition of Adverse Parties: With respect to the definition of adverse parties upon whom notice must be served, section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P.), relating to motions for new trial, and section 93-8005, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4, M.R.App.P.), relating to appeals, were on the same footing. In re Hardy's Estate, 133 M 536, 326 P2d 692 (1958).

Will Contest — Notice Not Required: Resident heirs summoned in a will contest but who did not appear are not adverse parties upon whom notice of motion for new trial must be served, even though no default was entered against them. In re Hardy's Estate, 133 M 536, 326 P2d 692 (1958).

Service of Defendants by Codefendant: Where one of several defendants served his notice of intention to move for a new trial and his notice of appeal upon the only one of his codefendants who had any interest in opposing the relief sought by the motion and appeal, the service was sufficient as against the objection that not all the adverse parties had been served. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

WAIVER OF SERVICE

Ability to Waive: Service of notice of intention to move for a new trial may be waived. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939); Curn v. Perkins, 40 M 588, 107 P 901 (1910); McAllister v. McDonald, 40 M 575, 106 P 882 (1910); Kenyon-Noble Lumber Co. v. School District, 40 M 123, 105 P 551 (1909); Harrigan v. Lynch, 21 M 36, 52 P 642 (1898); Territory v. Rehberg, 6 M 467, 13 P 132 (1887).

Extension of Time Not Allowed: The time for filing of notice of motion for a new trial cannot be extended either by order or stipulation, and therefore where such a notice was not filed until after the expiration of 10 days it was too late and was properly stricken from the records, the contention that the defect was waived by the actions of opposing counsel being of no avail. Dilts v. Brooks, 66 M 346, 213 P 600 (1923).

Facts Constituting Waiver: Where a notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed before entry of judgment, the opposing party waived the point that the notice was premature, by stipulating with movant that the latter might have additional time in which to file his bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) in support of his motion, by thereafter accepting service thereof without objection, and by raising no objection at the argument, other than that there had been delay in calling it up. Kenyon-Noble Lumber Co. v. School District, 40 M 123, 105 P 551 (1909).

NOTICE OF JUDGMENT

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Suspended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Attempts to Give Notice Insufficient: Where the record on appeal did not affirmatively show that counsel for appellant was present when judgment was entered, or that it was entered before an extension of time in which to file his bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on motion for new trial and stay of execution were asked for and granted on May 2, and the Clerk of the District Court on May 6 attempted to advise him that the entry had been made 2 days before, and on May 15 counsel for respondent served formal notice upon him to that effect, appellant's notice of intention to move for new trial, served on May 21, was in time. Best Mfg. Co. v. Hutton, 49 M 78, 141 P 653 (1914).

Letter as Insufficient Notice: A letter to the plaintiff's counsel, written by the clerk of the court, informing him that a judgment for the defendant has been signed, is not a sufficient notice of the entry of judgment. Best Mfg. Co. v. Hutton, 49 M 78, 141 P 653 (1914).

Waiver of Notice: Though a party intending to move for a new trial may waive formal notice of the entry of judgment by instituting proceedings in support of his motion without it, such waiver may not be imputed to him where he inadvertently proceeds before he may properly do so. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

Type of Notice Contemplated by Rule: The notice of the entry of judgment contemplated by section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P.), was a legal notice, that is, such as was described in section 93-8501, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 5 and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P.), and served in the manner described in section 93-8502, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 5 and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P.). State ex rel. Cohn v. District Court, 38 M 119, 99 P 139 (1909).

Case Notes

Discretion of District Court to Grant or Deny Unanswered Motions: Following the District Court's entry of judgment, plaintiffs filed and served motions to amend the findings, for a new trial, and to alter the judgment. Defendants did not file a response to the motions within the 10 days allowed under this rule. Plaintiffs then moved that the motions be deemed admitted and well-taken as allowed under Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19). The court denied the motions, and plaintiffs argued that defendants' failure to file a response in the time allowed requires the court to grant the unanswered motions. However, Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R., does not remove the discretion of the District Court to grant or deny unanswered motions as it sees fit. Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285, 46 St. Rep. 1287 (1989).

Time of Hearing on Motion: Where notice of intention to move for a new trial was to be based on the minutes of court and affidavits but no affidavits were filed and no additional time for filing was obtained from the court, the moving parties had only 10 additional days after the 10-day period for filing affidavits in which to have the motion heard. State ex rel. Lake v. District Court, 131 M 404, 310 P2d 1055 (1957).

Extension of Time by Stipulation — Cumulative Effect: Where a finding and decision was filed on August 30 and on September 6 the parties stipulated that any party might have 30 days "additional" time in which to give notice of intention to move for a new trial, and also 90 days "additional" time to file affidavits, and appellant gave notice for a new trial on October 7 and filed affidavits on January 3, the affidavits were filed on time since the effect of the stipulation was to give appellant 30 days in addition to the 4 days of the 10-day period not yet expired when the stipulation was made in which to serve notice and 90 days for filing affidavits, in addition to the 10-day period allowed after the service of notice. Hill v. McKay, 36 M 440, 93 P 345 (1908).

Advisory Committee Notes

Advisory Committee's Note to May 21, 1969, Amendment

Explanation of change: Section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947, is hereby superseded. There has been some confusion by reason of ambiguous language in section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947, a hold-over statute from the practice which existed before the rules were adopted, and because of the necessity of researching for, and referring to, the case decisions under the statute spelling out the jurisdictional time limits and the effect thereof. It is felt that by incorporating our practice into this one rule, and eliminating the necessity of referring to statutes and case decisions, that it will be easier for the practitioner to comply.

Advisory Committee's Note to October 9, 1984, Amendment

Subdivision 59(d). The amendment is being adopted in order to obviate the problems discussed in Supreme Court decisions which have held that notices of appeal were filed too late under the language of the previous rule. See Marvel Brute Steel Bldg. v. Bass, (1980) 189 Mont. 480, 616 P.2d 380. The self-executing language of the previous rule often led to extremely harsh results to an inadvertent party. No attempt is being made in the amendment to control the time for hearing on the motion, a feature of the previous rule, but rather this is being left to the attorneys and court with the proviso that in any event if the court shall fail to rule upon the motion within 45 days from its filing date, the motion shall at the expiration of the period be automatically deemed denied. It is hoped that the simplicity and clear language of the amendment will prevent attorneys from being "trapped" as has been the case too often in the past.

1995 Amendment: Extended time for appeal from 45 days to 60 days. Amendment effective October 1, 1995.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of Rule 59 by Supreme Court Order No. 10750-9 enacted this subparagraph as Rule 59(d) and designated former Rules 59(d) and 59(e) as 59(e) and 59(f), respectively. This rule has no counterpart in the Federal Rules.

The amendment of October 9, 1984, in first paragraph substituted present language for "Hearing on the motion shall be had within 10 days after it has been served, or within 10 days after the party opposing the motion for new trial has served his affidavits as set forth in subparagraph (c) hereinabove except that at any time after the notice of hearing on the motion has been served the court may issue an order continuing the hearing for not to exceed 30 days. In case the hearing is continued by the court, it shall be the duty of the court to hear the same at the earliest practicable date thereafter, and the court shall rule upon and decide the motion within 15 days after the same is submitted. If the court shall fail to rule upon the motion within said time, the motion shall, at the expiration of said period, be deemed denied"; and deleted third paragraph, which read: "If the motion is not noticed up for hearing and no hearing is held thereon, it shall be deemed denied as of the expiration of the period of time within which hearing is required to be held under this Rule 59."

Case Notes

Time Limit for Filing for New Trial Constitutional — No Jurisdiction to Grant New Trial After Time Limit Runs: After the 60-day deadline for granting a new trial in this rule, the District Court granted plaintiff a new trial. Defendant appealed, saying that the District Court was without jurisdiction. On appeal, plaintiff argued that the time limit was unconstitutional and arbitrary and deprived plaintiff of procedural due process. Citing In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), the Supreme Court noted that just because a rule is arbitrary does not mean that it should not be favored and that insisting on a firm time limit advances the cause of justice by bringing predictability to the legal process. The court concluded that the time limit is constitutional and that the District Court did not have jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a new trial after the time limit had run. Forsythe v. Leydon, 2004 MT 327, 324 M 121, 102 P3d 25 (2004). See also Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978).

Improper Grant of New Trial After Time to Move for New Trial Expired: A substitute District Court Judge assumed jurisdiction of a marriage dissolution case 1 day after the husband moved for reconsideration or a new trial. The motion for a new trial was granted 76 days later. The wife contended that the court exceeded its jurisdiction because the motion was granted more that 60 days after being filed, in violation of Rule 52(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The husband argued that an equitable exception to the rules should be granted because the presiding judge was substituted between the time when the motion was filed and when it was ruled upon. The Supreme Court declined to make an exception, reiterating that the time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment are mandatory and strictly enforced. The District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering a new trial after the time to rule on the motion had expired, so the order was reversed. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001).

Motion to Disqualify Other Party's Attorney Does Not Stay Sixty-Day Requirement for Judge to Rule on Motion to Vacate Default Judgment: Johnson's attorney obtained a default judgment on behalf of his client, and when an attorney appeared for the defendant and moved to have the default judgment set aside, Johnson's attorney moved to have the attorney disqualified because the trial court judge was related to a member of the defense attorney's law firm. The judge recused himself, and the new judge entered an order setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court held that the 60-day period for the lower court to rule on the motion to vacate ran from the time that the motion was filed, not from the time that the second judge assumed jurisdiction, and because the time had expired, the motion to vacate was considered denied. The lower court did not have jurisdiction over the issue and could not thereafter set aside the default judgment. Johnson v. Eagles Lodge Aerie 3913, 284 M 474, 945 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 984 (1997).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., for additional briefing time and must rule on a Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Failure to Follow Uniform Building Code as Negligence Per Se — Denial of Judgment N.O.V. Reversed: Rosauers Supermarket undertook remodeling for which ALSC was the architect. As a change order to the remodeling, Rosauers asked that a walk-in freezer be removed and that the access door to a walkway over the freezer be closed off. Unknown to Rosauers and its employee, Pierce, the door was never closed off even though the freezer was removed. Pierce was injured when he fell through a false ceiling after stepping off the walkway, assuming that the freezer was still in place and that it would support him. After a jury verdict finding no negligence on the part of ALSC, Pierce moved for judgment N.O.V., which was denied by virtue of the fact that the District Court failed to grant the motion within 45 days. The Supreme Court found that ALSC had knowledge of the change order and knew that without the access door being blocked, the door and walkway would leave an unsafe condition after the freezer was removed. Citing Herbst v. Miller, 252 M 503, 830 P2d 1268 (1992), the Supreme Court also found that failure to place a guardrail around the walkway in accordance with the Uniform Building Code caused an unsafe condition in violation of the code, which constituted negligence per se on the part of ALSC. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it denied Pierce's motion for judgment N.O.V. by failing to grant the motion with 45 days. Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to Rule 5(a)(5), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Untimely Appeal Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal filed after the mandatory time limit imposed under this rule as untimely filed pursuant to Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 1915 (1988). See also Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995).

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987). However, see Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 259 M 379, 856 P2d 969, 50 St. Rep. 842 (1993), ruling that the District Court lost jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a new trial for reasons stated in plaintiff's motion 45 days after filing of the motion despite the fact that judgment had not been entered.

Notice of Denial of Motion Not Required — Appeal Period: Appellant's posttrial motion for a new trial was considered denied upon failure of the District Court to rule on it for 45 days, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. No notice of such denial is required under Rule 5, M.R.Civ.P. The 30-day period for appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P., begins to run upon expiration of the 45-day period of Rule 59(d). Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Failure to Obtain Continuance — No Invalidation of Proceeding: Following service of the notice of entry of judgment, the defendants filed a timely motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, hearing on the motion was not held within 10 days of service as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. However, the hearing was within the total of 40 days which Rule 59(d) allows for the hearing. The notice of hearing was given within the 10-day period. The defendant's technical failure to obtain a continuance from the trial court is not a sufficient reason to invalidate the proceedings when the hearing is held within the period prescribed by the rule. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Motion, Hearing, or Order:

Summary judgment was entered against appellant by the District Court on November 25, 1980. On December 4, 1980, he filed his motion to alter or amend the summary judgment. He noticed the hearing on the motion for December 15, 1980. Under Rule 59(g), the motion was timely filed, but under this subsection, the hearing was set 1 day too late. The time for hearing expired December 14, 1980. Therefore, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running that date and his appeal which was filed on February 4, 1981, was not timely and was dismissed. Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. of Idaho, 203 M 69, 661 P2d 12, 39 St. Rep. 2046 (1982).

Following an adverse ruling in a quiet title action, the plaintiff and defendant submitted a motion on November 17, 1981, to amend the judgment, but the motion was not noticed for hearing and was not ruled on by the District Court until December 24, 1981. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the motion was considered denied if the District Court had not ruled within 15 days of the filing of the motion, the motion was considered denied on December 2, 1981, and the appeal was therefore untimely taken, denying the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982); accord, In re Marriage of Page, 39 St. Rep. 2360 (1982) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982).

The lower court order attempted to modify the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under Rule 5, M.R.App.P., and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Motion to Vacate Default Judgment — Time Limits Jurisdictional: The 10th day after moving to vacate a default judgment under Rule 60 (b)(1), M.R.Civ.P., fell on July 6, and a hearing set for that date was, by stipulation, continued to July 17. On July 17 the District Court vacated and reset the hearing for October 7 because of calendar conflict. The hearing was held on October 7, and the order was dated October 20. The motion to set aside the default was beyond the jurisdiction of the District Court because 30 days after July 6 (August 5) was the last day the District Court had jurisdiction, and no decision being made by that date, the motion was considered denied and the 30 days for appeal began to run. Wallinder v. Lagerquist, 201 M 212, 653 P2d 840, 39 St. Rep. 2063 (1982).

Hearing Continued — Motion Not Considered Denied: A motion is not considered denied 15 days after it was submitted when a hearing was set within 10 days of submission, then, by stipulation of counsel, it was continued for less than 30 days and the subsequent hearing and ruling complied with the provisions of this rule. Lilienthal v. District Court, 200 M 236, 650 P2d 779, 39 St. Rep. 1711 (1982).

Hearing on Motion to Vacate to Be Within Ten Days of Service: The District Court entered judgment on May 22, 1980. On May 22, 1981, the defendant served plaintiff with a motion to vacate the judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. On June 3, 1981, the District Court set a hearing on the motion for June 30, 1981. Because the District Court failed to hold the hearing within 10 days after the motion was served, the motion was considered denied on June 1, 1981. Lerum v. Logue, 198 M 194, 645 P2d 418, 39 St. Rep. 873 (1982).

Failure to Serve Within Time Limitation as Effecting Denial: A motion for new trial may be made before or after entry of judgment subject to the limitation of 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment contained in Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P. If not served within the 10-day period, the motion is considered denied under the provisions of the last paragraph of this rule. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Extension of Hearing Date on Motion to Amend — What Suffices for Compliance With Time Requirements: The wife appealed from an amended decree dissolving her marriage, granting child custody, awarding support, and dividing the property of the marriage. The appellant filed and served a motion to amend the judgment. Including 3 days for mailing, the hearing on that motion was either required to be held within 13 days or to be continued by the court within 13 days. The District Court entered an order setting a hearing date on the appellant's and respondent's motions to amend, which order was filed on the last day of the 13-day period. The order constituted a continuation of the hearing date on the motions to alter or amend. That order did set a hearing date within a 30-day period required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court then ruled on the motions to alter or amend within 5 days following the hearing. Therefore, the District Court's actions regarding the petitioner's motions to alter or amend the original decree complied with the time requirements of the rule. The amending order of the District Court was therefore valid. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Time for Appeal Following Motion for New Trial Made Without Hearing — Time Limits of Rules Jurisdictional Regardless of Stipulation: Where, following a judgment against the defendant for damages caused by fraudulent misrepresentation and breach of warranty, the defendant and plaintiff orally agreed to waive the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, filed on April 23 and denied by the court on May 15, the defendant's notice of appeal filed on June 12 was untimely and the plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal was granted. Because no hearing was held on the motion for a new trial, the motion was considered denied, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., 10 days after it was made and the time for appeal expired on June 2. The defendant's argument that the stipulation meant the motion for a new trial would be considered submitted "at the completion of briefing" cannot extend the time for the court's ruling, as the time limits imposed by the rules of procedure are mandatory and the parties may not by stipulation confer jurisdiction on the court beyond the time provided by the rules. Marvel Brute Steel Building, Inc. v. Bass, 189 M 480, 616 P2d 380, 37 St. Rep. 1670 (1980), distinguished in In re Marriage of Bryant, 276 M 317, 916 P2d 115, 53 St. Rep. 412 (1996).

Time Limit for Hearing Motion for New Trial: The District Court had no jurisdiction to grant a new trial where the motion for new trial was made on January 25, but the hearing was not had until March 19. Oster v. Oster, 186 M 160, 606 P2d 1075 (1980).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Suspended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Ruling on Motion — Mandatory Time Limitation: It was error for the court to rule on a motion to alter or amend judgment after expiration of the 15-day time period measured from the date of submission of the motion. Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978).

Disqualification of Judge — Remand by Supreme Court — Time Limits Inapplicable: Where Supreme Court vacated orders of judge who had been disqualified and remanded motion for new trial for hearing before new judge, the time limits of this rule were not applicable since there was no final judgment from which time limits could be computed. Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Failure to Comply: Default judgment should not have been set aside when, under rule, the maximum amount of time by which case could have been extended would have been 55 days from the date of service of the motion, and when 245 days elapsed from date of service of the motion until it was ruled upon. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Time Limits Exceeded: Default judgment should not have been set aside when time extension limits of Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., were exceeded. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Failure to Comply — Reversible Error: Granting of new trial was reversible error where time limits set forth in this rule were disregarded. Cain v. Harrington, 161 M 401, 506 P2d 1375 (1973).

Ruling After Time Limitation Void: Under this rule, once the self-executing denial of a motion becomes effective any subsequent order by the court concerning that motion is outside the court's jurisdiction and consequently void. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Untimely Appeal From Denial of Motion for New Trial: When motion for new trial was filed without notice of hearing, the motion was automatically denied 10 days after service notwithstanding letter from clerk notifying movant of denial on some other date. Appeal filed later than 60 days after denial of the motion was untimely. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Discretion Exhausted When Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict: Although the granting of a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence is a discretionary power of the District Court which will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion, the District Court's discretion is exhausted when it finds substantial evidence to support the verdict. Kincheloe v. Rygg, 152 M 187, 448 P2d 140 (1968).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. And, see State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial. Disqualification, preventing ruling on posttrial motions, after entry of findings and conclusions, was most recently allowed in Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

NOTE TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(d), as amended 1966.

Explanation of change: The purpose of this amendment is to make it clear that a court, after notice and opportunity to be heard, may grant a new trial even though a motion for new trial has been made, for a ground not stated in the motion. Some cases have held otherwise.

NOTE TO DECEMBER 31, 1975, AMENDMENT

See note under Rule 59(a).

Compiler's Comments

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of September 29, 1967, added the second sentence and made changes in phraseology.

The amendment of May 21, 1969, made no change in the wording of this rule.

The amendments of Rule 59 by Supreme Court Order No. 10750-9 designated this former Rule 59(d) as Rule 59(e).

The amendment of December 31, 1975, deleted the last sentence which read "In either case, the court shall specify in the order the grounds therefor." As of May 1, 1990, this rule was still identical to the Federal Rule, except for the last sentence of the Federal Rule, which requires the court to specify the grounds for ordering a new trial in that order.

Case Notes

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987). However, see Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 259 M 379, 856 P2d 969, 50 St. Rep. 842 (1993), ruling that the District Court lost jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a new trial for reasons stated in plaintiff's motion 45 days after filing of the motion despite the fact that judgment had not been entered.

When Time Limits Inapplicable: The inherent power of the court to enter such orders as are necessary to enforce a judgment is not limited by the time limits in Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., because such orders are interlocutory orders, not final ones. Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995).

Motion Combined With Motion to Alter Judgment — Time Limits: Combined motion for new trial and to alter, amend, and supplement findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment was not subject to time limits of section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P.), requiring prompt hearing on new trial motion and superseded by this rule. State ex rel. Rozan v. District Court, 147 M 532, 416 P2d 19 (1966). See also Crissey v. Highway Comm'n, 147 M 374, 413 P2d 308 (1966).

Amendment Mandated: Court was required to amend judgment upon remand. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Judge's Discretion to Prevent Miscarriage of Justice: The jury is delegated the task of finding the facts, but the trial judge has the discretion to prevent a miscarriage of justice by granting a new trial if there is an insufficiency of evidence to support the verdict. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965), explained in Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., Inc., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

Purpose of Rule: The purpose of this rule is to give a trial judge power to prevent what he considers a miscarriage of justice. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965); State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 248, 384 P2d 490 (1963).

Purpose — Scope — Appellate Review: The rule's purpose is to grant the judge discretion to prevent miscarriages of justice. The scope of the rule extends to all interpretations of former statutes preceding the rule. The ruling should not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is proved. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965), explained in Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., Inc., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

Scope of Rule: This rule permits the trial judge to order a new trial on his own initiative for the same reasons one could be ordered pursuant to 25-11-102 and is subject to the same interpretations as expressed in previous opinions on motions for new trials before adoption of the rule. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965).

Disqualification of Judge: No disqualifying affidavit can deprive the court of jurisdiction to grant a new trial on its own initiative under this rule. State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963), modifying State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. And see State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial. Disqualification, preventing a ruling on posttrial motions after entry of findings and conclusions, was most recently allowed in Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Amendments: The amendment of Rule 59 by Supreme Court Order No. 10750, December 31, 1975, enacted this subparagraph as Rule 59(f) and designated former Rule 59(f) as Rule 59(g).

Case Notes

Prejudicial Effect of Misconduct of Defense Counsel — New Trial Properly Granted: Even though defendant may have presented sufficient evidence to prevail against plaintiff's motion for judgment as a matter of law, the District Court nevertheless properly granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial after finding that the defense counsel's misconduct prejudiced plaintiff's right to a fair hearing and resolution of the case. The trial judge is in the best position to determine the prejudicial effect of an attorney's conduct. Even when there is substantial evidence supporting a jury's verdict, the trial court has an overriding duty to prevent a miscarriage of justice by granting a new trial if the misconduct of counsel prevents an opposing litigant from having a fair trial on the merits. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

No Error in Failure to Grant Mistrial Motion for "Error" Caused by Movant: Garrison brought a civil action against a real estate broker and others for rescission of a sale of real property on Flathead Lake. Garrison was asked by the District Court to estimate the amount of time required for trial and estimated 4 days, but those days were used almost exclusively for presentation of Garrison's case. Trial was rescheduled for October but was reset for December, with the consent of all counsel. In November, Garrison moved for a mistrial, claiming that the District Court's grasp of the issues was dulled by the intervening delay between the completion of his case in chief and presentation of the defendants' case. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in denying Garrison's motion for a mistrial because the District Court relied upon the judgment of Garrison's counsel to estimate the original number of days needed for trial (which were all taken up by Garrison's case in chief, thus necessitating rescheduling of the defendants' case) and because Garrison agreed to the later rescheduling. Citing Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 272 M 146, 900 P2d 281 (1995), the Supreme Court said that as a general rule, it would not put the trial court in error for a procedure in which the appellant has acquiesced or participated or to which no objection was made. The Supreme Court also noted that Garrison had not demonstrated how he was prejudiced by the delay, beyond his general assumption that the memory of the District Court would be dulled by the delay. Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997).

No Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Grant Mistrial Because of Testimony Concerning Costs and Attorney Fees: In the course of a lawsuit against his insurer for failure to settle a claim resulting from hail damage to his wheat crop, Dees testified that he had incurred substantial expense for costs and attorney fees in bringing the action against the insurer. The insurer moved for a mistrial, which was denied, and the jury subsequently awarded Dees a large punitive damages judgment. The Supreme Court held that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny the motion for a mistrial. The District Court's findings and conclusions attributed the punitive damages award to the insurance company's dogmatic position that the crop was not damaged by hail and to the haughtiness of its witnesses. Because the District Court observed the trial, it is reasonable to infer that the District Court Judge considered the reference to costs to be comparatively insignificant. The District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a mistrial. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 834 P2d 1382, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Prejudicial Closing Argument Made by Attorney for One of Several Defendants — Plaintiff Entitled to New Trial Against All Defendants: In a wrongful death action involving several defendants, when a new trial was ordered because of several improper statements made in his closing argument by one defendant's attorney, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial with respect to all of the defendants because it was impossible to separate the defendants in considering the effect of the prejudice created by the argument of the lawyer for one of the defendants. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984), followed in Rieger v. Coldwell, 254 M 507, 839 P2d 1257, 49 St. Rep. 768 (1992), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998), and Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999). Despite repeated attorney misconduct warranting sanction on retrial, the District Court ruled that the misconduct was not of the magnitude of that found in Kuhnke I, supra, and that viewed in the context of the entire trial, the improper conduct did not impact the jury to such an extent as to require a new trial. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the verdict reached by two juries on two separate occasions hearing the same facts and noted that it was unlikely a third trial before a third jury would produce a different result. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 227 M 62, 740 P2d 625, 44 St. Rep. 895 (1987).

Appeal Dismissed — Reasons Not Contained in Order for New Trial: In granting plaintiffs a new trial under this section, the trial court entered an order stating that there had been "good cause shown". No further reason for the new trial was given by the court. Defendants appealed, and 3 ½ months after entry of the notice of appeal, the trial court filed a document with the Supreme Court entitled "Certification of Issues on Appeal in Granting Motion for New Trial". The Supreme Court declined to consider the certification in place of the original order granting a new trial and dismissed the appeal for failure to comply with this rule. Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 656 P2d 825, 40 St. Rep. 35 (1983), followed in Campbell v. Johnson, 246 M 122, 802 P2d 1262, 47 St. Rep. 2292 (1990).

Order for New Criminal Trial to Include Grounds: This rule is applicable to a motion for a new trial in a criminal case filed under 46-16-702. St. v. Williams, 193 M 432, 632 P2d 328, 38 St. Rep. 1253 (1981), distinguished in St. v. Hall, 203 M 528, 662 P2d 1306, 40 St. Rep. 621 (1983).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the State since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway in the vicinity of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979), overruled, in part, by Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 656 P2d 825, 40 St. Rep. 35 (1983).

New Trial Granted Summarily: This rule makes it clear the time is past when a District Court can summarily grant a new trial and rely on the Supreme Court to provide a legally adequate reason for its order. Ballantyne v. The Anaconda Co., 175 M 406, 574 P2d 582 (1978).

Altering or Amending Commissioners' Award: Court could not use this rule to validate its altering and amending commissioners' award in eminent domain proceeding notwithstanding the fact that the award was not in accordance to the court's instructions. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

1995 Amendment: In last sentence increased time for appeal from 45 days to 60 days. Amendment effective December 19, 1995.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of Rule 59 by Supreme Court Order No. 10750-9 designated this former Rule 59(e) as Rule 59(f).

The amendment of Rule 59 by Supreme Court Order No. 10750, December 31, 1975, designated this former Rule 59(f) as Rule 59(g).

The amendment of September 7, 1965, added a second paragraph which read: "Motions provided by this subdivision shall be heard and determined within the time provided by Section 93-5606 of the 1947 Revised Codes of Montana in the case of motions for a new trial."

The amendment of May 21, 1969, added "and may be combined with the motion for a new trial herein provided for" to the first sentence; substituted the second sentence for the former second paragraph added in 1965; and made changes in phraseology.

The amendment of December 31, 1975, redesignated this rule and made no other change. The above commission note was written prior to the redesignation of Rule (e) as Rule (f). As of August 1, 1987, only the first portion of the first sentence, ending with "entry of the judgment", is found in the Federal Rule.

The amendment of October 9, 1984, in second sentence before "determined" deleted "heard and", and inserted "and if the court shall fail to rule on the motion within the 45 day period, the motion shall be deemed denied".

Case Notes

Motion to Amend Judgment Inappropriate When Testimony and Evidence Available in Original Proceedings: Plaintiff moved to alter or amend a summary judgment order based on affidavits and evidence regarding whether a franchise existed between the parties. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The affidavits and evidence were not considered newly discovered or previously unavailable, and plaintiff failed to establish that the District Court had the evidence available during the original proceeding, so a motion to alter or amend the judgment was inappropriate. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005). See also Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Award Attorney Fees Beyond Mandatory Time Limit: Final judgment was entered on January 8, 2003, and the next day plaintiffs filed a motion requesting attorney fees. Defendant objected, and the District Court conducted a hearing on the matter on February 25, 2003. The court finally granted the motion on April 3, 2003. Defendant contended on appeal that the award was untimely, and the Supreme Court agreed. Under this rule, a mandatory jurisdictional time limit requires a ruling on a motion for attorney fees within 60 days after final judgment or the motion is considered denied. The District Court had until March 10, 2003, to rule on the motion, but failed to do so. Thus, the court lacked jurisdiction to enter an order granting attorney fees in April, and the award was reversed. Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under this rule to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Section 27-8-311 provides that in any proceeding under Title 27, ch. 8, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under 27-8-311. However, 27-8-313 draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to 27-8-313 when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action.

Authority of District Court to Retroactively Supersede Temporary Child Support Enforcement Division's Order: While the wife's dissolution petition was pending, she asked the Child Support Enforcement Division to set child support. The Division gathered information regarding the parties' income and set a support amount. Both parties disputed the amount, and a contested hearing was held. After the hearing, the Division issued a temporary support obligation order. The husband petitioned for judicial review of the order, but the Division informed the court that the order was not appealable, so the parties stipulated to dismiss the petition for judicial review, and the court dismissed the petition. The court eventually set a child support amount, and the husband moved to have the court's order applied retroactively, but the court concluded that the order could not be applied retroactively, so the husband appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 40-5-225, the Division may set a temporary support order if one has not been set, but the very nature of the temporary order contemplates that the Division's order will be superseded by order of the District Court. Thus, the District Court erred when it held that it did not have authority to retroactively supersede the Division's temporary order, and it was an abuse of discretion for the court not to do so. In re Marriage of Banka, 2003 MT 84, 315 M 97, 67 P3d 885 (2003).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff was injured when a donkey savagely bit her arm. Defendant treated her at the local hospital. Plaintiff endured several surgeries and eventually lost her arm below the elbow. She sued defendant, claiming that defendant's negligence subjected her to an increased risk of harm and lessened her chances for a better result. The jury found that defendant was negligent but that the negligence did not cause injury to plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence in the record to support the jury's verdict. Much of the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness was contradicted by defendant's expert witnesses. An attack upon a jury verdict alleging that it is not supported by the evidence is proper only when there is a complete absence of any credible evidence in support of the verdict. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to alter or amend the judgment or for a new trial. Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 1137 (1998).

Adequacy of Compensatory and Punitive Damages Upheld — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: In a civil action for damages against Huggins and the Carpet Barn, stemming from criminal acts damaging plaintiffs David and Susan Black's automobiles, the Blacks' wholly owned corporation was awarded $35,000 in compensatory damages and $51 in punitive damages. The Blacks contended that the award was insufficient because it failed to award damages for emotional distress and property damages and awarded only $51 in punitive damages. The District Court denied Blacks' motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied the motion because there was conflicting evidence as to the cause of Blacks' emotional distress and because the record showed that Susan Black had been reimbursed through criminal restitution and that amount was not deducted from the award to the Blacks' corporation. Concerning the amount of punitive damages awarded, the Supreme Court cited Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217 (1986), and Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141 (1993), and held that the District Court properly instructed the jury, reviewed the award in accordance with 27-1-221, and left the award intact. The Supreme Court therefore held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under this rule. The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under this rule: (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), distinguished in Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017, 55 St. Rep. 1098 (1998), and followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

No Abuse of Discretion Found in Refusal to Amend Award of Personal Property — Findings and Conclusions, Decree, and Minute Order Held Consistent — Award Based Upon Stipulation of Current Cash Value of IRA Accounts Upheld: Soon after a decree was issued dissolving her marriage, Janet moved, pursuant to this rule, to amend the judgment because it concerned the distribution of the parties' personal property. Janet claimed that the District Court should have awarded her the personal property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The District Court denied her motion. Janet argued before the Supreme Court that the decree of dissolution did not conform to the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in that the District Court intended to award her the property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings and conclusions but that the property awarded was taken from a different exhibit and paragraph of her amended proposed findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's distribution of the parties' property was clear and definite. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court had made a minute entry 10 days before Janet filed her motion to amend and that the minute order stated that certain items from Janet's Exhibit "A" were to be returned to her. The Supreme Court concluded that by using this language in the minute order, the District Court intended that certain items of Janet's property listed in her exhibit were to be returned to her and that the remainder was to remain with her ex-husband. In all material respects, the Supreme Court said, the findings and conclusions, decree, and minute order all conform with one another, and therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to amend. The Supreme Court also upheld the District Court's division of the parties' two IRA accounts, noting that the parties arrived at the value by adding the two together for a total of $64,445 and then subtracting 30% for taxes and a 10% penalty, leaving a net redemption value of $38,666, and then dividing that remainder in half. The District Court gave Janet's ex-husband the option of transferring ownership of one-half of the IRAs to Janet or paying Janet $19,333, one-half the net value of those accounts. The Supreme Court held that because Janet had stipulated to the present cash value of the IRAs, if her ex-husband chose to pay her one-half the current cash value of the accounts, she is receiving an equitable distribution. In re Marriage of Dorsey, 284 M 392, 945 P2d 430, 54 St. Rep. 934 (1997).

Motion for Reconsideration Held Not to Be Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P., Held Applicable — Notice of Appeal Filed Before Receipt of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Premature: In an action to enforce the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the Shieldses filed a motion for reconsideration shortly after the District Court dismissed their first amended complaint. Before the District Court ruled on the motion for reconsideration, the Shieldses filed a notice of appeal. The defendants claimed that the motion for reconsideration should be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment under this rule and that because Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), specifies that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a motion to alter or amend judgment has no effect until the motion to alter or amend judgment is disposed of, the Shieldses' notice of appeal was ineffective. The Supreme Court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not one of the motions provided for or authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court reviewed the substance of the motion for reconsideration to determine whether, under Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the motion could be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment and held that the motion could not be so treated. Because the motion could not be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment, the time for the Shieldses to file a notice of appeal was governed by Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P., and not Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. Under Rule 5(a)(1), the Shieldses had 30 days from the time of notice of entry of judgment under Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., in which to file their notice of appeal. However, the Supreme Court also noted that there was nothing in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure that prevented the Shieldses from filing their notice of appeal earlier than provided under Rule 77(d), and for that reason, the Supreme Court held the filing of the notice of appeal to be effective. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under this rule for additional briefing time and must rule on a motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Equating Motion for Reconsideration to Motion to Alter or Amend: Miller filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Miller's motion for reconsideration was denied, and he appealed the summary judgment order, not within 30 days of entry of the summary judgment but within 30 days of the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal on the grounds that it had not been timely filed. Miller argued that the motion for reconsideration stopped the running of the 30-day requirement and that the 30-day requirement started to run again from the time that the motion to reconsider was denied. Miller based his argument on the holding in Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870 (1988), which stated that although a motion for reconsideration is not specifically referred to in this rule, it can be equated to a motion to alter or amend a judgment. The Supreme Court held that it would allow Miller's appeal because of his reliance on Easley but that any future motion to reconsider would not be treated as equivalent to a motion to alter or amend unless the motion contains statements or allegations demonstrating that the motion is equivalent to a motion to alter or amend. Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995), overruling in part Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870 (1988). See also Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997). However, see Moody v. Northland Royalty Co., 286 M 89, 951 P2d 18, 54 St. Rep. 1317 (1997), which distinguished Miller by holding that defendant's motion to dismiss was not supported by a properly identified brief pursuant to Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19). See also Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017, 55 St. Rep. 1098 (1998), distinguishing Miller by holding that the Supreme Court will not analyze the substance of the motion to determine if the motion fits the definition of a motion to alter or amend.

Claim for Attorney Fees Raised for First Time in Motion to Amend Judgment Premature: It was premature to grant a claim for attorney fees, based on a breach of contract claim, that was raised for the first time in a motion to amend a judgment. The claim was supported only by a postjudgment affidavit attached to a reply brief in support of the motion to amend. The claim was premature in light of the fact that the underlying breach of contract claim had not been raised or argued by the parties in any meaningful or appropriate fashion. Clark v. Dussault, 265 M 479, 878 P2d 239, 51 St. Rep. 642 (1994).

No Basis for Amending Summary Judgment Apart From Motion for Relief From Judgment When Relief Denied: Plaintiff sought to amend judgment, but in neither the trial court nor the Supreme Court was any basis advanced for amending the summary judgment apart from arguments supporting plaintiff's motion for relief from judgment. Because the trial court properly declined to grant relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion to amend the judgment. Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994). See also Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., or this rule. A notice of appeal filed under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Ineffective Appeal After Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Failure to Cure Results in Dismissal: On April 30, Grounds filed a motion to alter or amend a judgment partially granting her former husband's (Coward's) posttrial motions. On May 17, before Grounds' motion was ruled upon, Coward filed a notice of appeal from the disposition of his pretrial motions. The Supreme Court held that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., the day the order was issued on his motions is not to be counted and that because the time for serving a motion to alter or amend judgment is less than the 11 days referred to in Rule 6(a), intervening Saturdays and Sundays are not counted. Therefore, the District Court could still rule on Grounds' motion. Under Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), Coward filed a premature notice of appeal and should have waited until Grounds' motion was disposed of or considered denied. Failure of Coward to file a new notice of appeal after Grounds' motion was considered denied means that his own appeal must be dismissed. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Lack of Supporting Brief and Notice of Motion — Ruling Not Invalidated: Coward made a motion to alter or amend judgment but failed to file a supporting brief within 5 days and failed to give notice to Grounds that the motion would be heard along with the hearing on her motion for contempt. These omissions notwithstanding, the District Court partially granted Coward's motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Citing Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285 (1989), the Supreme Court said that even though failure to file a brief is an admission that the motion is not well taken, the District Court still has discretion whether to grant the motion. The parties were also invited to propose a briefing schedule and/or evidentiary hearing date to present supplemental arguments, but failed to do so. Under these circumstances, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993). However, see Moody v. Northland Royalty Co., 286 M 89, 951 P2d 18, 54 St. Rep. 1317 (1997), which held that the District Court erred when it granted defendant's motion to dismiss after designating defendant's answer as the brief supporting a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19).

Failure to Perfect Appeal Within Time Limits as Precluding Jurisdiction: Failure to perfect an appeal within the time limits provided by law prevents the Supreme Court from acquiring jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. First Sec. Bank of Havre v. Harmon, 255 M 168, 841 P2d 521, 49 St. Rep. 955 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001).

Retention of District Court Jurisdiction After Filing of Appeal: A motion filed under this rule must be determined by the District Court within 45 days. If the court fails to rule within that time, the motion is considered denied. Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), requires the notice of appeal in civil cases to be filed within 30 days of judgment. However, if a motion is timely filed under this rule, the time for appeal runs from the entry of an order granting or denying the motion or, if applicable, from the time the motion is considered denied at the end of the 45-day period (see 1995 amendment). If a notice of appeal is filed before the motion is disposed of, the notice of appeal has no effect. Semenza v. Hartelius, 248 M 294, 811 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 356 (1991).

Court Failure to Rule Within Forty-Five Days on Motion to Set Aside or Amend — Loss of Jurisdiction Over That Issue: Subsequent to obtaining a decree of dissolution, the husband died intestate and his ex-wife moved to have the decree set aside. More than 45 days later (see 1995 amendment), the District Court set aside the decree and also granted the ex-wife's motion to substitute as personal representative. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that a postjudgment motion not ruled on within 45 days is considered denied and at that time, the lower court lost its jurisdiction with respect to setting aside the decree. The court also held that the 45 days run from the time the motion to set aside or amend is filed and is not affected by when the notice of entry of judgment is filed. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 108, 776 P2d 1218, 46 St. Rep. 1128 (1989).

Untimely Appeal Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal filed after the mandatory time limit imposed under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., as untimely filed pursuant to this rule. Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 1915 (1988). See also Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995).

Failure to Obtain Continuance — No Invalidation of Proceeding: Following service of the notice of entry of judgment, the defendants filed a timely motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, hearing on the motion was not held within 10 days of service as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. However, the hearing was within the total of 40 days which Rule 59(d) allows for the hearing. The notice of hearing was given within the 10-day period. The defendant's technical failure to obtain a continuance from the trial court is not a sufficient reason to invalidate the proceedings when the hearing is held within the period prescribed by the rule. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Effect of Stipulation Based on Mistake in Interpretation of Law: At entry of judgment the District Court permitted entry of a stipulation that apportioned attorney fees between the parties on the basis of an incorrect interpretation of the law. The parties agreed that attorney fees are costs in mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure actions. It was error for the District Court to refuse to alter or amend the judgment upon timely application under Rules 59(g) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. A judgment by stipulation is as binding as any judgment or verdict, no more or less. The court was responsible for a correct application of the law in accepting the stipulation and in later ruling on whether to alter or amend the judgment thereby entered. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Award of Attorney Fees on Remand Improper: On remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court granted the mother's motion for attorney fees for the first trial and appeal. The District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees. The original judgment did not provide for attorney fees, and the judgment would have had to be amended before either party could be ordered to pay those fees. A motion to amend a judgment must be made within 10 days of its entry. This rule applies to requests for attorney fees and is not overridden by 40-4-110. Since mother's motion was not timely, the District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees for the first trial. R.L.S. & T.L.S v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Marital Separation Agreement Not a Judgment Amendable for Failure of Consideration: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Motion for Attorney Fees Following Judgment — Not Costs — Timeliness of Motion: The defendants signed a contract to purchase a tract of land from plaintiffs. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action commenced on the contract. Plaintiffs filed suit alleging that under the contract and various oral agreements, defendants had agreed to pay a real estate commission to plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding that written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission did not exist. No notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Defendants later moved to set an attorney fee award. The trial court ruled that under Title 25, ch. 10, attorney fees were not recoverable costs and that the motion for costs was not timely, as it was not filed within 5 days of judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees were awardable under the contract and that defendants' motion was essentially a motion to amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The motion was timely made since no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983).

Untimely Motion, Notice, or Hearing Not Suspending Time for Appeal — Appeal Not Timely: Summary judgment was entered against appellant by the District Court on November 25, 1980. On December 4, 1980, he filed his motion to alter or amend the summary judgment. He noticed the hearing on the motion for December 15, 1980. Under Rule 59(g), the motion was timely filed, but under this subsection, the hearing was set 1 day too late. The time for hearing expired December 14, 1980. Therefore, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running that date and his appeal which was filed on February 4, 1981, was not timely and was dismissed. Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. of Idaho, 203 M 69, 661 P2d 12, 39 St. Rep. 2046 (1982).

After the plaintiff and defendant stipulated to costs in a quiet title action, an amended judgment was entered by the District Court on October 29, 1981, but on November 13, the plaintiff filed a motion to amend judgment. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the motion to amend judgment was not timely filed, the motion did not suspend the running of the time for appeal, and that because the running of the time for filing an appeal had not been suspended, the notice of appeal was filed too late and the court lacked jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982), followed in Estate of Stinson, 240 M 1, 782 P2d 78, 46 St. Rep. 1892 (1989).

Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982).

When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Proposed Findings and Conclusions Adopted Verbatim: Notwithstanding the duty imposed in Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., upon a District Court to "find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon" is not automatically breached when a court adopts verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions submitted by the prevailing party, especially where, as here, the District Judge invited both parties to submit proposed findings and conclusions prior to making his decision. Adopted findings, though not the product of the District Judge's mind, are formally his and will stand if supported by the evidence. The District Court therefore did not err in denying the petitioner's motion to amend the findings and conclusions, which motion was based upon the verbatim adoption. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981), followed in Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

Extension of Hearing Date on Motion to Amend — What Suffices for Compliance With Time Requirements: The wife appealed from an amended decree dissolving her marriage, establishing child custody and support, and dividing the property of the marriage. The appellant filed and served a motion to amend the judgment. Including 3 days for mailing, the hearing on that motion was either required to be held within 13 days or to be continued by the court within 13 days. The District Court entered an order setting a hearing date on the appellant's and respondent's motions to amend. That order was filed on the last day of the 13-day period. The order constituted a continuation of the hearing date on the motions to alter or amend. That order did set a hearing date within a 30-day period required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (See 1995 amendment). The District Court then ruled on the motions to alter or amend within 5 days following the hearing. Therefore, the District Court's actions regarding the petitioner's motions to alter or amend the original decree complied with the time requirements of the rule. The amending order of the District Court was therefore valid. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Petition to Alter or Amend Judgment With Regard to Fees and Costs in Divorce Case: A petition to alter or amend a judgment must be served not later than 10 days after notice of entry of judgment, and the court was without jurisdiction to grant a petition asking for attorney's fees that was filed almost 3 months after entry of an order that required each party to pay his own fees and costs. McDonald v. McDonald, 183 M 312, 599 P2d 356 (1979), followed in Haugen v. Nelson, 240 M 28, 782 P2d 901, 46 St. Rep. 1915 (1989), and in Estate of Stinson, 240 M 1, 782 P2d 78, 46 St. Rep. 1892 (1989).

Practice of Additur: The practice of additur by the District Courts is prohibited notwithstanding the court's dictum in Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc., 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978). Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117, 35 St. Rep. 1878 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Ruling on Motion — Mandatory Time Limitation: It was error for the court to rule on a motion to alter or amend judgment after expiration of the 15-day time period measured from the date of submission of the motion. Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Rule Mandatory — Untimely Order Void: Order granting motion to alter or amend judgment was void where hearing was not held within 10 days after service as required by this rule; time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment set out in this rule are mandatory. Armstrong v. High Crest Oils, Inc., 164 M 187, 520 P2d 1081 (1974).

Motion for Modification of Paternity Decree — Requirements of Rules Not Satisfied — Jurisdiction Precluded: Where a husband filed a "motion for modification of divorce decree" more than 4 years after the divorce in an attempt to relitigate the issue of his paternity of the children of the parties, the District Court was without jurisdiction to hear the petition. As the petition on its face did not seek relief under Rules 59 or 60, M.R.Civ.P., and was based on facts which predated the original finding of paternity, which finding was not appealed, the District Court had no jurisdiction to modify its previous order. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Additur Not Allowed: This rule did not give the District Court power to order an additur to a condemnation award as a condition of denying motion for new trial. Highway Comm'n v. Schmidt, 143 M 505, 391 P2d 692 (1964).

Condemnation Proceedings — Rule Inapplicable to Award by Commissioners: Subdivision (e) of this rule (now subdivision (g)) did not apply in determining right of District Court to alter or amend an award of damages as found by the report of commissioners in condemnation proceeding under 70-30-303 after the award had been filed with the District Court and notice thereof given to the parties by the clerk as the commissioners' award was not a judgment. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Rule 60. Relief from judgment or order

Case Notes

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Lack of Hearing Record on Support Modification — Vacation of District Court Decree Required: Pamela filed a motion to amend the decree dissolving her marriage, in order to increase child support payments, and a motion to hold her ex-husband, Earl, in contempt for failure to pay child support. The District Court held a hearing, which Earl did not attend. Based upon the hearing, of which no record was made, the District Court modified the decree by increasing Earl's child support payments. Earl was also ordered to pay Pamela's attorney fees and costs. In response, Earl filed a motion under this rule for relief from the judgment, but that motion was denied when the District Court failed to rule. Citing Malley v. Malley, 190 M 141, 619 P2d 531 (1980), the Supreme Court held that without a record, the Supreme Court could not determine the change in circumstances justifying the amended decree and Earl was thereby denied effective appellate review. The District Court's order was vacated, and the case was remanded for a hearing on the merits of Pamela's motion. In re Marriage of Long, 268 M 187, 885 P2d 533, 51 St. Rep. 1252 (1994).

New Trial Denied — Lack of Diligence: The defendants sought a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence indicating that the valuation of real property reached by the trial court was $13,000 too high. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's denial of the motion, holding that the defendants had not demonstrated that the evidence could not have been discovered in time for the trial with exercise of due diligence on their part. Brunner v. LaCasse, 241 M 102, 785 P2d 210, 47 St. Rep. 117 (1990).

Motion for Modification of Child Custody Decree: Wife filed for modification of a child custody order, and the subsequent order issued by the court affected only the terms of the original custody decree that relate to the notice required prior to visitation and to allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that wife's motion for modification should be denied because it was not properly filed under the time limitations established in Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the court held that the motion was filed under 40-4-217, which contains no time limitations. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Loss of Jurisdiction — Divorce Proceeding: The court exceeded its jurisdiction by determining paternity after entry of the original divorce decree. Relief was not sought under Rule 59 or Rule 60 as it could have been. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Rule 60(a). Clerical mistakes.

Commission Notes

Subdivision (a) of the rule is identical with the Federal Rule, except that the phrase "and in pleadings" has been added to make it clear that pleadings may be corrected, and except that the last sentence of the Federal Rule, which deals with the correction of mistakes pending appeal, has been omitted as unnecessary.

Identity With Federal Rule: As of May 1, 1990, the above commission note was still applicable.

Case Notes

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying this rule to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

No Time Limit on Court's Correcting Clerical Error if There Is No Currently Pending Appeal: At a bench trial, the lower court ruled that a disputed parking easement between the parties did not contain a certain portion of a lot. However, in the court's written opinion, the court cited the easement as containing that portion of the lot that the court's findings had delineated as not being part of the easement. The Franks brought a motion for relief from judgment based on a clerical error by the court. The lower court denied the Franks' motion without explanation, and the Franks appealed. Muri argued that the Franks had not timely filed their appeal because it was filed after the time for filing an appeal had elapsed. The Supreme Court stated that the lower court had clearly made a clerical error in its description of the easement and had abused its discretion in refusing to amend its ruling. The Supreme Court held that under this rule, unless there was a currently pending appeal, the rule had to be interpreted literally to mean that the lower court could correct its clerical error and therefore the time to file an appeal did not apply. The Supreme Court remanded the case and ordered the lower court to correct its error. Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001). On remand, the District Court improperly made new findings of fact that conflicted with the unchallenged findings upon which the Supreme Court based its decision in Muri, id. Because plaintiff did not appeal the findings from the first appeal, the District Court had no authority to ignore the law of the case and reconsider its findings on remand. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Oral Pronouncement as Legally Effective Sentence — Correction of Error in Written Judgment by Nunc Pro Tunc Order — Due Process and Double Jeopardy Rights Not Violated: The oral pronouncement of sentence is the legally effective sentence. The written judgment and commitment serves as evidence of the sentence orally pronounced. In the event of a conflict between the oral and written sentence, the oral controls. The sentencing court may correct an error in a written judgment and commitment by a nunc pro tunc order, pursuant to 46-18-117 (now repealed), to accurately reflect what was orally pronounced at the sentencing hearing. Absent evidence of a tangible detriment or concrete injury to defendant, a clarifying nunc pro tunc order does not jeopardize a defendant's due process rights or constitute double jeopardy. St. v. Lane, 1998 MT 76, 288 M 286, 957 P2d 9, 55 St. Rep. 311 (1998), overruling St. v. Enfinger, 222 M 438, 722 P2d 1170 (1986), St. v. Wirtala, 231 M 264, 752 P2d 177 (1988), St. v. Mason, 253 M

419, 833 P2d 1058 (1992), and St. v. Graveley, 275 M 519, 915 P2d 184 (1996), to the extent that those cases held that the written judgment and commitment, rather than the oral pronouncement of sentence, was to be considered the final, valid order. Lane was followed in St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), and St. v. Ringewold, 2001 MT 185, 306 M 229, 32 P3d 729 (2001). The Supreme Court amended Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), to reflect the Lane decision in In re Amending Rule 5 of the Mont. Rules of Appellate Procedure, 55 St. Rep. 1267 (1998).

Notice or Motion Not Required to Correct Clerical Error in Order — Reentry of Judgment Not Required: The District Court entered judgment terminating parental rights but misspelled the father's first name. One week later, the court issued an amended order correcting the clerical error but made no other changes. The state did not notify appellant of entry of the amended judgment. Seventeen months after the termination of parental rights, appellant served notice of the amended order on the state and filed a notice of appeal from the amended order based on Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), contending that the state never entered the amended judgment and that therefore the 60-day appeal period did not run until the amended judgment was entered by the appellant's attorney. Under this rule, the District Court has inherent power at any time to correct clerical errors in its own judgments in order to ensure that the record speaks the truth and reflects the court's decision. A notice or motion is not required to rectify a clerical error, nor must the order that makes the correction be denominated a nunc pro tunc order. An error may also be corrected by the issuance of a new order that does not contain the clerical error and that entirely replaces the old order. In the present case, appellant was properly notified when judgment was entered and the original order was handed down. The state was not required to enter judgment again after the amended new order was issued or to notify appellant of the entry of the amended order in order to keep the appeal clock running. Because appellant failed to file a notice of appeal within 60 days of the entry of judgment, the appeal was dismissed as untimely. In re N.K.O. & Z.J.M., 277 M 122, 919 P2d 394, 53 St. Rep. 570 (1996), distinguishing El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704 (1986), Kenny v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491 (1987), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989).

Clerical Correction of Error in Calculating Child Support Obligation: This rule was an appropriate vehicle for correcting a miscalculation in the net available resources to be considered in setting the amount of child support obligation. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Corrective Order — Not Modification of Judgment: In an action to modify a final decree of dissolution distributing a marital estate, the trial court, under the authority of Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., issued a corrective order to amend the judgment to express what was actually decided and to grant the relief originally intended. The order was not a modification of judgment subject to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The court did not have a change of mind or correct a judicial error. In re Marriage of Cannon, 215 M 272, 697 P2d 901, 42 St. Rep. 348 (1985).

Timeliness of Motion — Clerical Errors to Be Corrected at Any Time: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The wife moved to revalue the stock again on January 22, 1981. The court held a hearing on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal the wife contended that her January 22 motion should be considered a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., on the grounds of newly discovered evidence. Montana's Rule 60(b) requires the motion to be within 60 days following the entry of judgment. However, it can be considered if the relief could have been granted because the substance of the motion brought it under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. This was foreclosed here by the District Court ruling on the motion on its merits. The Supreme Court did resolve an apparent conflict between Rule 60(a) and Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., by holding that when a clerical mistake occurs in a judgment, order, or other part of a court record and the error is admitted or can be corrected or clarified without inequity or prejudice to a party, the error can be corrected by the court at any time, either nunc pro tunc or by a new order. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990).

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Error in Distribution of Decedent's Estate: When the mineral rights distributed in a decree of settlement of final account and distribution of estate had been previously conveyed by sale, the District Court has jurisdiction to reopen the case to amend the decree because the District Court was without authority to distribute items which were not properly included in the inventory of the estate. In re Estate of Swandal, 179 M 429, 587 P2d 368 (1978).

Finding Equivalent to Denial of Relief: Finding that "The evidence presented does not warrant any setting aside of the default judgment. . ." was equivalent to a denial of relief under this rule. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Contempt — Excessive Sentence Corrected: Trial court could correct a judgment imposing a term of imprisonment for contempt of court in excess of that authorized by 3-1-519 (now repealed), and this was harmless error where the correction was made within the period of a stay of execution. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Erroneous Order — Corrected Nunc Pro Tunc: Court's nunc pro tunc order correcting erroneous contempt judgment was not in violation of Supreme Court's writ because the order was made before the writ was issued. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Effect of Change Governing — Time for Correction: The test is whether on the one hand the change will make the record speak the truth as to what was actually determined or done, or intended to be determined or done by the court, or whether on the other hand it will alter such action or intended action. Where the amendment comes within the permissible class there would seem to be no reason, nor any supportable precedent, limiting by time or term the court's right to correct its record; for if the power is to be effective and do justice to parties and public it must continue until the error is called to the court's attention and corrected. Morse v. Morse, 116 M 504, 154 P2d 982 (1945).

Party Omitted From Judgment: Where findings of fact and conclusions of law declared that both plaintiff wife and minor children should share in a $15 weekly allowance as the parties had agreed, but the decree by mistake or inadvertence omitted the wife's name as a participant, the court may properly allow the amendment that she participate, under section 21-139, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and the court's inherent power to correct errors of clerk, judge, or counsel, to speak the actual decision, either immediately or years later. Judgment must conform to verdict, decision, or findings in substantial particulars. Morse v. Morse, 116 M 504, 154 P2d 982 (1945).

Time of Correction: The District Court has power to order its judgments amended by nunc pro tunc order to correct an error which has crept into the judgment by reason of misprision on the part of the judge, clerk, or counsel and is apparent on the face of the record, so that it shall truly express what was actually decided, irrespective of the time intervening between the commission of the error and time correction order is made, provided the amendment does not change the rights fixed by the judgment as originally intended and made. State ex rel. Kruletz v. District Court, 110 M 36, 98 P2d 883 (1940).

Change of Substance — Order Void: Judgment of foreclosure of a real estate mortgage was based on a provision that if the mortgagor should default in payment of principal or interest on the note secured thereby, the whole debt should become due and collectible and all the rents and profits of the property should immediately accrue to the mortgagee. Nine months after its entry the trial court granted the mortgagor's motion to strike the clause relating to rents and profits. The order did not correct a mere clerical mistake but operated as a change of substantial rights adjudicated by the judgment. When made, the trial court had lost jurisdiction to amend or modify it; hence the order was void. Edgar St. Bank v. Long, 85 M 225, 278 P 108 (1929).

Defect in Affidavit Readily Curable: The District Court may and should, on motion to discharge a Writ of Attachment because of a defective affidavit, in furtherance of justice permit amendment of the affidavit and deny the motion, where the defect is readily amendable. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

Affidavit Amended Before Answer: An affidavit, made on information and belief in support of an application for an injunction, was amendable, before demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or answer, by substituting a verification. Claussen v. Chapin, 69 M 205, 221 P 1073 (1923).

Pleadings Amended After Default: In a divorce suit where the plaintiff inadvertently alleges that the defendant, instead of the plaintiff, has been a resident of the state for more than 1 year prior to the commencement of the action, a mistake apparently affecting the question of jurisdiction, he will be allowed after a default judgment has been entered and after the expiration of the 6 months' limitation, to amend his complaint by substituting the word "plaintiff" for the word "defendant". Eadie v. Eadie, 44 M 391, 120 P 239 (1911). See Ivanhoff v. Teale, 47 M 115, 130 P 972 (1913).

Attachment Proceeding Amendable: The procuring of an attachment and the steps necessary therefor is a proceeding within the spirit of the Code, and if such proceeding is defective the same may be amended in furtherance of justice like any other proceeding. Wilson v. Barbour, 21 M 176, 53 P 315 (1898); Herbst Importing Co. v. Hogan, 16 M 384, 41 P 135 (1895); Newell v. Whitwell, 16 M 243, 40 P 866 (1895); Muth v. Erwin, 14 M 227, 36 P 43 (1894); Josephi v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1893); Magee v. Fogerty, 6 M 237, 11 P 668 (1886); Langstaff v. Miles, 5 M 554, 6 P 356 (1885); Pierse v. Miles, 5 M 549, 6 P 347 (1885).

Amendment of Void Process: Section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), did not confer power upon the court to amend a void jurisdictional writ or process. Sharman v. Huot, 20 M 555, 52 P 558 (1898), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903); Choate v. Spencer, 13 M 127, 32 P 651 (1893), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

ORIGINAL COMMISSION NOTE

Subdivision (b) is identical with the Federal Rule, except that the words "as may be provided by law" in the last sentence of the proposed rule have been substituted for "Title 28, U.S.C., §1655," and except that the last sentence of the Federal Rule abolishing specified writs as a means of obtaining relief from a judgment is omitted as unnecessary.

COMMISSION NOTE TO AUGUST 1, 1965, AMENDMENT

The purpose of this amendment is to make the Montana practice correspond to practice under the last sentence of R.C.M. 1947, §93-3905 (which was repealed with the adoption of the Rules of Civil Procedure), as construed in Smith v. Collis, 42 Mont. 350, 365-370 (1910). The time within which the motion may be made is shortened, but considered adequate.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: None.

The federal rule measures the time for the motion for reasons (1), (2), and (3) from time the "judgment, order, or proceeding was entered or taken." The Montana rule measures the time from the "date of service of entry of the judgment or order or action taken"; but Rule 77(d), requiring notice of entry, is confined to judgments in actions in which an appearance has been made. This amendment, using the federal rule language adjusted to the requirements of Montana Rule 77(d), is for the purpose of avoiding ambiguity and litigation as to what, if any, time limit is imposed in cases of orders, and proceedings, and judgments where no appearance has been made.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Amendments: The amendment of August 1, 1965, substituted "within 60 days when a defendant has been personally served, whether in lieu of publication or not, calculated from the date of service of notice of entry of the judgment or order or action taken in the proceeding" for "not more than one year after the judgment, order or proceeding was entered or taken" after "for reasons (1), (2), and (3)" in the second sentence; and inserted the third sentence.

The amendment of September 29, 1967, rewrote the second sentence and substituted "required" for "provided" in the last sentence.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

GENERAL

Failure to Answer Complaint Not Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Matthews filed a complaint in a wrongful discharge action, and the summons and complaint with an acknowledgment of service were forwarded to defendant's attorney. The attorney returned the acknowledgment, but the attorney's assistant failed to calendar the answer's due date and misfiled the summons and complaint in a different file. An answer was not timely filed, so Matthews sought and was granted a hearing on a default judgment and damages, but defendant's counsel did not attend the hearing, and a default judgment and damages of $185,000 were entered for Matthews. Defendant moved to set aside the default, but the District Court did not rule on the motion within 60 days, so the motion was considered denied. On appeal, defendant argued that the motion to set aside the default should have been granted on grounds of excusable neglect. However, by the time of the default hearing, the lack of attention to Matthew's complaint was a serious disregard of the judicial process and could not be considered excusable neglect, nor did the situation demonstrate extraordinary circumstances justifying setting aside the default judgment under this rule. Further, the actions of defense counsel did not constitute gross negligence or actual misconduct, and defendant was not completely innocent in the matter, so any neglect of counsel was properly charged to defendant. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment, and the default judgment was affirmed. Matthews v. Don K Chevrolet, 2005 MT 164, 327 M 456, 115 P3d 201 (2005), applying the standard for setting aside a default in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). See also Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984).

Appropriate Standards for Setting Aside Entry of Default and Default Judgment: Defendant failed to respond to a complaint within 20 days, and default was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant sought to set aside the entry of default under the good cause standard provided under Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989). Plaintiff contended that in order to meet the good cause standard, a party would have to meet the higher excusable neglect standard set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). The District Court held that the Blume standard applied and that defendant's neglect was inexcusable, so default judgment was entered. On appeal, the Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the applicable standards. When the issue is the setting aside of a default judgment under this rule, either alone or in conjunction with an entry of default, the appropriate standard is the Blume excusable neglect standard. When the issue is the setting aside of an entry of default under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., as opposed to a default judgment, the appropriate standard is the Cribb good cause standard. This case involved setting aside an entry of default, so the court applied the Cribb standard. Defendant failed to show that its default was not willful, instead professing ignorance in the face of repeated warnings that if no answer was filed, a default would be taken. The Cribb standard also compels consideration of the prejudice to plaintiff and whether defendant had a meritorious defense. Plaintiff had a right to be apprised of defendant's defense in a timely manner, and defendant should have raised those claims in a timely fashion rather than ignore plaintiff's repeated attempts to elicit a responsive pleading. Defendant was correct that the proper standard to be applied in this case was the Cribb standard, but defendant nevertheless failed to show good cause to set aside entry of default under that standard. Thus, even though the District Court applied the wrong standard, it reached the correct result for the wrong reason, and the Supreme Court affirmed the default judgment. Essex Ins. Co. v. Jaycie, Inc., 2004 MT 278, 323 M 231, 99 P3d 651 (2004), followed in Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Abuse of Discretion in Reopening and Amending Final Dissolution Decree Absent Evidence of Fraud or Newly Discovered Evidence: Following judgment in a dissolution proceeding, the husband moved to reopen the case on grounds that the wife's testimony constituted fraud and that the husband had newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. The District Court reopened the case and held that the husband was not responsible for the wife's dental bills, even though the husband had agreed to pay them. The wife appealed. The record showed that the wife used the present tense in answering a question regarding whether she was providing medical coverage for the husband, even though she had terminated coverage on the husband over a year before. However, the deficient question and answer did not rise to the level of fraud because the husband: (1) knew that coverage had been discontinued and failed to object to the inaccurate answer; (2) was not misled by the response; and (3) was not deprived of the opportunity to rebut the testimony or to present his case. Further, he admitted at a postdissolution hearing that he had no new evidence. Thus, the conditions were not sufficient to justify the reopening of the judgment, and the District Court committed reversible error in reopening and amending the final decree. The Supreme Court remanded with instructions to reinstate the final decree. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 211, 322 M 341, 96 P3d 716 (2004).

Failure of Defendants to Monitor Litigation — Relief From Default Judgment Properly Denied: Although default judgments are not favored, litigants nevertheless have a duty to monitor litigation. Here, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment when defendants: (1) knew that litigation was proceeding; (2) knew that a status conference had been scheduled but failed to attend in person or to hire an attorney to appear in their behalf; (3) failed to notify the court or the opposing party of their intention to miss the conference; (4) were aware that service upon the listed post-office box was considered effective service for all matters regarding the litigation; and (5) neglected to notify the court of a change of address. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of 33-18-242 and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under 33-18-242, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a motion under this rule in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. No Abuse of Discretion in Granting Marriage Dissolution Default Judgment Given Failure to Establish Good Cause to Set Aside Default: The wife Florence petitioned for a legal separation to which her husband William did not respond. The District Court subsequently entered a default judgment against William, who appealed. The Supreme Court noted that default judgments are not favored and that a finding of even a slight abuse of discretion warrants setting aside a default judgment if good cause is shown. The court then applied the criteria in In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401 (1993), to determine whether William established good cause, which include whether: (1) the defaulting party proceeded with diligence; (2) the defaulting party's neglect was excusable; (3) the defaulting party has a meritorious defense to the claim; and (4) the judgment, if permitted to stand, will injure the defaulting party. William met the first and third criteria, but his neglect was not excusable, nor could he show that default would result in injury. Having failed to meet the McDonald good cause criteria, the court declined to address possible relief under this rule, and default judgment was affirmed. Deficiency Judgment Embraced Within Assignment Order Seeking to Enforce That Judgment — Appeal of Assignment Order Divesting District Court of Jurisdiction to Address Motion to Set Aside Deficiency Judgment: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, and on the same day moved to set aside the deficiency judgment pursuant to this rule, claiming that the judgment was improperly based on the value of the property from the Sheriff's sale rather than the fair market value of the property. The District Court declined to address Andersen's motion under this rule on grounds that the appeal of the assignment order divested the court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. The assignment order and the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment were inextricably intertwined. The motion under this rule challenged the validity of the very deficiency judgment on which the appealed assignment order was based and that the assignment order sought to enforce. The District Court did not err in finding that appeal of the assignment order divested the court of its jurisdiction to address the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), following McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Change in Decisional Law Not Extraordinary Circumstance to Allow Reopening Law of Case: Calcaterra's initial wrongful death action failed because Calcaterra did not raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether her husband's employer caused his death through an intentional act or omission. Relying on Schmidt v. St., 286 M 98, 951 P2d 23 (1997), the Supreme Court affirmed in Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), citing the proposition that proof of negligence was insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy provided in the Workers' Compensation Act. However, in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), the Supreme Court subsequently clarified the definition of intentional and malicious within the context of the Act, holding that the term should be defined according to the plain meaning in 39-71-413 and the definition of actual malice in 27-1-221. Calcaterra then moved for reconsideration under this rule, contending that Sherner changed the definition with respect to the exclusivity provision and created extraordinary circumstances justifying an exception to the doctrine of the law of the case and the reopening of the 1998 case. The Supreme Court disagreed. Both Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), and In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726 (1986), support the conclusion that a change in decisional law subsequent to a final judgment does not constitute extraordinary circumstances that would allow reopening of that judgment. Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 2001 MT 193, 306 M 249, 32 P3d 764 (2001).

Motion for Relief From Judgment Barred by Res Judicata — Sanctions Appropriate: McLaughlins moved for relief from judgment under this rule, but the motion was denied by the District Court. On appeal, McLaughlins raised 14 different reasons why the District Court's judgment following remand was void. The thrust of their argument was that the District Court failed to follow statutory law when awarding punitive damages against them. In denying the motion under this rule, the District Court noted that the issues raised by the motion had been appealed three times to the Supreme Court and affirmed each time in noncite opinions and held that the motion under this rule was dilatory in nature and without substance in law or fact. On this fourth appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, finding that all of the issues raised by the McLaughlins in their motion under this rule were barred by res judicata because they either had been previously litigated or could have been litigated in prior proceedings. Further, because the latest appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, it was frivolous pursuant to Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), so sanctions in the form of reasonable costs and attorney fees were ordered to be added to the judgment against McLaughlins on remand. Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662, 56 St. Rep. 1276 (1999). See also Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), Searight v. Failure to Submit Available Evidence Precluding Setting Aside of Judgment: At a 1995 hearing on child support, a father was defiantly uncooperative in providing documentation of any kind regarding his finances, assets, the provision of insurance for the children, or past child support payments. At a 1998 hearing on suspension of his driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses, he claimed that he should be allowed to present the evidence that he refused to provide earlier. The District Court declined to reopen the 1995 hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed. If there was anything that prevented the father from a fair submission of the controversy, it was his own defiance of the justice system. His failure to avail himself of the opportunity to present the appropriate information in 1995 and his desire to retroactively argue a factual issue in the case were not sufficient reasons to justify setting aside the judgment. His motion for a new trial was properly denied, and in the interests of finality of litigation, the Supreme Court declined to upset the judgment. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996).

Extension of Time Deadline by Rule Inapplicable to Administrative Law Judge's Decision — Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper: The mother petitioned for judicial review of an order by an administrative law judge regarding her child support action. The Child Support Enforcement Division moved to dismiss the petition on grounds that it was not timely filed pursuant to 2-4-702 and that, as a result, the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The mother filed a motion under Rule 6(b), M.R.Civ.P., seeking an enlargement of time in which to file the petition, asserting that her failure to file the petition within the 30-day deadline was the result of excusable neglect. The motion was denied. The mother then filed for relief under this rule, and that motion was also denied. The mother appealed from the denial of both motions. The Supreme Court held that Rule 6(b), by its terms, applies only to acts required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure or by court order, but does not apply to acts required within a statutory framework, such as that established in 2-4-702. Thus, the rule does not apply, either by its terms or by analogy, to petitions for judicial review of administrative proceedings because applying the rule in that manner would extend the jurisdiction of District Courts beyond that allowed by the statute. Further, this rule does not provide a basis for relief in this case because the District Court was automatically deprived of jurisdiction once the 30-day period expired, and this rule cannot be applied to revest jurisdiction where none existed in the first place. Dismissal of the mother's petition was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court order was affirmed. In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999).

Summary Judgment Improper Before Meaningful Discovery Conducted: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence, which had come to light during the summary judgment hearing. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motions, reasoning that the evidence could have been discovered prior to entry of judgment through the exercise of due diligence. In this case, judgment was the result of a summary proceeding, not the result of a trial on the merits. The record on appeal revealed that First Security's motion for summary judgment was filed before Ranch Recovery had even filed its answer and counterclaim, but there was no indication in the record that any formal discovery had been conducted prior to entry of summary judgment. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to characterize the failure to discover this particular evidence as failure to exercise due diligence for the discovery and presentation of evidence at trial. Ranch Recovery met its burden of establishing that the newly discovered evidence was not "newly discovered" for lack of diligence. The District Court erred in refusing to consider Ranch Recovery's motion to reconsider. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999), following Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994). See also Gregorian v. Izvestia, 871 F2d 1515 (9th Cir. 1989).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Later Finding of Unconscionability Proper Upon Failure to Make Initial Determination of Conscionability: Wife contended that a dissolution agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law because: (1) her understanding of English was limited; (2) both parties were initially represented by the same attorney; and (3) the agreement did not include a statement of the parties' incomes, property valuations, or child support calculations. Husband maintained that the trial court was estopped from finding unconscionability because of its initial finding that the agreement was not unconscionable. However, in this case, the District Judge did not make a specific inquiry into conscionability because the parties had reached a separation agreement. The Supreme Court held that when a District Court fails to make an initial investigation of conscionability of an agreement, it is not estopped from later finding that the agreement is unconscionable if the decree adopting the agreement is set aside pursuant to subsection (3) of this rule. In re Marriage of Gudmundson, 1998 MT 54, 288 M 70, 955 P2d 648, 55 St. Rep. 226 (1998).

Past Available Records Not Newly Discovered Evidence Warranting New Trial: State Medical Oxygen contended that a new trial was warranted based on newly discovered evidence consisting of two sets of records, but conceded that the evidence was in its possession prior to oral arguments on the summary judgment motion. The evidence could thus not be characterized as newly discovered in the context of this rule. Given the lack of effort on State Medical Oxygen's part to bring the evidence to the court's attention and its failure to request additional time prior to resolution of the summary judgment motion, coupled with the fact that the evidence was not truly newly discovered, it was not error for the trial court to deny a motion for relief from judgment in this case. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 267 M 340, 883 P2d 1241, 51 St. Rep. 1063 (1994). Newly Discovered Evidence of Federally Recommended Highway Guardrail Upgrade — New Trial: Following an automobile collision with a guardrail in which his daughter was injured and his wife and another child were killed, Fjelstad sued the state for negligent guardrail design, installation, and maintenance. The state denied negligence and alleged that its conduct with regard to the guardrail conformed to the applicable standard of care at all times prior to the accident. Following trial, in which the state was held not liable, Fjelstad received additional evidence in the form of recommendations in federal documents regarding upgrade of guardrail installations during overlay projects. The existence of the documents was known by the state prior to trial but not disclosed. The District Court granted Fjelstad's motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was not cumulative and that it did not simply tend to impeach the state's witnesses. Because the newly discovered evidence would probably produce a different result on retrial, the motion for a new trial was properly granted. Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994), followed in First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Proof — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court properly granted defendant summary judgment on a collateral estoppel defense and properly ruled on nonadmissibility of a statement that, at most, would have constituted newly discovered evidence and that plaintiff failed to establish could not have been discovered earlier with due diligence. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Settlement Agreement From Parties' First Divorce Not to Be Set Aside Sua Sponte by Trial Court: The parties entered into a property settlement agreement that was incorporated into their divorce decree in 1989. Seven months later, they remarried; their marriage was again dissolved in 1993. The lower court found that the parties had not performed or complied with the terms of the prior decree and that they were estopped from asserting any rights under the previous agreement. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to declare the agreement null and void because neither party had requested that the agreement be set aside and there had been no finding that the agreement was unconscionable. In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Relatively Minor Disputes in Property Valuation — Failure to Appear — Relief Not Granted: The Supreme Court will not mandate relief pursuant to this rule over relatively minor disputes in property valuation or identification when a party does not appear at hearing to present evidence concerning those matters. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Newly Discovered Evidence of Stock Ownership — Judgment Affirmed by Finding Evidence Would Not Change Result of Trial: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. Evidence at trial consisted of confusing and incomplete evidence of stock transactions. Following a judgment for Cowles, Sheeline moved for relief from judgment on the basis of newly discovered evidence consisting of stock records found in an unlikely place upon moving from her home in Boston. The District Court found a lack of due diligence and that the new evidence would not have changed the result of trial and denied the motion after expiration of the 45-day limit provided in Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court determined that the District Court should have found due diligence but after a review of the new evidence, concurred with the District Court that although some of the evidence was not produced at trial, it was cumulative and duplicative with introduced evidence and would not have altered the outcome of the trial. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Failure of Bonding Company to Tender Defense to Known Suit — No Excusable Neglect or Other Reason Justifying Relief: American Casualty Company provided a construction bond to a general contractor, C&D Contractors, for an expansion of the Billings city hall. Because subcontractor Empire Lath & Plaster, Inc., was not paid for all of its work for C&D, Empire submitted a notice of claim against the bond to C&D, Billings, and American Casualty. Over a month later, because it had received no reply to its notice of claim, Empire filed suit on the bond against American Casualty. The claims analyst receiving the complaint sent it to C&D and tendered a defense, but no response was received from C&D. A default judgment was entered against American Casualty, and the District Court refused to set aside the default. Distinguishing Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990), the Supreme Court held that the failure of American Casualty to respond to the complaint, when it knew of the pending action and knew it had received no response from C&D to the tender of defense, was not excusable neglect, nor was there any other reason to relieve American Casualty from the default. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Empire Lath & Plaster, Inc. v. Am. Cas. Co., 256 M 413, 847 P2d 276, 50 St. Rep. 128 (1993).

Statements Regarding Value of Partnership Assets No Barrier to Presentation of Evidence — New Trial Denied: Wife argued for a new trial based on conflicting information compiled after trial regarding the value of the marital estate. With the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence could have been discovered prior to trial. Husband's trial statements concerning partnership assets did not materially thwart wife's ability to present her case, indicating lack of fraud, so a new trial was unwarranted. In re Marriage of Barnes, 251 M 334, 825 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 67 (1992).

Failure to Discuss Grounds for Relief Until Reply Brief — Review of Order of Denial Only: Plaintiffs devoted the majority of their initial brief to arguing the merits of the court's grant of summary judgment to defendant and did not even discuss the grounds for relief under this rule until their reply brief. While an order denying a motion under this rule is final and appealable, the appeal brings up for review only the order of the denial itself and not the underlying judgment. Reconsideration of an earlier motion on its merits cannot be the subject of a motion under this rule. Therefore, failure to raise the merits of the grant of summary judgment with a timely appeal or request for consideration precluded Supreme Court review. Donovan v. Graff, 248 M 21, 808 P2d 491, 48 St. Rep. 303 (1991).

Belated Expert Opinion Constituting Newly Discovered Evidence: When presented with the question of whether an opinion of a trial expert, offered for the first time after final judgment and based on a fact asserted by the plaintiff and within her knowledge prior to judgment, constituted newly discovered evidence, the court declined to distinguish between opinion evidence and other kinds of evidence because the opinion evidence met the tests ordinarily required of newly discovered evidence. The failure to produce the evidence at trial must not have been caused by the moving party's lack of due diligence. The evidence must be admissible, credible, and of such a material and controlling nature as will probably change the outcome. Halse v. Murphy, 237 M 509, 774 P2d 418, 46 St. Rep. 1009 (1989), distinguished, on grounds of failure to exercise due diligence in producing required expert testimony, in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994).

Standards Applicable to Setting Aside Default Entry and Default Judgment: The default entry is simply an interlocutory order that in itself determines no rights or remedies, whereas the default judgment is a final judgment that terminates the litigation and decides the dispute. Therefore, the "good cause" standard for setting aside a default entry under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., is more flexible and lenient than the "excusable neglect" standard for setting aside a default judgment under this rule. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Evidence Available but Not Presented — Motion Denied: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for a new trial or, in the alternative, amending the judgment when evidence claimed to be newly discovered could have been available but was not presented at trial. Goodover v. Lindey's, Inc., 232 M 302, 757 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 1068 (1988), affirmed in 264 M 449, 872 P2d 764, 51 St. Rep. 317 (1994). Lindey's, Inc.'s attempt to quiet title to a newly disputed parcel was held to be res judicata, the matter having already been adjudged and affirmed in this case, in Lindey's, Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 489, 872 P2d 767, 51 St. Rep. 359 (1994).

Judgment Final — Law of the Case — Issues Outside Scope of Original Action: Plaintiff moved for relitigation of contractual issues on which judgment was final and also moved for consideration of new contractual issues that had arisen after judgment. All issues previously ruled upon were subject to the law of the case doctrine and could not be relitigated. See Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 202 M 46, 656 P2d 807, 39 St. Rep. 2318 (1982); on remand, Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985). Contractual issues arising after the judgment were outside the scope of the original action. Rule 60(b)(5), M.R.Civ.P., did not give the court power to preside over controversies throughout the life of the contract. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 223 M 8, 723 P2d 954, 43 St. Rep. 1489 (1986).

Marital Assets Not Considered Child Support — Modification of Payments: Property that was clearly denominated personal property in a division of marital assets may not later be claimed for inclusion as child support simply because it is used primarily for a child. Modification of payments that are part of a property settlement agreement is governed by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), rather than the rules for modification of support in 40-4-208. In re Marriage of Conklin/Clark, 221 M 30, 716 P2d 629, 43 St. Rep. 611 (1986).

Corrective Order — Not Modification of Judgment: In an action to modify a final decree of dissolution distributing a marital estate, the trial court, under the authority of Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., issued a corrective order to amend the judgment to express what was actually decided and to grant the relief originally intended. The order was not a modification of judgment subject to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The court did not have a change of mind or correct a judicial error. In re Marriage of Cannon, 215 M 272, 697 P2d 901, 42 St. Rep. 348 (1985).

Motion for Summary Judgment — Judge's Discretion to Allow Late Briefs and Arguments: The District Court did not err by allowing defendants to submit briefs and argue plaintiffs' summary judgment motion late upon learning why defendants' counsel originally overlooked the matter. Although there are no Montana cases on point, the Supreme Court analogized the judge's discretion to set aside judgments under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., as basis for judges' discretion to allow late briefs and arguments. Todd v. Berner, 214 M 263, 693 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 2462 (1984).

Motion to Change Venue After Default Judgment Entered — Denied as Untimely — Proper Course Suggested: A motion for a change of venue may not be made after judgment has been entered. Thus, in this case defendant's motion to change venue was correctly denied as untimely because a default divorce judgment had been granted. Defendant's proper course of action should have been to move for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P.; then, if granted, she should attempt to withdraw her initial appearance and request a change of venue. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 208 M 83, 675 P2d 392, 41 St. Rep. 183 (1984).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Reopening Proper: Four days after the original hearing on attorney fees was held, counsel for respondent, the prevailing party, moved to reopen the hearing pursuant to this rule. The basis for the motion was that time records which had been misfiled and could not be located prior to the original hearing had been found. Respondent claimed this entitled him to a reopening of the hearing under the "newly discovered evidence" provision of Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court reopened the hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding no abuse of discretion by the District Court. Nicholson v. Cannon, 207 M 476, 674 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 86 (1984).

Order Conditionally Setting Aside Prior Decree Found to Be Abuse of Discretion: Where the District Court entered a decree in 1981 finding the property settlement agreement of the parties not unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-201(2) and in 1983 issued an order stating that the property settlement agreement would be set aside if not complied with by the husband by a specific date, the Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in making the 1983 order. The 1981 decree and property settlement could, under the rationale of Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981), be modified only if the conditions specified in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., were found to exist. Because the court issued no findings of fact indicating conditions that justified the reopening of the 1981 decree, the court abused its discretion in making the 1983 order. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Marital Separation Agreement Not a Judgment Amendable for Failure of Consideration: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Untimely Motion for New Trial — Equivalent to Motion for Relief From Judgment: A motion for new trial under Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., that is not timely may be considered as a motion under this rule when it states the proper grounds for relief. Nomenclature is unimportant. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Relief Under Subsections Exclusive: If a party seeks relief under one subsection of Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., then it cannot also claim relief under the general catchall subsection, 60(b)(6). Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981), followed in Koch v. School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981).

Quiet Title — Collateral Attack on Judgments — Reasonable Diligence — Invalid Service — Jurisdiction: While it is a general rule that a judgment cannot be attacked in a collateral action, such attack is permissible if the first judgment is void for lack of jurisdiction. If service of process is improperly made, the court acquires no jurisdiction over that party and it may collaterally attack the judgment. "Reasonable diligence" was not used by appellants in the prior action to locate individuals to be served under Rule 4(D)(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., because they had dealt with such individuals before and should have been able to contact them and the Secretary of State had the name and address of the corporate agent and director on file. Therefore, service upon the Secretary of State did not confer jurisdiction and collateral attack was proper. Russell Realty v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106, 49 St. Rep. 1162 (1992).

Jurisdiction Not Retained by District Court After Appeal Taken: When petitioner moved the District Court to set aside its judgment and thereafter filed a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, the District Court properly asserted that it had no authority to rule on petitioner's motion.

Upon a proper appeal being taken, jurisdiction of the cause passes to the Supreme Court, subject to the right of the District Court to correct clerical errors. N. Plains Resource Council v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 184 M 466, 603 P2d 684 (1979), followed in Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2003 MT 368, 319 M 105, 82 P3d 896 (2003).

Evidence Submitted to Be Timely and in Proper Form — Relief From Judgment Denied: Plaintiff submitted a letter from the State Compensation Insurance Fund in support of a motion to set aside the judgment. The letter was improperly included in appellant's brief for the following reasons: (1) it was not presented in the proper affidavit form as required by Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P.; (2) the opinion set forth in the letter could easily have been presented in timely fashion in opposition to respondent's motion for summary judgment rather than subsequently in support of a motion to set aside the verdict which had been granted on the merits; and (3) the letter sets forth a generalized opinion offered without either foundation or regard to the facts of the case. Since the letter was not in proper form it cannot be considered under Rule 803(a), Montana Rules of Evidence. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150 (1979).

Amendments to Decree: Amendments to a decree to reflect plaintiff's true interest in property are permissible if the amendments make the meaning of a judgment or decree more clear and will not act inequitably or to the prejudice of a party. Doble v. Talbott, 180 M 166, 589 P2d 994 (1979).

Setting Aside Satisfaction of Judgment: By giving effect to the plain language used in Rule 60(b) and considering the rule in its entirety, the court held that the intent of the drafters was that a satisfaction of judgment could not be set aside by a motion under this rule. The appropriate proceeding was an independent action in equity. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 179 M 1, 585 P2d 1296 (1978).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Motion Properly Denied: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law, and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which at best was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977), followed in Carbon Co. v. Schwend, 212 M 474, 688 P2d 1251, 41 St. Rep. 1874 (1984), and in In re Marriage of Burner, 246 M 394, 803 P2d 1099, 48 St. Rep. 7 (1991).

No Substitute for Appeal: Defendants who had filed an appeal but never perfected it, could not use this rule to raise an issue which had been presented at the original proceedings, or to relitigate matters previously determined. Sheridan v. Martinsen, 164 M 383, 523 P2d 1392 (1974).

Adherence to Time Limits: Default judgment should not have been set aside when time extension limits of Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., were exceeded. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Finding Equivalent to Denial of Relief: Finding that "The evidence presented does not warrant any setting aside of the default judgment. . ." was equivalent to a denial of relief under this rule. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Meritorious Defense — No Affidavit Required: Answer and counterclaim need not be verified when submitted with motion under this rule which stated generally that there was a meritorious defense, and there is no longer a requirement for an affidavit of merit. Keller v. Hanson, 157 M 307, 485 P2d 705 (1971), followed in Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993).

Motion for Modification of Paternity Decree — Requirements of Rules Not Satisfied — Jurisdiction Precluded: Where a husband filed a "motion for modification of divorce decree" more than 4 years after the divorce in an attempt to relitigate the issue of his paternity of the children of the parties, the District Court was without jurisdiction to hear the petition. As the petition on its face did not seek relief under Rules 59 or 60, M.R.Civ.P., and was based on facts which predated the original finding of paternity, which finding was not appealed, the District Court had no jurisdiction to modify its previous order. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Scope of Rule — Inaccurate Language Not Covered: Contention that default judgment was erroneous on its face and should be set aside because the judgment and an exhibit attached to the complaint contained inaccurate and erroneous language was outside scope of rule and could not be raised thereunder. Uffleman v. Labbit, 152 M 238, 448 P2d 690 (1968).

Failure to Request Amendment — Appeal Precluded: Where proper notice of hearing on application for judgment of divorce was given defendant in accordance with Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P., and no relief different from that demanded in the complaint was granted in violation of Rule 54(c), an appeal on those grounds was dismissed by the Supreme Court on its own motion where no application to set aside the default or judgment was made under this rule. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 148 M 195, 418 P2d 859 (1966).

Service Upon Corporation — Proper Agent: The doctrine of ostensible agency appears to have no application when it becomes involved with the question whether service of process has been legally made upon a "managing or general agent". Further, service upon a former employee of a company was not service upon the company itself and default judgment was vacated and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

Adequate Showing Required: The party applying for relief must make a proper and adequate showing, wherein he sets forth the particular facts and circumstances constituting the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect upon which he relies. White v. Connor, 138 M 1, 354 P2d 722 (1960).

Quashing of Writ as Amendable Judgment: Where order sustained motion to quash a Writ of Certiorari and dismissed action, it amounted to a judgment which could be set aside on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, but the applicant could not, without vacating the judgment, file an amended application for the Writ. State ex rel. Walker v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 120 M 413, 187 P2d 1013 (1947), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Legal Conclusions Insufficient — Facts to Be Shown: On motion to set aside a default, the applicant must make a statement of facts from which the court can determine whether the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect urged is within the contemplation of the statute, the bare statement of the conclusion that the default occurred by mistake, etc., being insufficient to move the discretion of the court. Madson v. Petrie Tractor & Equip. Co., 106 M 382, 77 P2d 1038 (1938); Robinson v. Petersen, 63 M 247, 206 P 1092 (1922).

Application to Probate Proceedings: Notwithstanding the former provision that a decree directing the distribution of the property of an estate is conclusive unless reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal, the District Court may set it aside on a showing by an aggrieved party that it had been taken against him through his mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. State ex rel. O'Neil v. District Court, 96 M 393, 30 P2d 815 (1934).

Adequate Remedy at Law — Failure to Exercise as Bar to Equity: Where a party seeking relief from a judgment has an adequate remedy at law by motion in the original case, equity will not interpose in his favor while that remedy is available, nor thereafter if he does not show a sufficient excuse for not having resorted to it at the proper time, and where he has once resorted to the legal remedy and was denied it because of his own fault he is barred from relief by equity on grounds which were then available or which might have been urged. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929), followed in Krein v. Heineman, 226 M 474, 736 P2d 481, 44 St. Rep. 813 (1987).

Execution on Judgment Set Aside: A judgment may be set aside on motion even after it has been satisfied by sale under execution, under proper circumstances. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Relief From Default Limited by Statute: One desiring to be relieved from a default must bring his case within one of the grounds mentioned in the statute. Even then relief may not be demanded as a matter of right, the application being addressed to the sound legal discretion of the District Court, with the exercise of which the Supreme Court will not interfere except upon a showing of manifest abuse thereof. Mihelich v. Butte Elec. Ry., 85 M 604, 281 P 540 (1929).

Waiver of Right to Hearing: Where, in an action against a county, the County Attorney joined with the plaintiff in submitting the matter to the District Court without further notice and without argument, he waived the county's right to its day in court and the District Court was justified in disposing of the matter without a hearing. By denying a motion for relief from the decision, the District Court impliedly found that the County Attorney did so waive a hearing. Huntington v. Yellowstone County, 80 M 20, 257 P 1041 (1927).

Application of Six-Month Limitation: The limitation of 6 months (reduced by the 1965 amendment) prescribed by section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), within which a default judgment may be vacated, referred to defaults entered through mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect only and therefore had no application to a case where lack of power in the court to enter the judgment appeared upon the face of the judgment roll. Hodson v. O'Keeffe, 71 M 322, 229 P 722 (1924).

Purpose of Provision: The purpose of the statute permitting relief from a judgment is to further the administration of justice so that the very right upon the merits may be determined, and to that end to grant relief from excusable neglect in cases where diligence is shown in applying promptly for the relief sought, provided the opposite party be not deprived of any advantage to which he may properly be entitled. Lovell v. Willis, 46 M 581, 129 P 1052 (1913);

Greene v. Mont. Brewing Co., 32 M 102, 79 P 693 (1905); Collier v. Fitzpatrick, 22 M 553, 57 P 181 (1899).

MISTAKE, INADVERTENCE, SURPRISE, OR EXCUSABLE NEGLECT

Busy Work Schedule or Season Insufficient: The mere press of a busy schedule or a busy work season does not constitute excusable neglect necessary to overturn a default judgment under this rule. Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Forgetfulness Insufficient: Failure to enter an appearance through forgetfulness because of other more important business is inexcusable. Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005); Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981); Schalk v. Bresnahan, 138 M 129, 354 P2d 735 (1960).

Failure of Pro Se Litigant to Include Filing Fee Considered Excusable Neglect Warranting Reversal of Default Judgment: A Texas defendant, acting pro se, filed a timely answer and special appearance in response to plaintiff's complaint and summons, but failed to include the $65 filing fee, which was not mentioned in the summons. By the time that defendant learned that a filing fee was required to be submitted with the response, plaintiff had already applied for and received a default judgment without notice to defendant. Defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that defendant had acted with diligence and that the failure to appear was not due to inexcusable neglect or disrespect for the court, but that defendant mistakenly assumed that if the instructions in the summons were followed, the answer would be filed. Defendant satisfied the good cause criteria in Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., and because defendant's default was not willful, the neglect was excusable under this rule. The District Court's refusal, by operation of law, to set aside the default judgment was at a minimum a slight abuse of discretion. Thus, because of the policy to resolve issues on the merits, the Supreme Court reversed the default judgment and remanded for further proceedings. Sun Mtn. Sports, Inc., v. Gore, 2004 MT 56, 320 M 196, 85 P3d 1286 (2004).

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in this rule, the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

Summary Judgment Improper Before Meaningful Discovery Conducted: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence, which had come to light during the summary judgment hearing. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motions, reasoning that the evidence could have been discovered prior to entry of judgment through the exercise of due diligence. In this case, judgment was the result of a summary proceeding, not the result of a trial on the merits. The record on appeal revealed that First Security's motion for summary judgment was filed before Ranch Recovery had even filed its answer and counterclaim, but there was no indication in the record that any formal discovery had been conducted prior to entry of summary judgment. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to characterize the failure to discover this particular evidence as failure to exercise due diligence for the discovery and presentation of evidence at trial. Ranch Recovery met its burden of establishing that the newly discovered evidence was not "newly discovered" for lack of diligence. The District Court erred in refusing to consider Ranch Recovery's motion to reconsider. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999), following Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994). See also Gregorian v. Izvestia, 871 F2d 1515 (9th Cir. 1989).

Party Misled by Attorney's Actions — Extraordinary Circumstances Warranting Relief Under Rule: The trial court granted defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Nearly 13 months later, plaintiffs moved to set aside the dismissal order pursuant to this rule because their attorney had failed to make them aware that the case had been dismissed. This rule is an exception to the doctrine of finality of judgments. In the case of an attorney's mistake, inadvertence, misconduct, or neglect, either subsection (1) or (6) of this rule may be applicable, depending on the facts and the nature and seriousness of the mistake, inadvertence, misconduct, or neglect involved. Under ordinary circumstances, subsection (1) will apply. However, when the moving party can meèt the higher burden of demonstrating extraordinary circumstances, gross neglect, or actual misconduct and of demonstrating that the client was blameless and acted to set aside the default within a reasonable time, then subsection (6) is available. In this case, plaintiffs' former attorney intentionally misled them into believing that their case was proceeding and concealed the fact that the case had been dismissed. Conduct of such an egregious nature falls within the "any other reason" clause of subsection (6). The District Court properly granted plaintiffs' motion to set aside the default judgment, and because subsection (6) applied, the motion was considered reasonably timely even though filed 13 months after judgment. Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996), following In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726 (1986). Karlen was followed in Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997), and Bahm v. Southworth, 2000 MT 244, 301 M 434, 10 P3d 99, 57 St. Rep. 1030 (2000).

Pro Se Dissolution — Defendant's Mistaken Assumption That Response to Complaint Filed With Court — Default Set Aside: After Ranae's attorney filed a petition for dissolution and had a copy served upon her husband Robert, Robert responded by sending a pro se response to the petition to Ranae's attorney. Robert failed to file a copy of the response with the District Court because he misunderstood the summons. After receiving Robert's response, Ranae's attorney filed a note of issue with the District Court. Later, upon discovery that a response had not been filed with the District Court, Ranae's attorney filed a praecipe for default, and a default judgment was granted. The Supreme Court held that Robert was mistaken when he failed to file his response with the District Court and that he was diligent in moving to set aside the default once he discovered the error. The Supreme Court therefore set aside the default and remanded the case to the District Court, noting that Ranae's attorney did nothing to correct Robert's mistake once the attorney discovered that Robert had defaulted, notwithstanding the attorney's filing of the note of issue. In re Marriage of Broere, 263 M 207, 867 P2d 1092, 51 St. Rep. 17 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Mistake of Law Insufficient: A mistake as to the law is not the mistake that will justify relief, and ignorance of the law is not an excuse for a default. In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 1411 (1993); Donovan v. Graff, 248 M 21, 808 P2d 491, 48 St. Rep. 303 (1991); Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Gallatin County, 84 M 98, 274 P 288 (1929); Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914); Willoburn Ranch Co. v. Yegen, 45 M 254, 122 P 915 (1912); Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910); Mantle v. Casey, 31 M 408, 78 P 591 (1904).

Untimely Motion:

A motion to set aside a default judgment made 165 days after entry of judgment was not timely made under the rule, and there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion. Bd. of Directors of Edelweiss Owners' Ass'n v. McIntosh, 251 M 144, 822 P2d 1080, 48 St. Rep. 1131 (1991).

A motion to set aside a default judgment made 118 days after judgment was entered is not timely and may not be granted. Elk Run Ranch v. Green Line Implement Co., 205 M 413, 668 P2d 258, 40 St. Rep. 1397 (1983).

A judgment may be set aside because of excusable neglect under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, where the party seeking relief was personally served, motion for such relief must be made within 60 days from entry of judgment. Where party here seeking relief waited until 231 days after judgment was entered, relief is precluded. Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517, 39 St. Rep. 130 (1982).

When defendant's motion to set aside default judgment in a divorce proceeding was filed approximately 6 months after the default decree was entered, the decree should not have been set aside for excusable neglect. Olson v. Olson, 175 M 444, 574 P2d 1004 (1978).

Slight Abuse Sufficient to Reverse Order Refusing to Set Aside Default Judgment: The plaintiff initiated a wrongful termination suit against her former employer, an out-of-state insurance company. A copy of the complaint was sent to the insurer by the Commissioner of Insurance, and when no answer was received, the plaintiff was awarded a default judgment. Thereafter, the defendant moved to have the judgment set aside, stating that although the complaint had been received by its mail room, the complaint had been lost before it ever reached anyone in the legal department. The lower court denied the motion. The Supreme Court held that the lower court's ruling could be set aside upon a showing of slight abuse of discretion. The court held that the facts showed that the defendant's neglect was excusable. Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 882 (1990), followed in Waldher v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 282 M 59, 935 P2d 1101, 54 St. Rep. 241 (1997).

Defendant Not Understanding Procedural Requirement: A pro se defendant failed to file an affidavit in opposition to the plaintiff's summary judgment motion. The defendant moved the lower court to reconsider its grant of the motion, arguing that he had not understood the requirement to file an opposing affidavit. The Supreme Court held that a lack of understanding of procedural requirements was not grounds under this rule for reconsideration. Taylor v. Honnerlaw, 242 M 365, 790 P2d 996, 47 St. Rep. 790 (1990).

No Basis for Discretionary Dismissal After Motion Withdrawn — Mistake or Inadvertence in Involuntary Dismissal: In a wrongful discharge action, petitioner filed a complaint on October 24, 1985, and on December 12, 1986, the state moved to dismiss for failure to prosecute, pursuant to Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. On December 31, 1986, the state withdrew its motion based on an agreement that the claim would be held in abeyance until resolution of a companion case. However, on January 6, 1987, the District Court entered an order of dismissal but failed to serve either party with notice of dismissal. On January 13, 1988, the District Court ignored its own order of dismissal and held a hearing regarding disputed discovery. Both parties proceeded with discovery until counsel for respondent discovered the order of dismissal while reviewing the court file. Petitioner then moved for relief under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings after finding that: (1) Rule 41(b) provides no basis for a discretionary dismissal after the motion to dismiss is withdrawn; (2) the order of dismissal was either a mistake or inadvertent as contemplated by this rule; and (3) appellant was not personally notified, so relief was appropriate. Diemert v. St., 242 M 127, 788 P2d 1355, 47 St. Rep. 633 (1990).

Failure of Attorney to Read Findings, Conclusions, and Order Not Excusable Neglect: Defendant prevailed in a case regarding a real estate transaction. The trial court addressed reciprocal award of attorney fees in its findings, conclusions, and order and set a hearing to determine fees. Plaintiff's attorney failed to read the findings, to notice the date of the hearing, or to appear at the hearing. Defendant was subsequently allowed to present his claim for fees and costs. The District Court properly found that the attorney's failure to carefully read the findings, conclusions, and order was not excusable neglect. Watson v. Fultz, 239 M 364, 782 P2d 361, 46 St. Rep. 1751 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991).

Defendant's Financial Hardship — Failure to Pay Attorney: The defendant's financial hardship and failure to pay the advance costs and fee retainer required by her attorney, which resulted in the attorney's failure to file an appearance, did not support a finding of excusable neglect. The actions of both the defendant and her attorney contributed to entry of the default order. The attorney's neglect is attributable to the client defendant. Myers v. All W. Transp., 235 M 233, 766 P2d 864, 45 St. Rep. 2345 (1988).

Corporate Neglect Inexcusable: In attempting to prove excusable neglect for failure to appear, it was not sufficient for a company to plead forgetfulness, inattention to pertinent documents, the resignation of a company officer, the taking of a summer vacation by another company officer, and the press of other, more important business. Siewing v. Pearson Co., 226 M 458, 736 P2d 120, 44 St. Rep. 800 (1987), followed in Myers v. All W. Transp., 235 M 233, 766 P2d 864, 45 St. Rep. 2345 (1988), and Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 278 M 135, 923 P2d 550, 53 St. Rep. 871 (1996).

Failure to Read Mail — Excusable Neglect: District Court properly refused to grant defendants' motion to set aside a default judgment entered January 11, 1985, when defendants' attorney had failed to read until February 12 mail received in his office on December 20, 1984, containing letter and copy of complaint and summons served on defendants on December 5. Attorney's neglect is attributable to defendants when they were not diligent in checking on the suit. Griffin v. Scott, 218 M 410, 710 P2d 1337, 42 St. Rep. 1695 (1985).

Neglect of Attorney Attributable to Client: When defendant's attorney received notices and talked on the phone on behalf of his clients but failed to do anything in response to numerous requests by opposing counsel and continued to postpone preparation and filing of a pleading, the attorney's procrastination was a type of neglect which was properly attributable to a client and did not constitute abandonment, which would excuse neglect. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in District Court's conclusion that the attorney's conduct was not excusable neglect. Paxson v. Rice, 217 M 521, 706 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1355 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991).

Effect of Stipulation Based on Mistake in Interpretation of Law: At entry of judgment the District Court permitted entry of a stipulation that apportioned attorney fees between the parties on the basis of an incorrect interpretation of the law. The parties agreed that attorney fees are costs in mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure actions. It was error for the District Court to refuse to alter or amend the judgment upon timely application under Rules 59(g) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. A judgment by stipulation is as binding as any judgment or verdict, no more or less. The court was responsible for a correct application of the law in accepting the stipulation and in later ruling on whether to alter or amend the judgment thereby entered. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985).

Default Preventable by Attorney — Client Not Absolutely Liable for Attorney's Neglect: It appears from a review of the record that attorney for appellants could have easily acted to prevent entry of default and default judgment. However, the court has moved away from the rule that a client is absolutely responsible for attorney's neglect. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984). Furthermore, the court will not overturn a District Court order setting aside a default unless the order amounts to a manifest abuse of discretion. There are, in the affidavit of appellants' counsel, grounds to overturn the default, and that order must stand. Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590, 41 St. Rep. 2521 (1984).

Standard of Review — Neglect of Attorney: The Supreme Court held that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to set aside a default judgment when the defendants were completely abandoned by their attorney (after he made a general appearance on behalf of the clients who had neither been served with process nor authorized him to so act), proceeded with diligence to rectify the court's action, and alleged a potential defense to the action. The Supreme Court determined that, under the facts of the case, it would be unconscionable to apply the general rule charging the client with the attorney's neglect. The Supreme Court clarified which standard of review applies in default cases: (1) when a trial court has granted a motion to vacate the default, a strict standard of review applies—the trial court's action will only be set aside upon a showing of manifest abuse; (2) when a trial court has denied a motion to set aside a default, a "no great abuse" standard applies—only "slight abuse" is sufficient to reverse an order refusing to set aside a default. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984), followed in Griffin v. Scott, 218 M 410, 710 P2d 1337, 42 St. Rep. 1695 (1985), Siewing v. Pearson Co., 226 M 458, 736 P2d 120, 44 St. Rep. 800 (1987), In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993), In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994), and Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Failure to Pay Fee for Filing Pleading: District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment against defendant, and the judgment would not be overturned on appeal from denial of motion to set aside the default judgment, where the court found that negligent failure to pay filing fee for answer until 2 ½ months after filing of the answer was not excusable, that the fee was not filed until after plaintiffs requested entry of default, that the answer did not present a prima facie meritorious defense, that the evidence overwhelmingly indicated there was no defense, and that defendant's reckless disregard for the rights and feelings of the plaintiffs and his attempt to prolong the litigation were adequate reasons to deny his motion to set aside the judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Mistake of Law Not Grounds for Motion: Where appellants sought to set aside default judgment entered against them individually when they failed to answer complaint, on basis that the business they owned was declaring bankruptcy and they thought the automatic stay provision of the Bankruptcy Code, section 362, would bar any action, it was held that the automatic stay provision applied only to debtor in bankruptcy, not to an individual or codebtor not in bankruptcy, and as individuals, appellants had the responsibility to answer the summons. A mistake of law (mistaken reliance on automatic stay provision of Bankruptcy Code) is not a "mistake" under Rule 60(b)(1) that will support vacating a default judgment. Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517, 39 St. Rep. 130 (1982).

Mistake as to Meaning and Effect of Process Not Supported by Evidence: The District Court properly denied a motion to set aside a default judgment where plaintiff's attorney wrote defendant stating suit had been filed and offering to settle, the summons and complaint served upon defendant were legally sufficient and clearly stated that suit had been filed against him, defendant's reply letter to plaintiff's attorney indicated that he was literate and intelligent, and defendant supported his motion by stating that he did not realize the summons and complaint were official and required him to respond, that he had never been sued before, and that he had believed the papers were an attempt by the attorney for plaintiff to scare him into settling and only required a response to plaintiff's attorney. Gergen v. Pitsch, 194 M 70, 634 P2d 652, 38 St. Rep. 1679 (1981).

Insufficient Reason to Justify Relief From Judgment — Unresponsive Party: The District Court properly refused to grant appellants' motion to set aside a default judgment under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., where appellants received notice that their counsel had withdrawn from their case and yet had made no attempt (1) to obtain another counsel to assist them in answering interrogatories, (2) to make an adequate showing of why they failed to file interrogatories at any time, or (3) to offer proper answers to the interrogatories. Audit Serv. v. Kraus Constr., 189 M 94, 615 P2d 183 (1980).

"Excusable Neglect" — Illness: A default judgment was entered against defendant in a claim for wages and expenses. Defendant contends that because he was ill and under a doctor's care he left his business in the care of others, which resulted in his neglect of this lawsuit. He contends this was "excusable neglect", for which reason the default judgment should be set aside. Defendant, however, was properly served with the complaint, and the record does not show that he was so ill as to render his neglect excusable. Morris v. Frank Trans. Co., 184 M 74, 601 P2d 698 (1979).

Failure to Appear — Excusable Neglect: Plaintiff entered into a contract to sell real property and a beer license to Dayton, who assigned the contract to Borkoski. Plaintiff later brought an action against Dayton and Borkoski. Borkoski failed to appear and a default judgment was entered. Borkoski believed that he did not have to appear until Dayton was served. He also called the clerk of court, who said that no hearing date had been set. In addition, the defendant only had 6 days from the time served until the default judgment was entered. Borkoski sought to have the default set aside but his motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that these facts constitute excusable neglect and the District Court abused its discretion in not setting aside the default judgment. Kootenai Corp. v. Dayton, 184 M 19, 601 P2d 47 (1979).

Excusable Neglect in Default Judgments — Failure to Update Name of Registered Agent: Where a complaint was served on a person listed as the registered agent of the defendant corporation, but who was no longer the agent of the corporation, and the corporation diligently sought to defend the action upon receipt of actual notice, failure of the defendant corporation to replace the name of its registered agent was excusable neglect and entry of default judgment was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Clute v. A. B. Concrete, 179 M 475, 587 P2d 392 (1978).

Inadvertence or Excusable Neglect: The court properly denied a motion to set aside a default judgment against a defendant who allegedly received no notice of the action because he failed to meet the burden of proving, as the moving party, inadvertence or excusable neglect. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Failure to Appear Without Reason: The court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the default judgment since there was no showing of what excuse the attorney for defendant may have had to not appear for jury trial or to apprise the defendant of the trial date. Credit Counsellors, Inc. v. Alcorn, 173 M 72, 566 P2d 77 (1977).

Setting Aside Default Judgment — When: It was proper for court to set aside default judgment caused by attorney misfiling complaint. The court used its discretion and will not be reversed unless manifest abuse is proved. Judgment by default is not favored. Keller v. Hanson, 157 M 307, 485 P2d 705 (1971).

No Reliance on Judgment or Injustice: Grant of new trial pursuant to Rule 59(a) to permit plaintiff to give additional testimony on damages that had been omitted by excusable neglect was not improper, notwithstanding that such relief should have been given under this section, where no intervening rights had attached in reliance upon judgment and no actual injustice would ensue. John J. Ming, Inc. v. District Court, 155 M 84, 466 P2d 907 (1970).

Quiet Title Action — Colorable Title Required: In quiet title action, District Court properly denied motion to set aside default decree where moving party had no color of title. Under this section, default judgment will be set aside for excusable neglect only if movant is able to show good defense on merits. Diamond Inv. Co. v. Geagan, 154 M 122, 460 P2d 760 (1969).

Mistake of Law as to Contract Held Insufficient: Mistaken belief of party, against whom default judgment was taken, as to legal effect of contract with adverse party was mistake of law rather than mistake of fact, and was not such a "mistake" as would support vacating the default. Uffleman v. Labbit, 152 M 238, 448 P2d 690 (1968).

Slight Abuse Sufficient for Reversal: Slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment for "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect" is sufficient to justify reversal, and when motion to vacate default judgment is supported by showing which leaves court in doubt or upon which reasonable minds might reach different conclusions, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the motion. Uffleman v. Labbit, 152 M 238, 448 P2d 690 (1968).

Change of Counsel: Motion to have judgment vacated as to date and redated so as to permit moving party to file exceptions to findings or take other steps counsel considered necessary for protection of client was improperly denied, and was abuse of discretion where moving party had inadequate time in which to obtain present counsel when conflict of interest arose with prior counsel. Schmidt v. Lloyd, 152 M 158, 447 P2d 485 (1968).

Probate Matters: Final decree of distribution and discharge in probate will not be set aside on ground of inadvertence or fraud either under statute or Rule 60(b) in absence of manifest abuse of court's discretion in case where moving party had every opportunity to protect his claim in probate and failed to do so. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

Motion After Default — Discretion of Court: Where record showed that defendant took no action for nearly 3 months after default judgment had been entered, defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to give written notice of application for default judgment as required by Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., and District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to vacate the default judgment under Rule 55 (c), M.R.Civ.P. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

"Personal Problems" Insufficient: Defendant's contention that "personal problems drove all thought of lesser problems from his mind" was not sufficient to set aside a default judgment under subsection (1) of this section. Dudley v. Stiles, 142 M 566, 386 P2d 342 (1963).

Failure to Read Mail Not Excusable Neglect: Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to vacate a default judgment where the facts advanced as "excusable neglect" were that defendant's counsel failed to read a letter from plaintiff's counsel for 2 or 3 weeks because he was occupied with other urgent matters and because he assumed that the letter was on another matter that was not urgent. U.S. Rubber Co. v. Community Gas & Oil Co., 139 M 36, 359 P2d 375 (1961).

Representations of Plaintiff — Default Properly Opened: The trial court did not err in granting a motion to vacate a default judgment where the defendant made a showing that plaintiff gave him the impression that the matter involved would not be pressed, and that he had therefore made no appearance on account of his impression. Simons v. Keller, 137 M 52, 350 P2d 366 (1960).

Mistake as to Service — Excusable Neglect: Affidavit to the effect that defendant's attorney mistakenly believed that papers were served on his client the same day the client delivered them to his office was a sufficient showing of excusable neglect to justify setting aside of default judgment. Worstell v. DeVine, 135 M 1, 335 P2d 305 (1959).

Party to Be Directly Affected: The purpose of the provision for relief from judgment is to give relief to a party who is directly affected and not to give relief to a stranger who might be indirectly affected. Moore v. Capitol Gas Corp., 117 M 148, 158 P2d 302 (1945).

Attorney's Neglect Imputed to Client: Neglect of an attorney to make proper inquiry into the facts of a case before entering into an agreed statement of facts upon which the case was tried was the neglect of his client, and unless excusable, relief could not be had from the resultant adverse judgment. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Default by Nonresident — Mistake as to Foreign Law: The rule of 28-2-411 that mistakes of foreign law are mistakes of fact was not available to nonresident petitioning the court to set aside a judgment on ground of mistake where he brought foreclosure proceedings in Montana through a local attorney and failed to advise attorney of a payment that kept the debt alive in the belief the law here was the same as in his state, and attorney entered into an agreed statement of facts upon the trial of which the court found that the debt was outlawed. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Mistake as to Law — Purpose of Rule: Setting aside a judgment on the ground of mistake may not be had where the mistake is one of law, as ignorance of the law is no excuse. Otherwise, there could be no security in legal rights, no certainty in judicial investigations, and no finality in litigation. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Motion Addressed to Court's Discretion: An application to set aside a judgment on ground it was taken through applicant's mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and in absence of manifest abuse of discretion will not be disturbed on appeal. Each application must be determined upon its own facts. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Information From Third Party Held Insufficient: Showing in support of a motion to set aside a default made 11 months after entry, to the effect that defendant in an action for slander had been informed by a third person that plaintiff did not intend to do anything with the action and intended to let the matter drop, with the result that she did not think anything more about it and did not consult anyone until she learned of the entry of judgment by default, was insufficient to warrant setting aside of the default, and the court abused its discretion in granting the motion. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P2d 668 (1930).

Equitable and Legal Remedy Precluded: Plaintiff mortgage company, holding a first mortgage upon a tract of land, by inadvertence omitted from its complaint for foreclosure a description of the most valuable part of the tract, had judgment and bought the property as described on execution sale. Subsequently it discovered the error and moved to have the decree vacated. The motion was granted, a new decree filed, and a new order of sale issued, but on appeal the new decree was set aside for failure of plaintiff to pursue properly the remedy for relief from judgment. Thereafter the holder of the second mortgage brought suit to foreclose and plaintiff filed a cross-complaint in which, appealing to the equity arm of the court, it sought relief from the earlier judgment. Plaintiff had an adequate remedy by motion, lost it through its own fault, and could not thereafter invoke the equity power of the court to obtain the relief it might have had under its motion. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929), followed in Krein v. Heineman, 226 M 474, 736 P2d 481, 44 St. Rep. 813 (1987).

Parties Entitled to Relief: The legal remedy for the vacation of a judgment taken against a party through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect is as available to one in whose favor judgment was rendered as to him against whom it went, providing diligence is exercised in asserting the right. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Additional Time to Answer Not Used: Where counsel for plaintiff for 40 days after defendant filed its answer requiring a reply failed to file it, and then upon decision of a motion to strike were granted 20 days in which to further plead but omitted to do so, the court may not be said to have abused its discretion in refusing to set aside the consequent default, even though counsel may have been excusable in that, while in court at the time of the order resulting in the granting of the additional time in which to plead, they did not hear the announcement of the order. Mihelich v. Butte Elec. Ry., 85 M 604, 281 P 540 (1929).

Discharge of Counsel — Default Properly Opened: Where the resident agent of a foreign corporation had been served with summons and mailed it to the general counsel of defendant without knowledge that the latter had been discharged and the general counsel failed to transmit it to his former client, the failure of defendant company to advise its agent of counsel's discharge, resulting in the entry of a judgment by default, was excusable under the circumstances of the case. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

Failure of Mails as Excusable Neglect: Miscarriage of a letter sent by defendant to his attorney, asking him to take care of a case pending against him, receipt of which would have avoided an entry of default, is a sufficient showing of excusable neglect to warrant the setting aside of the default. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926).

Mental Defective — Mistake as Excusable Neglect: Where defendant had been restored to capacity about 8 months before summons was served on her, and at that time she was still of doubtful mentality and was under the impression that by appearing before a notary public to give her deposition at the instance of plaintiff she had made appearance in the cause, a case of excusable neglect was made and the court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the motion. Brothers v. Brothers, 71 M 378, 230 P 60 (1924).

Attorney's Headache Held Insufficient: Showing made by defendant in aid of his motion to set aside a default judgment, to the effect that he intended to appear on the last day but forgot because of a headache, was insufficient to invoke judicial discretion in his favor and the court in setting aside the judgment committed error. Pac. Acceptance Corp. v. McCue, 71 M 99, 228 P 761 (1924).

Default — Prerequisites for Opening: To warrant the vacation of a default, it is necessary that the party in default show affirmatively that he proceeded with diligence, that the neglect was excusable, that the judgment if permitted to stand will affect him injuriously, and that he has a good defense on the merits. Eder v. Bareolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922); Delaney v. Cook, 59 M 92, 195 P 833 (1921).

Distraction of Counsel — Default Properly Opened: In setting aside a default judgment for neglect of counsel for defendant in an action for trespass, the court did not abuse its discretion where counsel had been for some time prior to, and was at, the date for appearance engaged as counsel for defendant in a homicide case of unusual importance and in the conduct of which his attention was so absorbed as to cause him to overlook making appearance, where it further appeared that he acted promptly and had a meritorious defense. Eder v. Bareolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922).

Insufficient Facts Alleged — Mistake as to Filing Date: An affidavit of counsel for defendant in support of his application for vacation of default, that he misunderstood the date upon which the appearance of his client was due and mistakenly supposed it to be at a date 10 days later than it actually was, without a statement of any fact or circumstance out of which the misunderstanding arose, was insufficient to move the discretion of the court and therefore an order granting the motion was error. Robinson v. Petersen, 63 M 247, 206 P 1092 (1922).

Inexcusable Delay — Motion Properly Denied: Where defendant knew of the pendency of an action against him 5 months before judgment by default was entered but took no steps looking to a defense on the merits until 7 months after its entry, when he moved to set the judgment aside, asking leave to file his answer, and thereafter for 3 years more neglected to bring his motion on for hearing, denial of the motion on the ground of inexcusable delay was proper. Hinderager v. MacGinniss, 61 M 312, 202 P 200 (1921).

Default Properly Opened: Where defendants' attorney had prepared a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) and intended to file it within the time allowed by statute, but on account of important business engagements elsewhere failed to do so, where during his absence and upon recalling the fact that he had not filed it he advised one of defendants by letter where the demurrer could be found in his office with directions to file it, etc., and where an answer was tendered with the motion, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion to set aside a judgment by default. Farmers' Co-op Ass'n v. Roper, 57 M 42, 188 P 141 (1919).

Relief From Default Not a Right: When one who is in default applies to the court for relief, it is incumbent upon him to show affirmatively that the default resulted from mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. Even when such showing is made, relief cannot be demanded as a matter of right. The statute refers the subject to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. Kersten v. Coleman, 50 M 82, 144 P 1092 (1914).

Mistake as to Filing Date — Default Properly Opened: It is no abuse of discretion to set aside a default judgment entered through a mistake of counsel as to the date when an amended complaint was to have been filed. Voelker v. Golden Curry Consol. Min. Co., 40 M 466, 107 P 414 (1910).

Mistake of Court Not Covered by Rule: Where an order taxing costs in favor of plaintiff, included in a judgment for him, omitted certain items claimed by him which judgment had been affirmed on appeal by defendant, the trial court had no authority after affirmance to make an order taxing such costs, though the failure to tax them originally was an oversight on the part of the court. The provision for relief applies only to the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of the party litigant and not of the court. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 32 M 20, 79 P 410 (1905).

Time for Answer — Mistake of Law Insufficient: The failure of defendant's counsel to know that a special appearance to move to quash the service of summons did not extend the time for a general appearance and answer is not such surprise or excusable neglect as justifies relief. Mantle v. Casey, 31 M 408, 78 P 591 (1904).

Lack of Consent to Continuance Insufficient: Where, after a case had been set for trial, the attorney for the defendants wrote to the opposing attorney requesting a continuance, but before receiving an answer to his letter he left the place of his residence, and his whereabouts was unknown to the attorney for the plaintiff until it was too late for the latter to inform him that he could not consent to the continuance, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs upon the day set for the trial, the facts did not show any surprise, mistake, or excusable neglect authorizing the court to set aside the judgment. Lowell v. Ames, 6 M 187, 9 P 826 (1886), distinguished in Whiteside v. Logan, 7 M 373, 17 P 34 (1888) and Benedict v. Spendiff, 9 M 85, 22 P 500 (1889).

FAILURE OF SERVICE

No District Court Jurisdiction to Enter Marriage Dissolution in Favor of One Party Absent Service of Dissolution Petition and Summons on Other Party: On August 15, 2003, the parties entered a property settlement agreement dividing the marital estate, and the wife also signed a consent to entry of judgment agreeing to dissolution if the property settlement agreement was presented to the District Court for approval and made an integral part of the dissolution. The husband then filed a petition for dissolution and included the settlement agreement and the wife's consent to entry of judgment, but did not serve the wife with any of the filings. The District Court held a hearing without the wife being present, adopted the settlement agreement, and entered a decree of dissolution. The husband's counsel mailed a copy of the judgment to the wife, who then filed a motion under this rule to set aside the judgment, claiming that the decree was void because the husband failed to have a summons issued and to serve her with process. The motion was denied, but on appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment. Dissolution proceedings are not exempt from rules regarding service of process, and if one party commences a dissolution proceeding, the other party must be served as provided in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Further, a petition for dissolution must be signed under oath by both parties. The wife's execution of the documents prior to the filing of the case did not constitute a voluntary appearance in the action, nor does notice of a hearing substitute for service of summons. A District Court may obtain personal jurisdiction through strict compliance with the mandatory rules for service of process, and in this case, the wife's signing of documents prior to the filing of the dissolution petition did not confer jurisdiction on the court absent service of process. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion in failing to grant the wife's motion to set aside the judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and In re Marriage of Grounds/Coward, 271 M 350, 897 P2d 200 (1995).

Entry of Judgment Not Filed — Time for Filing Appeal Not Running Until Notice of Entry Issued: When no notice of entry of judgment is filed by a party, the time for filing an appeal does not begin to run until the Clerk of Court issues a notice of entry of judgment under Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., nor does the time to request the court to modify or vacate an order begin to run. In the present case, the filing of a notice of entry of judgment was required under that rule as an action in which an appearance has been made, but neither party filed the notice. As a result, the 60-day filing period required under this rule could not begin to run, so a subsequent motion for relief was not time-barred. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Withdrawal of Counsel — "Rule 10 Notice" Sent to Last-Known Address Held "Notice as Required by Law": In a dissolution proceeding between Christina and Laramie, Laramie's counsel withdrew after he had not been contacted by Laramie for approximately 18 months. In the notice of withdrawal, Laramie's counsel provided Christina's counsel with Laramie's last-known address. Christina's counsel then sent a "Rule 10 notice", pursuant to Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), to Laramie at the address provided by his former counsel, informing Laramie that he must appoint another attorney, that trial was scheduled for a particular date, and that if he did not appoint an attorney or appear, a default judgment might be made against him. That notice was returned by the post office because Laramie was apparently no longer living at that address. After a decree of dissolution was entered, Christina's counsel obtained Laramie's address from his mother and sent Laramie a notice of entry of judgment. Fifty-six days later, Laramie moved, pursuant to this rule, to set aside the judgment, arguing that Christina's counsel did not exercise due diligence in obtaining his correct mailing address and that if Christina's counsel obtained his correct address through his mother after entry of judgment, Christina's counsel could have done so before entry of judgment. Citing McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196 (1997), the Supreme Court held that Christina's counsel, by mailing the Rule 10 notice to Laramie's last-known address, satisfied the requirement that he make a good faith effort to notify Laramie and that Christina's counsel had no obligation to "track down" Laramie through his mother. In re Marriage of Wallace, 284 M 360, 944 P2d 227, 54 St. Rep. 920 (1997).

Marriage Dissolution — Insufficient Service of Process Based on Insufficient Affidavit: An affidavit of the husband's lawyer stating that the husband had not heard from his wife was insufficient in that it did not state that the wife was out of state or was concealing herself or that a diligent inquiry had been made as to her whereabouts. Because the affidavit did not allege diligent inquiry, it was not sufficient evidence of diligent inquiry, and service by publication based on the affidavit was insufficient service of process. The District Court abused its discretion in refusing to vacate the default judgment and an order to convey real property. In re Marriage of Shikany, 269 M 493, 887 P2d 153, 51 St. Rep. 1031 (1994).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Notice of Default on Tax Deed Not Personally Served — Order Set Aside: In a case involving the setting aside of a default judgment in a tax deed setting, the defaulting party was not personally served, service being accomplished through legal publication. Because a motion to set aside was timely made and service was not personally made, the party was entitled to use Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., to set aside the order of default. McDonald v. Grassle, 228 M 25, 740 P2d 1122, 44 St. Rep. 1312 (1987).

Default Judgment Void for Failure of Service: The District Court was correct in setting aside the default judgment against Western Supply, Inc. as void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., for failure of service of process when the fatal flaw in the service was not merely in a lack of due diligence, but also in the failure to submit a proper and sufficient affidavit in compliance with Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., in support of substituted service on the Secretary of State. Jurisdiction cannot be acquired without strict compliance with the statute. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), followed in Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Default Judgment Set Aside — Improper Service: Because service upon a former employee was not service upon the company itself, default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

Failure of Service — Time for Motion: The 12 months' period (reduced by 1965 amendment to 180 days) after rendition of judgment within which a defaulting party not personally served with summons may be permitted to answer to the merits begins to run from the date of such rendition, and the limitation applies to the time when the motion is made and not to when it is heard. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Failure of Service Not Shown Upon Complaint: Where a decree of divorce against an insane husband was procured without personal service of summons and is therefore void for want of jurisdiction, there can be no relief after the expiration of the time limit fixed except by an action in equity to set aside the decree, as it is fair upon its face, and the defect of jurisdiction must be made to appear by evidence dehors the record. The defendant is not to be denied relief in equity because he did not proceed under the provision for setting aside a decree where no lack or want of diligence is imputed to him. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909), distinguished in Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

FRAUD

Error in Denial of Motion to Set Aside Past-Due Child Support Judgment for Fraud — Payments Improperly Applied to Barred Debt: In 1998, a mother sought $33,350 in past-due child support owed over a 20-year period. The District Court found that the statute of limitations in 27-2-201 limited recovery to arrearages incurred only in the 10 years prior to filing the complaint. At trial, the father provided documentation that some support had been paid, but the mother denied ever receiving any payments. After trial, the father attempted to introduce evidence of additional payments, but the evidence was disallowed. The District Court then calculated the amount of child support owed since 1988, but applied payments made since 1988 to the obligations incurred prior to 1988, irrespective of the statute of limitations. The father then moved to set aside the judgment because the mother committed fraud by denying the receipt of certain payments, but that motion was denied without reaching the issue of fraud. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in denying the motion. Although a District Court should apply any payment of child support to the earliest arrearage, an award may be applied only to arrearages due within 10 years of a suit for enforcement. It is incongruous for a court to bar a plaintiff from bringing an action to enforce a certain debt, but then apply payments toward that barred debt. Thus, the District Court erred in applying payments made since 1988 to the obligations incurred prior to 1988, and in turn erred in failing to address the merits of the father's motion alleging fraud. The case was remanded for further consideration. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002). See also In re Adoption of C.J.H., W.L.H., & T.A.H., 246 M 52, 803 P2d 214 (1990), and In re Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991).

Equitable Action — Type of Fraud for Which Relief May Be Granted: A father was assessed back child support but claimed that he was entitled to a new trial on the issue because at the hearing, the mother had represented that the children had lived with her the entire time, when in fact, the children lived with their father for a period, which he claimed was fraud upon the court, entitling him to relief. Citing Brown v. Jensen, 231 M 340, 753 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 665 (1988), the Supreme Court noted that the type of fraud for which relief may be granted in an independent equitable action is extrinsic or collateral, rather than intrinsic fraud. Extrinsic fraud is an intentional act by the prevailing party that prevents the unsuccessful party from having a fair submission of the controversy. False or fraudulent representations, concealments, and perjured testimony by a party during court proceedings constitute only intrinsic fraud and do not rise to the level of fraud upon the court. In this case, the father presented testimony at the hearing rebutting the mother's representation of the living arrangements. Thus, the court was aware of the father's contention, so it could not be claimed that the mother acted fraudulently or that her representations were misleading or relied upon by the father to his prejudice. The father failed to demonstrate that the mother committed extrinsic or intrinsic fraud upon the court, and his motion for relief was properly denied. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Fraud Must Be Extrinsic — Motion for Relief May Be Barred by Res Judicata: Loney was sued by his law firm for fees owed for representing him in bankruptcy proceedings. Loney failed to answer the complaint, and a default judgment was entered. Loney subsequently filed a complaint to have the judgment declared void on the basis that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. Loney also argued that the judgment should be set aside on the basis that the law firm's failure in its suit against him to notify the court that the fees had not been approved by the bankruptcy court constituted fraud. The Supreme Court held that Loney could have litigated the issues of the discharge of the debt and fraud on the part of the law firm when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he was barred by the doctrine of res judicata from litigating those issues again in his suit to have the firm's judgment set aside. The Supreme Court also held that any fraud by the law firm was intrinsic and that the fraud had to be extrinsic to warrant setting aside the judgment on that basis. Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995), followed in Butler v. Colwell, 1998 MT 241, 291 M 134, 967 P2d 779, 55 St. Rep. 1007 (1998).

Intrinsic Fraud — Motion for Relief Subject to Sixty-Day Time Limitation: Upon the divorce of John and Andrea, John agreed to pay certain jointly held debts, and the District Court entered the agreement into its decree. Later, after John filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding, Andrea obtained a modification of the original decree on the basis that John's representations of payment constituted extrinsic fraud. The modification was obtained by a motion made long after the expiration of the 60-day deadline provided in this rule. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that the representations made by John did not come within the scope of the residual clause of the rule because those representations did not constitute a fraud upon the court or serve as the basis for an independent action for extrinsic fraud. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the motion for relief was untimely made and improperly granted. In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Fraud Between Parties Not Fraud Upon Court: More than 2 years after the dissolution order, Wise brought a motion to set aside the property settlement agreement drawn up by her attorney, contending that her husband had committed fraud against her and the court in that he told her that his work pension was not a marital asset. The statute of limitations had run for appealing the order on the basis of fraud between the parties, but the lower court found that the husband's statements to his wife constituted an extrinsic fraud upon the court. The Supreme Court held that fraud upon the court includes only the most egregious conduct and that generally fraud between the parties does not rise to that level, particularly in the present case when Wise's attorney drew up the property settlement agreement. Wise v. Nirider, 261 M 310, 862 P2d 1128, 50 St. Rep. 1334 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Allegations Plaintiff and Its Lawyers Engaged in Perjury, Misrepresentations, Deception, Subversion of Justice, and Fictitious Theories of the Case — No Extrinsic Fraud: For purposes of relief from a judgment through an independent equitable action under this rule, extrinsic fraud is fraud that prevented the unsuccessful party from presenting the party's case, is collateral to the matters tried by the court, and is not fraud in the matters on which the judgment was rendered. Perjury and false or fraudulent allegations used in obtaining a judgment are not extrinsic fraud. Appellants' claims that the bank and lawyers conspired to deceive the court and subvert justice, misrepresented facts, committed perjury, and used forceful arguments and artful pleading to develop a fictitious theory of the case that misled the court did not allege extrinsic fraud. Moreover, the allegations did not constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Fraud Between Parties — No Fraud Upon Court: Fraud between parties to a case does not, without more, constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Failure to Show Unfair Denial of Opportunity to Have Case Heard — Res Judicata: Richland County sought to enforce a 6 ¼% oil, gas, and mineral royalty interest reserved prior to a 1937 quiet title decree by asserting that there was extrinsic fraud upon the court because plaintiff's attorney in the quiet title action, who also happened to be the Richland County Attorney, failed to appear on behalf of the county, resulting in a default judgment against the county and denying the county the opportunity to litigate the reservation. However, the county failed to produce facts to substantiate its theory that the county's interest was subverted or that the county was unfairly denied an opportunity to have its case heard. Absent such a showing, relitigation of the reservation claim was barred by res judicata. Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991).

Trial on Merits Not Warranted in Every Case of Fraud: Appellant contended the distinction between intrinsic and extrinsic fraud was so difficult to ascertain that a trial on the merits must be allowed in every case. The Supreme Court recognized that allegations of fraud must be carefully scrutinized on a case-by-case basis but disagreed that distinctions between extrinsic and intrinsic fraud were so elusive as to warrant trial in every case. Brown v. Jensen, 231 M 340, 753 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 665 (1988).

Failure to Disclose Debts — Extrinsic Fraud: A couple's failure to disclose certain debts in their property settlement agreement misled the trial court as to the actual financial status of the marital estate. This failure to disclose was extrinsic fraud. It misled the court to a false judgment that wrongfully insulated the couple's property from creditors. Extrinsic fraud justifies invoking the inherent equitable power of a court to reopen and set aside a judgment. Relief from a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud may be granted on motion in the original action or in a separate suit in equity. In re Marriage of Witbart, 216 M 178, 701 P2d 339, 42 St. Rep. 725 (1985), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Motion Not Timely Filed — Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion: Appellant asserted sex- or race-based discrimination when the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula) failed to renew her teaching contract. At trial, the head of appellant's department testified that there were no funds available to renew appellant's contract. The District Court determined no unlawful discrimination had occurred. Subsequently, the head of the department pleaded guilty to misuse of federal funds granted to the University and diversion of such funds far in excess of appellant's salary. Appellant filed a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to vacate the judgment on the grounds of fraud. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found the claim was time-barred under the rule because it was filed after the 60-day time limit. The claim was not allowed under the residual clause in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), because the fraud fell short of what is legally required to vacate a final judgment. The Supreme Court found the misappropriation of funds did not materially and directly affect the outcome of the case and the false in-court testimony was intrinsic fraud upon the court, rather than extrinsic, and therefore did not constitute sufficient grounds to vacate a judgment under the residual clause. Salway v. Arkava, 215 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985), followed in Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991), and In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Property Settlement — Extrinsic Fraud: The husband retained an attorney in a dissolution proceeding. Husband convinced the wife that only one attorney was necessary, and that attorney represented both parties, with the wife being named as the petitioner. The husband and the attorney failed to disclose to the court the balloon payment due on the house given to the wife and the value of the husband's pension. This failure to disclose relevant information to the court was extrinsic fraud and was the basis upon which to reopen a judgment dividing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Madden, 211 M 237, 683 P2d 493, 41 St. Rep. 1332 (1984), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition — No Fraud Found: The trial court properly dismissed a motion to set aside a decree of dissolution incorporating a property settlement agreement that was essentially drafted by the petitioner and executed against the advice of counsel. There was no fraud evidenced. The wife settled for a disproportionate settlement, then several years later, changed her mind with regard to what property she wanted from the marital estate. Schaak v. Schaak, 210 M 242, 681 P2d 1089, 41 St. Rep. 1033 (1984).

Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion — Motion Not Timely Filed: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution of marriage and a property settlement. Appellant failed to answer or otherwise appear, and a default was entered. One and one-half years after the default was entered, appellant moved to have the default set aside upon the ground of fraud. Appellant argued that the value of certain property was exaggerated by his spouse in her testimony. The court held that if fraud existed it was intrinsic fraud, and intrinsic fraud is not grounds for reopening a decree or judgment. In addition, the motion to reopen the decree 1 ½ years after the decree had been entered is not timely as a 60-day motion under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. In re the Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981), followed in Salway v. Arkava, 213 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985), In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995), Falcon v. Faulkner, 273 M 327, 903 P2d 197, 52 St. Rep. 1011 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Fraudulent Inducement — Signing of Admission of Service: Appellant contends that respondent fraudulently induced the clerk of court to enter a default judgment against appellant. Appellant contends that since she signed a document stating that she voluntarily entered her general appearance and admitted service of documents, that it was extrinsic fraud to enter a default judgment without giving her her day in court. However, on the same certificate there was language to the effect that respondent declined to answer and conserved that her default be entered. Appellant is constrained by the whole document and there was no extrinsic fraud. Miller v. Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980).

Intrinsic Fraud: Husband's concealment of a statement as to property holdings at a trial of a dissolution of marriage is intrinsic fraud and does not warrant relief on appeal. This is particularly so where husband's statements or concealments in no material way thwarted appellant's ability to present her case. Miller v. Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980), following Minter v. Minter, 103 M 219, 62 P2d 283 (1936).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition: Under this rule and 40-4-208(1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and this rule's 60-day time limitation does not apply. However, the District Court properly denied the motion as untimely because after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief and because the 60-day limit applied in any case since the court found no fraud had been committed. The wife's failure to disclose her recently secured employment was not fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Alleged Fraud — Failure to Appeal — Effect: After motion to set aside judgment on grounds of fraud was denied and evidence of fraud was rejected by the court, plaintiff's remedy was to appeal the denial, and his failure to do so rendered the decision res judicata and barred the filing of a second action to litigate the same claim or issues. Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975), followed in Krein v. Heineman, 226 M 474, 736 P2d 481, 44 St. Rep. 813 (1987).

Fraudulently Obtained Judgments — Time Limitation Inapplicable: Time within which trial court could set aside judgment on basis of fraud upon the court depended upon equity and discretion, not time limitation of this rule. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Judgment Obtained by Fraud — Inherent Powers of Court: Court of equity has inherent power, independent of statute, to vacate judgment obtained by fraud in violation of last sentence of Rule 60(b) even though party seeking relief was not necessary party in original action, and motion to vacate was not made within liberal time limits prescribed by rule but was nevertheless timely, considering that aggrieved party engaged attorney to file motion to vacate within 30 days after discovery of existence of judgment. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967), distinguished in Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber Co., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Probate Matters: Final decree of distribution and discharge in probate will not be set aside on ground of inadvertence or fraud either under statute or Rule 60(b) in absence of manifest abuse of court's discretion in case where moving party had every opportunity to protect his claim in probate and failed to do so. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

Divorce by Fraud — Remedy: Where a divorce judgment was taken against defendant through plaintiff's extrinsic fraud on both the defendant and the court, the court could grant relief at any time either on motion in original suit or in a separate equity suit. Gillen v. Gillen, 117 M 496, 159 P2d 511 (1945), distinguished in Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

Remedy for Fraud — Equitable Relief: Where fraud entered into the rendition of a judgment or it was brought about by the misconduct of the one in whose favor it was rendered, or, though fair on its face, there was a want of jurisdiction, or the statutory remedy for setting it aside is inadequate, or the aggrieved party has been deprived of his legal remedy without any fault of his own, equity will assume jurisdiction and set it aside, under such circumstances the statutory remedy being considered cumulative or concurrent. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

JUDGMENT VOID OR VOIDABLE

Insufficient Service — Judgment Void — Error in Dismissal of Action to Set Aside Default Judgment: In March of 1995, John conveyed a farm and residence to his brother Richard by quitclaim deed. One year later, after arranging for another person to farm the property and live in the residence, Richard left for the Philippines to be married. One month later, John filed an action seeking to cancel the quitclaim deed, serving the summons and complaint upon Richard by publication because John stated that he was unable to determine Richard's address. Default judgment was entered for John 2 months later. In 1999, Richard moved to set aside the default judgment, alleging that service by publication and the resulting judgment were void because of extrinsic fraud by John and because John did not comply with the service requirements of Rule 4D(5)(e), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court dismissed Richard's action, and he appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing Richard's claim. The District Court did not provide any findings of fact, conclusions of law, memorandum, or legal authority for its decision. Insufficient service of process is an ample ground to vacate a default judgment. Because of the absence of any hearing or oral argument in the matter, an unsupported cursory order, and an overall undeveloped record, the Supreme Court remanded for a hearing to address whether Richard's claim for relief under this rule was filed within a reasonable time. Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000). See also Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and In re Marriage of Fonk/Ulsher, 260 M 379, 860 P2d 145, 50 St. Rep. 1112 (1993).

Dissolution of Marriage — Hearing Requirement Not Jurisdictional: Wife sought to have judgment dissolving her marriage declared void and vacated under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), on the grounds that the trial judge did not hold a hearing and receive evidence on the issue of irretrievable breakdown of marriage and was therefore without jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Supreme Court affirmed District Court decision that the judgment was premature because there was no hearing, but that failure to hold a hearing was a procedural rather than jurisdictional defect rendering the judgment voidable but not void. The premature summary judgment in this case is not yet ripe for appeal because issues collateral to the dissolution remain undecided. The premature summary judgment could be reviewed by the Supreme Court at this point only with a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), certification, which plaintiff had not attempted. In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985), followed, regarding the need for evidence and hearing but not for express testimony on irretrievable breakdown, in In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993), and In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), regarding the determination that a marriage is irretrievably broken is a judicial function, rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition for dissolution.

Suit Attacking Judgment After Motion to Set Aside — New Issue Raised — Res Judicata Applied: In 1971 a default judgment had been entered against present plaintiffs, granting sole ownership of certain property to present defendant E.G.W., who sold the property to present codefendants in 1972. Plaintiffs' 1971 motion to set aside the default was denied. In 1981 plaintiffs sued for a one-half quieted interest, or in the alternative, an accounting and one-half the proceeds of the 1972 sale. The complaint was based on the claim that the 1971 judgment was void because it granted relief beyond that prayed for in the pleadings and the court lacked jurisdiction to grant the relief it granted. Res judicata barred litigation of the voidness issue because plaintiffs failed to raise it in their 1971 motion to set aside the default. Once there has been full opportunity to present an issue for judicial decision in a given proceeding, including jurisdiction issues, the court's determination in that proceeding must be accorded full finality as to all issues raised or which fairly could have been raised and their later consideration is precluded by res judicata. Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573, 39 St. Rep. 752 (1982). See also First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987), St. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000).

Default Judgment Void for Failure of Service: The District Court was correct in setting aside the default judgment against Western Supply, Inc. as void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., for failure of service of process when the fatal flaw in the service was not merely in a lack of due diligence, but also in the failure to submit a proper and sufficient affidavit in compliance with Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., in support of substituted service on the Secretary of State. Jurisdiction cannot be acquired without strict compliance with the statute. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), followed in Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Applicability to Voidable Judgment: This rule has no applicability to a default judgment that is merely voidable. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Premature Default Judgment Not Covered: This rule has no application to prematurely entered default judgments since it applies to void and not voidable judgments. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

No Application to Voidable Judgment: This rule does not apply to voidable judgments. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Failure of Service Not Shown Upon Complaint: Where a decree of divorce against an insane husband was procured without personal service of summons and is therefore void for want of jurisdiction, there can be no relief after the expiration of the time limit fixed except by an action in equity to set aside the decree, as it is fair upon its face, and the defect of jurisdiction must be made to appear by evidence dehors the record. The defendant is not to be denied relief in equity because he did not proceed under the provision for setting aside a decree where no lack or want of diligence is imputed to him. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909), distinguished in Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

Judgment Void on Its Face: Though a judgment void on its face may be set aside on motion at any time, this may not be done where the judgment is fair on its face, the infirmity of which must be made to appear by evidence dehors the record. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909), distinguished in Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

PRIOR JUDGMENT REVERSED

Change in Governmental Immunity Law — Extraordinary Circumstance Warranting Reversal of Prior Judgment — Reasonable Time for Filing Claim for Relief: Although generally a change in decisional law is not a valid reason under which a prior judgment may be reversed pursuant to subsection (5) of this rule, extraordinary circumstances may warrant modification, under subsection (6) of this rule, of a final judgment. Legislative revision of 2-9-111, enacted in response to the decisions in Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363 (1990), and Crowell v. School District No. 7, 247 M 38, 805 P2d 522 (1991), significantly changed the statute and modified the theories expressed in those immunity cases so as to constitute circumstances extraordinary enough to warrant reversal. This does not establish a general rule for reopening a final judgment merely because there has been a substantial change in statutory law upon which that judgment was based because only when extraordinary circumstances are found to exist may subsection (6) of this rule be used to modify a final judgment. Further, the fact that plaintiffs' motion was filed 48 days after the Crowell decision was not so unreasonable as to make the motion untimely. The discretion of the Supreme Court to revisit a final judgment is flexible enough to allow reconsideration of individual case facts in the interests of justice. Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992).

Military Pension Considered Marital Asset — Retroactive Modification of Decree Allowed: Six years after husband retired from the Air Force and began receiving a military pension, the husband and wife dissolved the marriage. At the time, Montana treated military pensions as a marital asset. Before entry of the final decree, however, the U.S. Supreme Court in McCarty ruled that federal law precluded state courts from dividing military pensions. As a result, the District Court ruled that the husband's pension was not a marital asset and awarded the wife $300 a month in maintenance. Passage of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act (USFSPA) allowed state courts to once again consider military pensions when making property distribution. Subsequently, the wife filed a petition under Rule 60(b)(5), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to modify the dissolution decree, contending that the USFSPA should be applied retroactively to allow her a share of the husband's pension. The District Court denied the husband's motion to dismiss, entering a judgment awarding the wife one-half of the pension. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, ruling that the USFSPA should be applied retroactively to modify dissolution decrees that were final after McCarty but before the USFSPA effective date. In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726, 43 St. Rep. 1642 (1986).

Reversal of Prior Judgment — Not a Basis for Relief: Although Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., authorizes relief from a judgment on the ground that the prior judgment upon which the present judgment is based has been overturned, the rule does not authorize relief from a judgment on the ground that the law applied by the court in making its adjudication has been subsequently overruled or declared erroneous in another unrelated proceeding. Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Vacation of Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6): Based on the decision in Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), known as Fiscus II, the Supreme Court found that the District Court exceeded its scope of authority under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6), M.R.Civ.P., in vacating summary judgment in the instant case. The District Court vacated the judgment because Fiscus I (Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974)) was overruled in Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Assoc., 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978). When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in another case, that final judgment should not be altered. State ex rel Rhodes v. District Court, 183 M 394, 600 P2d 182 (1979). However, see Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), in which the existence of extraordinary circumstances created because of the substantive revision of statutory law was sufficient to warrant reversal of a final judgment under the "other reasons" rationale of subsection (6) of this rule.

Law of the Case: When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in a particular case the "law of the case" is that final judgment should not be altered. Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 283 M 169, 939 P2d 998, 54 St. Rep. 548 (1997). In re Marriage of Scott was followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

TIME LIMITATIONS

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

Motion for Relief From Termination of Parental Rights Filed Two Years After Termination Untimely as Matter of Law: Both parents were charged in Idaho with sexual abuse crimes against their children, but the parents eluded authorities for several years. P.D.L. was born while the parents were fugitives. Both parents were eventually captured and convicted, and the father was incarcerated for a 17-year term in Idaho. Following service of a petition in prison, the father's parental rights were terminated. More than 2 years later, the father filed a motion for relief from the termination order under this rule, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the finality provision in 42-2-620, which attempts to provide finality to parental rights termination proceedings so that a child may be safely adopted without the threat of the adoption being set aside at some future date. The termination order was immune from collateral attack 6 months after it was entered, and the father's motion for relief filed more than 2 years later was untimely as a matter of law. In re P.D.L., 2004 MT 346, 324 M 327, 102 P3d 1225 (2004).

Failure to File Timely Reply to Counterclaim — Default Judgment Proper: The District Court directed plaintiff to respond to a counterclaim within 10 days. Plaintiff failed to comply within the designated time, so default judgment was entered against plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed on grounds that the default judgment should be set aside under this rule. The Supreme Court disagreed. As an attorney, plaintiff was sufficiently literate and intelligent to understand the document presented by opposing counsel and to respond accordingly. Any mistake complained of by plaintiff did not rise to a level warranting setting aside of the default judgment. Plaintiff did not meet the burden of proof under this rule to set aside the judgment and did not establish any abuse of discretion by the trial court, so the default judgment was affirmed. Tschida v. Rowe, 2003 MT 192, 316 M 503, 74 P3d 1043 (2003).

Alleged Newly Discovered Evidence That Could Have Been Produced at Trial — Motion for New Parental Rights Termination Trial Properly Denied: The District Court denied a petition to terminate a mother's parental rights and ordered her child returned to her within 30 days. The guardian ad litem appealed, contending that the judgment should be set aside based on newly discovered evidence. The guardian ad litem presented the alleged newly discovered evidence through affidavits, contending that the mother left her apartment in poor condition with empty beer cans, was evicted, was fired twice from her employment, was seen driving a stolen vehicle, and had continued ongoing communication with the child's father. The District Court noted that this was one of the hardest fought and most lengthy parental rights termination trials in the court's experience and found it extremely unlikely that the alleged newly discovered evidence could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at trial. The District Court weighed the affidavit information and did not act arbitrarily or abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment based on newly discovered evidence. The District Court was affirmed. In re B.B., 2001 MT 285, 307 M 379, 37 P3d 715 (2001).

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Initially, neither District Court was aware of the competing adoption petitions. The Department of Public Health and Human Services had been reviewing both couples as potential adoptive resources at the same time and ultimately determined that because the child had formed a strong bond during placement with couple A for nearly 2 years, it would be in the child's best interests to be adopted by couple A. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P., and that permissive intervention under Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to this rule was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of this rule on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. In re Adoption of C.C.L.B., 2001 MT 66, 305 M 22, 22 P3d 646 (2001).

Fatally Tardy Request to Set Aside Default Judgment — Elements of Res Judicata Met: Pro se plaintiff filed to set aside a default judgment entered against him over 1 ½ years earlier. The District Court dismissed the motion on grounds of res judicata, noting that plaintiff did not proceed with diligence after being personally served, having ignored the service of the initial complaint, the personal service of defendants' notice of intent to enter default and default judgment, and service of the court's entry of judgment and writ of assistance. Plaintiff argued that as a pro se litigant, he should be accorded extra latitude. The Supreme Court noted that although pro se litigants may be given a certain amount of latitude, that latitude cannot be so wide as to prejudice the other party and that even pro se litigants are expected to adhere to procedural rules. Plaintiff's motion was fatally tardy. Citing Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665 (1996), the court found that the elements of res judicata existed because the parties were the same, the subject matter of the claim was the same, the issues were the same and related to the same subject matter, and the capacities of the persons were the same in reference to the subject matter and the issues. The District Court did not err in dismissing plaintiff's complaint pursuant to res judicata. Greenup v. Russell, 2000 MT 154, 300 M 136, 3 P3d 124, 57 St. Rep. 610 (2000).

No Limit to Number of Timely Motions: The plain language of this rule does not limit the number of motions that a party may make or prescribe the earliest date following judgment on which a motion may be filed. The only restriction and possible bar to a motion filed pursuant to subsection (3) of this rule is that it cannot be filed more than 60 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. In re Marriage of Gudmundson, 1998 MT 54, 288 M 70, 955 P2d 648, 55 St. Rep. 226 (1998).

Time Limitations — Begin to Run Upon Filing of Remittitur: On a subsequent appeal of a partial summary judgment ruling, the time deadline for the court to act on remittitur of the first appeal did not begin to run until the filing of remittitur on the first appeal. Kirchner v. W. Mont. Mental Health Center, 272 M 110, 899 P2d 1102, 52 St. Rep. 753 (1995).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Failure to Appeal Not Fatal — Court Discretion to Reverse Judgment in Light of Statutory Changes: Koch chose not to appeal an adverse District Court decision regarding governmental immunity based on the case law developed on that issue by the Supreme Court. More than 1 year later, following substantive legislative revision of statutory immunity law, Koch sought relief under this rule. Generally, failure to appeal for almost any reason is fatal to a motion to reopen judgment under this rule because if allowed, it would in essence make a motion under this rule a substitute for appeal, which is an improper use of the motion. Even so, failure to appeal may not be fatal. Relief under this rule is not inflexibly withheld in a case in which an appeal has been abandoned or not taken because of a clearly applicable adverse rule of law and in which there is a later clear and authoritative change in governing law. Therefore, in the present case, the existence of extraordinary circumstances created because of the substantive revision of statutory law was sufficient to warrant reversal of a final judgment under the "other reasons" rationale of subsection (6) of this rule. Having met the standards for relief under the rule, failure to appeal did not bar that relief. Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), following Polites v. U.S., 364 US 426, 5 L Ed 2d 173, 81 S Ct 202 (1960), and U.S. v. Wyle, 889 F2d 242 (9th Cir. 1989).

Confession of Judgment Not Set Aside: The defendants argued that the confession of judgment that allowed the plaintiff to attach their bank account should be set aside on the grounds that one of the defendants was under the influence of mind altering drugs at the time he agreed to the judgment. The Supreme Court held that the lower court was entitled to refuse to set aside the judgment because both parties had been represented by counsel at the time and more than 60 days had passed before the defendants had moved to have the judgment set aside. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center v. Doherty, 241 M 243, 786 P2d 669, 47 St. Rep. 267 (1990).

Relief From Judgment Denied — Newly Discovered Evidence Not Presented in Time: The plaintiffs' suit against a used car dealer for negligence in servicing the brakes on a truck they purchased was dismissed pursuant to a summary judgment motion. More than 12 months later, the plaintiffs made a motion for relief from the judgment on the basis of newly discovered evidence. The Supreme Court ruled that the motion could not be brought because it was not filed within the 60-day time limit required by this rule. Murnion v. Heberle Ford Co., 241 M 215, 786 P2d 653, 47 St. Rep. 219 (1990).

Court Failure to Rule Within Forty-Five Days on Motion to Set Aside or Amend — Loss of Jurisdiction Over That Issue: Subsequent to obtaining a decree of dissolution, the husband died intestate and his ex-wife moved to have the decree set aside. More than 45 days later, the District Court set aside the decree and also granted the ex-wife's motion to substitute as personal representative. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that a postjudgment motion not ruled on within 45 days is considered denied and at that time, the lower court lost its jurisdiction with respect to setting aside the decree. The court also held that the 45 days run from the time the motion to set aside or amend is filed and is not affected by when the notice of entry of judgment is filed. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 108, 776 P2d 1218, 46 St. Rep. 1128 (1989), followed in Bechhold v. Chacon, 248 M 111, 809 P2d 586, 48 St. Rep. 357 (1991), and in In re Marriage of McKinnon, 251 M 347, 825 P2d 551, 49 St. Rep. 69 (1992).

No Judicial Discretion to Alter Statute of Limitations: Plaintiffs' complaint was dismissed because it was not timely filed, missing the statute of limitations by 1 day. Plaintiffs moved for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., because of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The statute of limitations does not discriminate between a just and unjust claim. The statute represents legislative and public policy controlling the rights of potential litigants. A trial court does not have judicial discretion to alter, change, or lessen statutory limits for commencement of actions. Schaffer v. Champion Home Builders Co., 229 M 533, 747 P2d 872, 44 St. Rep. 2196 (1987).

Reasonable Time: Notice of entry of default judgment was mailed to wife on August 31, 1984. On September 14, 1984, wife filed her motion to set aside the default judgment. This was within a reasonable time as contemplated in this Rule, therefore the motion was timely filed. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Motion Not Timely Filed — Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion: Appellant asserted sex- or race-based discrimination when the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula) failed to renew her teaching contract. At trial, the head of appellant's department testified that there were no funds available to renew appellant's contract. The District Court determined no unlawful discrimination had occurred. Subsequently, the head of the department pleaded guilty to misuse of federal funds granted to the University and diversion of such funds far in excess of appellant's salary. Appellant filed a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to vacate the judgment on the grounds of fraud. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found the claim was time-barred under the rule because it was filed after the 60-day time limit. The claim was not allowed under the residual clause in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), because the fraud fell short of what is legally required to vacate a final judgment. The Supreme Court found the misappropriation of funds did not materially and directly affect the outcome of the case and the false in-court testimony was intrinsic fraud upon the court, rather than extrinsic, and therefore did not constitute sufficient grounds to vacate a judgment under the residual clause. Salway v. Arkava, 213 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985), followed in Brown v. Small, 251 M 414, 825 P2d 1209, 49 St. Rep. 98 (1992).

Dismissal Under Statute of Limitations — Appeal Appropriate Relief: A complaint was dismissed because the applicable Statute of Limitations had run out. This rule could not be used to attack that dismissal. The appropriate avenue for relief is an appeal. Lussy v. Dye, 215 M 91, 695 P2d 465, 42 St. Rep. 205 (1985).

Action to Reopen and Modify Dissolution Decree After Sixty Days — Not Timely: The husband and wife were married in 1945. In 1975, the wife vanished and her whereabouts is unknown. In 1976, the husband filed for dissolution. The wife was served by publication. The court entered its decree but made no order with respect to distribution of property. In 1983, the husband started a quiet title action to jointly held property. Three months later, the daughter commenced an action in which her mother was determined to be presumed dead. The daughter was named personal representative of the mother's estate. As personal representative, the daughter filed a motion in the dissolution action to reopen and modify the decree regarding property disposition. The District Court refused to reopen the decree. On appeal, the Supreme Court pointed out that 40-1-105 makes the Rules of Civil Procedure applicable to all proceedings relating to marital dissolutions. Section 40-4-208 provides that the provisions of the decree relating to property disposition may not be revoked or modified by the court unless it finds conditions justifying the reopening of a judgment. The court held that even if the District Court failed in its mandatory duty to equitably apportion the property, the decree was final, and that under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the motion to reopen had to be brought within 60 days. Once the judgment was final, it was too late to raise issues of misrepresentation which could have been contested in the cause prior to entry of judgment. In re Marriage of Woolsey, 214 M 106, 692 P2d 451, 41 St. Rep. 2349 (1984).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Timeliness of Motion — Clerical Errors to Be Corrected at Any Time: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The wife moved to revalue the stock again on January 22, 1981. The court held a hearing on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal the wife contended that her January 22 motion should be considered a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., on the grounds of newly discovered evidence. Montana's Rule 60(b) requires the motion to be within 60 days following the entry of judgment. However, it can be considered if the relief could have been granted because the substance of the motion brought it under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. This was foreclosed here by the District Court ruling on the motion on its merits. The Supreme Court did resolve an apparent conflict between Rule 60(a) and Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., by holding that when a clerical mistake occurs in a judgment, order, or other part of a court record and the error is admitted or can be corrected or clarified without inequity or prejudice to a party, the error can be corrected by the court at any time, either nunc pro tunc or by a new order. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982).

Motion Before Judgment: A motion for relief from judgment made before judgment is premature and may be disregarded. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Untimely Motion for New Trial — Equivalent to Motion for Relief From Judgment: A motion for new trial under Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., that is not timely may be considered as a motion under this rule when it states the proper grounds for relief. Nomenclature is unimportant. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion — Motion Not Timely Filed: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution of marriage and a property settlement.

Appellant failed to answer or otherwise appear, and a default was entered. One and one-half years after the default was entered, appellant moved to have the default set aside upon the ground of fraud. Appellant argued that the value of certain property was exaggerated by his spouse in her testimony. The court held that if fraud existed it was intrinsic fraud, and intrinsic fraud is not grounds for reopening a decree or judgment. In addition, the motion to reopen the decree 1 ½ years after the decree had been entered is not timely as a 60-day motion under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. In re the Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981), followed in Falcon v. Faulkner, 273 M 327, 903 P2d 197, 52 St. Rep. 1011 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Timeliness of Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment: A default judgment was entered against defendant for wrongful taking of plaintiffs' inheritance. Defendant was personally served with a copy of the judgment but did not move the District Court to set aside the judgment until 4 months later. Defendant's motion was properly denied by the District Court. Schneider v. Ostwald, 190 M 29, 617 P2d 1293, 37 St. Rep. 1728 (1980).

Request for Modification of Property Settlement — Determination of "Reasonable Time" for Motion: At the conclusion of a hearing on the enforcement of his divorce settlement agreement several months after his divorce, the former husband moved to amend the findings of deficiency of the agreement or, in the alternative, to grant a new trial. The motion was denied and the former husband appealed. Because the former wife's request for additional property was made orally to the court over 6 months after entry of the legal separation decree and approval of the written agreement, the former husband argued on appeal that the request was barred by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court said that this may have been a crucial issue at the trial court but that the husband's failure to object makes timeliness a nonjudicable issue on appeal. Without an objection there need be no ruling, and the Supreme Court concluded that without a ruling the wife made her request within the "reasonable time" required by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition: Under this rule and 40-4-208(1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and this rule's 60-day time limitation does not apply. However, the District Court properly denied the motion as untimely because after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief and because the 60-day limit applied in any case since the court found no fraud had been committed. The wife's failure to disclose her recently secured employment was not fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Reasonable Time: County Commissioners' motion to dismiss peremptory Writ of Mandate was made within a reasonable time where it was made within the time allowed for an appeal and promptly after Commissioners learned that statutes controlling dispute had been amended. Snyder v. McKinley, 164 M 309, 521 P2d 919 (1974).

Fraudulently Obtained Judgments — Time Limitation Inapplicable: Time within which trial court could set aside judgment on basis of fraud upon the court depended upon equity and discretion, not time limitation of this rule. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Judgment Obtained by Fraud — Inherent Powers of Court: Court of equity has inherent power, independent of statute, to vacate judgment obtained by fraud in violation of last sentence of Rule 60(b) even though party seeking relief was not necessary party in original action, and motion to vacate was not made within liberal time limits prescribed by rule but was nevertheless timely, considering that aggrieved party engaged attorney to file motion to vacate within 30 days after discovery of existence of judgment. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967), distinguished in Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber Co., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Expiration of Time Limit — Diligence of No Avail: The District Court is without power to relieve a party from his default after the expiration of the period mentioned in the statute even on a showing of due diligence. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928), overruling State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909).

Failure of Service — Time for Motion: The 12 months' period (reduced by 1965 amendment to 180 days) after rendition of judgment within which a defaulting party not personally served with summons may be permitted to answer to the merits begins to run from the date of such rendition, and the limitation applies to the time when the motion is made and not to when it is heard. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

No Jurisdiction After Expiration of Time Limit: After the expiration of the time limit fixed in the statute, the power of the court over the judgment absolutely ceases and it is without jurisdiction to vacate or modify it. Smith v. McCormick, 52 M 324, 157 P 1010 (1916); State ex rel. Smotherman v. District Court, 51 M 495, 153 P 1019 (1915); State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909).

Parties — Application of Time Limit: The period of 6 months mentioned in section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), within which a motion to vacate a judgment must be presented, applied in terms only to the case of one who seeks relief from the consequences of his own mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. It cannot apply to one who has never been served with summons, and who has not appeared, but whose default has been entered through the the inadvertence of someone else. Morehouse v. Bynum, 51 M 289, 152 P 477 (1915).

INDEPENDENT ACTION

Entry of Judgment by Court of General Jurisdiction in Foreclosure Action Affirmed — Collateral Attack Precluded: Glickman contended that the District Court acted outside or in excess of its jurisdiction by decreeing that the purchaser of Glickman's property at a Sheriff's foreclosure sale be "let into possession". A judgment entered by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is subject to attack at any time. A collateral attack on a judgment is possible only if the judgment is void on its face and if it appears affirmatively from the judgment roll that the court did not have jurisdiction or committed an act in excess of jurisdiction. Absent any authority that a court of general jurisdiction may not enter a judgment in a foreclosure sale, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not act outside or in excess of its jurisdiction by decreeing that the purchaser of the property at a Sheriff's foreclosure sale be "let into possession". Further, Glickman's failure to allege any statutory causes of action in his original petition precluded him from bringing an independent action under the residual clause of this rule. Glickman v. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, 1998 MT 8, 287 M 161, 951 P2d 1388, 55 St. Rep. 27 (1998).

Allegations Plaintiff and Its Lawyers Engaged in Perjury, Misrepresentations, Deception, Subversion of Justice, and Fictitious Theories of the Case — No Extrinsic Fraud: For purposes of relief from a judgment through an independent equitable action under this rule, extrinsic fraud is fraud that prevented the unsuccessful party from presenting the party's case, is collateral to the matters tried by the court, and is not fraud in the matters on which the judgment was rendered. Perjury and false or fraudulent allegations used in obtaining a judgment are not extrinsic fraud. Appellants' claims that the bank and lawyers conspired to deceive the court and subvert justice, misrepresented facts, committed perjury, and used forceful arguments and artful pleading to develop a fictitious theory of the case that misled the court did not allege extrinsic fraud. Moreover, the allegations did not constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993).

Independent Action to Set Marital Property Disposition Aside — Failure of Fraud and Notice Claims: Wife seeking to have court set aside that part of decree of dissolution of marriage that distributed the marital property elected not to file a timely motion for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and instead elected to file an independent action for relief as allowed by the last part of Rule 60(b). Her action was properly dismissed insofar as it sought relief on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, excusable neglect, and fraud on herself, which could be the basis for relief only under a timely Rule 60(b) motion. Her independent action claim of no actual personal notification of the divorce proceeding must fail, since she signed the response to the petition (though perhaps not completely sober at the time), indicating actual personal notice. An independent action is not a remedy for inadvertence or oversight by the party losing the original action. Her independent action claim grounded in fraud on the court must fail because she failed to plead with particularity all the elements of the fraud. Her mere suspicion of fraud was not sufficient to sustain her action. The postnuptial agreement she signed some 3 years before her husband filed for a divorce proceeding at which she was not represented by an attorney must stand, since she signed a response to the petition that affirmed the fairness and terms of the agreement and did not appear at the final hearing at which the court approved the agreement with a change favoring her. In re Marriage of Hoyt, 215 M 449, 698 P2d 418, 42 St. Rep. 532 (1985).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition: Under this rule and 40-4-208(1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and this rule's 60-day time limitation does not apply. However, the District Court properly denied the motion as untimely because after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief and because the 60-day limit applied in any case since the court found no fraud had been committed. The wife's failure to disclose her recently secured employment was not fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Failure to File in Time — Separate Action Not Affected: Defendant's motion to vacate default judgment was properly denied under this rule where the motion was not filed until more than 480 days after the entry of judgment despite fact that defendant was served with neither summons nor complaint. Filing of motion to vacate default judgment under this rule did not constitute a selection of remedies and movant, after denial of motion, was still free to bring an independent action to vacate the judgment for failure to receive service which action would not be subject to the 180-day limitation contained in this rule. Thomas v. Savage, 161 M 192, 505 P2d 118 (1973).

Independent Action — Time Limit to Vacate Exceeded: An independent action is available to vacate judgment for failure to serve process because the 180-day limitation is not applicable to such an action. Thomas v. Savage, 161 M 192, 505 P2d 118 (1973).

Independent Actions — Not Subject to Time Limitations: An independent action to set aside a default judgment is not subject to the time limitation for motions to set aside defaults in the original action. Elliston Lime Co. v. Prentice Lumber Co., 157 M 64, 483 P2d 264 (1971).

Extrinsic Fraud — Remedy: A court of general jurisdiction has the right, entirely independent of statute, to grant relief against a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud, and may grant that relief either on motion in the original cause or upon a separate equity suit. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960).

Divorce by Fraud — Remedy: Where a divorce judgment was taken against defendant through plaintiff's extrinsic fraud on both the defendant and the court, the court could grant relief at any time either on motion in original suit or in a separate equity suit. Gillen v. Gillen, 117 M 496, 159 P2d 511 (1945), distinguished in Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

ANY OTHER REASON JUSTIFYING RELIEF

Error to Dismiss Action in Light of Evidence That Plaintiff Did Not Receive Motion: City Judge Dorrington cited attorney Fennessy for contempt of court for allegedly making false statements to the court and for a lack of responsibility in the performance of duties and lack of respect for the court. Fennessy filed a motion in District Court to stay the contempt proceeding in City Court, contending that Dorrington did not have jurisdiction to issue the contempt citation and was prohibited from acting as the complaining witness, prosecutor, and judge for the contempt proceedings. Dorrington then filed a motion to dismiss and 3 days later moved to continue the hearing and quash subpoenas. In his response to the motion to continue, Fennessy stated that if Dorrington had filed a motion to dismiss, Fennessy had not received the motion thus he had no opportunity to review it. Nevertheless, that same day the District Court granted the motion to dismiss. Fennessy moved to reconsider and included affidavits from his attorney and staff stating that a motion to dismiss had never been received, but the motion to reconsider was denied, so Fennessy appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. A motion to dismiss is viewed with disfavor and rarely granted, and dismissal of an action is justified only when the allegations of a complaint clearly demonstrate that plaintiff does not have a claim. A court may not dismiss a claim unless it appears that plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that could be proved in support of a claim. In this case, the District Court failed to follow Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), by dismissing Fennessy's motion before the 10-day time limit to respond had expired and abused its discretion by refusing to reconsider its order of dismissal even though there was evidence that Fennessy had not received the motion to dismiss and thus was unable to respond to or review it. Fennessy v. Dorrington, 2001 MT 204, 306 M 307, 32 P3d 1250 (2001).

Failure to Provide Evidence of Extraordinary Circumstances to Warrant Setting Aside Default Judgment: Bahm brought an action concerning a dispute over the possession of real estate, and default judgment was entered against the Southworths; however, that judgment was set aside, and an expedited discovery and trial schedule was set. Following the scheduling conference, Bahm properly served written discovery requests and noticed the Southworths' depositions, but the Southworths did not appear for their depositions and failed to respond to the discovery requests, having left Montana for 45 days and neglecting to maintain contact with their attorney. The District Court again entered default judgment against the Southworths, who filed a pro se motion to set aside the default judgment. The District Court declined to rule on the motion, clarifying for the Southworths that no pro se filings would be considered while they had counsel. Nearly 7 months later, the Southworths again moved to set aside the default judgment through a different attorney. That motion was denied on grounds that more than 60 days had passed since entry of judgment and because the record contained no evidence of extraordinary circumstances that would allow application of the more expansive "reasonable time" provision in subsection (6) of this rule. The Southworths appealed. Under Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232 (1996), relief is available under subsection (6) of this rule when a movant demonstrates each of the following elements: (1) there were extraordinary circumstances, including gross neglect or actual misconduct by an attorney; (2) the movant acted to set aside the judgment within a reasonable time; and (3) the movant was blameless. In this case, the Southworths failed to provide any evidence of extraordinary circumstances, relying instead on unsworn allegations and information contained in an affidavit that was not submitted to the court. Further, the Southworths had the opportunity to rectify any alleged attorney mistake or negligence by filing a timely motion to set aside the judgment, yet when they were told that their pro se motion would not be accepted, they did not file a timely motion, but rather waited another 5 months to file a new motion to set aside, which was not considered a reasonable time. Lastly, their absence from the state following the scheduling conference and their failure to appear for their depositions and to respond to discovery requests showed that they were neither diligent nor blameless. Thus, the order refusing to set aside the default judgment was affirmed. Bahm v. Southworth, 2000 MT 244, 301 M 434, 10 P3d 99, 57 St. Rep. 1030 (2000).

Denial of Contractual Liability by Both Defendant Entities — Claims Put in Issue — Burden of Proof — Proposed Findings to Be Based Upon Evidence — No Evidence of Intent to Mislead as Basis for Relief From Judgment: Wright Oil sued Goodrich for petroleum products allegedly delivered but not paid for. Goodrich denied liability, claiming that the products were for the use of West Yellowstone Snowmobile Rentals, Inc. (WYSR), which owned Westgate Texaco, operated by Goodrich. Wright Oil amended its complaint to include WYSR, and after a bench trial, the District Court held against Goodrich because no evidence had been presented proving a contract between WYSR and Wright Oil. Wright Oil then filed a motion for relief from judgment under subsection (6) of this rule, seeking relief from the District Court's failure to hold against WYSR. On the basis of evidence not presented at trial, the District Court granted the motion and ordered an evidentiary hearing to reopen the case against WYSR regarding WYSR's contractual liability to Wright Oil. WYSR appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the motion because the circumstances of the District Court's failure to hold WYSR liable for the debt to Wright Oil were not so extraordinary as to warrant relief from judgment under subsection (6) of this rule. The Supreme Court noted that WYSR's denial of its liability put the allegation of its contractual liability at issue under Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P., and under 26-1-401 and 26-1-402, Wright Oil had the burden of going forward with the evidence of WYSR's contractual liability but failed to present evidence of a contractual relationship between WYSR and Wright Oil. The fact that Goodrich alleged that WYSR was liable for the debt could not, the Supreme Court held, be taken as an admission by WYSR that it was liable for the amounts due. Further, the Supreme Court noted that Wright Oil should not have been surprised by WYSR's proposed findings of fact that it was not liable for the debt because under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., a party's proposed findings of fact must be supported by the evidence, and Wright Oil failed to produce that evidence of liability. Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Disqualification in Malpractice Action of Judge Who Represented Plaintiff in Underlying Matter: A judge who had represented plaintiff on the underlying guardianship accounting matter prior to the time that the attorney being sued for malpractice began to represent plaintiff as to the accounting should have disqualified himself from presiding over the malpractice action. A judge may preside over a matter involving a former client if the action over which the judge presides involves a matter different from the one as to which the judge represented the client. In this case, the malpractice action is technically a separate action from the underlying accounting proceeding; however, the malpractice action arose from the legal representation in the accounting proceeding. Default judgment for plaintiff for failure of attorney to plead or in any manner appear was reversed and remanded for a ruling, before another judge, on attorney's motion for relief from judgment for excusable neglect. Shultz v. Hooks, 263 M 234, 867 P2d 1110, 51 St. Rep. 34 (1994).

Paternity Issues Not Extraordinary — Relief Not Justified: Husband advanced several arguments relating to the issue of paternity that he sought to characterize as other reasons justifying relief under this rule. He argued that the case was not ready for litigation because neither wife nor child had submitted blood for paternity testing. The argument was without merit because testing was never ordered for them. He contended that the wife amended her petition by conceding the paternity issue on the date of hearing but that he was not allowed to respond to the amendment. However, the concession neither added nor removed a claim before the court and was in accord with husband's position, thus providing no basis for relief. He argued that because he was the prevailing party on the paternity issue, the court erred by failing to require the wife to reimburse one-half of his expense in obtaining the blood test pursuant to court order. The issue may have been appropriately raised at the hearing or in proposed findings and conclusions, but did not constitute a circumstance justifying relief from the decree. Absent the extraordinary circumstances necessary to trigger relief under subsection (6) of this rule, relief from judgment was denied. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Motion Made in Reasonable Time When Other Basis for Relief Time-Barred by Intentional Act of Party's Attorney — Motion Granted: Maulding obtained a default judgment for $81,306.31 against Hardman for injuries received in a car accident. Maulding's attorney wrote Hardman's insurance company 60 days after entry of judgment, offering to settle the case for $75,000 if paid immediately. Four days later the insurance company's counsel moved to set aside the default. Noting that the timing of Maulding's attorney's letter prevented Hardman from moving for relief under other subsections of this rule, the Supreme Court held that the motion under subsection (6) to set aside the default was made within a reasonable time and with due diligence under these circumstances. Citing the manner in which Maulding's attorney handled the case and the manner in which damages were established and awarded, the Supreme Court also held that the facts of the case justified relief from the default under subsection (6). Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), distinguished in Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Reason for Relief Mutually Exclusive — Power of Court to Determine Proper Subsection: Maulding obtained a default judgment against Hardman, which Hardman moved to set aside, citing subsections (1), (3), and (6) of this rule. Citing Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643 (D.C. Mont. 1981), Hardman argued that because relief under subsections (1) and (3) was time-barred, relief could not be had under subsection (6) either. Relying upon Wright and Miller, the Supreme Court held that a party is precluded from relief under subsection (6) when the same facts or circumstances bring the case under one of the other five subsections. Citing Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), the Supreme Court held that the facts that relief under subsections (1) and (3) was time-barred and that Hardman did not choose between subsections (1) and (3) or subsection (6) were not fatal to the motion because the District Court and the Supreme Court could determine which of the subsections was proper in this case. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993).

Stipulated Modification Limitation — Events Following Dissolution Not Justification for Reopening Judgment: The parties signed a property settlement agreement that included a modification limitation authorized under 40-4-201 and that required the agreement of both parties for modification. Wife contended that several events substantially altered the valuation of the marital estate, qualifying her for relief under subsection (6) of this rule, including: (1) the forgiveness of a substantial debt owed to husband's parents, knowledge of which was allegedly withheld from wife during settlement negotiations; (2) gifts of stock interests made to husband by his parents after dissolution; (3) the diagnosis of cancer in wife's father and his pending divorce, which precluded his financial help to her; and (4) action by her former attorney for unpaid fees. Under the rationale of Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), these events did not constitute extraordinary circumstances sufficient to justify reopening the judgment. In re Marriage of Hamilton, 254 M 31, 835 P2d 702, 49 St. Rep. 604 (1992).

Reopening of Dissolution Decree Without Finding of Unconscionability — Reversible Error: A dissolution decree found that although husband's military pension was not included in a separation agreement, it was included in the general terminology of the agreement. The District Court applied subsection (6) of this rule in granting wife's motion for reconsideration because wife had been advised by counsel that she had a vested interest in the pension and that mention of the pension was therefore not required. The District Court found that the lack of mention of the pension was intentional and did not constitute a waiver or relinquishment of the pension by wife. After reopening the decree, the court granted wife 50% of the pension and made further modifications in property disposition. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied 40-4-201(3), which governs separation agreements, in stating that the standard that justifies reopening the judgment is unconscionability. As in Patzer v. Patzer, 243 M 34, 792 P2d 1101 (1990), absent facts or allegations by wife that the agreement was unconscionable, reopening the decree constituted reversible error. In re Marriage of Laskey, 252 M 369, 829 P2d 935, 49 St. Rep. 322 (1992).

Unsigned Affidavit Not Basis for Relief From Default Judgment: After a default judgment was entered against defendant property management firm for conversion of plaintiffs' rentals, one of the defendants filed an unsigned affidavit with the District Court, alleging that defendants were Canadian citizens unfamiliar with Montana laws, that they were representing themselves pro se, that they in fact did file an answer, and other factual allegations. The Supreme Court held that the facts alleged were not established by an unsigned affidavit and, citing Gergen v. Pitsch, 194 M 70, 634 P2d 652 (1981), concluded that defendants were both intelligent and literate and could not have so misunderstood the proceedings against them as to warrant setting the judgment aside. The court, citing Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517 (1982), further held that the default judgment should not be set aside for failure of defendants to receive notice of the entry of the default judgment because notice was not required to be sent by the Clerk of the District Court. Bd. of Directors of Edelweiss Owners' Ass'n v. McIntosh, 251 M 144, 822 P2d 1080, 48 St. Rep. 1131 (1991).

Default Dissolution Set Aside: The wife was entitled to have the default judgment set aside because of the entirety of the circumstances of the case. After her second attorney withdrew, the court fixed September 11 as the next hearing date. However, pursuant to 37-61-405, the husband's counsel gave notice for her to appoint other counsel or appear in person on August 6, a date of no significance. When the wife did not appear on that date the husband filed a motion for default judgment, which was granted by the court on August 14 without a hearing. No copy of the application was mailed to the wife, and she did not respond. Taking all the facts into consideration, the circumstances justified setting aside the default judgment. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Physically Disabled Defendant — Default Divorce Set Aside: The plaintiff obtained a default divorce against his wife of over 30 years and was awarded the ownership of the family farm. It was error for the District Court to refuse to set aside the default judgment where there was medical evidence that the wife was totally and permanently physically disabled by multiple sclerosis and was confined to a nursing home, and where there was no evidence that she made a knowing and voluntary relinquishment of her interest in the family farm. Tesch v. Tesch, 199 M 240, 648 P2d 293, 39 St. Rep. 1318 (1982).

Incompetent Counsel: Appellant moved for relief from judgment on the grounds that his former attorney was suffering from severe emotional problems during the trial. Subsection (6), not subsection (1), is broad enough to permit relief when personal problems of counsel cause him to grossly neglect a case. Equity requires that a hearing be held to determine the matter. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Vacation of Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6): Based on the decision in Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), known as Fiscus II, the Supreme Court found that the District Court exceeded its scope of authority under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6), M.R.Civ.P., in vacating summary judgment in the instant case. The District Court vacated the Judgment because Fiscus I (Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974)) was overruled in Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Assoc., 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978). When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in another case, that final judgment should not be altered. State ex rel Rhodes v. District Court, 183 M 394, 600 P2d 182 (1979).

EQUITABLE RELIEF

No Statutory Authority for Setting Aside Workers' Compensation Court Judgment — Equitable Relief: Although under some circumstances the Workers' Compensation Court may have inherent equitable power to set aside its judgment, as in cases under this rule, requiring equitable relief because of extrinsic fraud, in a case in which findings established at most intrinsic fraud, it was error for the court to set aside its judgment based on a petition filed more than 60 days after it was entered. The Supreme Court further declined to apply the civil procedure in 25-11-102 to an untimely motion to set aside a judgment based on newly discovered evidence in a workers' compensation case. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Chapman, 267 M 484, 885 P2d 407, 51 St. Rep. 1070 (1994).

Allegations Plaintiff and Its Lawyers Engaged in Perjury, Misrepresentations, Deception, Subversion of Justice, and Fictitious Theories of the Case — No Extrinsic Fraud: For purposes of relief from a judgment through an independent equitable action under this rule, extrinsic fraud is fraud that prevented the unsuccessful party from presenting the party's case, is collateral to the matters tried by the court, and is not fraud in the matters on which the judgment was rendered. Perjury and false or fraudulent allegations used in obtaining a judgment are not extrinsic fraud. Appellants' claims that the bank and lawyers conspired to deceive the court and subvert justice, misrepresented facts, committed perjury, and used forceful arguments and artful pleading to develop a fictitious theory of the case that misled the court did not allege extrinsic fraud. Moreover, the allegations did not constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993).

Prospective Application Held Equitable: The portion of Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., that states reversal may be based on the fact that it is no longer equitable that a judgment should have prospective application assumes that the propriety of the injunction as issued has passed beyond debate and requires some change in conditions that make continued enforcement inequitable. Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions is required for relief. Defendant's claim that plaintiffs would not have standing if their case were to be brought after the judgment does not satisfy these requirements. Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Vacation of Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6): Based on the decision in Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), known as Fiscus II, the Supreme Court found that the District Court exceeded its scope of authority under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6), M.R.Civ.P., in vacating summary judgment in the instant case. The District Court vacated the Judgment because Fiscus I (Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974)) was overruled in Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Assoc., 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978). When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in another case, that final judgment should not be altered. State ex rel Rhodes v. District Court, 183 M 394, 600 P2d 182 (1979).

Fraudulently Obtained Judgments — Time Limitation Inapplicable: Time within which trial court could set aside judgment on basis of fraud upon the court depended upon equity and discretion, not time limitation of this rule. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Judgment Obtained by Fraud — Inherent Powers of Court: Court of equity has inherent power, independent of statute, to vacate judgment obtained by fraud in violation of last sentence of Rule 60(b) even though party seeking relief was not necessary party in original action, and motion to vacate was not made within liberal time limits prescribed by rule but was nevertheless timely, considering that aggrieved party engaged attorney to file motion to vacate within 30 days after discovery of existence of judgment. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967), distinguished in Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber Co., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Extrinsic Fraud — Remedy: A court of general jurisdiction has the right, entirely independent of statute, to grant relief against a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud, and may grant that relief either on motion in the original cause or upon a separate equity suit. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960).

Divorce by Fraud — Remedy: Where a divorce judgment was taken against defendant through plaintiff's extrinsic fraud on both the defendant and the court, the court could grant relief at any time either on motion in original suit or in a separate equity suit. Gillen v. Gillen, 117 M 496, 159 P2d 511 (1945), distinguished in Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

Remedy for Fraud — Equitable Relief: Where fraud entered into the rendition of a judgment or it was brought about by the misconduct of the one in whose favor it was rendered, or, though fair on its face, there was a want of jurisdiction, or the statutory remedy for setting it aside is inadequate, or the aggrieved party has been deprived of his legal remedy without any fault of his own, equity will assume jurisdiction and set it aside, under such circumstances the statutory remedy being considered cumulative or concurrent. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Advisory Committee Notes

Advisory Committee's Note to May 21, 1969, Amendment

Explanation of change: Since section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947, is being superseded because of changes in Rules 46, 52 and 59, the change in Rule 60(c) is likewise required.

Advisory Committee's Note to October 9, 1984, Amendment

The amendment deletes the reference to subdivision (a) because it seems illogical to impose a time restriction on motions directed at clerical mistakes. The remainder of the amendment conforms the language to that now found in Rule 59(d).

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Extended time for appeal from 45 days to 60 days. Amendment effective October 1, 1995.

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of May 21, 1969, substituted "Rule 59" for "section 93-5606 of the 1947 Revised Codes of Montana" and "trials" for "trial"; and added "and amendment of judgment". This rule has no counterpart in the Federal Rules.

The amendment of October 9, 1984, substituted "subdivision (b)" for "subdivisions (a) and (b)", before "determined" deleted "heard and", and inserted "and if the court shall fail to rule on the motion within the 45 day period, the motion shall be deemed denied".

Case Notes

Motion to Disqualify Other Party's Attorney Does Not Stay Sixty-Day Requirement for Judge to Rule on Motion to Vacate Default Judgment: Johnson's attorney obtained a default judgment on behalf of his client, and when an attorney appeared for the defendant and moved to have the default judgment set aside, Johnson's attorney moved to have the attorney disqualified because the trial court judge was related to a member of the defense attorney's law firm. The judge recused himself, and the new judge entered an order setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court held that the 60-day period for the lower court to rule on the motion to vacate ran from the time that the motion was filed, not from the time that the second judge assumed jurisdiction, and because the time had expired, the motion to vacate was considered denied. The lower court did not have jurisdiction over the issue and could not thereafter set aside the default judgment. Johnson v. Eagles Lodge Aerie 3913, 284 M 474, 945 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 984 (1997).

Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Tribe — Motion for Relief From Judgment Not Subject to Time Constraints: After protracted litigation involving a tribal security interest in cows of tribal members, the Blackfeet Tribe filed a motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., based upon a contention that the District Court lacked jurisdiction. No response to the motion was ever made by the District Court. Eighteen months later, the Blackfeet Tribe then filed a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and the District Court granted the motion approximately 6 years later. The Supreme Court held that even though under normal circumstances the motion was considered denied after 45 days and the District Court would then have lost jurisdiction, the ability of a party to invoke the rules concerning subject matter jurisdiction transcend normal procedural consideration. Thus, the Blackfeet Tribe's motion to dismiss was not subject to time constraints. The fact that it was filed 18 months after judgment was entered and the fact that the District Court took 6 years to rule on the motion did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. Wippert v. The Blackfeet Tribe, 260 M 93, 859 P2d 420, 50 St. Rep. 973 (1993).

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to Rule 5(a)(5), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Time Limit: The 45-day time limit in this rule did not begin to run until the motion for substitution of counsel, filed pursuant to Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., was granted. Saltzman v. Dept. of Transportation, 259 M 386, 856 P2d 965, 50 St. Rep. 845 (1993).

Power of Supreme Court to Consider District Court Proceedings Held Without Jurisdiction: After a default judgment was entered against Hardman for injuries caused to Maulding in a car accident, Hardman moved on May 22 to set aside the default, and the District Court scheduled a hearing for July 16. At the hearing, Maulding raised the timeliness of the hearing, contending that when this rule was read with Rules 59(d) and 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court had to rule on the motion within 45 days or it was considered denied. The District Court took that issue under advisement and heard testimony on the motion to set aside the default. Maulding argued on appeal that there was no evidence for the Supreme Court to consider on the issue of the default because the evidence taken by the trial court was taken at a hearing that was held without jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that because those proceedings affect the substantial rights of the parties, consideration of the evidence developed at the hearing was within its powers under 3-2-204. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Motion to Set Aside Enforcement of Unserved Warrant of Distraint as Independent Action — Not Subject to Time Limitation: The Department of Revenue was assigned the right of child support and attempted to recoup money paid by the state as Aid to Families With Dependent Children (now FAIM financial assistance) by filing warrants of distraint and Writs of Execution to attach any accounts in which the father had an interest, but the father was never served a notice of accruing debt or informed of his right to a hearing on each warrant. The father moved for relief from the warrants of distraint and for stay of execution, but the issue was not heard until 48 days after the motion, which the Department contended was sufficient to remove jurisdiction from the District Court. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the motion to set aside enforcement of the unserved warrants of distraint was an independent action and thus was not subject to the 45-day limitation of Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735

P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987), distinguished in Bechhold v. Chacon, 248 M 111, 809 P2d 586, 48 St. Rep. 357 (1991).

Motion Mistitled — Time for Filing Appeal: When the state filed a motion for rehearing of the District Court's order reinstating respondent's driver's license pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., on the basis that the Division of Motor Vehicles should be relieved from the order, even though the motion was mistitled, the state obviously was making a Rule 60(b) motion for relief from a District Court order. The request for a rehearing was tangential to the real purpose of the motion. The full time for appeal commences to run upon the granting or denying of the motion, rather than from the date of the order from which the state appeals. Despite defects in the motion, the state identified with particularity the grounds for its motion and the relief sought; therefore, the flaws are not grounds for dismissal of the appeal. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985).

Time Limits of Rule 59(d) — Jurisdictional: Under the provisions of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court lacked jurisdiction to set aside a default judgment when no hearing had been held within 30 days from the date originally set for a hearing on the motion. At that time the motion is considered denied. Wallinder v. Lagerquist, 201 M 212, 653 P2d 840, 39 St. Rep. 2063 (1982).

Hearing on Motion to Vacate to Be Within Ten Days of Service: The District Court entered judgment on May 22, 1980. On May 22, 1981, the defendant served plaintiff with a motion to vacate the judgment. On June 3, 1981, the District Court set a hearing on the motion for June 30, 1981. Because the District Court failed to hold the hearing within 10 days after the motion was served as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., the motion was considered denied on June 1, 1981. Lerum v. Logue, 198 M 194, 645 P2d 418, 39 St. Rep. 873 (1982).

Disqualification of Judge After Entry of Findings and Conclusions — Ruling on Motions Prohibited: Defendants filed affidavits of disqualification of the District Judge in a property dispute case after the entry of the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Defendants contended that this precluded the judge from entering judgment in accordance with his findings and conclusions. The disqualification was attempted under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (since superseded), which was in effect at the time. The findings and conclusions entered by the judge prior to the filing of the affidavit of disqualification expressly directed that a judgment be prepared "in accordance with" the findings and conclusions. Under these circumstances, the judgment was a part of the findings and conclusions. Accordingly, although the disqualification prevented the District Judge from ruling on posttrial motions under Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., and from withdrawing the findings and conclusions previously entered, it was not effective to prevent entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with findings and conclusions entered prior to the filing of the affidavit for disqualification. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

When Time Limits Inapplicable: The inherent power of the court to enter such orders as are necessary to enforce a judgment is not limited by the time limits in Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., because such orders are interlocutory orders, not final ones. Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995).

Time Limits Adhered To: Default judgment should not have been set aside when time extension limits of Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., were exceeded. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

GENERAL

Nonreversible Error in Not Allowing Attorney Serving as Guardian Ad Litem to Testify at Final Custody Hearing — Parent's Substantial Rights Not Affected: At a final custody hearing, the District Court refused to allow the testimony and cross-examination of an attorney who was acting as a guardian ad litem because attorneys are not normally allowed to testify under the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct for attorneys. The mother appealed on grounds that it was a denial of due process to give a guardian ad litem authority to investigate and report to the court and then prevent the guardian's testimony based on the Rules of Professional Conduct and that cross-examination was necessary to ensure that the children's best interests were protected. The Supreme Court held that when an attorney is appointed as a guardian ad litem, the guardian ad litem is not to act as an attorney unless directed to do so by the appointing court. Rather, the guardian ad litem is required to fulfill the statutory role to objectively aid the court in decisions regarding a child's best interests, which includes the duty to testify and be cross-examined if the guardian ad litem gives evidence concerning an investigation. Thus, the District Court in this case erred in not allowing the testimony of the guardian ad litem. However, the error did not require reversal because it was not so significant as to materially prejudice the mother, who was given numerous meaningful opportunities to examine the guardian ad litem during the 1 1/2 years of proceedings and to question the guardian ad litem's assertions and credibility. Jacobsen v. Thomas, 2004 MT 273, 323 M 183, 100 P3d 106 (2004).

Admission of Criminal Justice Information as Evidence in Tort Action Upheld: David, his wife Susan, their minor child, and the parties' defunct business sued Pierce Flooring and others for damages, including damages for emotional distress, stemming from criminal acts of vandalism taken against the plaintiffs' competing business. In the course of the trial, the District Court allowed the defendants to inspect, copy, and introduce evidence in police records concerning domestic violence complaints made by Susan against David. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was relevant because it showed that there may have been another cause for the Blacks' emotional distress other than the acts of vandalism. The Supreme Court also held that the record showed that the District Court properly exercised its discretion under Rule 403, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), in allowing the admission of some of the evidence but excluding other evidence because the Blacks' right to privacy exceeded the public's right to know. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's failure to make the written finding required by 44-5-303(1) was harmless error. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Argument — Comment on Lack of Testimony When Witness Testimony Barred by Court Order — Harmless Error: In a civil action for damages against Huggins and the Carpet Barn, stemming from criminal acts damaging plaintiffs David and Susan Black's automobiles, defendants made a motion in limine to exclude certain expert witnesses for the plaintiffs from testifying. After the motion was granted, defendants commented to the jury during final arguments that the plaintiffs had failed to produce any expert witnesses on the issue for which those witnesses had been excluded by the District Court's order and also commented on the fact that Susan had not testified, even though her deposition was not admitted by virtue of the District Court's ruling. The Supreme Court held that because the plaintiffs had violated a scheduling order that resulted in the expert witnesses' testimony being excluded, the defendants could properly comment upon the lack of evidence and, although the District Court erred in excluding Susan Black's deposition, that error was harmless error because the deposition was cumulative evidence. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Error as Basis for New Trial: For error to be the basis for a new trial, it must be so significant as to materially affect the substantial right of the complaining party. When the admission of evidence was clearly prejudicial and misleading, a new trial was warranted. Zeke's Distrib. Co. v. Brown-Forman Corp., 239 M 272, 779 P2d 908, 46 St. Rep. 1678 (1989), followed in Hansen v. Hansen, 254 M 152, 835 P2d 748, 49 St. Rep. 677 (1992), In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122, 49 St. Rep. 890 (1992), In re Marriage of Truax, 271 M 122, 894 P2d 936, 52 St. Rep. 347 (1995), Houdashelt v. Lutes, 282 M 435, 938 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 420 (1997), and Unmack v. Deaconess Medical Center, 1998 MT 262, 291 M 280, 967 P2d 783, 55 St. Rep. 1080 (1998).

Voidable Judgment — No Reason to Set Aside: Although the District Court's summary judgment on issue of dissolution of marriage based on irretrievable breakdown was voidable for lack of a required hearing, it would not be set aside on appeal because the appellant failed to show that the premature judgment had denied her substantial rights. In re Marriage of Kraut, 220 M 267, 714 P2d 167, 43 St. Rep. 350 (1986).

Slight Dollar Amount Errors in Findings — Harmless Error: That certain monetary amounts in the findings varied slightly from the proof at the trial was harmless error not requiring reversal, when the variation had no effect on the outcome of the issues. Farmers St. Bank of Victor v. Imperial Cattle Co., 218 M 89, 708 P2d 223, 42 St. Rep. 1419 (1985).

Voir Dire — Jurors' Beliefs as Taxpayers — Harmless Error: Although taxpayer status is not a ground for juror disqualification, voir dire as to prospective jurors' beliefs, as taxpayers, concerning the financial outcome of a case in which the state is a defendant should be permitted if requested. Failure of the trial court to permit such voir dire is error. However, the error is harmless when the jury returns a verdict for the defendant and does not reach the question of damages. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

Counsel's Remarks Concerning Evidence Not Given: The Supreme Court held that the defense counsel's remarks about the failure of the plaintiff to call his doctor to testify or to provide the doctor's records did not constitute misconduct amounting to reversible error. Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 1492 (1981). See also Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

Denial of Further Discovery as Harmless Error: In a case in which a Sheriff was charged with receiving a fee in violation of law, the State contended on appeal that the denial of a continuance to pursue discovery procedures to secure further facts from reluctant witnesses was error. The Supreme Court held that, because it had decided earlier in its opinion that the reward money received by the Sheriff was not a prohibited fee under 7-4-2519, the development of further facts could not change the result in the case and the State could not have been prejudiced by denial of further discovery of facts. The case turned on law, not on facts. St. v. DeMers, 192 M 367, 628 P2d 676, 38 St. Rep. 877 (1981).

Failure to Rule on Affirmative Defense as Harmless Error: Plaintiff, buyer of cattle from the defendant, signed a contract for delivery of cattle in mid-November, 45 days after weaning. The seller's wife actually owned the calves, but the seller alone executed the contract and received a downpayment. Subsequently, the seller informed the buyer he could not deliver until after January 1. Discussions about replacement calves ensued. Delivery by December 15 was demanded. The calves were sold in December, January, and February to others. The buyer prevailed in a suit against the seller, who appealed. The seller alleged as an affirmative defense that the buyer's action was barred for failure to register the name of his business under the fictitious name statute (now repealed). Because the seller failed to prove his allegations, the trial court's failure to rule on his motions resulted in, at most, harmless error. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

When Contract Impossible or Void — Failure to Rule on Motion for Summary Judgment as Harmless Error: A seller argued on appeal from a verdict for a purchaser in a breach of contract action that the cattle sales contract was void because he did not own the calves at the time of execution of the contract. The seller claimed the contract was wholly impossible and unlawful under 28-2-603. The Supreme Court said that the mere fact that a party contracts to sell something he does not own did not raise the defense of impossibility. The burden of proving impossibility rested on the party asserting it, and he had to show he took virtually every action within his powers to perform his duties under the contract. Here, the seller offered no evidence why it was impossible for him to obtain his wife's consent to the sale or to buy her out. The object of a contract had to be lawful when the contract was made and possible by the time the contract was to be performed. The District Court's failure to rule on the seller's motion for summary judgment on this ground was harmless error because the motion should have been denied. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

Motion Granted Without Notice Held Not Prejudicial — Doctrine of "Compensatory Error": In an action from which nonresident defendants were dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, the trial court's granting of plaintiffs' motions to add parties to the suits without prior notice to the defendants was held not prejudicial to the defendants. The issue was first raised on appeal, and the Supreme Court refused to consider it under the doctrine of "compensatory error". Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980).

Proof of Credit Purchase — Requisite Proof of Warranty Breach — Erroneous Disallowance of Counterclaims Not Prejudicial: In an action to collect the purchase price of tires purchased on credit, the defendant (buyer) filed a counterclaim for breach of warranty against the plaintiff (seller). The defendant's counterclaims were improperly denied but the defendant failed to prove a prima facie case. Defendant appealed, alleging that there was no proof of some of the purchases. The Supreme Court said that an open account between the seller and buyer can be proved by evidence that the seller's records show that the goods were sold, that invoices had been sent to the buyer who failed to object to them, and that the seller's records are accurate. Here the buyer's rebuttal testimony was indefinite, and the credibility of the buyer's witness was a question for the District Court. No breach of warranty was proven; only the testimony of the buyer was given and no solid evidence, such as any tires, records of the amount of use of the tires, or maintenance records, was produced. This, with findings of possible alternative causes of the problems with the tires, was a sufficient record to support the finding that breach of warranty was not proved by sufficient evidence and the erroneous disallowance of the counterclaims was therefore not prejudicial. Defendant therefore was liable for the price of the tires. D & K Distrib. v. Ford, 189 M 505, 616 P2d 1097, 37 St. Rep. 1693 (1980).

Failure to Serve Attorney — Not Reversible Error: The defendant failed to serve the plaintiff's attorney in violation of Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. Whether this is reversible error depends on the facts. The defendant's motion was set for hearing the same day as one of the plaintiff's motions. The two motions did not pertain to identical issues but both motions pertained to the same divorce decree and property settlement agreement. No attempt was made to get a continuance. The plaintiff was allowed to testify fully as to his financial affairs, and he has pointed to no evidence on appeal which was not before the trial court. The plaintiff was not prejudiced by the lack of service on his attorney. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the State since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway in the vicinity of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979).

Testimony in Probate Proceedings — Harmless Error: The admission of testimony relating to possible motives of individuals other than the decedent has no relevance to an appeal concerned with the sufficiency of evidence to support a jury verdict declaring the decedent competent, but such error is harmless. In re Holms, Holms v. Parsons, 179 M 375, 588 P2d 531 (1979).

Ruling on Motion — When: A District Court must rule on a motion to dismiss when made at the close of plaintiff's evidence or reserve its ruling until the close of all evidence, but a specific ruling must be made prior to final decision of the case; however, in this case failure to do so was harmless error. Brown v. Webb, 173 M 275, 567 P2d 450 (1977).

Instructions: The fact that the jury was charged orally and not in writing was harmless error. Seder v. Kiewit Sons Co., 156 M 322, 479 P2d 448 (1971).

Refusal to Poll Jury — Harmless Error: Lower court abused discretion in granting new trial based solely on ground that it had erred in refusing request for poll of jury since error, if any, was harmless in light of evidence affirmatively showing that verdict was rendered in open court in presence of all counsel, that in response to question by judge, foreman of jury advised him they had agreed upon verdict, and that following reading of verdict signed by foreman, judge inquired of jury if it was true verdict of at least eight of them and jury answered in affirmative. Martello v. Darlow, 151 M 232, 441 P2d 175 (1968).

Joint Enterprise: Court's rulings with respect to issue of joint enterprise, if error, was harmless error since driver was sole proximate cause of accident in which passenger suing owner of cattle was injured when car struck cattle on highway. Ratcliff v. Murphy, 150 M 31, 430 P2d 627 (1967).

Clerk's Error — Failure to Require Default Affidavit: Omission of clerk of court to require affidavit of amount due under Rule 55(b)(1) before entry of default judgment in favor of plaintiff is not fatal unless refusal to take action with respect to the omission appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Inconsistent Findings — Judgment Not Void: In action by sellers of hotel business against buyers for balance due on contract, findings of District Court that damages found for buyers would never exceed amount owed to sellers, and denial of recovery to sellers, did not void judgment and it was modified on appeal giving judgment to sellers for difference between that owed on the contract and total damages that buyers would sustain. Swecker v. Badura, 141 M 329, 377 P2d 752 (1963).

Admission in Court — Conflicting Order as Harmless Error: Where defendant in divorce action admitted that certain stocks in her name belonged to plaintiff and that she would endorse them and turn them over to plaintiff if produced, any error in the order of the court quieting title to the stock in plaintiff and ordering defendant to transfer and convey the stock to plaintiff was harmless. Rogers v. Rogers, 123 M 52, 209 P2d 998 (1949), explained in Key v. Clements, 133 M 344, 323 P2d 603 (1958).

Jurisdiction Not Acquired — Rule Inapplicable: Section 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P.), did not apply to an action where jurisdiction has not been properly acquired. In re Woodside-Florence Irrigation District, 121 M 346, 194 P2d 241 (1948); Choate v. Spencer, 13 M 127, 32 P 651 (1893), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

Clerical Error of Clerk: The entry of a default by the clerk under subsection (2) of section 93-4801, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 55(a) and (b), M.R.Civ.P.), was purely ministerial, and the fact that it was not "properly signed" would at best be but a clerical error or mistake which could not affect the substantial rights of the parties and which the court must disregard. Galbreath v. Aubert, 116 M 490, 157 P2d 105 (1944).

Burden of Proof Placed on Defendant — Harmless Error: Where a temporary restraining order was issued upon the filing of the complaint to recover possession of lands in the hands of a cropper and order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue, and defendant moved to dissolve the temporary order, while court erred in placing the burden of proof upon defendant, the error, in absence of showing of prejudice, will be considered immaterial because order of proof is discretionary and on final analysis determination is dependent on where preponderance of the evidence lay. Gibbons v. Huntsinger, 105 M 562, 74 P2d 443 (1927).

Technical Errors in Findings Immaterial: Technical error in making an immaterial finding does not warrant reversal of a judgment. Averill Mach. Co. v. Taylor, 70 M 70, 223 P 918 (1924).

Directed Verdict Instead of Dismissal — Harmless Error: Where no evidence was introduced in a claim and delivery action, an order directing the jury to find in favor of defendant, instead of ordering a nonsuit or dismissal, was technical error. However, the error was harmless, the action taken by the court having placed plaintiff in no worse position than he would have been if the statute had been strictly pursued. Barrett v. Shipley, 63 M 152, 206 P 430 (1922).

Substantial Error in Verdict — Rule Inapplicable: Section 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P.), had no application to substantial errors, as where the verdict in claim and delivery fails to find that there was an unlawful taking or detention. Olcott v. Gebo, 54 M 35, 166 P 300 (1917).

Discharge of Jury or Directed Verdict: It is not important whether the District Court directs the jury to render a verdict for either party, or discharges the jury and renders judgment. In either case the result is the decision of the District Court. If the District Court pursues the latter course it is at most a mere irregularity which will be disregarded by the Supreme Court. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Technical Irregularity of Pleadings as Harmless Error: Where, after a trial amendment, the case proceeded and was tried upon the issues formed by the amended complaint and answer, and it appeared that defendants were afforded every opportunity to present their entire case, the judgment should not be reversed upon the purely technical irregularity in the proceedings of the court with reference to the amendment. Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904).

Misjoinder of Causes: Where defendant rightly demurred (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground that two causes of action had been improperly united in the complaint, and the court, at the instance of the plaintiff without objection by the defendant, dismissed the complaint as to the second cause of action, at the same time overruling the demurrer, no costs being taxed to defendant, the overruling of the demurrer when considered with the dismissal did not affect any substantial right of the defendant requiring the judgment to be reversed. Caplice Commercial Co. v. Cassidy, 25 M 81, 63 P 799 (1901).

Judicial Sale: An order confirming a receiver's sale of partnership property will not be set aside on an appeal therefrom, where it is not shown that the property was not sold at its full value, or that the appellant was prejudiced thereby. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 591, 63 P 380 (1901).

MANIFEST JUSTICE

Grant or Denial of New Trial in Discretion of Court: Granting or refusing of a motion for a new trial rests in the trial court's discretion. Under this rule, the court must determine whether refusal to grant a motion would appear inconsistent with substantial justice. The Supreme Court will not overturn denial of a motion for a new trial absent a showing of manifest abuse of discretion. Hanzel v. Marler, 237 M 521, 774 P2d 426, 46 St. Rep. 1020 (1989).

Writ of Mandamus Manifestly Just: Where the issuing of a Writ of Mandamus restoring a policeman to office has been manifestly just, and the rights of the municipality against which the Writ is directed are not prejudicially affected, any errors committed at the hearing are to be disregarded on appeal. State ex rel. McDonald v. Getchell, 51 M 323, 152 P 480 (1915).

Judgment for Defendant Not to Be Reversed: A judgment for the defendant will not be reversed for error committed during the trial where the plaintiff is not, in any view of the case, entitled to a judgment. Howell v. Bent, 48 M 268, 137 P 49 (1913).

Purpose of Rule — Appellate Review: Section 93-3909, R.C.M 1947 (superseded by Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P.), was intended to put a speedy end to litigation when that object can be attained without injustice. Its design was to prevent reversals of causes wherein substantial justice has already been done. The Supreme Court was commanded by it to give judgment on appeal without regard to errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Copenhaver v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 453, 113 P 467 (1911).

PLEADING ERRORS

Harmless Error Rule Inapplicable to Substantial Defects: The rule that courts must at every stage of an action disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, has reference only to nonessential allegations or formative defects, and may not be relied upon by a plaintiff who failed to allege all facts in his complaint necessary to a cause of action. Dickason v. Dickason, 84 M 52, 274 P 145 (1929).

Defendant Not Misled — No Reversal for Defects in Complaint: Where defendant was not misled by any allegations or lack of allegations in the complaint but was fully prepared to defend the action upon the merits, the judgment in favor of plaintiff will not be reversed for mere technical defect in the pleading raised by general demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Davis v. Freisheimer, 68 M 322, 219 P 236 (1923).

Refusal of Motion to Strike: Error in refusing to grant a motion, in an action in conversion, to strike out a portion of the replication which, referring to proceedings on attachment had in a Justice's Court, was said to contain allegations argumentative in character and charging defendants with gross wrongdoing, was harmless, where, during the trial, the entire record of the proceedings had in the Justice's Court was on plaintiff's motion excluded, and where the court in its instructions submitted only the issues presented by the complaint and the denials in the answer. Shandy v. McDonald, 38 M 393, 100 P 203 (1909).

Count in Complaint Abandoned at Trial: Where, in an action to recover for services alleged to have been performed as brokers to sell real estate, plaintiffs at the opening of the trial abandoned a count in their complaint based upon a quantum meruit, introduced no proof in support of it, and the trial proceeded upon the issues presented by the answer to a count based on a written contract, and the instructions of the District Court were formulated accordingly, the error of the District Court in overruling a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the count based upon the quantum meruit, if error, was harmless. Blankenship v. Decker, 34 M 292, 85 P 1035 (1906).

Technical Objection to Complaint After Judgment: A technical objection to a complaint in a suit for specific performance not affecting the substantial rights of the parties is not available after judgment. Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904).

FAIR TRIAL

Improper Argument Concerning Witness Not Called Not Requiring Reversal: Moralli sued Lake County for a back injury that resulted from slipping and falling in the Lake County jail. During the closing argument at trial, Moralli's counsel commented upon the failure of the county to call the jailer as a witness, saying that the jailer's testimony would have hurt the county badly. Upon objection by the county, the District Court gave a curative instruction, admonishing the jury that it could not consider what the jailer might or might not say. The Supreme Court held that the argument was less prejudicial than the argument based upon excluded testimony considered by the Supreme Court in Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187 (1981). As in Gunnels, the Supreme Court held that the argument was improper but was not so prejudicial that it could not be cured by the District Court's instruction to the jury. Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992). However, see Harne v. Deadmond, 1998 MT 22, 287 M 255, 954 P2d 732, 55 St. Rep. 80 (1998).

Permissible Use of Records of Juvenile Crimes — Impeachment: Before his trial on charges of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant filed a motion to allow his counsel to inspect the Youth Court records of any complaining witnesses on the grounds that the records might have a bearing on the competency and veracity of those witnesses. The motion was denied, and the judge said he would examine the records to determine if any of the girls should be examined by a psychologist before testifying. The Supreme Court found that the judge's ruling denying the defendant's motion to inspect denied him the right to confront the witnesses against him. However, its review of the juvenile records convinced the Supreme Court that the error here was harmless. It declined to adopt a rule allowing evidence of prior juvenile convictions to be used as evidence to attack the general credibility of a witness. The permissible use of those juvenile records was confined to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness' bias, prejudice, or motive. It was within the discretion of the trial judge to determine competency, and his findings would not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124 , 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Failure to Serve Attorney — Not Reversible Error: The defendant failed to serve the plaintiff's attorney in violation of Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. Whether this is reversible error depends on the facts. The defendant's motion was set for hearing the same day as one of the plaintiff's motions. The two motions did not pertain to identical issues but both motions pertained to the same divorce decree and property settlement agreement. No attempt was made to get a continuance. The plaintiff was allowed to testify fully as to his financial affairs, and he has pointed to no evidence on appeal which was not before the trial court. The plaintiff was not prejudiced by the lack of service on his attorney. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Fair Trial and Impartial Judge Required: The provisions for disregarding harmless error are not applicable where the substantial right of the litigants to have a fair trial before an impartial judge is involved. In re Woodside-Florence Irrigation District, 121 M 346, 194 P2d 241 (1948).

Prejudice Not Presumed — Substantial Rights to Be Affected: On appeal prejudice is not presumed, and in order to work a reversal it must be affirmatively made to appear that substantial rights have been affected by the errors assigned. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939); Lindeberg v. Howe, 67 M 195, 215 P 230 (1923).

Argument by Counsel: Even though the defendant, in a proceeding to condemn land for a power plant, had the right to open and close on the question of damages, which right, however, was given by the court to the plaintiff, he was not entitled to a new trial on this ground unless he could show that he had suffered some prejudice by reason of the court's action. Interstate Power Co. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 52 M 509, 159 P 408 (1916).

Curing of Error: Error committed during a trial which is rendered harmless during its progress, and therefore cannot prejudice the complaining party, is insufficient to impeach a judgment. Fowlie v. Cruse, 52 M 222, 157 P 958 (1916).

EVIDENTIARY RULINGS

Admission of Hearsay Held Harmless Error — Refusal to Grant Mistrial Upheld: During the trial of a negligence action against the state for failure to properly supervise on parole a convicted execution-style murderer, the plaintiff testified that during the criminal trial of the parolee in another state, a firearms expert testified as to the age of the parolee's handgun. The state objected to the plaintiff's testimony but was overruled and later moved for a mistrial on the grounds that the plaintiff's counsel knowingly used false testimony because that counsel had a transcript of the previous criminal trial containing the expert's statements. The District Court reviewed the transcript from the criminal trial, concluded that the plaintiff's statements were based upon her own erroneous impressions from that trial, and refused to grant the mistrial. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's statement was hearsay and that it was error to admit the statement but, because the plaintiff's statement was cumulative, that admission of the statement was harmless error. The Supreme Court also noted that what the state was requesting by the motion for mistrial was that the Supreme Court substitute its judgment for that of the District Court concerning the District Court's findings that the testimony was presented knowing it was false, which the Supreme Court refused to do. Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997).

Judicial Comment on Evidence — Harmless Error: In a trial for negligence in the death of the plaintiff's wife by carbon monoxide poisoning resulting from a faulty exhaust system on a used car sold by defendant, the District Court sustained defendant's objection to evidence regarding federal emission standards and, in the process, explained the reasons for sustaining the objection. Plaintiff appealed on the grounds that the judge had improperly commented on the evidence in the presence of the jury. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the statement did not constitute reversible error. Not every statement made by the court constitutes an impermissible comment on the evidence. Plaintiff failed to establish how the comments substantially prejudiced the case. Foley v. Harrison Ave. Motor Co., 267 M 200, 883 P2d 100, 51 St. Rep. 1042 (1994).

Incorrect Calculations Inappropriate for Judicial Notice — Harmless Error: The trial court took judicial notice of two calculations that proved incorrect. The inferences drawn from these figures were used to support the court's decision. The Supreme Court stated that the trial court erred by taking judicial notice of facts not appropriate for judicial notice, but the error was harmless since other evidence supported the court's decision. Rose v. Myers, 223 M 13, 724 P2d 176, 43 St. Rep. 1493 (1986).

Admission of Hearsay Statements Harmless Error: Recollection by a witness of statements made by out-of-court declarants regarding paternity of an infant in a proceeding to terminate parental rights was hearsay, but was admissible to determine if the infant fell within the definition of "Indian child" under the Indian Child Welfare Act, and not to prove the truth of paternity. Other hearsay objections overruled by the trial court were properly raised, but the court failed to reverse the District Court since the erroneous admission of evidence was harmless. The objectionable statements were cumulative and amply corroborated by competent evidence. In re R.M.B., Youth in Need of Care, 213 M 29, 689 P2d 281, 41 St. Rep. 1925 (1984).

Lay Witness Opinion Testimony Conclusory and Lacking in Probative Value — Admission Harmless Error: The Supreme Court refused to find reversible error in the admission by the trial court of lay opinion testimony that was conclusory and lacked probative value, finding that the error was harmless in view of the voluminous record in the case. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983).

Denial of Further Discovery as Harmless Error: In a case in which a Sheriff was charged with receiving a fee in violation of law, the State contended on appeal that the denial of a continuance to pursue discovery procedures to secure further facts from reluctant witnesses was error. The Supreme Court held that, because it had decided earlier in its opinion that the reward money received by the Sheriff was not a prohibited fee under 7-4-2519, the development of further facts could not change the result in the case and the State could not have been prejudiced by denial of further discovery of facts. The case turned on law, not on facts. St. v. DeMers, 192 M 367, 628 P2d 676, 38 St. Rep. 877 (1981).

Permissible Use of Records of Juvenile Crimes — Impeachment: Before his trial on charges of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant filed a motion to allow his counsel to inspect the Youth Court records of any complaining witnesses on the grounds that the records might have a bearing on the competency and veracity of those witnesses. The motion was denied, and the judge said he would examine the records to determine if any of the girls should be examined by a psychologist before testifying. The Supreme Court found that the judge's ruling denying the defendant's motion to inspect denied him the right to confront the witnesses against him. However, its review of the juvenile records convinced the Supreme Court that the error here was harmless. It declined to adopt a rule allowing evidence of prior juvenile convictions to be used as evidence to attack the general credibility of a witness. The permissible use of those juvenile records was confined to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness' bias, prejudice, or motive. It was within the discretion of the trial judge to determine competency, and his findings would not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Exception to Parol Evidence Rule — Harmless Error: The defendant appealed from a judgment granting specific performance of an option agreement to the plaintiff and ordering the property involved conveyed to the plaintiff. The defendant argued that the judgment should be reversed because the trial court erred in excluding his testimony on matters going to the validity of the contract. He claimed he had no authority to sign the agreement, he had no intent to sign a contract, and he raised the question whether anyone had directed that a writing be made. The trial court had excluded the offered evidence as a violation of the parol evidence rule. The offered testimony went to the validity of the contract and therefore constituted an exception to the rule under 28-2-905, but no prejudice occurred because such testimony was admitted later in the trial. Van Atta v. Schillinger, 191 M 472, 625 P2d 73, 38 St. Rep. 426 (1981).

Harmless Error — Consideration of Records Not Presented at Hearing — Workers' Compensation: Where no timely objection was made at the time the workers' compensation judge made known that he would consider an additional physical examination of the claimant after the close of the hearing, it was not error to include the results of the examination in the findings and conclusions filed by the judge. The judge also considered claimant's Veterans' Administration (now Department of Veterans Affairs) medical records, which were not presented at the hearing. Since these records corroborated claimant's testimony, however, it was harmless error to consider them. Hume v. St. Regis Paper Co., 187 M 53, 608 P2d 1063 (1980).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the State since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway in the vicinity of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979).

Testimony in Probate Proceeding — Harmless Error: The admission of testimony relating to possible motives of individuals other than the decedent has no relevance to an appeal concerned with the sufficiency of evidence to support a jury verdict declaring the decedent competent, but such error is harmless. In re Holms, Holms v. Parsons, 179 M 375, 588 P2d 531 (1979).

Hypothetical Question: Defendant tractor owner was not prejudiced by the court's allowing highway patrolman to answer hypothetical questions which assumed, among other facts, that a driver in a position the same as that of plaintiff's decedent was watching the right side of the road as he passed the glare of the tractor headlights where it had been previously established that decedent could not have avoided hitting the tractor-trailer had he been looking directly ahead. Hurly v. Star Transfer Co., 141 M 176, 376 P2d 504 (1962).

Evidence as to Suicide: In an action to recover on a life insurance policy defended on the ground of suicide, admission of testimony on good reputation of decedent, that the Chief of Police had never known of a like case of suicide, identification of picture of deceased by his fiancee, and that of a firearms expert that a revolver could be accidentally discharged by intentionally pulling the trigger, if error, was harmless as not affecting the substantial rights of the parties. Lewis v. New York Life Ins. Co., 113 M 151, 124 P2d 579 (1942).

Improper Admission or Cross-Examination — Reversal Warranted: Errors in the admission of improper evidence or in the permission of improper cross-examination have been held in and of themselves sufficiently prejudicial to justify the reversal of a judgment. St. v. Patton, 102 M 51, 55 P2d 1290 (1936).

Evidence of Physical Condition — Lapse of Time: While it was error to admit evidence as to the condition of a tractor 2 years after its alleged wrongful seizure and return to the owner, in view of further testimony that it had in the interim been extensively used and repairs had been made on it, it may not be held of sufficient force to prejudice defendant in the eyes of the jury. Roper v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., 98 M 76, 37 P2d 812 (1934).

Failure to Rule on Evidence: Where all evidence offered in a condemnation proceeding was admitted, failure of the court to rule on an objection to appellant's evidence could not have adversely affected his rights, and therefore, while a ruling should have been made in order to preserve a proper record, its failure so to do was harmless error. St. v. Whitcomb, 94 M 415, 22 P2d 823 (1933).

Immaterial Testimony Admitted: Error in admitting immaterial testimony which could not have prejudiced appellant will be treated as harmless. Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928).

Receipt of Evidence "Subject to Objection": Repeated failure of the trial court in a proceeding to vacate a decree of divorce to rule upon objections to offered evidence and its action in permitting it to be received "subject to the objections", thus depriving counsel of knowledge whether it was or was not before the trial court in arriving at its decision, if error, was nonprejudicial where the evidence in each instance was not of any substantial materiality and could not have affected the result. Hall v. Hall, 70 M 460, 226 P 469 (1924).

Presumption as to Reception of Incompetent Testimony: The rule that on appeal in an action tried without a jury it will be presumed that the trial court did not consider incompetent testimony in reaching its conclusion, applies only where nothing substantial appears in the record to the contrary or where the testimony was trifling and of no import. Therefore, where palpably incompetent testimony was of import and went to the very matter covered by the court's findings, the presumption cannot be indulged and the judgment will be reversed. State ex rel. Rankin v. Martin, 68 M 392, 219 P 632 (1923).

Error in Cross-Examination Permitted: Though the court permits a technical violation of the rule of cross-examination, the error is not prejudicial where it is not shown that substantial rights have suffered, and it will therefore be disregarded. Hanson Sheep Co. v. Farmers' & Traders' St. Bank, 53 M 324, 163 P 1151 (1917).

Technical Error Not Grounds for Reversal: Technical error in the admission of evidence is not grounds for reversal unless it appears that the rights of the party complaining have been prejudiced by it. Rea v. Alfalfa Prod. Co., 53 M 90, 161 P 708 (1917); White v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 49 M 419, 143 P 561 (1914).

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY

Harmless Error Regarding General Verdict Form: Although several claims were submitted erroneously to the jury on the general verdict form, the error was not reversible error. Reversal of the verdict on the remaining proper claims would constitute substantial injustice. R.H. Grover, Inc. v. Flynn Ins. Co., 238 M 278, 777 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 1266 (1989).

Contract Dispute — Damages — Harmless Error: Plaintiffs, sellers of a motel, sued for repossession of the motel and the defendants counterclaimed for actual and punitive damages. The District Court jury awarded judgment in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed, claiming the District Court erred by instructing the jury that an oral waiver could alter a written contract and by submitting to the jury an issue of bad faith between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the defendants' testimony as to the plaintiffs' waiver was sufficient to uphold the jury decision and that the failure of the District Court to distinguish between damages arising from a breach of contract provision and damages for the tort of bad faith is in this case harmless in view of the jury verdict awarding only compensatory damages. Thiel v. Johnson, 219 M 271, 711 P2d 829, 42 St. Rep. 2010 (1985).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions Properly Refused — Harmless Error: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, the District Court did not err in refusing to give the plaintiff's jury instructions relating to the defendant's negligence. Because the jury based its decision on the plaintiff's contributory negligence, the defendant's negligence could not have affected the result in this case. If any error occurred, it was harmless. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

Adverse Possession — Failure to Instruct on Permissive Use: In a case involving alleged adverse possession, one issue on appeal was the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury on permissive use in conjunction with adverse possession. The Supreme Court cited case law that implied acquiescence is not the same as permission. Possession may be adverse even though the owner does not interfere with entry and the possessor understands that there will be no future interference with his possession. Upon review of the trial evidence, the Supreme Court found no evidence of permissive use. It noted that the testator on whose behalf the case was brought had treated the land he possessed as his own, paid taxes on the property, and improved it. In the absence of any evidence supporting this portion of the defendant's case, the Supreme Court found no reversible error could have occurred as a result of the District Court's refusal to give a permissive use instruction. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land and Livestock Co., 192 M 208, 627 P2d 1199, 38 St. Rep. 574 (1981).

Personal Injury — When Strict Liability Applies — Harmless Error: Plaintiffs purchased a used motorcycle from the defendant. Both plaintiffs were injured riding the motorcycle and brought an action in strict liability, and alternately, in negligence. The case was submitted to the jury on the negligence theory only. The jury found that the plaintiff's actions were the proximate cause of the accident in both cases and that the defendant was not negligent. On appeal, the plaintiffs alleged error in the failure of the court to instruct the jury on the theory of strict liability. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs could not have been prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct on strict liability because, in this particular case, the jury's findings of no negligence on the part of the defendant in adjusting the brakes would foreclose a finding of defect by reason of brake maladjustment and because the plaintiffs did not carry their burden to establish a causal relationship between brake maladjustment and the accident in that their testimony failed to prove that the accident was caused by defective brakes rather than caused by the bike hitting the ditch at a time the driver was unattentive. Likewise, since the jury found the defendant to be not negligent, any error in instructions on affirmative defenses was harmless. Therefore, the instructions pertaining to assumption of risk did not require review. Evangeline v. Billings Cycle Center, 192 M 106, 626 P2d 841, 38 St. Rep. 550 (1981).

Headlamp Illumination Requirements Erroneously Stated — Harmless Error: A jury instruction regarding the applicable statutory provisions governing the degree of illumination required of headlamps of motor vehicles, although erroneously stated by a judge, constituted only harmless error since the outcome of the verdict against defendant was not affected and since the statute that was erroneously involved actually helped defendant. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

Oral Instructions as Harmless Error: The fact that the jury was charged orally and not in writing was harmless error. Seder v. Kiewit Sons Co., 156 M 322, 479 P2d 448 (1971).

Contributory Negligence Instruction as Harmless Error — No Evidence: In a wrongful death action by father of 8 ½-year-old boy, who while riding a bicycle was struck and killed by automobile, court's instruction that deceased boy was incapable of contributory negligence and court's refusal of defendant's offered instruction on contributory negligence was not reversible error, irrespective of question of boy's capacity, since there was no substantial credible evidence of contributory negligence in fact on part of deceased boy. Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967).

Giving Issue to Jury as Harmless Error: Submitting issue of contributory negligence to jury was harmless error in light of substantial evidence showing that defendant was not negligent, and substantial evidence that even if defendant was negligent plaintiff was not injured in accident or injury was not result of defendant's negligence. Brown v. Reel, 148 M 381, 421 P2d 454 (1966).

Appeal After Favorable Verdict: Where, on appeal from a verdict in his favor, many of plaintiff's assignments of error related to instructions dealing only with matters affecting the question of liability and since their adoption or refusal could not have prejudiced the plaintiff, the jury having found in his favor, the instructions could not be considered on appeal. Dasinger v. Andersen, 136 M 277, 347 P2d 747 (1959).

No Injury From Inapplicable Instructions: Where no injury was caused the appellant by giving of inapplicable instruction, Supreme Court will disregard error. Maynard v. Helena, 117 M 402, 160 P2d 484 (1945).

Criminal Proceeding — Substantial Justice Done: The trial court in a criminal prosecution may neither instruct the jury as though a disputed fact had been proved, nor comment upon the weight of the evidence. But if its charge as a whole leaves the disputed facts to the determination of the jury, and it does not appear that the jurors have been misled by the assumption of a fact as true, and it appears from the whole case that substantial justice has been done, the technical error committed will not work a reversal of the judgment of conviction. St. v. Daems, 97 M 486, 37 P2d 322 (1934).

Correct Result Based on Improper Instructions — No Reversal Required: Where the correct result was reached in the trial of a law action, the judgment should be affirmed even though the jury was incorrectly instructed, such a case falling within the rule forbidding the Supreme Court from reversing a judgment because of any error or defect in the proceedings not affecting the substantial rights of the parties. Berthelote v. Loy Oil Co., 95 M 434, 28 P2d 187 (1933).

Condition of Sidewalk — No Prejudice Shown: In an action by a pedestrian based upon an accident on a city street in daytime, while it was error to instruct the jury that defendant city was required to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition "by night as well as day", in the absence of an affirmative showing of prejudice to defendant's substantial rights, the error must be considered harmless. Olson v. Butte, 86 M 240, 283 P 222 (1929).

Damages — Instruction Nonprejudicial: Where the jury had been advised that every element essential to a recovery must be established by a preponderance of the evidence, error in an instruction that if they found the issues in favor of plaintiff they might award damages in such amount as "they believed" would compensate her, etc., was nonprejudicial. Kelly v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Imputed Negligence Incorrect: Where an automobile collided with an engine at a railroad crossing, through the negligence of the driver of the automobile, judgment for the railroad in an action by a passenger in the automobile will not be reversed where the plaintiff was himself negligent, because of an erroneous instruction that the driver's negligence could be imputed to the plaintiff. Sherris v. N. Pac. Ry., 55 M 189, 175 P 269 (1918).

JURY ERROR

Incorrect Order Corrected on Appeal — New Trial Unnecessary: In an action for money had and received, where the jury verdict and judgment were in strict conformity to the prayer of the complaint, even though there was an additional order merging a note and mortgage changing the nature of the judgment from one for money had and received to one of foreclosure, the judgment could be corrected by the Supreme Court without a new trial. Puterbaugh v. Ash, 135 M 463, 342 P2d 742 (1959).

Verdict Exceeded Undisputed Damages — Modified Judgment: Where verdict of jury was for $10 more than proof showed loss to be and there was no conflict in the evidence, the judgment entered on such verdict would not be reversed but the judgment would be modified by reducing it by $10. Miller v. Emerson, 120 M 380, 186 P2d 220 (1947).

Verdict Larger Than Intended — Remand Proper: Where it is apparent from the record that the jury intended to fix the damages in an action in conversion at the limit fixed in the court's instructions, but either by clerical error or inadvertence returned a verdict for a larger amount, and the evidence shows clearly that plaintiff is entitled to recover, the judgment will not be reversed but the cause remanded with directions to modify the judgment to comport with the intention of the jury. Kane v. Oehler, 62 M 417, 205 P 245 (1922).

Case Notes

No Basis Upon Which to Appeal Denial of Motion: When the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's complaint for a permanent injunction against the defendant, the plaintiff sought an injunction pending appeal. At the hearing, the plaintiff was not prepared to present evidence although the defendant indicated a willingness to proceed. At the suggestion of plaintiff, the court denied the motion, opening the way for an appeal. On appeal, the Supreme Court found from the record that plaintiff had no grounds upon which to appeal from a denial of the Rule 62(c), M.R.Civ.P., motion. The motion was therefore properly denied. Rule 67. Deposit in court.

Commission Notes

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule, except that reference is made to the provisions of the Montana Code rather than to the federal statutes.

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: As of July 31, 1983, the above commission note was still applicable. On August 1, 1983, an amendment to the Federal Rule became effective that authorizes the deposit, whether or not the depositing party claimed any interest in the deposit; requires that the deposit order be served on the Clerk of Court; and requires the deposit to be interest-bearing.

Case Notes

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Rule 68. Offer of judgment.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

ORIGINAL COMMISSION NOTE

The rule is identical with the Federal Rule, except that the clause at the end of the second sentence of the Federal Rule, "the clerk shall enter judgment," has been changed to read "judgment shall be entered."

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: Fed.R.Civ.P. 68, as amended 1966.

This logical extension of the concept of offer of judgment is suggested by the common admiralty practice of determining liability before the amount of liability is determined.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The above commission note was written prior to the 1967 amendment. The amendment of September 29, 1967, added the last sentence. As of May 1, 1990, the State Rule was, with the exception noted in the original commission note, still identical to the Federal Rule, which was itself amended in 1966.

The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Case Notes

Costs of Contested Employment Discrimination Administrative Hearing Not Allowed Absent Adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure by Agency: The Department of Labor and Industry conducted an administrative hearing to address plaintiff's employment discrimination claim. Defendants made an offer of judgment that plaintiff refused, but defendants ultimately prevailed and then contended that plaintiff was responsible for the costs of the hearing under 25-10-501, 49-2-505, and this rule. The Department determined that the general legislative mandate to follow the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure did not empower the agency to award costs in a contested case hearing. The District Court agreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 49-2-505, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply only in agency hearings to the extent that the rules are adopted by the agency. This rule, which allows recovery of costs after a judgment, has not been adopted by the Department to apply in agency-conducted administrative hearings related to employment discrimination. Absent a statutory basis, the award of costs was not proper. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004).

Offer of Judgment to State That Attorney Fees Not Included to Effect Waiver of Discretionary Attorney Fees: Plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation formed to protect and increase equal housing opportunities, filed an administrative complaint against defendants for violating Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Human Rights Act, by denying equal housing opportunities based on familial status, age, and marital status. Following an administrative investigation, the Commission for Human Rights found that plaintiff's allegations were supported by substantial evidence and that there was reasonable cause to believe that defendants violated state fair housing laws. Defendants ultimately served plaintiff an offer of judgment pursuant to this rule, which stipulated that judgment would be taken against defendants in the amount of $2,000 "together with costs only that accrued". Plaintiff accepted the offer, and judgment was entered against defendants. Plaintiff subsequently sought attorney fees as the prevailing party, but the request was denied by the District Court because the offer of judgment did not expressly include attorney fees, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that it is in the interests of both parties that an offer of judgment be clear and unambiguous in order to effect a waiver of attorney fees; however, the offer itself need not include the term "attorney fees" to effect a waiver. In the present case, the offer of judgment included costs, but it was not clear whether attorney fees were included, nor did the offer state that the sum to be paid was consideration for the resolution of all counts. Thus, it was ambiguous whether plaintiff, by accepting the offer, waived the right to attorney fees. The offer of judgment did not include a specific waiver of attorney fees, so the District Court erred in concluding that plaintiff's acceptance of the offer constituted a waiver of attorney fees. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether to award plaintiff discretionary attorney fees under the Human Rights Act. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2002 MT 353, 313 M 409, 61 P3d 170 (2002), distinguished, with regard to an offer of full payment, in Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004). See also Nordby v. Anchor Hocking Packaging Co., 199 F3d 390 (7th Cir. 1999).

Application of Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P., Does Not Preclude Award of Presettlement Offer Costs: In a contract dispute, the state had made a pretrial offer of settlement that was rejected by the plaintiff contractors. The recovery by the contractors was for less than the pretrial settlement offer, and the lower court awarded the state its postoffer costs as mandated by this rule. The lower court also awarded the state its presettlement offer costs. The contractors argued that the rule limits allowable costs to those incurred after the offer of settlement. The Supreme Court held that the rule mandates an award of postsettlement offer costs but that it does not limit the discretion granted a court under 25-10-103 to award presettlement offer costs. Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 27, 304 M 157, 18 P3d 1018 (2001).

"Costs" Held Not to Include Expenses of Deposition for Perpetuation of Testimony Incurred After Offer of Judgment: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered alleging contributory negligence. Thereafter, Tabish made an offer of judgment that the Valeos did not accept and subsequently incurred $609.29 for cost of airfare, hotel, and car rental in the taking of a deposition for perpetuation of testimony. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court entered judgment to include the $609.29 claimed by Tabish in his memorandum of costs. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's opinion and held that "costs", as used in this rule, should not be construed more broadly than the same word in 25-10-201 and held that its previous opinion in Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997), supported that conclusion. The Supreme Court also rejected Tabish's argument that the word "costs", as used in this rule, must provide an independent right to receive costs other than as defined and provided in 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 or this rule would otherwise serve no independent purpose to encourage the settlement of litigation. The Supreme Court noted that Tabish provided no authority for that argument and that the language of 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 is significantly different from the language of this rule. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Taxation of Costs in Offer of Judgment — Disallowance of Deposition Expenses: Fisher sought to recover the costs of depositions taken in a case that was settled by offer of judgment pursuant to this rule, contending that costs should be allowable because they were necessary for the prosecution of the claim, even though it did not proceed to trial. Applying the definition of "costs" in 25-10-201, the Supreme Court noted that costs for depositions are allowed in only limited circumstances when the depositions are relied upon by the trial court or used in a trial setting. The court found that in the present case, acceptance of the offer of judgment averted a trial and that as a result, the depositions were not used as evidence, for purposes of impeachment, or in deciding a dispositive summary judgment motion. Denial of Fisher's request to recover deposition costs was proper. Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163, 54 St. Rep. 151 (1997), followed in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

"Costs Incurred" — Attorney Fees Not Included: The "costs incurred" that may be awarded to an offeror under this rule do not include attorney fees. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985). The general rule that costs do not include attorney fees was distinguished with regard to attorney fees chargeable as costs under 39-3-214 in a wage protection case, Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Entry of Offer of Judgment — Liability Becomes Moot: Because this rule specifies that an offer of judgment made after a finding of liability but before determination of damages has the same effect as an offer made before trial, an offer of judgment made and entered prior to trial pursuant to this rule renders the issue of liability moot and hence nonappealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 194 M 52, 635 P2d 269, 38 St. Rep. 1691 (1981), followed in In re Certain Justice Court Expenses, 264 M 510, 872 P2d 795, 51 St. Rep. 372 (1994).

Offer in Same Amount as Subsequent Judgment: Costs of suit were properly awarded to defendant where defendant made an offer of judgment in the exact amount that was eventually recovered by plaintiff. Riefflin v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 164 M 287, 521 P2d 675 (1974).

Fraud on Court — Remedy: Although proper procedure was followed under rule providing for offer of judgment, conduct of parties in perpetrating fraud on court required that judgment be vacated on motion of aggrieved beneficiary who was not party to suit against estate. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967).

Unaccepted Offer — Effect: An "offer to do equity" in the answer, when not accepted, cannot be used in evidence nor can it be regarded as an admission that defendants had waived any of their defenses. Rachou v. McQuitty, 125 M 1, 229 P2d 965 (1951).

Offer Required by Rule: Tender or payment after suit brought, to be effectual to prevent further costs, must be of the sum due with costs accrued up to that time, and interest if interest be due. Pape v. Chauvin-Fant Furniture Co., 25 M 417, 65 P 424 (1901).

Rule 69. Execution.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

The rule is similar to subdivision (a) of the Federal Rule. However, the first sentence of the Federal Rule, which permits the court to direct enforcement of a judgment for the payment of money in some other manner than by a writ of execution, has been omitted. Apparently this first sentence in the Federal Rule is intended to permit the federal court to conform its procedure to that of some other states which provide for enforcement of such judgments other than by a writ of execution, and is not appropriate to Montana practice. Other changes are made to adapt the rule to Montana practice and conform it to the language of our statutes, which refer to proceedings "supplementary to execution." Subdivision (b) of the Federal Rule is omitted altogether as not appropriate to state practice.

No Liability When Creditor Did Not Direct Wrongful Levy of Execution: In an action alleging wrongful execution and conversion, the defendant-creditor's motion for summary judgment was granted properly. The creditor was not liable for wrongful execution as it did not advise, direct, or assist in the commission of the wrongful execution upon the plaintiffs' bank account but merely obtained a Writ of Execution and forwarded it to the Sheriff. The general rule of law that an execution creditor who advises, directs, or assists in a wrongful execution is liable does not apply in this case. The creditor did not participate in or direct the wrongful execution. Foley v. Audit Serv., Inc., 214 M 403, 693 P2d 528, 42 St. Rep. 49 (1985).

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on this rule was misplaced because this rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of this rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that this rule was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993).

Motion to Set Aside Easement for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Denied — Sanctions Imposed: After several hearings and appeals concerning the building of an airstrip, the appellants sought to have an easement grant set aside on the basis that the original judgment included no reference to an easement that could be enforced under this rule. The Supreme Court, citing Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), stated that the appellants had been afforded ample opportunity to contest all issues, including subject matter jurisdiction, and that public policy dictated that at some point litigation must cease. The court further held that the appellants were merely trying to relitigate settled issues and imposed damages of $500 on the appellants. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217 (1989).

Contradictory and Inconsistent Actions Warranting Sanctions: The District Court found an easement was warranted, and appellant testified that he intended to grant one, but later appellant informed respondent that no easement would be forthcoming. Respondent used Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P., as a basis for a motion for an easement. The District Court found appellant had acted in a contradictory and inconsistent manner with regard to the easement and that Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., sanctions were proper. Respondent's use of Rule 70 was inappropriate because no judgment had been entered, but that did not defeat his motion because it was not unreasonable under the circumstances. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 748 P2d 948, 45 St. Rep. 46 (1988).

Aggrieved Parties: Because defendants were accorded full review in proceeding by plaintiff to dismiss defendants' motion to stay judgment pending appeal and to assess costs, defendants were no longer "aggrieved parties" entitled to further appeal rights. Morris v. Monk, 158 M 163, 489 P2d 1029 (1971).

Rule 72. Appeal from a district court to the supreme court.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

COMMISSION NOTE

The rule is similar to the Federal Rule, adapted to appeals from Montana district courts to the Supreme Court of Montana pursuant to Montana statutes and rules of the Supreme Court.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE

Subdivision (a) of Rule 41, M.R.App.P. merely adapts the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure to these Appellate Rules.

Amendment — Identity With Federal Rule: The 1965 amendment rewrote this rule. The Federal Rule to which the above commission note refers was abrogated December 4, 1967, effective July 1, 1968, and was, along with Federal Rules 73 through 76, superseded by the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, effective July 1, 1968. As of May 1, 1990, the preceding comment was still applicable.

Statutes Superseded: A table setting forth those statutes superseded by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure is set forth in the compiler's comment to Rule 43 (now Rule 53), M.R.App.P. (see Title 25, ch. 21).

Case Notes

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), Rule 17, M.R.App.P., 27-25-103, and this rule require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to Rule 5, M.R.App.P., a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Amending Notice of Appeal: Amendment of a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court after the time period for notice has run is not possible. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

Faxed Return of Service of Summons Received on Evening of Final Day of Filing Considered Timely — Courts Always Open: White filed a complaint September 8, 1995, and summons was served on Klosterman September 8, 1998. The Sheriff's dispatcher faxed the return of service to the Clerk of Court at 8:23 p.m. the same day. The District Court held that the return of service was late because it was not filed with the Clerk of Court by 5 p.m. on the last day that filing was permitted. However, the Supreme Court found nothing in the plain language of the judicial rules of procedure or any Montana authority that provides those requirements. Rather, Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P., requires that return of service be filed within 3 years; Rule 5(e), M.R.Civ.P., allows filing by facsimile or other electronic means; 25-3-501 gives faxed documents the same force and effect as an original; this rule requires that District Courts always be open for filing; and 1-1-301 provides that each day ends at midnight. Rule 77(c). Clerk's office and orders by clerk.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

In subdivision (c), the first sentence of the Federal Rule, which states the clerk's office hours, has been omitted because the matter is adequately controlled by statute; and the clause in the second sentence of the Federal Rule, "for entering defaults or judgments by default," has been omitted for better conformity to proposed Rule 55.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rules. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

Identity With Federal Rule: As of May 1, 1990, the above commission note was still applicable.

Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Rule 77(d). Notice of entry of judgment or order served.

Commission and Advisory Committee Notes

COMMISSION NOTE

Subdivision (d) of the rule changes the Federal Rule and is identical with the North Dakota rule.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S NOTE
TO OCTOBER 9, 1984, AMENDMENT

The amendment is made for the purpose of returning to the practice contemplated by the rule as originally adopted. The amendment modifies the original rule by changing the language "upon the adverse party" to "upon all parties who have made an appearance". The change eliminates any disagreement as to whether particular parties in a given case are "adverse". Also changed from the original rule is the last part of the amendment which allows any other party to serve notice of such entry, a provision found in the present rule. Because the present rule has led to so many complications, it is believed that the required service by counsel rather than by the clerk is preferable.

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendment conforms the rule to the Federal Rule.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Near beginning, after "judgment", inserted "or an order" and near middle, after "judgment", inserted "or order".

Amendments — Identity With Federal Rule: The amendment of December 31, 1975, completely rewrote this rule. As a result of the 1975 amendment, the rule was identical to the first two sentences of the Federal Rule.

The amendment of October 9, 1984, substituted present language for "Immediately upon the entry of an order or judgment the clerk shall serve a notice of the entry by mail in the manner provided for in Rule 5 upon each party who is not in default for failure to appear, and shall make a note in the docket of the mailing. Such mailing is sufficient notice for all purposes for which notice of the entry of an order or judgment is required by these rules; but any party may in addition serve a notice of such entry in the manner provided in Rule 5 for the service of papers."

As of May 1, 1990, the rule bears little resemblance to the Federal Rule.

Case Notes

No Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: About 2 weeks after defendant filed a notice of entry of judgment, plaintiff filed a motion to amend the original complaint, and the District Court granted the motion. About 3 weeks after the amended complaint was filed, the court entered an order nunc pro tunc stating that it no longer had discretionary authority to grant leave to amend because it lost jurisdiction when defendant filed the notice of entry of judgment. The court held that the order allowing plaintiff's motion to amend was void and should be stricken. Plaintiff appealed the nunc pro tunc order, and the Supreme Court reversed. The filing of a notice of entry of judgment starts the clock running for the time to appeal, but does not divest the District Court of jurisdiction. Rather, the District Court loses jurisdiction when a notice of appeal is filed. Thus, the order issued nunc pro tunc was based on a mistaken interpretation of law because when the motion to amend was granted, the District Court still had jurisdiction. Kruckenberg v. Kalispell, 2004 MT 185, 322 M 177, 94 P3d 748 (2004). See also McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001).

Entry of Judgment Not Filed — Time for Filing Appeal Not Running Until Notice of Entry Issued: When no notice of entry of judgment is filed by a party, the time for filing an appeal does not begin to run until the Clerk of Court issues a notice of entry of judgment under this rule, nor does the time to request the court to modify or vacate an order begin to run. In the present case, the filing of a notice of entry of judgment was required under that rule as an action in which an appearance has been made, but neither party filed the notice. As a result, the 60-day filing period required under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., could not begin to run, so a subsequent motion for relief was not time-barred. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Civil Procedure Rule That Notice of Entry of Order Be Served by Prevailing Party Inapplicable in Postconviction Relief Proceeding: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court addressed whether the notice of entry of judgment requirement under this rule applied to postconviction relief proceedings governed by Title 46, ch. 21. The court previously held in cases unrelated to postconviction proceedings that only when the notice is served does a prospective appellant's time for filing a notice of appeal begin to run. (See In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989), Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).) Here, Garner was convicted of forgery and felony theft and contended that because the state was the "prevailing party", notice should have been provided to him of the entry of the District Court's order and that because notice was not provided, the 60 days within which to appeal could not have expired because it never commenced to run. However, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply in a postconviction relief proceeding only when they are applicable and not inconsistent with postconviction statutes. Section 46-21-203 specifically requires that an appeal in postconviction proceedings be taken within 60 days of the entry of the order, which is inconsistent with the general notice rule in this rule. The Supreme Court applied the particular provision over the general provision and concluded that this rule has no application in postconviction relief proceedings, so the 60-day filing deadline in 46-21-203 commences in all instances and without more upon entry of the court's order granting or denying postconviction relief. St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Motion for Reconsideration Held Not to Be Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P., Held Applicable — Notice of Appeal Filed Before Receipt of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Premature: In an action to enforce the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the Shieldses filed a motion for reconsideration shortly after the District Court dismissed their first amended complaint. Before the District Court ruled on the motion for reconsideration, the Shieldses filed a notice of appeal. The defendants claimed that the motion for reconsideration should be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., and that because Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), specifies that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a motion to alter or amend judgment has no effect until the motion to alter or amend judgment is disposed of, the Shieldses' notice of appeal was ineffective. The Supreme Court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not one of the motions provided for or authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court reviewed the substance of the motion for reconsideration to determine whether, under Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the motion could be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment and held that the motion could not be so treated. Because the motion could not be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment, the time for the Shieldses to file a notice of appeal was governed by Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P., and not Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. Under Rule 5(a)(1), the Shieldses had 30 days from the time of notice of entry of judgment under this rule in which to file their notice of appeal. However, the Supreme Court also noted that there was nothing in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure that prevented the Shieldses from filing their notice of appeal earlier than provided under this rule, and for that reason, the Supreme Court held the filing of the notice of appeal to be effective. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Time for Filing Appeal When Required Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Made: As the prevailing party, defendants were required by this rule to serve plaintiffs with notice of entry of judgment. Under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), when such a notice is required, the time for filing a notice of appeal is within 30 days after service of the notice of entry of judgment. Because defendants failed to serve plaintiffs with a notice of entry of judgment, the 30 days never began to run. Therefore, notice of appeal filed on November 8, 1995, from an order filed on August 29, 1995, was timely. Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364, 53 St. Rep. 1024 (1996).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Notice of Entry of Default Judgment Unnecessary: After a default judgment was entered against defendant property management firm for conversion of plaintiffs' rentals, the defendants argued, inter alia, that they should be relieved of the default because they had not received notice of entry of the default judgment. The Supreme Court, citing Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517 (1982), held that the default judgment should not be set aside because the defendants failed to receive notice of the entry of the default judgment since notice was not required to be sent by the Clerk of the District Court. Bd. of Directors of Edelweiss Owners' Ass'n v. McIntosh, 251 M 144, 822 P2d 1080, 48 St. Rep. 1131 (1991).

Time for Appeal — Begins to Run When Notice Filed: Notice of entry of judgment must be served by the prevailing party upon all parties who appeared, and the time for appeal does not begin to run until the notice is filed. Thus, even if the judge made oral comments during the hearing that left no doubt as to what he would order, the time for appeal did not begin to run on the date of the hearing, and the appeal was timely since no entry of judgment was served. In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213, 46 St. Rep. 904 (1989), followed in Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Defendant, who was successful in having an action dismissed on a Rule 12(b) motion, failed to file a notice of entry of judgment. The plaintiffs' 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal did not run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

More Than One "Prevailing Party" — Effect of Failure to Timely File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Appeal Allowed: Where the plaintiff was successful in his claim for conversion and the defendant was successful in his counterclaim for trespass, both parties were considered to have prevailed and both parties were responsible for the failure to technically comply with the filing requirements of this rule. The defendant could not enforce technical compliance with the rule against the plaintiff when he had not complied with the same requirements. In this case, the time limitations for filing an appeal began to run on the date the plaintiff filed a notice of entry of judgment, 71 days after judgment on the posttrial motions. The appeal, filed on the same day, was timely filed, and the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Prevailing Party — Proper Notice of Entry of Judgment: The prevailing party in an action has the duty of serving notice of entry of judgment, together with a copy of the judgment or a description of the nature and amount of relief and damages granted, on all parties who have made an appearance. If proper notice of entry of judgment is never served, the time for filing a notice of appeal never begins to run. El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704, 43 St. Rep. 1575 (1986).

Judgment — Setoff Based on Stipulation: Plaintiff received a judgment against defendant. Defendant appealed, and the appeal was dismissed with prejudice when defendant advised the court that defendant did not wish to proceed with it. Defendant then filed a motion for a setoff of an amount that plaintiff and defendant were both liable to pay to a third party. Defendant's attorney and plaintiff's attorney had entered into a stipulation that plaintiff was primarily liable and defendant secondarily liable for that amount and that if defendant paid it, the payment would be set off against any judgment granted plaintiff against defendant. The lower court properly set off that amount as partial satisfaction of the judgment. Although the motion was not made within the time required by the rules, it was properly considered because the Clerk of Court did not give defendant notice of entry of the judgment against defendant; therefore, the time for filing the motion had not commenced to run, since the motion was to be made within a certain time from the notice of entry of judgment. AAR Constr., Inc. v. Fergus Elec. Co-op., Inc., 215 M 102, 695 P2d 819, 42 St. Rep. 214 (1985).

Technical Compliance With Rule on Notice of Entry of Judgment Required: It is the filing of the notice of entry of judgment that begins the running of the time limitations for filing a notice of appeal. Even though findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a decree were mailed to the parties by the Clerk of Court, no notice of entry of judgment was filed, and the time for filing a notice of appeal did not begin to run at that time. Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1031 (1983).

Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court — Starting Point for the Period for the Filing of Appeal: For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the period for filing notice of appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 (now repealed) shall be the starting point for the period for filing the notice of appeal. In this case the court therefore had jurisdiction over the appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

New Trial Motion Untimely: The District Court erred in granting a motion for new trial because the requirements of Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., were not complied with. The notice of entry of judgment, although prepared and signed by Gilbert, was served on the Gordons by the Clerk of the Court on July 25, 1979. The motion for a new trial, however, was not filed or served on opposing counsel until January 1980, some 6 months later. This court will not disregard the 10-day time limitation. Additionally, there is no requirement that the notice of entry of judgment be signed by the Clerk or be prepared and given to the Clerk by the "prevailing party". In re Gordon, 192 M 499, 628 P2d 1117, 38 St. Rep. 887 (1981).

Effect of Failure to Send Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: Under 72-3-318, the court may vacate orders in a formal probate proceeding within the time allowed for appeal. Since the clerk failed to send notice of entry of an order as required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., the time allowed for appeal had not begun to run and the party was still entitled to request the court to modify or vacate its order. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Named Devisees Entitled to Notice of Entry of Order in a Formal Probate Proceeding: Named devisees are "interested persons" under 72-1-103 and must be given notice of the initiation of formal probate proceedings under 72-3-305, which indicates that the Legislature intended named devisees to be parties to formal probate proceedings and as such they are entitled to notice of the entry of an order in the proceeding as required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: The notice required on the entry of an order in a formal probate proceeding is controlled by the M.R.Civ.P. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the workers' compensation court should in all fundamental fairness be given the same benefit of that provision of Rule 5, M.R.App.P., which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P., are automatically put into play, adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P., comes into play extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made. Thus, the court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Omitted: The date of service of notice of entry of judgment is the arbitrary point in time from which the time limits for appeal begin to run. If no notice of entry of judgment has been served upon the losing party, the right to appeal has not expired. Haywood v. Sedillo, 167 M 101, 535 P2d 1014 (1975).

Notice of Decree Conditioned Upon Defendants' Inaction: When defendants in quiet title action had notice through their attorney that decree quieting title in plaintiffs would be entered if defendants did not deposit sum to use of plaintiffs' tax purchasers by certain date, rule requiring service of notice of entry of judgment was not applicable to judgment entered for plaintiffs after defendants failed to make deposit, since Rule 81, M.R.Civ.P., is applicable. Rosen v. Midkiff, 164 M 116, 519 P2d 416 (1974).

Sufficiency of Notice: Notice sent to plaintiff's attorney that judgment had been entered in favor of defendant and stating that a copy of the order adjudging a dismissal with prejudice was attached, was sufficient for compliance with this rule even though a copy of the order was not actually attached. Jackson v. Tinker, 161 M 51, 504 P2d 692 (1972).

Dual Nature of Habeas Corpus — Extradition: Habeas corpus is a civil proceeding when involved in child custody and related cases. Decisions made by the courts in those actions are appealable and res judicata as to certain matters heard at the District Court level. Habeas corpus is a criminal proceeding when the action in which it is originally brought is criminal in nature, such as extradition proceedings. In criminal actions denial of the Writ is not appealable but successive applications for the Writ may be brought directly to the Supreme Court until the judicial power of the State has been exhausted. Case Notes

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under 25-33-301, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P., with Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-33-301 in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in 25-33-301, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of this rule requires that Rules 3 and 38 be given meanings that are consistent with 25-33-301 and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-102 and 25-33-103. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. Rules of Civil Procedure Not Applicable to Informal Probate Proceeding: This rule does not interject the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure into other statutory schemes that provide different procedural requirements and thus does not make the rules applicable to informal probate proceedings. Personal Service on Defendant or Defendant's Counsel Not Required for Execution Sales: Mikelson argued that Rule 5(a) and this rule, when read together, required that notice of a Sheriff's sale of Mikelson's property be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. However, those rules deal with notice within District Court proceedings and do not relate to notice in execution sales, which are governed by 25-13-701. Nothing in 25-13-701 requires that notice of an execution sale be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Rule 82. Jurisdiction and venue unaffected.

Commission Notes

The rule changes the Federal Rule to apply to state practice.

Case Notes

Time for Filing of Petition for Judicial Review — Time of "Service" of Final Agency Decision Defined: Following proceedings in an administrative action before the Public Service Commission, the Commission mailed a copy of its decision to MCI on May 19, 1992, but MCI did not receive the decision until May 21, 1992. On June 19, 1992, MCI filed its petition for judicial review under 2-4-702. The District Court dismissed the petition as being untimely filed. The Supreme Court held that 2-4-702 did not define the time of "service" at which the 30-day period for filing a petition for review began to run. Section 2-4-106 requires that Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., be applied to define when service by mail is complete for administrative decisions. Rule 6(e) requires that when service is made by mail, an additional 3 days must be added to the time for taking action. Thus, the time for judicial review began to run on May 23, and MCI's petition was filed within the 30-day time period provided by 2-4-702. MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 260 M 175, 858 P2d 364, 50 St. Rep. 989 (1993), distinguished in In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999).

Class Action — Venue: Venue for a class action is determined just as it is for a comparable nonclass action. Thus, venue must be satisfied as to all named class representatives, just as it must be to all plaintiffs and defendants in a nonclass action. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Case Notes

Uniform Rules for District Courts — Time Limit for Filing Brief in Support of Rule 12 Motion: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Local Rule as Conflicting With Montana Rules of Civil Procedure: Local court Rule 3, Park County District Court, states in part that a party opposing a motion has 10 days after the filing and service of the moving party's brief to serve and file a reply brief. When applied to a motion for summary judgment, local Rule 3 conflicts with Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. Whenever a local rule conflicts with the M.R.Civ.P., the local rule must be set aside. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 606 P2d 1082 (1980).

Ex Parte Trial Briefs: A District Court rule allowing for the filing of ex parte trial briefs used solely by defendant to inform the trial court of complex arguments to be presented at trial does not violate the plaintiff's due process rights. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979).

Briefs Required on Preliminary Motion: Trial court rule requiring filing of briefs in support of preliminary motion is proper exercise of authority under this rule and may be enforced by summary denial of motion where brief has not been filed. Hansen v. Kiernan, 159 M 448, 499 P2d 787 (1972).

Amendment: The 1964 amendment divided subdivision (a) into two paragraphs; inserted the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth sentences of the first paragraph and the first and second sentences of the second paragraph; substituted "These rules and amendments" for "They" at the beginning of the third sentence of the second paragraph; inserted "or amendments" after "particular action pending when the rules" in the latter part of the third sentence of the second paragraph; and substituted "became effective" for "will take effect" in the first sentence of the first paragraph.

Case Notes

General 1171
Retroactive Application 1171

GENERAL

Relation Back of Complaint: Question of relation back of complaint amended after adoption of rules is governed by provisions of rules even though action originated prior to effective date of rules in absence of finding by court having jurisdiction that rules should not control. Rozan v. Rosen, 150 M 121, 431 P2d 870 (1967).

Failure to Serve Summons — Effect — Rule Not in Effect: Notwithstanding the fact that the rules were not in effect, the court exceeded its jurisdiction in denying motion to quash the service of summons when it was not served and returned within 3 years. State ex rel. Belwin, Inc. v. Davison, 148 M 345, 420 P2d 842 (1966).

Retroactivity of Rules of Procedure: Although legislative intent to give retrospective force to a statute must appear and all doubt will be resolved against retrospective application, the Rules of Civil Procedure apply retrospectively. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966); Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 34 F.R.D. 515 (D.C. Mont. 1964); Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 177 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

RETROACTIVE APPLICATION

Service on Nonresident — Application of Rule: Rule 4B(1), M.R.Civ.P., applied to act of alleged malpractice occurring in Montana prior to effective date of the M.R.Civ.P., and doctor who had not resided in Montana since the effective date of the rules could properly be served with process, under Rule 4D(3), in California. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966).

Discretion of Court — Application of Old Rule: District Court had the power to consider motion under procedure that was in effect when the motion was filed where the District Court believed application of amended rule would work an injury. State ex rel. Rozan v. District Court, 147 M 532, 416 P2d 19 (1966).

Application of Rules Not Prohibited — Retroactive Application: The giving effect to the service of summons provisions of Rule 4, subdivision B, M.R.Civ.P., when the operative facts of the case to which the rule applied had taken place prior to the effective date provided in this section, was not a prohibited retroactive application of Rule 4, subdivision B, within the meaning of 1-2-109. Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

CHAPTER 21
RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE

Chapter Advisory Commission Notes

The procedure covering appeals in criminal cases to the supreme court of Montana from Montana district courts has heretofore been found in various statutes. It was decided that for convenience the rules governing procedure for appellate practice should be equally applicable to civil and criminal cases, the same as found in the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. Many of the proposed amendments [June 16, 1986; effective January 19, 1987] are minor, designed to make them applicable to criminal cases as well as civil. In such cases, no further advisory commission notes appear necessary.

Chapter Compiler's Comments

History of Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure: The Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (M.R.App.P.) are the result of a study and recommendations by the Montana Supreme Court's Advisory Committee on Rules created pursuant to Ch. 16, L. 1963, to advise the court on matters pertaining to the form and adoption of rules of procedure. Notes which the Advisory Committee included on the proposed rules have been included under the heading "Advisory Committee Notes". The original M.R.App.Civ.P. were approved by the Montana Supreme Court on December 10, 1965, effective January 1, 1966, and supersede 25 sections of the 1947 Revised Codes of Montana, numerous Rules of the Supreme Court of Montana, and several of the earlier adopted Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Advisory Committee continues to advise the Supreme Court on proposed amendments to the M.R.Civ.P. and the M.R.App.P. under the authority of 3-2-702, MCA Notes of the Advisory Committee pertaining to amendments adopted since 1966 have also been included.

Identity With Superseded Statute — Case Notes Included: As noted in the compiler's comment above, the M.R.App.P. supersede many sections of the R.C.M. 1947. Because language from some of the superseded sections has been used in the M.R.App.P., some of the case notes previously annotated in the R.C.M. 1947 have been included in these annotations under the subheading "Cases Decided Under Statute". Cases decided under the provisions of the M.R.App.P. are annotated under the subheading "Cases Decided Under Rules". Only those cases decided under superseded statutes with language identical or clearly analogous to the language of a corresponding rule have been included. For the language of the superseded sections of the R.C.M. 1947, reference may be made to Tables B and C included as compiler's comments to Rule 43 (now Rule 53), M.R.App.P. and then to the appropriate section of Title 93, vol. 7, R.C.M. 1947.

Identity With Federal Rules: Some of the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (M.R.App.P.) are patterned after the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (Fed.R.App.P.). The Advisory Committee has occasionally compared the M.R.App.P. to the Fed.R.App.P. as contained in the "Federal Draft" of those rules proposed by the Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure, a committee reporting the form of the proposed Fed.R.App.P. and subsequent amendments to the Judicial Conference of the United States under the authority of 28 U.S.C. 331, 2072. The draft of the Fed.R.App.P. was adopted by the United States Supreme Court on December 4, 1967, effective July 1, 1968. As to the applicability of cases litigated under the F.R.App.P. to the corresponding M.R.App.P., see, e.g., [USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994);] Petritz v. Albertsons, Inc., 187 M 102, 608 P2d 1089 (1980); St. Highway Comm'n v. Antonioli, 145 M 411, 401 P2d 563 (1965); Rambur v. Diehl Lumber, 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Effect of Publishing Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure: Section 2, Ch. 1, L. 1979, provided: "(1) The legislature recognizes the supreme court's authority pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution to make rules governing procedure and practice before the courts.

(2) The legislature also recognizes that the practice of printing such rules with the Montana statutes is of benefit to code users and facilitates implementation of Article VII, section 2(3), of the Montana constitution concerning disapproval by the legislature.

(3) Therefore, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, printed as chapter 20, Title 25, MCA; the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure [now Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure], printed as chapter 21, Title 25, MCA; and the Montana Rules of Evidence, printed as chapter 10, Title 26, MCA, appear only for the purpose of facilitating use of the code. Neither this act nor publication of the rules may be construed as an attempt to readopt or promulgate the rules."

Rules of Court Contained in Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure — Certification of Controlling Questions of Law by United States Courts: Rule I, entitled "Civil Matters", of the Rules of the Montana Supreme Court provides as follows: "All rules with respect to the operation of this Court, procedure and practice therein, are contained in the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure [now Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure], except that whenever in an action pending in a United States court it shall appear that there is a controlling question of Montana law as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion, a party to such action may institute suit in the Montana Supreme Court for a declaratory judgment or decree, and, if the judge of the United States court wherein the action is pending shall certify that the question upon which adjudication is sought is controlling in the federal litigation and the adjudication by the Montana Supreme Court will materially advance ultimate termination of the federal litigation, a declaratory judgment or decree may be rendered. Rendition of a declaratory judgment or decree is discretionary with the Montana Supreme Court, and it may refuse to render such a judgment or decree if it appears that there is another ground for determination of the case pending in the United States court, or if the question for adjudication is not clearly defined, or if the question is not adequately briefed or argued.

This amended Rule shall be in full force and effect from and after the first day of March, 1967."

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

Section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947, is restated and clarified. The effect of section 93-8004(3)[, R.C.M. 1947], referring to "an order changing or refusing to change a place of trial," is limited by providing for appeals from orders re change of venue only in cases where the motion for change is based upon subdivision 1 of section 93-2906[, R.C.M. 1947; 25-2-201, MCA].

Since these rules only apply to appeals from district courts to the Montana supreme court, the provisions of sections 93-8001 and 93-8002[, R.C.M. 1947; 25-12-101, 25-12-102, MCA, respectively] are not superseded in so far as they refer to appeals in actions in police or justice's courts: a judgment or order in a civil action in police or justice's courts, except when expressly made final, may be reviewed as prescribed in R.C.M. 1947, sections 93-7901 to 93-7908[; 25-33-102 through 25-33-104, 25-33-201 through 25-33-205(1), 25-33-207, 25-33-301, 25-33-303 through 25-33-306, MCA].

NOTE TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: None.

This adds to appealable orders an order under Rule 23(c)(1), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, refusing to permit a class action to be maintained as such. It does not permit appeal from an order permitting a class action to be maintained as such. See Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 23 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (a) inserted "and criminal" after "appeals in civil"; in (b) inserted "In civil cases" at beginning; inserted (d) relating to appeals taken in criminal cases; and reoutlined entire section.

Amendments: The amendment of September 29, 1967, in clause (b), inserted "or refusing to permit an action to be maintained as a class action;" near the beginning of the first sentence.

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

GENERAL

District Court Decision Regarding Constitutionality of One Issue Precluding Consideration of Other Constitutional Questions — Certification to Supreme Court Proper: Baumgardner raised numerous issues concerning the constitutionality of 2001 amendments to the Public Employees' Retirement System. The District Court decided that the amendments were an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power but did not consider other issues related to the amendments. The Public Employees' Retirement Board moved to certify the judgment as final, and the motion was granted. On appeal, Baumgardner contended that certification was improper because the District Court did not resolve all of the pending issues. The Supreme Court disagreed. Once the amendments were declared unconstitutional on the delegation question, there was no need for the District Court to consider other challenges to the constitutionality of the amendments, so certification was appropriate, and the case was properly submitted to the Supreme Court. Baumgardner v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 2005 MT 199, 328 M 179, 119 P3d 77 (2005).

Appeal Moot for Inability of Supreme Court to Grant Relief: Plaintiffs owned a ranch, but being in default and facing foreclosure, they made a deal with defendant Bell whereby Bell would borrow money to pay off plaintiffs' debt and plaintiffs would receive an ownership interest in Bell's company formed to manage the ranch. However, the mortgage was never transferred into the company, and plaintiffs sued Bell for fraud and breach of contract. A jury granted plaintiffs $500,000 in damages for Bell's breach of contract, and Bell appealed. Bell ultimately declared bankruptcy and sold the ranch to pay off the loan and to pay off the money judgment owed to plaintiffs, whereby plaintiffs' mortgage on the ranch was released. Plaintiffs moved that Bell's appeal be dismissed for mootness, and the Supreme Court agreed. The $500,000 judgment could not simply be reversed with plaintiffs retaining ownership because the ranch had been sold, and Bell would be considerably richer than he was at the beginning of the deal, having invested little of his own money, and plaintiffs would have nothing. Therefore, applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996), the Supreme Court held that Bell's claim was moot based on the court's inability to grant effective relief. Graveyard Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Bell, 2005 MT 172, 327 M 491, 116 P3d 779 (2005).

Appeal of Appointment of Personal Representative Not Timely: The District Court appointed a son as personal representative of his mother's estate and ordered that letters of administration be issued to him, and his sister appealed the appointment. Pursuant to In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994), the Supreme Court reviewed the appointment to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law. Under this rule, an order granting letters of administration is appealable, but Rule 5, M.R.App.P., provides that an aggrieved party has 30 days from the date of entry of an order to file a notice of appeal. By the time that the sister appealed, her brother had been personal representative of the estate for 14 months, so the appeal was not timely. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004).

Power of Trial Court on Remand — No Provision Regarding Effect of Failure to Deny in Rules of Appellate Procedure: In 1993, Brown filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, arguing that prison officials had miscalculated his parole eligibility date. The Supreme Court denied that petition. In 1996, Brown filed a 42 U.S.C. 1983 complaint in District Court seeking to address alleged deprivations of his rights by prison officials under federal law, but the complaint was dismissed for failure to state a claim. The District Court concluded that the issues raised in the complaint were the same as those raised in the 1993 writ and were thus barred by collateral estoppel. Brown appealed, and in an unpublished opinion (Brown v. St., No. 96-651), the Supreme Court remanded, concluding that the District Court had mischaracterized the issues in the 1993 writ and that three of the claims were not barred by collateral estoppel. On remand, after an unexplained delay of 4 years, the District Court dismissed Brown's remaining claims, holding that they were not cognizable under federal law. Brown appealed again, arguing that the District Court erred by granting judgment to the state without first holding a hearing and asserting that under Rule 8(d), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the state's failure to respond to the issue in its brief constituted an admission that Brown was correct on the issue. However, Brown misapplied Rule 8(d) to these proceedings. The Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure do not contain a similar provision regarding the effect of failure to deny. Further, the remand order did not require the District Court to hold a hearing. On remand, the trial court is free to make any order or decision in further progress of the case that is not inconsistent with the appellate court's decision. The District Court was affirmed. Brown v. St., 2002 MT 58, 309 M 106, 46 P3d 42 (2002).

Appropriateness of Intervention in Action Challenging Enforcement of Ballot Initiative: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, and the groups appealed. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court noted that an application for intervention as a matter of right must satisfy each of the following factors: (1) timeliness; (2) interest in the subject matter of the litigation; (3) a showing that protection of the interest may be impaired by disposition of the action; and (4) a showing that the interest is not adequately represented by an existing party. In the present case, timeliness was not disputed. Regarding the second factor, the Supreme Court cited Idaho Farm Bureau Fed'n v. Babbitt, 58 F3d 1392 (9th Cir. 1995), for the proposition that a public interest group is entitled as a matter of right to intervene in an action challenging the legality of a measure that the group has supported. The District Court did not address the third factor because it determined that the groups had no legally protectable interest in the litigation. However, the Supreme Court found that an adverse decision in the suit would impair the groups' interest in the management and protection of Montana's game animals, so the third factor was met. Finally, the District Court determined that the groups failed to demonstrate that the Attorney General, on behalf of the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, would not zealously defend the groups' position in the suit. The Supreme Court concluded that the groups that actively drafted and supported the initiative may be in the best position to defend their interpretation of the resulting legislation and may not have been adequately represented by the Department. Thus, all four factors were met, and the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to permit the groups to intervene in the case. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Conflict of Interest of Personal Representative Cured by Court Supervision of Estate: Prior to Zempel's death, he executed his will, naming his daughter, Palmer, as his sole devisee and his neighbor, Newman, as personal representative of the estate. Zempel then entered into an agreement to sell his ranch to Newman, who, acting pursuant to the power of attorney, executed a contract for deed and lease that transferred the ranch property to Newman. Following Zempel's death, the District Court appointed Palmer as special administrator based on an ex parte application. Shortly thereafter, Newman filed a petition for formal probate and appointment of personal representative, in conjunction with a motion to set aside the ex parte order. The District Court terminated the ex parte order, appointed Newman as personal representative, and ordered that any real estate transaction be approved by the court after notice and hearing. Palmer appealed Newman's appointment as personal representative, citing the conflict of interest that arose from the documents purportedly transferring estate assets to Newman. A conflict of interest is sufficient for removal of a personal representative for cause, but does not mandate removal. As established in In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165 (1996), a transaction involving a conflict of interest between a personal representative and an estate can be cured by a court-ordered supervision of the transaction. The District Court did not act arbitrarily in this case because it required its approval for the final transaction between the personal representative and the estate, protecting any objection or challenge by Palmer through supervision of the disputed transaction, which cured the conflict of interest. The court did not err when it appointed Newman as personal representative, and the appointment was affirmed. In re Estate of Zempel, 2000 MT 283, 302 M 183, 14 P3d 441, 57 St. Rep. 1182 (2000).

Interlocutory Order Granting Temporary Investigative Authority and Protective Services Not Appealable: An order for temporary investigative authority and protective services issued under 41-3-403 is not a "final judgement", a specified interlocutory order, or "an allowance for a widow or a child" and is not appealable under this rule. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Failure to File Bill of Costs Held Waiver of Recovery of Costs — Issue Addressed First Time on Appeal: Cenex, Inc., brought a declaratory judgment action against the Yellowstone County Board of Commissioners. Cenex, for the first time on appeal, raised an objection to the District Court's order that it pay the Board $852.75 in costs. The Supreme Court noted that while it generally does not address issues raised for the first time on appeal, the failure of the Board to file a bill of costs pursuant to 25-10-201 deprived Cenex of its opportunity to object to the taxation of costs before the District Court. The Supreme Court therefore determined that Cenex cannot be considered to have waived its right to appeal the taxation of costs and held that the Board's failure to file the bill of costs constituted a waiver of its right to recover costs from Cenex. Cenex, Inc. v. Yellowstone County Bd. of Comm'rs, 283 M 330, 941 P2d 964, 54 St. Rep. 695 (1997).

Denial of Bond Pending Appeal — Method of Supreme Court Review — Jurisdiction: After conviction for negligent homicide and on related charges, Ingraham moved the District Court to continue bond pending appeal. The District Court denied the motion, finding that Ingraham was a danger to the community and therefore did not meet the requirements of 46-9-107. Ingraham then moved the Supreme Court, pursuant to Rule 22, M.R.App.P., to continue bond pending appeal or, in the alternative, to accept appeal of the District Court's order denying bond, pursuant to 46-20-104 and this rule. The Attorney General moved to dismiss, contending that there was no provision in law for appeal from a District Court order denying bond pending appeal and that Ingraham should have brought an original habeas corpus proceeding. The Supreme Court agreed with the Attorney General and dismissed Ingraham's motion or appeal, holding that Ingraham should have brought a petition for a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 46-22-103. Ingraham then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which was filed with Justice Trieweiler pursuant to 3-2-212. Justice Trieweiler granted the petition to the extent necessary for the District Court to hold an evidentiary hearing as provided by statute, under the theory that the District Court was the more appropriate court for the hearing than was the Supreme Court. The Attorney General opposed the order by applying to the full Supreme Court for a writ of supervisory control, arguing, contrary to the state's previous position, that 46-22-103 does not really apply to persons convicted in a criminal case and that the more appropriate procedure was an original proceeding "in the nature of habeas corpus" before the full Supreme Court. The application for a writ of supervisory control was denied, was treated by the Supreme Court as a late-filed response to Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and was referred to Justice Trieweiler. Justice Trieweiler determined that it was inappropriate for him alone to determine the form of review of the District Court's denial of bond. Justice Trieweiler also determined that: (1) Ingraham had no constitutional right to bond pending appeal; (2) Ingraham did have a right to the proper exercise of the District Court's discretion in the application of 46-9-107; and (3) that right was a substantial right for the purposes of 46-20-104. For these reasons, Justice Trieweiler vacated his previous order granting Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus and referred the matter to the full Supreme Court for review of the District Court's order denying bond pending appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Section 1983 Action — Denial of Summary Judgment on Qualified Immunity Held Not Appealable — Lack of Supreme Court Jurisdiction — Sanctions Awarded: After a riot at the Montana State Prison (MSP) in which several prison inmates were killed or injured, inmates brought a negligence and section 1983 action against MSP officials. The MSP officials moved for summary judgment on the issue of qualified immunity from the section 1983 action. The District Court denied the motion, and the MSP officials appealed the denial. The Supreme Court held that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction over the appeal from the District Court's denial of the summary judgment motion because the District Court order is not a final judgment within the meaning of subsection (b)(1) of this rule and that the appeal was likewise not authorized by subsection (b)(2) or (b)(3) of this rule. The Supreme Court noted that this result was not changed by the state's allegation that the record was "ripe for appeal" and was "easily reviewable". The Supreme Court also held that the case law of the federal courts interpreting 28 U.S.C. 1291, especially Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 US 511 (1985), and Johnson v. Jones, 515 US 304, 132 L Ed 2d 238, 115 S Ct 2151 (1995), was not relevant because the Montana Supreme Court derives its authority over appeals from the state constitution and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure and not from 28 U.S.C. 1291. Because the appellants had not made any arguments in favor of their appeal, the Supreme Court determined that it was frivolous and, pursuant to Rule 32, M.R.App.P., awarded the respondents their attorney fees on appeal. In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

Order Allowing Intervention Appealable With Final Judgment: DeVoe brought an action against the state, alleging that it had abandoned property to which DeVoe was the successor in interest. The District Court granted a motion by the city of Missoula that the city be allowed to intervene. After final judgment in favor of Missoula, DeVoe appealed the District Court's order allowing Missoula to intervene. The Supreme Court held that an order granting intervention is not separately appealable under this rule because the order is not individually listed in this rule as an appealable order, but held that the order is appealable after entry of final judgment. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously ruled to the same effect in Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 233 M 277, 760 P2d 73 (1988), Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808 (1992), and In re Custody of R.R.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998 (1993). DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Failure to Transfer Venue for Convenience and Justice Not Subject to Interlocutory Appeal: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. Defendant ZMI moved for change of venue under both 25-2-201(1) and (3). The District Court refused to transfer venue under subsection (1) without discussing the merits of ZMI's claim under subsection (3), and ZMI appealed. The Supreme Court refused to consider the merits of ZMI's claim under 25-2-201(3), holding that the language of subsection (b)(2) of this rule is intended to allow interlocutory appeals only of a District Court's refusal to change venue under 25-2-201(1). State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Grant of Motion for Extension of Time for Appeal as Appealable Order: The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order. Dvoraks claimed that the order was not appealable because it was not specifically set forth in this rule. Citing Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556 (1993), the Supreme Court held that an order extending the time to file a notice of appeal was a "special order made after final judgment" within the language of this rule. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Relitigation of Previously Resolved Issue Barred on Appeal: Under the doctrine of law of the case, a prior Montana Supreme Court decision resolving a particular issue between the same parties in the same case is binding and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. St. v. Smith, 261 M 419, 863 P2d 1000, 50 St. Rep. 1388 (1993). See also St. v. Van Dyken, 242 M 415, 791 P2d 1350 (1990).

Motion to Stay and Motion for Protective Order Not Subject to Interlocutory Appeal: During a dissolution proceeding, Lori filed a notice of appeal from a District Court order denying Lori's motion to stay proceedings and her motion for a protective order. The Supreme Court held that denial of a motion to stay and denial of a motion for a protective order are interlocutory in nature and are not appealable orders within the scope of this rule. For that reason, the Supreme Court held that Lori may not appeal denial of her motions until the District Court enters final judgment in her case. In re Marriage of Smith, 260 M 406, 860 P2d 159, 50 St. Rep. 1151 (1993).

Untimely Appeal From Denial of Motion for Change of Venue — Waiver: In the course of a dissolution proceeding, Lori appealed from the District Court's denial of her motion for a change of venue. The Supreme Court held that while a denial of a motion for a change of venue is an appealable order within the scope of this rule, the request for a change of venue must be timely made. Under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), a motion for a change of venue must be made within 20 days after the response to the pleading is filed. In this case, the dissolution proceeding was begun in 1985 and the husband's motion for custody was filed on June 5, 1991. However, the motion for a change of venue was not filed until March 18, 1993. In addition to the untimely motion, Lori made numerous appearances in the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District without challenging venue in that district. The Supreme Court therefore dismissed the appeal. In re Marriage of Smith, 260 M 406, 860 P2d 159, 50 St. Rep. 1151 (1993).

Elements of Prima Facie Case for Foreclosure Admitted in Pleadings — Controversion on Appeal Estopped: When a party admitted in the pleadings all elements necessary to establish a prima facie case for foreclosure sufficient to warrant summary judgment, the party was bound by the pleadings and estopped on appeal to controvert the admissions. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Foreclosure Action — Appeal Not Moot Because of Owners' Failure to Post Bond or Stay Appeal: In a foreclosure action, the bank prevailed in District Court. The owners did not voluntarily relinquish the property. The bank foreclosed. The owners' failure to post a supersedeas bond or otherwise stay the proceedings in District Court did not render their appeal moot. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Right to Appeal — Receipt of Damages: In a breach of contract suit relating to sale of real property, when plaintiffs had deposited funds with the District Court rather than make payments under the contract to defendants, acceptance of money from the court to cover survey expenses did not preclude plaintiffs from pursuing an appeal. Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Grants of Intervention Not Appealable: The plaintiff appealed the lower court's decision to let a third party intervene in the plaintiff's suit against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that granting intervention was interlocutory and not subject to appeal. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, Inc. v. Glacier Wilderness Ranch, Inc., 242 M 471, 791 P2d 1363, 47 St. Rep. 892 (1990).

Issues Related to Stipulated Facts or Law Not to Be Raised on Appeal: After the lower court had entered its judgment, the parties agreed that a certain portion of the judgment was valid and stipulated it was not subject to appeal. The Supreme Court refused to hear argument concerning the stipulated portion of the judgment, holding that after such a stipulation, a party could not raise issues relating to that subject matter on appeal. Westland Enterprises, Inc. v. Boyne USA, Inc., 237 M 186, 772 P2d 309, 46 St. Rep. 724 (1989).

Dismissal of Complaint With Prejudice Improper When Criminal Appeal Pending: On motion, the District Court dismissed with prejudice a pro se complaint while complainant's criminal conviction was on appeal before the Supreme Court. Noting that the claims could be barred under a theory of collateral estoppel, the Supreme Court amended the judgment to a dismissal without prejudice because a dismissal with prejudice while the conviction was on appeal would be premature and improper. Rudolph v. Dussault, 234 M 449, 763 P2d 1139, 45 St. Rep. 2039 (1988).

Motion to Intervene Not Denominated in Rule — Nonappealable: Appellants sought review of the District Court denial of a motion to intervene. This rule does not provide for appeals from either the granting or denial of motions to intervene, and as a matter not specifically denominated in the rule, it was not a proper subject for appeal. Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 233 M 277, 760 P2d 73, 45 St. Rep. 1486 (1988), distinguished in Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808, 49 St. Rep. 180 (1992).

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended — Procedure on Appeal: A petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services was filed by the prosecutor under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). Temporary custody of K.H. was later awarded to county welfare department under 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). The District Court found probable cause for state intervention and ordered temporary investigative authority, custody in the mother, and restrictions on the father's visitation. The parents appealed the order, an appealable order within Rule 1, M.R.App.P., but not an adequate remedy because of the time involved. Relief should properly be pursued through a Writ of Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, or Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court treated the matter as a Writ of Certiorari and denied it on the grounds that the District Court proceedings were in substantial compliance with law and that the petitioners were not prejudiced thereby. In re K.H., 216 M 267, 701 P2d 720, 42 St. Rep. 796 (1985). However, see In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), in which it was held that because an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable under this rule.

Appeal Not Moot Because Judgment Satisfied — Court Can Grant Effective Relief: Payment of a money judgment by the judgment debtor does not, by itself, render the cause moot for purposes of appeal. A defeated party's compliance with the judgment renders his appeal moot only where the compliance makes the granting of effective relief by the appellate court impossible. This basic rule on mootness was stated earlier in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. St. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), followed in In re Marriage of Nevin, 284 M 468, 945 P2d 58, 54 St. Rep. 981 (1997), and overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). In the present action to recover damages for breach of a construction contract, there is no reason the Supreme Court cannot grant effective relief. Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Constr. Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143, 42 St. Rep. 752 (1985), followed and clarified, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). On a later appeal, the parties were bound by the facts and law established in this prior case. Relitigation of issues was barred by collateral estoppel, and claims of legal malpractice were barred by the statute of limitations. Peschel v. Jones, 232 M 516, 760 P2d 51, 45 St. Rep. 1244 (1988). See also Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988), and Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Late Appeal — New Grounds for Argument Below — Failure to Argue on Appeal: The merits of appellants' arguments in support of removal of personal representative of an estate could not be considered on appeal from denial of final order denying motion to remove when: (1) since the order was final and appealable, it had to be appealed within 30 days of notice of its entry; (2) appeal was filed 34 days after notice of entry of the order; and (3) though appellants had, within the 30 days prior to their notice of appeal, filed a second petition for removal that raised a new ground for removal, appellants did not argue that failure to raise the ground earlier was excusable because of inadvertence, excusable neglect, or newly discovered evidence, and the lower court found appellants had earlier been in possession of all the facts. The order was conclusive as to all matters that could have been raised under the issues raised in the original petition for removal. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984), distinguished in Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996).

Issues Subject to Review on Appeal: Sorlie argued that the school district could not appeal a salary decision made by the Superintendent of Public Instruction because it did not directly petition the District Court for review. The Supreme Court disagreed. Issues brought before the agency proceeding automatically become subject to judicial review. The salary issue was raised at the agency level and reviewed by the District Court. The school district, as an aggrieved party, can appeal from the decision of the District Court. Sorlie's petition for judicial review raised the salary question, and the school district was aggrieved by the District Court decision on that question. Consequently the school district can appeal on that basis. Sorlie v. School District, 205 M 22, 667 P2d 400, 40 St. Rep. 1070 (1983).

No Finding of Juror Prejudice Due to Pretrial Publicity: The District Court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a change of venue and a motion for an individually sequestered voir dire when the allegations given for the requested change of venue failed to establish any possibility of jury prejudice due to pretrial publicity. The two jurors who heard anything about the case in the newspaper or radio were eliminated by peremptory challenge. Further, an alternate juror who read the articles but was not prejudiced did not sit as a juror in the deliberations. St. v. Hansen, 194 M 197, 633 P2d 1202, 38 St. Rep. 1541 (1981).

Supreme Court Ruling When No Trial Court Ruling: When a case is appealed to the Supreme Court that involves an issue not raised in the trial court, but which is based almost exclusively on depositions, the Supreme Court is in just as good a position as the trial court to assess the deposition testimony and to issue a ruling therefrom. Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981).

Involuntary Commitment — Mootness — Issues Not Raised in District Court: Where, after a brief interview with a mental health counselor-therapist, the appellant was involuntarily committed to a state mental hospital for a period of 3 months and then challenged the commitment in the District Court, the appellant's appeal would not be dismissed even though the appellant had been released prior to submission of the appeal. The important constitutional issues raised by the appellant were not rendered moot by his release because other persons would be involuntarily committed for 3 months of evaluation and testing. This time period renders a timely appeal impossible under the current rules of appellate procedure. Nor would the appeal be dismissed because of the appellant's failure to raise the constitutional issues in the District Court since the Supreme Court reserves to itself the power to examine constitutional issues that involve broad public concerns to avoid future litigation on a point of law. In re N.B., 190 M 319, 620 P2d 1228, 37 St. Rep. 2031 (1980). See also Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987), and In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Multiple Claims and Parties — Certification Required for Appeal Because of Impleader of Third Party: Where the plaintiff corporation brought an action against the defendant insurance company to collect an account and the defendant impleaded a third-party defendant, a final judgment against the defendant insurance company was interlocutory in nature and could not be appealed absent an express determination by the court that there was no just reason for delay. Rule 14, M.R.Civ.P., expressly provides that an entry of judgment upon either the original claim or the third-party claim must comply with Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Because the court did not make the express determination required, the appeal is premature. Pioneer Concrete & Fuel, Inc. v. Apex Constr., Inc., 190 M 229, 620 P2d 854, 37 St. Rep. 2023 (1980).

Rights of Legal Heir Adequately Represented by Special Administrator — Intervention Denied: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

Electronic Surveillance Based on Illegal Police Activity as Grounds for Appeal — Insufficient Evidence: Where the defendant was arrested as the result of an electronically recorded conversation with another offender who had previously consented to carrying a transmitting device for police officers, the allegations of the defendant that the recruitment of the other offender by police officers and the subsequent taping of the defendant's conversation were the result of previous illegal wire taps placed on the telephone of the other offender could not serve as grounds for reversal of the defendant's conviction since there was no direct evidence in the record to support the defendant's conjecture. Any issue built upon conjecture is weightless for purposes of appeal. St. v. Coleman, 189 M 492, 616 P2d 1090, 37 St. Rep. 1661 (1980).

Denial of Venue Change Appealable: An interlocutory order is normally not appealable unless there is a special provision making it so. By the terms of Rule 1(b), M.R.App.P., an order denying a change of venue is specifically appealable. It allows the party denied the change to take an immediate appeal so as not to jeopardize his right to appeal on that issue. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Obstruction of Access to Property — Interlocutory Decrees — Not Appealable: The Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) appealed from an interlocutory decision of the District Court that plaintiffs were entitled to compensation for the loss of reasonable access to their property. The appeal was dismissed because interlocutory orders are not appealable. Bostwick v. Dept. of Highways, 188 M 313, 613 P2d 997 (1980).

Supreme Court — Acquisition of Appellate Jurisdiction: The time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. An appellant has a duty to perfect an appeal in the manner and within the time limits provided by law. Absent such compliance, the Montana Supreme Court does not acquire jurisdiction to entertain and determine an appeal. Price v. Zunchich, 188 M 230, 612 P2d 1296 (1980).

No Appeal on Issue of Joint Venture Not First Raised in District Court: Appellants cannot assert for a matter of review on appeal that their relationship with respondents was that of joint venturers because this issue was not first presented to the District Court and as such cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Mont. Williams Double Diamond v. Royal Village, Inc., 186 M 359, 607 P2d 1120 (1980).

Second Appeal — "Law of the Case" Rule Applied: When the Supreme Court states a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision of a case, such pronouncement becomes the "law of the case" and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the trial court and upon subsequent appeal. Here, a previous case involving the same parties established the "law of the case" for this appeal. The former husband was estopped, in the previous case, from challenging monthly payments to the former wife, having successfully availed himself of the benefits of the property settlement provisions of the marriage dissolution decree (the monthly payments having been held to be a part of the property settlement). Therefore, the denial of the former husband's second petition to terminate the payments is affirmed on the "law of the case" of his first petition. Englund v. Englund, 184 M 488, 603 P2d 1048 (1979).

Order Requiring Payment by Personal Representative as Appealable Order: The District Court order requiring payment by the personal representative of decedent's estate to decedent's creditors is an appealable order under Rule 1, M.R.App.P. In re Estate of Murphy, 183 M 127, 598 P2d 612 (1979).

Right to Appeal — Fruits of Judgment: The instant appeal falls squarely within the exception to the general rule that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time to prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent. If the only possible outcome of a successful appeal by the plaintiff is an increase in the damage award, then there is nothing inconsistent about accepting the fruits of the original judgment and appealing from it. Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc., 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978), followed in Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Federal Courts — Reviewability of Montana Decisions: The U.S. District Court has no power to review the judgments of Montana courts. A litigant has no constitutional right to a correct result. Osburnsen v. Heller, 34 St. Rep. 193 (D.C. Mont. 1977) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Waiver of Appeal Right to Be Clear: In a child custody proceeding wherein the parties stipulated that they would be bound by the order of the District Court in order to resolve a jurisdictional conflict, the stipulation did not preclude them from taking an appeal. Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977).

Order to Vacate Order Changing Venue: Defendant's appeal of the order denying his motion to vacate an order changing venue should be dismissed since an order to vacate is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., and if treated as an appeal from the order for change of venue, it was not timely made. Myskewitz v. Berg, 173 M 46, 566 P2d 64 (1977).

Propriety of Review — Certification of State Question: When there was no clear precedent regarding the construction of the applicability of Statutes of Limitation, it was proper for the Supreme Court to give the U.S. District Court for Montana an opinion on the applicability of certain Statutes of Limitation upon the certification of questions by the U.S. District Court. Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976).

Filing of Supersedeas Bond on Appeal Not to Suspend Decree's Provision Regarding Child Support: Supreme Court will not sanction nonpayment of support money decreed in District Court on appeal where need for such funds is shown but will require that such support payments be kept current until final determination of the appeal. Woolverton v. Woolverton, 169 M 490, 549 P2d 458 (1976).

Zoning Issue — Standing as Aggrieved Party: Appellant, who first raised issue of the zoning classification of property involved in condemnation proceeding, lacked standing as "a party aggrieved" to complain of the State's subsequent emphasis on the zoning of the property as misleading jury into reaching erroneous verdict. St. Highway Comm'n v. Vaughan, 155 M 277, 470 P2d 967 (1970).

Writ of Review When Appeal Available: Notwithstanding the fact that appeal was available as a remedy, the Supreme Court determined that a Writ of Review is available when children were made illegitimate and support was cut off by action which exceeded court's jurisdiction. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Denial of Change of Venue: Specification of error arising from trial court's order denying motion for change of venue was not properly before Supreme Court because timely appeal was not made from order as required by rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Denial of Motion Improper — Appeal Not Allowed: Where District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in denying motion to quash summons and dismiss action where the summons had not been served and returned within the 3 years required by Rule 41(e) (replaced with Rule 4E), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order was not appealable under this rule. State ex rel. Belwin, Inc. v. Davison, 148 M 345, 420 P2d 842 (1966).

Dismissal of Action Not Appealable: An order granting a motion to dismiss was not appealable under section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 1, M.R.App.P.). Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 143 M 432, 391 P2d 1 (1964); Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963), both distinguished in Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Partial Summary Judgment Not Appealable: All of the plaintiff's issues were not determined by the court's grant of partial summary judgment. Therefore, the appeal was premature and was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Kirchner v. W. Mont. Mental Health Center, 272 M 110, 899 P2d 1102, 52 St. Rep. 753 (1995), followed in In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

Appeal of Judgment Involving Declaratory Judgment and Injunction: Defendant argued that an appeal that concerned declaratory judgment was premature because plaintiff did not seek Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), certification of the court's order. However, because plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment involved both the declaratory judgment and an injunction issue and because plaintiff validly exercised the right to appeal the court's denial of the request for an injunction, the appeal was not considered premature and the entire case was subject to review by the Supreme Court. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Question of Statutory Applicability Preserved for Appeal: Defendant argued that by failing to include a violation of statute claim in a pretrial order, plaintiffs abandoned the claim on appeal. However, the issue was properly preserved through jury instructions when plaintiffs presented an instruction that stated the statutory language verbatim. Further, the statute was the subject of a motion for summary judgment. Notwithstanding certification, an order denying summary judgment is interlocutory; thus, the applicability of the statute was not waived insofar as it was presented in the motion for summary judgment. Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Denial of Summary Judgment Not Appealable Notwithstanding Certification: The defendant appealed the District Court's denial of a motion for summary judgment after the District Court certified its order under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that the order was not appealable notwithstanding the District Court's certification because under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., an order denying a motion for summary judgment is an interlocutory order, which fact cannot be changed by certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Interlocutory Summary Judgment — No Appeal Allowed: Where an order of summary judgment is interlocutory, the case is not ripe for appellate review and any appeal thereon must be dismissed without prejudice. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Against Less Than All Defendants — Appeal Not Allowed: A summary judgment in favor of one of two defendants was not a final order under the provisions of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., and in the absence of compliance with the certification requirements of that rule, the summary judgment was not appealable. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Alone Not Appealable: A summary judgment for plaintiff on the question of liability, reserving judgment as to the amount of damages is interlocutory in character under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., and hence is not appealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 187 M 453, 610 P2d 172 (1980).

Order Vacating Summary Judgment Not Appealable: This rule does not specifically mention an order vacating summary judgment as an appealable order. Therefore, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal of such an order but without prejudice to the filing of an application for a Writ of Supervisory Control. Winter v. Rhodes, 180 M 217, 589 P2d 1021 (1979), following Stensvad v. Mont. Nat'l Bank, 168 M 167, 541 P2d 768 (1975).

Appealability and Appropriateness of Partial Summary Judgment: Although a partial summary judgment granting specific performance of an option contract was designated as interlocutory, it was a final and appealable transfer of property. Furthermore, the summary judgment was improperly granted when based upon a determination in a hearing on motion to dismiss that there were no issues of material fact, depriving defendant the opportunity to effectively resist the summary judgment motion. Graveley v. MacLeod, 175 M 338, 573 P2d 1166 (1978).

Appeal of Order Denying Summary Judgment: An order denying summary judgment is not an appealable order. Such an order is reviewable upon appeal from a final judgment. To permit review by an extraordinary writ would accomplish indirectly that which cannot be done directly. State ex rel. Kosena v. District Court, 172 M 21, 560 P2d 522 (1977).

Order Vacating Summary Judgment Not Appealable: Court held that District Court order vacating a previously entered summary judgment and setting the cause for trial was not an appealable order as an order vacating a summary judgment, and setting the cause for trial is interlocutory in nature and does not meet the requirement of a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken because the rights of the parties have not been adjudicated and will not be until trial. Stensvad v. Mont. Nat'l Bank, 168 M 167, 541 P2d 768 (1975).

Partial Summary Judgment — Writ of Supervisory Control Available: Although orders of District Court striking two defenses from relator's answer and granting plaintiff summary judgment on issue of liability were not directly appealable under this section, Writ of Supervisory Control was available as remedy. State ex rel. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 154 M 336, 463 P2d 326 (1969).

Order Denying Summary Judgment — Appealable After Final Judgment: Although order denying summary judgment is nonappealable at time it is made because of its interlocutory character, it is nonetheless reviewable under appellate rule providing that all nonappealable intermediate orders or decisions properly excepted or objected to which involve merits or necessarily affect judgment are reviewable on subsequent appeal from final judgment. Brown v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 150 M 422, 435 P2d 878 (1967), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993). Brown and Kirchner were followed in In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

INJUNCTIONS

Injunction Appealable Before Final Ruling on Motion for Attorney Fees: An order granting an injunction is appealable under subsection (b)(2) of this rule even though the District Court has not made a final ruling on the plaintiff's motion for attorney fees. Christenot v. St., 272 M 396, 901 P2d 545, 52 St. Rep. 749 (1995).

Interpretation of Preliminary Injunction — Not Appealable: The District Court's application of an existing preliminary injunction, prohibiting use of a deceptively similar name, to appellant's newly acquired name was not an injunction in itself but merely an interpretation of a preliminary injunction and therefore an interlocutory order, not appealable. Am. Furniture, Inc. v. Am. Furniture Warehouse Co., 219 M 11, 709 P2d 1013, 42 St. Rep. 1804 (1985).

Continued Temporary Restraining Order Appealable: An order continuing a temporary restraining order appeared appealable because it had the effect of a permanent injunction. Boyer v. Karagacin, 178 M 26, 582 P2d 1173 (1978).

Temporary Injunction — Denial of Motion to Quash Appealable: Order denying County Commissioner's motion to quash temporary injunction against use of real property valuations made by private appraisal group and relied on by reclassification officer appointed by Commissioners to determine 1965 tax assessment rolls was appealable under section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 1, M.R.App.P.). State ex rel. Keast v. Krieg, 145 M 521, 402 P2d 405, 19 ALR 3d 396 (1965), overruled on other grounds in Larson v. Dept. of Revenue, 166 M 449, 534 P2d 854 (1975).

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

Order Vacating or Refusing to Vacate Default Judgment Appealable as Special Order After Final Judgment: Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) moved to set aside a default judgment against the company. After the motion was granted, Roberts, the plaintiff, appealed the order setting aside the judgment and Empire contested the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to hear the appeal. The Supreme Court clarified the issue whether such an order is appealable, holding that an order vacating or refusing to vacate a judgment is appealable under subsection (b)(2) of this rule as an appeal of a special order after final judgment. Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996), followed in Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Attorney Withdrawal With No Notice to Client — Default Set Aside: The lower court granted defendants' attorney's motion to withdraw and ordered him to notify defendants. Defendants claimed on appeal that they received no notice. The record showed no evidence of notice by the attorney and no evidence of the notice that 37-61-405 required plaintiff to give. A default was issued against defendants at a time when they had no attorney and were not represented at the hearing. Defendants properly raised on appeal the lack of the lower court's power to proceed to default. The case was remanded with directions to set the default aside and grant a rehearing. Mont. Bank of Roundup, N.A. v. Benson, 220 M 410, 717 P2d 6, 43 St. Rep. 485 (1986).

Default Judgment on Issue of Liability Not Appealable: The District Court, as a discovery sanction, granted a default judgment for plaintiffs on the issue of liability but reserved determination of the amount of damages, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that an order which grants a default judgment on the issue of liability, reserving determination of the amount of damages for a later hearing, is not a final, appealable order under Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.). The appeal was dismissed. Stevens v. Abbott, 220 M 61, 712 P2d 1347, 43 St. Rep. 173 (1986).

Order Reopening Default Not Final Judgment — Appeal Dismissed for Lack of Jurisdiction: District Court ruled in wife's favor by default when husband's attorney failed to appear at hearing on wife's motion to modify decree of dissolution of marriage. Later after another hearing, District Court found excusable neglect on part of husband's attorney and reopened default. Wife appealed. Supreme Court held that since District Court had not entered a final judgment after either hearing, the appeal was premature and must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Rex v. Rex, 199 M 328, 649 P2d 460, 39 St. Rep. 1432 (1982), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981).

Order Vacating Default Judgment Nonappealable — Supervisory Control Inappropriate: Where, after obtaining a default judgment in a breach of contract action against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a review, both by appeal and Writ of Supervisory Control, of the court's order setting aside the default judgment, the Supreme Court held that the order was interlocutory and nonappealable. The Supreme Court also held that a Writ of Supervisory Control was inappropriate to review the court's order, for to issue the Writ would be to allow the appellant to do indirectly what could not be done directly. Kinion v. Design Sys., 190 M 226, 620 P2d 852, 37 St. Rep. 2036 (1980).

Appeal by Defaulting Party: In the absence of an order of the District Court setting aside the default of the appealing defendants, they had no standing to file a notice of appeal from an adverse judgment against the plaintiff county. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Order Setting Aside Default — Appealability: The Supreme Court adopted for Montana the rule followed in the majority of jurisdictions that an order granting a motion to vacate a default judgment is nonappealable but held that when a default judgment is vacated on jurisdictional grounds that are not correctable, the order of the District Court vacating the default judgment amounts to a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), overruled in part in Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Appeals — Order as to Entry of Default Not Final Order: An order setting aside or refusing to set aside an entry of default where judgment has not been entered is not a final order and is therefore not appealable. McClurg v. Flathead County Comm'rs, 179 M 518, 587 P2d 415 (1978); Blevins v. Kramer, 179 M 193, 587 P2d 28 (1978).

WRIT OF SUPERVISORY CONTROL

Supervisory Control Accepted When District Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law Regarding Time Period for Substitution of Judge: The exercise of supervisory control was appropriate when the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law regarding the period of time within which a motion must be filed for substitution of a judge pursuant to 3-1-804. State ex rel. Dusek v. District Court, 2003 MT 303, 318 M 166, 79 P3d 292 (2003).

Supervisory Control Denied to Address Discovery Issues: Petitioner sought a writ of supervisory control to address a District Court order directing petitioner to submit to discovery through an independent medical examination in an automobile accident negligence case. The Supreme Court declined to exercise supervisory control. Typically, orders pertaining to discovery are interlocutory in nature and are not generally reviewable in an original proceeding. Original jurisdiction will be exercised when an order places a party at a significant disadvantage in litigating a case. Supervisory control should issue when a District Court proceeds under a mistake of law, causing a gross injustice for which an appeal is not an adequate remedy, but supervisory control is an extraordinary remedy exercised only in extraordinary circumstances. Absent a showing that procedural protections were inadequate to control discovery in an independent medical examination, supervisory control was inappropriate. Hegwood v. District Court, 2003 MT 200, 317 M 30, 75 P3d 308 (2003).

Supervisory Control Appropriate to Address Res Judicata Claim: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. The Supreme Court held that the case was appropriate for supervisory control because if the res judicata claim was correct, Lane was entitled to summary judgment, but if denial of the summary judgment motion was in error, Lane would be required to defend against the same claim a second time and incur the attendant delay and expense, resulting in a gross injustice. The case was remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Dual Insurance Claims — Supervisory Control Proper to Facilitate Convenience and Judicial Economy: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims, and the couple sought relief from the order on grounds that they would be prejudiced by having to prosecute two separate trials. The Supreme Court concurred with the couple and, in the interests of the convenience of the parties and judicial economy, agreed to exercise supervisory control. State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1238 (1997).

Denial of Motion to Intervene — Supreme Court Use of Supervisory Control for Immediate Review of Interlocutory Order: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, so the groups sought a writ of supervisory control, claiming that a direct appeal after a final judgment would be a wholly inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court noted that although an order denying a motion to intervene is not separately appealable under this rule, the proper appeal from such an interlocutory order lies after entry of final judgment. However, supervisory control may be used to immediately review an interlocutory order when: (1) there is no remedy by appeal or other remedial procedure and extraordinary circumstances are present; (2) an appeal from a final judgment would impose undue hardship on an applicant and be wholly inadequate as a remedy; and (3) necessary to prevent extended and needless litigation. This case presented the purely legal issue of whether the primary proponents of a ballot issue have a legally protectable interest sufficient to allow intervention in a case challenging the resulting statute. The Supreme Court considered this case to be extraordinary and of statewide importance, noting that appeal following a final judgment would come too late and would not allow the groups to participate in the defense of the initiative that they actively supported, and that if the groups successfully appealed the denial of their motion to intervene after final judgment, extended and needless litigation would result. Thus, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control because appeal from a final judgment would be a wholly inadequate remedy. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Order Vacating Default Judgment Nonappealable — Supervisory Control Inappropriate: Where, after obtaining a default judgment in a breach of contract action against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a review, both by appeal and Writ of Supervisory Control, of the court's order setting aside the default judgment, the Supreme Court held that the order was interlocutory and nonappealable. The Supreme Court also held that a Writ of Supervisory Control was inappropriate to review the court's order, for to issue the Writ would be to allow the appellant to do indirectly what could not be done directly. Kinion v. Design Sys., 190 M 226, 620 P2d 852, 37 St. Rep. 2036 (1980), overruled in part in Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor Rule 1, M.R.App.P. provide for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Class Action — Writ of Supervisory Control Unjustified: Writ of Supervisory Control granting relief from District Court order permitting maintenance of class action was not justified since the order was subject to alteration or amendment as the matter progresses and since the question can be considered on appeal from final judgment. State ex rel. Anaconda Aluminum Co. v. District Court, 158 M 228, 490 P2d 351 (1971).

Appeal Inadequate — Writ of Supervisory Control Available: Although denial of Writ of Assistance, placing purchaser at Sheriff's sale under mortgage foreclosure into possession of lands involved, by District Court was appealable under rule either as "an order directing . . . surrender of property" or as "any special order made after final judgment", Writ of Supervisory Control to compel the District Court to issue Writ of Assistance was available as remedy since remedy by appeal was neither speedy nor adequate. State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 152 M 73, 446 P2d 707 (1968).

Sustaining of Demurrer — Right to Supervisory Writ: Notwithstanding that former statute providing for appeals gave party against whom demurrer (abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) was sustained plain and speedy remedy by appeal, court would not dismiss application for Supervisory Writ where judgment sustaining demurrer also stayed proceedings and expressly accorded losing party right to apply for Supervisory Writ. State ex rel. Cave Constr. Co. v. District Court, 150 M 18, 430 P2d 624 (1967).

Motion to Dismiss Improperly Denied — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Writ of Supervisory Control was proper where lessor's motion to dismiss sublessees' action for breach of lease agreement, to which sublessees were not parties, was denied by the District Court, the order denying the motion to dismiss not being appealable under this rule. State ex rel. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied: When appeal is available from a summary judgment, the Supreme Court will not issue a Writ of Supervisory Control without extremely extenuating circumstances. Circumstances here were insufficient. State ex rel. Kober v. District Court, 147 M 116, 410 P2d 945 (1966).

FINAL JUDGMENT

No Res Judicata Absent Final Judgment in Related Case: Brown was one of 64 prisoners who filed a complaint in 2002 alleging that the Department of Corrections improperly transferred prisoners to prisons where treatment, training, and rehabilitation opportunities were not available. While that case was pending, Brown filed suit in 2004 against the Department, alleging that his liberty interest in parole was violated because the Department transferred him to locations where he was unable to obtain the sex offender treatment required for parole eligibility. The District Court concluded that the 2004 case was barred by res judicata because Brown was a plaintiff in the 2002 case, which presented identical claims. Brown appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Under Audit Serv., Inc. v. Anderson, 211 M 323, 684 P2d 491 (1984), the primary requirement necessary to sustain a plea of res judicata is that there be a judgment on the merits. Because the 2002 case was still pending, dismissal of the 2004 case on res judicata grounds was error. Brown v. Dept. of Corrections, 2005 MT 58, 326 M 231, 108 P3d 498 (2005).

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

Retroactive Applicability of Decision Prohibiting Antistacking of Insurance Provisions to Pending Cases: In Hardy v. Progressive Specialty Ins. Co., 2003 MT 85, 315 M 107, 67 P3d 892 (2003), the Supreme Court decided that antistacking provisions in an underinsured motorist policy were unconstitutional. Plaintiffs brought a class action in federal court claiming that Hardy entitled them to additional payments from past insurance claims that were not previously allowed because their policies did not allow for stacking. The federal court certified the question to the Supreme Court as to whether Hardy applied prospectively only or retroactively to qualified claims arising before the Hardy decision. The Supreme Court agreed with the decision in Harper v. Va. Dept. of Taxation, 509 US 86 (1993), that limiting a rule of law to its prospective application creates an arbitrary distinction between litigants based merely on the timing of their claims and that in the interests of fairness and finality, the line should be drawn between claims that are final and claims that are not. The Supreme Court then decided that the retroactivity test in Chevron Oil Co. v. Huson, 404 US 97 (1971), still applies to Montana civil decisions if all three Chevron factors are met: (1) the decision to be applied nonretroactively must establish a new principle of law, either by overruling clear past precedent on which litigants may have relied or by deciding an issue of first impression whose resolution was not clearly foreshadowed; (2) the court must weigh the merits and demerits in each case by looking at the prior history of the rule in question, its purpose and effect, and whether retroactive application will further or retard its operation; and (3) the inequity imposed by retroactive application has been weighed. However, the retroactive effect of a decision does not apply to cases that became final or that were settled prior to a decision's issuance. Thus, Hardy applies retroactively in qualifying circumstances on open claims arising before its issuance and is limited to cases pending on direct appeal or not yet final. Dempsey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2004 MT 391, 325 M 207, 104 P3d 483 (2004).

No Supreme Court Jurisdiction to Hear Appeal Absent Final Judgment: Reeder was convicted of DUI in Municipal Court. Reeder appealed to District Court, raising 22 issues. The District Court found that Reeder's due process rights were not violated, but held that the Municipal Court erroneously admitted the results of an Intoxilyzer test without proper foundation and remanded for a new trial. Reeder appealed the District Court's decision and raised other issues not addressed by the District Court. The Supreme Court held that because Reeder did not currently stand convicted of a criminal offense and because no final judgment of conviction had been entered, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the case, so the appeal was dismissed. St. v. Reeder, 2004 MT 244, 323 M 15, 97 P3d 1104 (2004).

Challenge to Equity of Sentence Properly With Sentence Review Division, Not Supreme Court: A challenge to the equity of a sentence, as opposed to the legality of a sentence, properly lies with the Sentence Review Division, not the Supreme Court, which does not review a sentence on appeal for mere inequity or disparity. In this case, defendant cloaked an equity challenge in the vestiges of a constitutional argument in seeking Supreme Court review, but the court declined to address it, leaving the matter to the Sentence Review Division. St. v. Legg, 2004 MT 26, 319 M 362, 84 P3d 648 (2004), following St. v. DeSalvo, 273 M 343, 903 P2d 202 (1995).

Multiple Claims — No Appeal Available Absent Final Judgment — Remand: Plaintiff brought several employment claims against the state. The District Court certified judgment for the state on one claim, and plaintiff moved for partial summary judgment on another, but the motion was denied. However, there was no final judgment certified on that claim, so no appeal on that issue was available. Because the motion for partial summary judgment was not final and appealable, the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings on that claim. Losleben v. Oppedahl, 2004 MT 5, 319 M 269, 83 P3d 1271 (2004).

Temporary Custody Order Not Considered Final for Purposes of Appeal — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate Mechanism to Challenge Temporary Custody: The District Court ordered temporary legal custody for a child, and the child's mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that orders of temporary legal custody do not embrace a final determination of the rights of the parties contemplated in this rule that would subject the temporary order to direct appeal. Rather, temporary custody orders are considered interlocutory orders from which the Supreme Court will grant relief in extraordinary circumstances. This ensures the expeditious review of legal errors while still protecting children from the instability of protracted, piecemeal litigation. However, qualifying temporary custody orders as interlocutory does not leave a parent who is aggrieved by an erroneous order without a remedy. The parent may invoke the extraordinary remedy of a writ of supervisory control, which is the appropriate mechanism to challenge an order of temporary custody. In re D.A., 2003 MT 109, 315 M 340, 68 P3d 735 (2003). See also G.B. v. M.M.B., 670 A2d 714 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1996).

No Final Judgment When Multiple Parties Involved but Summary Judgment Granted to Only One Party — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required: Purchasers of real property sued the seller and the seller's agent over an alleged access problem. The District Court granted summary judgment to the seller, but denied summary judgment for the seller's agent because material facts remained in dispute regarding the agent's disclosure of information pertaining to the access problem. Plaintiffs then appealed the summary judgment that was granted to the seller. The Supreme Court held that the order granting summary judgment to the seller was not a final judgment and thus was not appealable because in an action involving multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but not all of the parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the District Court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. In this case, there was no indication or certification by the District Court that the matter should be certified as final, and absent a final judgment, no appeal was available. The appeal was dismissed without prejudice and remanded for further proceedings. Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001). See also Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268 (1993).

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Order Granting Temporary Guardianship Held Final Order and Special Proceeding for Purposes of Appeal — Noncompliance With Rule 9, M.R.App.P., Excused — Expiration of Temporary Guardianship Held Not to Render Issue Moot: After a District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation except a minute entry entered by the Clerk of Court, Klos filed a motion to set aside the second order of guardianship. The guardians argued that an order appointing a temporary guardian is not subject to appeal and that Klos had not complied with Rule 9, M.R.App.P., because she did not file a transcript of a hearing appointing the guardians. The Supreme Court held that in as much as subsection (b)(3) of this rule does not differentiate between a permanent order and a temporary order, a temporary order qualified as an appealable order. The Supreme Court also held that the temporary order is a "special proceeding", as defined by 27-1-102(2), for the purposes of subsection (b)(1) of this rule and therefore appealable for that reason as well. Concerning the argument on noncompliance with Rule 9, M.R.App.P., the Supreme Court noted that no transcript could be provided because none was ever made and held that Klos had substantially complied by notifying the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the lack of a transcript and by providing the District Court Clerk's minute entry. Citing Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564 (1987), the Supreme Court also noted that just because the order had expired by operation of law did not mean that the issue of appealability was moot because the guardians had twice been appointed by a temporary order that expired by operation of law and could be appointed in the same manner again. Thus, if the order was not appealable, it would be "capable of repetition, yet evade review". In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Order Granting Motion for Relief From Judgment Held Appealable: The District Court granted Wright Oil's motion under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), for relief from judgment, and Goodrich appealed. Wright Oil argued that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction over Goodrich's appeal. Citing Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872 (1996), the Supreme Court held that an order granting a motion for relief from judgment is a special order made after final judgment and is appealable pursuant to this rule. Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Direct Appeal of Venue Question — Certification of Judgment Not Required: Following summary dismissal of all Missoula defendants, the trial court granted the motion of defendant Kalispell doctor for a change of venue to Flathead County, certifying the summary judgment order as final pursuant to Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). When the venue question was appealed to the Supreme Court, the doctor asserted that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to determine whether venue was properly transferred because the Rule 54(b) order did not mention the order changing venue. However, under this rule, direct appeal of an order changing or refusing to change venue is allowed, and as such, Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification is not required. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Order Denying Partition of Property Not Appealable: In a dispute over jointly owned recreational property, the District Court denied a motion to enforce an oral settlement for partition of the property and provided the parties an extension of time during which to resolve the controversy. On appeal, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal, holding that the District Court order was not a final or interlocutory judgment or an order to determine the rights of the parties. Manley v. Grimes, 257 M 404, 849 P2d 215, 50 St. Rep. 330 (1993).

Qualified Domestic Relations Order Appealable: The District Court ordered husband to submit within 20 days a qualified domestic relations order (QDRO) that conformed with the parties' separation agreement, but instead husband filed an appeal with the Supreme Court.

Although on its face the order appeared interlocutory, the order constituted a special order made after final judgment. Failure to file a notice of appeal within 30 days would have closed husband's right to appeal. If the effect of an order is to destroy an appellant's right to appeal, then that order, though interlocutory, should be appealable. In re Marriage of Woodford, 254 M 501, 839 P2d 574, 49 St. Rep. 887 (1992).

Issue of Fees and Costs Not in Form of Final Order — Duty of Parties to Move for Dismissal: The District Court awarded certain fees and costs to plaintiffs pursuant to 37-61-421. However, the issue was not in the form of a final order, and thus the appeal was premature. There must be a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken before the Supreme Court is vested with jurisdiction. It is the duty of the attorneys involved in an appeal to bring the issue to the attention of the court. Tigart v. Thompson, 237 M 468, 774 P2d 401, 46 St. Rep. 974 (1989).

Default Judgment on Issue of Liability Not Appealable: The District Court, as a discovery sanction, granted a default judgment for plaintiffs on the issue of liability but reserved determination of the amount of damages, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that an order which grants a default judgment on the issue of liability, reserving determination of the amount of damages for a later hearing, is not a final, appealable order under Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.). The appeal was dismissed. Stevens v. Abbott, 220 M 61, 712 P2d 1347, 43 St. Rep. 173 (1986).

Order to Pay Attorney Fees Upon Proof of Amount — Not a Final Judgment:

An order of the District Court, not certified under Rule 54, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), entering summary judgment for one party, ruling that party entitled to attorney fees, and ordering a later hearing for the purpose of determining the amount of the attorney fees, was not a final order for the purpose of filing an appeal. Boles v. Ler, 213 M 266, 692 P2d 1, 41 St. Rep. 2106 (1984).

In a proceeding for modification of a divorce decree, the court ordered the respondent to pay the petitioner's attorney fees "in a reasonable amount to be determined upon proof thereof". Because this order was obviously not final, an appeal was premature. Baer v. Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835, 39 St. Rep. 1178 (1982).

Denial of Demand for Jury Trial — Interlocutory Order Not Appealable: Defendants, sued to recover money due on promissory notes, did not demand a jury trial in their original answer, but after several delays and withdrawal of counsel, defendants acting pro se filed an amended answer with a request for jury trial. Upon objection by plaintiffs and examination of the pleadings, the District Court denied the demand for jury trial. The Supreme Court dismissed the defendants' appeal of the denial as premature, holding that the denial of a request for a jury trial, whether the request was timely or belated, was not a final judgment appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P. Such an interlocutory order may be appealable only if specifically provided for in a rule or statute. Heidema v. First Bank, 211 M 178, 682 P2d 1374, 41 St. Rep. 1291 (1984).

Order Denying Joinder of Parties Not Appealable Absent Certification: In an action against the defendant real estate company for fraud and negligence in the sale of property to the plaintiffs, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' motion for joinder of the owners of the company as a party defendant, and on appeal the defendant challenged the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, alleging that the notice of appeal should have been filed within 30 days after the order denying the motion for joinder. The Supreme Court held that absent certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., an order denying joinder of parties is not a final judgment. Thus, denial of the motion was not ripe for appeal until completion of the trial. White v. Lobdell, 208 M 295, 678 P2d 637, 41 St. Rep. 346 (1984).

Order Not Appealable When Judgment Never Docketed in Record: The District Court made an express order that the Clerk of Court enter final judgment in a case certified for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., but a final judgment was never docketed in the record. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide an appeal. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Order Reopening Default Not Final Judgment — Appeal Dismissed for Lack of Jurisdiction: District Court ruled in wife's favor by default when husband's attorney failed to appear at hearing on wife's motion to modify decree of dissolution of marriage. Later after another hearing, District Court found excusable neglect on part of husband's attorney and reopened default. Wife appealed. Supreme Court held that since District Court had not entered a final judgment after either hearing, the appeal was premature and must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Rex v. Rex, 199 M 328, 649 P2d 460, 39 St. Rep. 1432 (1982), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993).

Conditional Notice of Appeal: Appellant filed a conditional notice of appeal conditioned upon the Supreme Court finding that the judgment being appealed was a final judgment. Because the notice was conditioned upon an action to be taken at an undetermined time in the future, it was totally ineffective. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Finality of Judgment — Award of Attorney Fees: A general contractor was awarded damages under a materials and labor bond. Attorney fees, an element of damages provided for in the bond, were to be determined at a later hearing. Because the attorney fees were based on the bond, the subject matter of the action, the judgment was not final and could not be appealed until actual determination of attorney fees. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Supreme Court Ruling When No Trial Court Ruling: When a case is appealed to the Supreme Court that involves an issue not raised in the trial court but which is based almost exclusively on depositions, the Supreme Court is in just as good a position as the trial court to assess the deposition testimony and to issue a ruling therefrom. Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981).

Final Child Custody Order Reviewable: A District Court's order determining which place of custody is in a child's best interest, assigning custody to the mother, and setting a support obligation of the father is a final determination of the child's custody and is reviewable by the Supreme Court of Montana. Korol v. Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016 (1980).

Obstruction of Access to Property — Interlocutory Decrees — Not Appealable: The Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) appealed from an interlocutory decision of the District Court that plaintiffs were entitled to compensation for the loss of reasonable access to their property. The appeal was dismissed because interlocutory orders are not appealable. Bostwick v. Dept. of Highways, 188 M 313, 613 P2d 997 (1980).

Interlocutory Summary Judgment — No Appeal Allowed: Where an order of summary judgment is interlocutory, the case is not ripe for appellate review and any appeal thereon must be dismissed without prejudice. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Against Less Than All Defendants — Appeal Not Allowed: A summary judgment in favor of one of two defendants was not a final order under the provisions of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., and in the absence of compliance with the certification requirements of that rule, the summary judgment was not appealable. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Alone Not Appealable: A summary judgment for plaintiff on the question of liability, reserving judgment as to the amount of damages, is interlocutory in character under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., and hence is not appealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 187 M 453, 610 P2d 172 (1980).

Paternity Determination as Final Judgment: A jury verdict determining paternity is an appealable final judgment and in effect an action separate from a support determination. Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979).

Appealable Order When Relief Denied: An order dismissing a count in a cause of action for breach of contract on the basis that the count failed to state a claim was appealable because it resulted in a party's being out of court and denied relief just as completely as if judgment had been entered against it. Tobacco River Lumber Co., Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978).

Order Denying Motion to Strike: An order denying a motion to strike is not an appealable order, it being interlocutory in nature. It is reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Fitzgerald v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 186, 577 P2d 370 (1978).

Order Granting Motion to Strike: Appeal from order granting a motion to strike certain portions of the complaint was dismissed as not being an appealable order. Phillips v. M.E.A., 173 M 43, 566 P2d 62 (1977).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Deach v. Destination Enterprises, Inc., 165 M 152, 526 P2d 1382 (1974); Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972), distinguishing Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963); Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 143 M 432, 391 P2d 1 (1964).

STANDING TO APPEAL

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P., precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of Rule 17, M.R.App.P. Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

Failure to Appeal Violative of Right to Counsel — "Anders" Procedure Applicable to Protect Defendant's Right to Effective Assistance of Counsel on Appeal: Rogers' counsel repeatedly refused Rogers' request to file a notice of appeal, asserting that there were no appealable issues. However, under Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 US 470 (2000), the failure to preserve defendant's right to appeal when requested is error, and when defendant would have appealed but for counsel's deficient performance, that error is prejudicial. In order to protect defendant's right to effective assistance of counsel on appeal, the Supreme Court has adopted the procedure in Anders v. Calif., 386 US 738 (1967), for when an attorney believes an appeal lacks meritorious issues. If counsel finds after conscientious examination that a case is wholly frivolous, counsel should so advise the court and request permission to withdraw. A defendant's right to appellate counsel must be safeguarded, and allowing appellate counsel to be the final judge of the merits of an appeal does not adequately safeguard this right. Thus, counsel's failure to appeal violated Rogers' right to counsel, constituting reversible error. St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001), following Smith v. Robbins, 528 US 259 (2000).

Proper Cross-Appeal of Adverse District Court Decision Regarding City Court Denial of Motion for Continuance: The established doctrine governing appeals to all appellate courts is that a party must cross-appeal if the party seeks to change any part of the judgment below. Further, the Montana Supreme Court follows the rule that it has jurisdiction only over those issues addressed in the appeal or in a properly filed cross-appeal, not jurisdiction over the entire case. Conversely, it is also the general rule that a cross-appeal is not necessary to enable a prevailing party to defend its judgment on any ground properly raised below, whether or not that ground was relied upon, rejected, or even considered by the court below. The proper way for a respondent to raise an issue before the Supreme Court, if the issue would support the decision below and is an issue that the court below did not address because it found another issue to be dispositive, is to assert the issue in the brief to the Supreme Court and fully discuss it. If a respondent does not assert and fully discuss the issue, the Supreme Court may in its discretion: (1) review the issue itself; (2) decide that the respondent has waived the right to review of the issue; or (3) remand to the court below for a decision on the issue. Here, issues raised by respondent that the District Court declined to address, having found another issue dispositive, undoubtedly supported the District Court's decision reversing the City Court's judgment. Thus, because the respondent sufficiently asserted the issues and both parties fully briefed each one, the Supreme Court concluded that the respondent had properly cross-appealed and that it was proper to review the respondent's issues on appeal. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000), following In Interest of Jamie L., 493 NW 2d 56 (Wis. 1992). See also Wash. v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 US 463, 58 L Ed 2d 740, 99 S Ct 740 (1979).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Request for Stay of Execution Not Required: Following entry and satisfaction of judgment in District Court, the parties were aware of a contemplated appeal, but no stay of execution was requested or supersedeas bond posted. After plaintiff acquired title to the disputed property pursuant to the judgment, defendant filed a notice of appeal and lis pendens, effectively preserving the status quo pending appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss, contending that by voluntarily satisfying the judgment, defendants waived their right to appeal. Applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), the Supreme Court held that the parties' course of conduct illustrated the involuntary, rather than voluntary nature of the satisfaction of judgment. Because satisfaction was involuntary, the right to appeal was not waived. Further, under Rule 7, M.R.App.P., a party may request a stay of execution, but the request is not mandatory, even though a party choosing not to seek a stay runs the risk of having the appeal become moot. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was denied. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Appealability of District Court Order Granting Judgment as Matter of Law — Rules Suspension: Plaintiffs contended that an order granting judgment as a matter of law is not an appealable order because it is not among the enumerated orders listed in this rule. Following Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228 (1996), the Supreme Court, expressing concerns regarding judicial economy and the near certainty of future appeals following a new trial on damages, exercised its authority under Rule 3, M.R.App.P., to suspend the requirements of the rules of appellate procedure in the interest of expediting a decision and considered the appeal of the order granting judgment as a matter of law in the limited class of cases like this, when the order granting judgment as a matter of law is taken in conjunction with an order granting a new trial. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

No Appeal, Based on Constitutionality of Offense Charged, From Judgment of Not Guilty by Reason of Mental Disease or Defect: Kaplan was charged with seven counts of stalking under 45-5-220, arising from her repeated contact with her former martial arts instructor. Kaplan moved to dismiss the charges on grounds that 45-5-220 is unconstitutional. Following a briefing, the motion was denied. By stipulation, Kaplan was subsequently found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. Because Kaplan was not convicted, there was no judgment of conviction from which to appeal. Therefore, the denial of her motion to dismiss, absent a judgment of conviction, was not itself an appealable order. The proper method of challenging a finding of mental disease or defect is found in 46-14-301 through 46-14-303. Appealing the constitutionality of the statute under which the person was charged is not an option. St. v. Kaplan, 275 M 108, 910 P2d 240, 53 St. Rep. 60 (1996).

Mootness as Separate From Question of Waiver of Appeal Rights — Voluntary Versus Involuntary Performance: The question of whether compliance with a judgment was voluntary or not has bearing on whether a party has waived the right to appeal, but it has no bearing on the question of mootness, which arises when an appellate court cannot grant effective relief. The issue of mootness is separate and distinct from the question of waiver of appeal rights. Complying with the judgment does not necessarily render the appeal moot. However, if compliance is voluntary, the party may be said to have waived any objection to the judgment. In deciding whether a case is moot, it must be determined whether effective relief is available. The fact that a party has not voluntarily waived the right to appeal does not necessarily mean that effective relief can still be provided on appeal, nor may a party claim an exception to the mootness doctrine when the case became moot through that party's own failure to seek a stay of judgment. Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), following and clarifying State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), and Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143 (1985), overruling any contrary holding in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357 (1986), Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477 (1988), LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740 (1988), and Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993), and followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999). See also Gates v. Deukmejian, 987 F2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1993).

Denial of Motion to Set Aside Default as Final Judgment — Appeal Timely Filed: An order made after final judgment setting aside or refusing to vacate a default judgment is a special order that may be considered by the Supreme Court on appeal. During a hearing on a motion to set aside default, the District Court denied the motion, thus making a final determination of the parties' rights. An appeal perfected and filed within 30 days of dismissal of the motion was timely. In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Right to Retain Lien — Substantive Property Right: Talcott Construction brought an action to foreclose on its construction lien on certain condominiums. Mountain Bank filed an irrevocable letter of credit with the District Court on behalf of the defendant, P&D Land Enterprises, and the court entered an order dissolving Talcott's lien. The defendant argued that Talcott could not appeal the dissolving of the lien because this rule refers only to writs of attachment. The Supreme Court held that an appeal was proper because the rule refers to "attachments" and the construction lien was an attachment and a property right, the release of which was the deprivation of a substantive right. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 261 M 260, 862 P2d 395, 50 St. Rep. 1313 (1993).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Failure to Appeal Not Fatal — Court Discretion to Reverse Judgment in Light of Statutory Changes: Koch chose not to appeal an adverse District Court decision regarding governmental immunity based on the case law developed on that issue by the Supreme Court. More than 1 year later, following substantive legislative revision of statutory immunity law, Koch sought relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Generally, failure to appeal for almost any reason is fatal to a motion to reopen judgment under that rule because if allowed, it would in essence make a motion under that rule a substitute for appeal, which is an improper use of the motion. Even so, failure to appeal may not be fatal. Relief under Rule 60(b) is not inflexibly withheld in a case in which an appeal has been abandoned or not taken because of a clearly applicable adverse rule of law and in which there is a later clear and authoritative change in governing law. Therefore, in the present case, the existence of extraordinary circumstances created because of the substantive revision of statutory law was sufficient to warrant reversal of a final judgment under the "other reasons" rationale of Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Having met the standards for relief under the rule, failure to appeal did not bar that relief. Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), following Polites v. U.S., 364 US 426, 5 L Ed 2d 173, 81 S Ct 202 (1960), and U.S. v. Wyle, 889 F2d 242 (9th Cir. 1989).

Party Not Injuriously Affected by Judgment: The defendant appealed the lower court's order allowing the Bureau of Land Management to maintain the road located on the defendant's property. The Supreme Court refused to rule on whether or not the lower court had the authority to enter the maintenance order but held that the defendant was not seriously prejudiced by the order and therefore was without standing to appeal. Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990).

Failure to Request Evidentiary Hearing or Raise Timely Objection — Issue of Attorney Fees Not Preserved for Appeal: The Supreme Court was precluded from reviewing the correctness of the computation of an award of attorney fees in a workers' compensation case because the defendant failed to either timely object or request an evidentiary hearing contesting the proposed order granting the fees. Defendant contended that there was no bar on appeal because: (1) the lower court abused its discretion; and (2) the plain error doctrine applied. However, the abuse of discretion standard is applied only when the usual requirements of preserving the issue at trial are met. Furthermore, the plain error exception will not be applied when failure or refusal to raise an issue in trial court is conscious and intentional on the part of trial counsel. Martinez v. Mont. Power Co., 239 M 281, 779 P2d 917, 46 St. Rep. 1684 (1989).

Court Order for Production of Witness — Failure to Preserve Issue for Appeal: Defendant claimed the jury might have been prejudiced by a District Judge's demeanor in ordering defense counsel to produce a witness for examination by the plaintiff. However, because defendant failed to move for mistrial or object at the time of the judge's action, there was no preservation of any issue of judicial misconduct for appeal. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Constitutionality of Claim and Delivery Procedures: When presented with a claim that 27-17-203(2) is unconstitutional because it allows a court-ordered seizure of property without requiring notice of or opportunity for an immediate postseizure hearing, the Supreme Court held that Montana's claim and delivery procedure provides constitutional safeguards required by the state and federal constitutions. The procedure balances and protects the interests of both parties in the following ways: (1) a prehearing seizure may be obtained only if plaintiff swears to facts and posts a bond appropriate to protect defendant; (2) a delivery order must be obtained through a judge or Justice of the Peace rather than a court or administrative officer; (3) defendant may file a bond to immediately regain possession of the property; (4) defendant may immediately apply for a motion to quash the order; (5) defendant may promptly seek Supreme Court review under this rule; and (6) defendant may challenge the validity of the order at the final judicial determination of liability following seizure. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula v. Gregoroff, 236 M 345, 770 P2d 512, 46 St. Rep. 412 (1989). See also Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 US 600, 40 L Ed 2d 406, 94 S Ct 1895 (1974).

Contention of Laches and Estoppel Appealable: The city built a pumphouse that was allegedly on land of another property owner. On appeal from a judgment verdict in an inverse condemnation case, the city was found to have actively contested the boundary at trial and asserted its contention of laches and estoppel. The city could appeal these issues even though it did not present any witnesses at the first bifurcated trial, which concerned only the boundary line issue. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Question of Mootness of Issue on Appeal — "Capable of Repetition, Yet Evading Review" Exception: In a dispute over whether a District Judge had the inherent power to establish by budget order the salaries for court staff, the judge maintained that the issue on appeal was moot because the local government "adopted its budget and included the budget order therein, and that once the budget was adopted, it could not be changed". The Supreme Court noted that in the absence of a decision, the judge could make a budget order in years following. Therefore, a "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception to the mootness rule, as explained in Lee v. Schmidt - Wenzel, 766 F2d 1387 (9th Cir. 1985), was more tenable. Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564, 44 St. Rep. 1356 (1987), followed in Missoula City-County Air Pollution Control Bd. v. Bd. of Envtl. Review, 282 M 255, 937 P2d 463, 54 St. Rep. 338 (1997), and In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997). See also Heisler v. Hines Motor Co., 282 M 270, 937 P2d 45, 54 St. Rep. 345 (1997).

Party Not Aggrieved Not Entitled to Appeal: A party not aggrieved by a judgment may not appeal from it. Branstetter v. Beaumont Supper Club, Inc., 224 M 20, 727 P2d 933, 43 St. Rep. 1981 (1986), citing Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Appeal Not Rendered Moot: If a judgment is satisfied by an involuntary payment or performance, the appeal from the judgment is not thereby rendered moot. First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 43 St. Rep. 1326 (1986), overruling Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), and In re Black's Estate, 32 M 51, 79 P 554 (1905), and followed in LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988), Giles and LeClair were overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). Turner was followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Aggrieved Nonparties: Nonparties aggrieved by a lower court order may appeal from it. Lundgren v. Hoglund, 219 M 295, 711 P2d 809, 42 St. Rep. 2031 (1985).

Trustee's Right to Appeal Court Order When Trustee Not a Party: Trustee-bank could appeal from court order directing trustee to pay all income due beneficiary to beneficiary's judgment creditors, even though the trustee was not a party to the action between the beneficiary and creditors. The trustee had a fiduciary duty to preserve and protect the trust assets. Lundgren v. Hoglund, 219 M 295, 711 P2d 809, 42 St. Rep. 2031 (1985).

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied in toto M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court and because, in his official capacity, the Attorney General may not appeal a decision that is within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. The latter appeal being invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

Third-Party Defendant Entitled to Appeal: A real estate broker brought an action against the seller who impleaded the buyer as a third-party defendant. Judgment was entered against the seller in favor of the broker and for the seller against the buyer. Under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., the buyer is entitled to appeal the judgment. Nardi v. Smalley, 197 M 321, 643 P2d 228, 39 St. Rep. 606 (1982).

Appeal by Defaulting Party: In the absence of an order of the District Court setting aside the default of the appealing defendants, they had no standing to file a notice of appeal from an adverse judgment against the plaintiff county. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Standard for Standing to Bring Appeal — Public Versus Private Interest: To enable a party to appeal from a judgment or order he must have an interest in the subject matter of the litigation which was injuriously affected by the judgment or order. A judgment by the District Court concerning the public interest in a right-of-way does not affect a party's private interest in the right-of-way. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Aggrieved Parties: Because defendants were accorded full review in proceeding by plaintiff to dismiss defendants' motion to stay judgment pending appeal and to assess costs, defendants were no longer "aggrieved parties" entitled to further appeal rights. Morris v. Monk, 158 M 163, 489 P2d 1029 (1971).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

GENERAL

Appeal of Damage Award — Scope of Review: In an action to recover a money judgment for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident where the evidence was conflicting and the damages unliquidated, neither the trial court nor Supreme Court is authorized to enter an absolute judgment for any other sum than that assessed by the jury unless the parties litigant file their consent thereto, and the plaintiff cannot fix and limit the scope of the Supreme Court's review by appealing only from that part of the verdict and judgment assessing damages. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Order to Interplead Appealable: A judgment in an interpleader action dismissing plaintiff from the action and awarding it costs, enjoining defendants from prosecuting any action against the plaintiff involving a fund deposited, and ordering defendants to interplead in the action instituted by the plaintiff was appealable. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Alimony and Attorneys' Fees Award Appealable: An award of temporary alimony and attorneys' fees to a wife is a final judgment within the meaning of subdivision 1 of this section. Walker v. Walker, 129 M 295, 285 P2d 590 (1955).

Denial of Writ of Habeas Corpus Appealable: An order denying a Writ of Habeas Corpus is appealable. State ex rel. Veach v. Veach, 122 M 47, 195 P2d 697 (1948).

Order to Vacate Attachment Appealable: Fact that motion was to vacate or release attachment rather than to dissolve the attachment would not prevent the order denying the motion from being appealable. Stallinger v. Goss, 121 M 437, 193 P2d 810 (1948).

Order to Satisfy Judgment Appealable: An order, after final judgment, ordering plaintiff to satisfy judgment upon tender of specified amount by defendant was an appealable order. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Taxation of Costs Not a "Special Order": An order taxing costs is in theory an intermediate order and the costs when taxed become a part of the judgment theretofore entered. Hence, it is not a special order made after final judgment within the meaning of subdivision 2 from which an appeal may be taken, but is reviewable only on appeal from the judgment, the time for appeal running from the date of judgment. An order taxing appeal costs becomes a part of the judgment of the Supreme Court, and not a part of the judgment upon retrial where one is had, over which the trial court has no jurisdiction but to enforce or to determine disputed items. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Judgment Upon Remand Appealable: Where the Supreme Court remands a cause with direction to modify the judgment appealed from, the judgment as modified to stand affirmed, and the decree entered pursuant to remittitur in all substantial respects complies with the court's opinion, the modified judgment is in effect the judgment of the Supreme Court and from it an appeal does not lie and where taken, if groundless, and for delay court may order dismissal. Lloyd v. Great Falls, 107 M 588, 87 P2d 187 (1939).

Presumption of Correctness of Lower Court: On appeal the Supreme Court indulges the presumption that the judgment of the District Court appealed from is correct and will uphold it unless clearly shown to be erroneous, the burden of showing which rests upon the appellant. Dalbey v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y of the U.S., 105 M 587, 74 P2d 432 (1937).

Appeal From Part of Divisible Judgment: Where the judgment is divisible, an appeal may be taken from a part thereof. Wills v. Morris, 100 M 504, 50 P2d 858 (1935), overruling Lohman v. Poor, 68 M 579, 220 P 1094 (1923).

Void Order — Not to Determine Appealability: The appealability of an order does not rest upon what may be its operative effect, and therefore the question whether it is void cannot govern its appealability. State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Denial of Mandate Not Appealable: An order of the District Court denying an application for an alternative Writ of Mandate is not one of the orders enumerated in subdivisions 2 and 3 of this section, from which an appeal may be taken, and hence an appeal therefrom does not lie. State ex rel. Bole v. Lay, 89 M 541, 300 P 238 (1931).

Conditional Interlocutory Order Not "Special Order": An appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer does not lie; nor may such an order made in a proceeding arising out of an action in which a judgment had been entered be treated as a special order made after final judgment, where such judgment was a conditional interlocutory determination, and not a final one. Heater v. Boston & Mont. Corp., 84 M 500, 277 P 11 (1929), distinguished in In re Day's Estate, 119 M 547, 177 P2d 862 (1947).

Alimony Award Appealable: An order requiring the payment of alimony pendente lite is one from which an appeal lies. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 82 M 463, 267 P 803 (1928).

Insolvency Proceedings — Order Appealable: Under this section, a creditor of an insolvent bank seeking to have his claim against the bank established as a preferred one has an appeal from an adverse order of the court; where he fails to appeal within the time allowed, the order becomes final. State ex rel. Rankin v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 81 M 489, 264 P 106 (1928).

Habeas Corpus Proceedings Appealable: A proceeding in habeas corpus, the object of which is to determine the right to the custody of a minor, is a special proceeding of a civil nature to enforce private rights; the disposition made of it by the court is a judgment from which an appeal may be taken under this section. In re Thompson, 77 M 466, 251 P 163 (1926), distinguished in Ex parte Reinhardt, 88 M 282, 292 P 582 (1930).

Amendment of Affidavit — Order Not Appealable: An order permitting amendment of an affidavit for Writ of Attachment is not appealable. Hetrick v. Renwald, 73 M 426, 236 P 1089 (1925).

Denial of Leave to Amend Answer Not Special Order: An order denying defendant's motion for leave to amend his answer after judgment had been rendered and motion for new trial denied was not a special order made after final judgment within the meaning of this section, and was therefore not appealable. Apple v. Seaver, 70 M 65, 223 P 830 (1924).

"Special Order" Defined: The special order, made after final judgment, from which an appeal lies, must be an order affecting the rights of some party to the action, growing out of the judgment previously entered. It must be an order affecting rights incorporated in the judgment. Apple v. Seaver, 70 M 65, 223 P 830 (1924); Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919); Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. White, 36 M 437, 93 P 350 (1908).

Denial of Intervention Not Appealable: An appeal from an order denying a motion for leave to file a complaint in intervention does not lie, this section not authorizing it. Equity Co-op Ass'n v. Equity Co-op Mill. Co., 63 M 26, 206 P 349 (1922).

Grant or Denial of Prohibition Appealable: Under this section, an appeal lies from the final, or formal, judgment granting (or denying) a peremptory Writ of Prohibition, but does not lie from an order entered in the minutes of the District Court directing the peremptory Writ to issue. State ex rel Lalonde v. Lemkie, 62 M 51, 202 P 1109 (1921).

Statutory Basis for Appeal: An appeal is authorized by statute only, and unless the judgment or order which it is sought to have reviewed in this mode falls fairly within the enumeration of appealable orders or judgments made by the statute, the appeal does not lie. Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919); Taintor v. St. John, 50 M 358, 146 P 939 (1915); State ex rel. Jackson v. Kennie, 24 M 45, 60 P 589 (1900); In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

Confiscation Proceedings Appealable: Under this section, either the State or the claimant could appeal from the judgment rendered in a proceeding under the Enforcement Act of 1917 (Ch. 143, L. 1917), relative to searches, seizures, and forfeitures of intoxicating liquors. State ex rel. Prato v. District Court, 55 M 560, 179 P 497 (1919).

Bail Bond Proceedings — Summary Judgment Not Appealable: No appeal lies from a summary judgment against sureties in proceedings for the forfeiture of a bail bond, though the judgment is final; it is not "a judgment entered in an action or special proceeding commenced in a district court, or brought into a district court from another court". State ex rel. Van v. District Court, 54 M 577, 172 P 540 (1918).

Striking of Pleadings Not Appealable: An appeal does not lie from an order striking from the files a pleading or other document constituting a part of the record of a cause. State ex rel. Smotherman v. District Court, 50 M 119, 145 P 724 (1914).

Mandate — Order Overruling Motion to Quash Not Appealable: An order overruling a motion to quash an alternative Writ of Mandate is not an appealable one. State ex rel. Frost v. Barnett, 49 M 252, 141 P 287 (1914).

Order Authorizing Payment Not One Directing Delivery: An order authorizing the payment of a fund deposited in court in condemnation proceedings to the person entitled thereto is not one directing the delivery, transfer, or surrender of property within the meaning of this section, and is therefore not appealable. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. White, 36 M 437, 93 P 350 (1908).

Writ of Prohibition — Order to Quash Not Appealable: Neither an order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) nor an order sustaining a motion to quash an alternative Writ of Prohibition is appealable. State ex rel. Allen v. Hawkins, 33 M 177, 82 P 952 (1905).

Entry Noting Stipulation Not Appealable: An entry noting the filing of an agreement to dismiss is not a dismissal from which an appeal can be taken. A pretended judgment of dismissal, which was not in fact a dismissal, is not appealable. Kinman v. Scheuer, 30 M 73, 75 P 690 (1904).

Substitution of Parties Not Appealable: An order substituting a claimant of property, on application of defendant in a claim and delivery action, in lieu of defendant, is not a final determination from which an appeal is allowable. State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Judgment Required to Be Shown: Where the record does not show that any judgment has been entered in the case in the court below, an appeal from the judgment will be dismissed. Lisker v. O'Rourke, 28 M 129, 72 P 416 (1903).

Order Directing Judgment Not Appealable: A minute entry directing judgment to be entered for defendant is not a judgment. Lisker v. O'Rourke, 28 M 129, 72 P2 416 (1903).

Interlocutory Judgments — Extent of Relief: The statutes do not limit the right of appeal from final judgment or the power of the Supreme Court on such appeals but merely provide for independent appeals from interlocutory judgments and the extent of relief to be granted thereon. Finlen v. Heinze, 27 M 107, 69 P 829, 70 P 517 (1902).

Denial of New Trial Motion Appealable: When made after entry of final judgment, an order striking out the statement on motion for a new trial is an order from which an appeal may be taken. State ex rel. Finlen v. District Court, 26 M 372, 68 P 465 (1902); Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 25 M 367, 65 P 106 (1901).

Statute Not Applicable to Criminal Cases: This section provides only for appeals in civil cases, and has no application to any matter contained in the Penal Code. State ex rel. Jackson v. Kennie, 24 M 45, 60 P 589 (1900).

Removal of Trustee Appealable: A judgment declaring a trust and removing the trustee is a final order from which an appeal will lie, notwithstanding that it directs the trustee to file an inventory and an account of all property received by him as trustee. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899).

Denial of Modification of Irregular Order Appealable: An appeal can be taken from an order refusing a motion to modify a former order, even though the original order is appealable, when the original order was irregularly issued, or was made without notice. Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 21 M 7, 52 P 560 (1898). See also Butte Consol. Min. Co. v. Frank, 24 M 506, 62 P 922 (1900).

Refusal to Allow Amendment of Pleadings Not Appealable: An appeal does not lie from an order refusing to allow an amendment to the complaint, or striking the complaint from the files. Owen v. McCormick, 5 M 255, 5 P 280 (1884). See also Murphy v. King, 6 M 30, 9 P 585 (1886).

ACCOUNTING PROCEEDINGS

Order for Accounting Not Appealable: An order for an accounting is not an appealable order under this section. Corcoran v. Fousek, 125 M 223, 233 P2d 1040 (1951).

Action for Partnership Accounting as Final Order: In an action for a partnership accounting in which defendants claimed that plaintiff had purchased certain lands with partnership funds, the judgment, which determined all the material issues involved, and which left nothing undetermined except the title to a homestead patented to plaintiff also claimed as partnership property, was final in the sense used in this section, authorizing an appeal from a "final judgment". Wilson v. Wilson, 64 M 533, 210 P 896 (1922).

Order of Sale as Special Order Made After Final Judgment: Where a decree determining partnership accounts is rendered after the dissolution of the firm, and the receiver therefor is thereafter ordered to sell the partnership property, an appeal from an order confirming such sale does not raise any question concerning the order of sale, since such order is a special order, made after final judgment, from which an appeal is authorized. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 591, 63 P 380 (1901).

AMENDMENT OF JUDGMENT

Order Modifying Judgment Not Reviewable by Supervisory Control: Since an appeal may be taken from a special order made after judgment which modifies a judgment theretofore entered and adversely affects the rights of a party to the litigation, an application for a Writ of Supervisory Control will be denied. State ex rel. Ferris v. District Court, 126 M 623, 255 P2d 687 (1953).

Judgment After Remittitur Not Reviewable by Appeal: A judgment entered in the District Court after remittitur is the Supreme Court's judgment, and where it is contended that such judgment is not in compliance with the remittitur, the remedy is by special proceeding in the Supreme Court and not by motion in the trial court, nor by appeal from either the new judgment or from the trial court's order denying the modification thereof. In re Anderson's Estate, 113 M 125, 122 P2d 832 (1942).

Appealable Order Not Reviewable by Certiorari: An order amending a judgment entered 4 months prior thereto was a special order made after final judgment and as such appealable under subdivision 2 of this section; therefore its correctness may not be reviewed on certiorari. State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Order Amending Judgment Appealable: An order amending a judgment already entered is a special order after final judgment, and therefore appealable. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 32 M 20, 79 P 410 (1905).

DISMISSAL OF ACTION

Failure to State Claim for Relief: Court properly dismissed with prejudice a complaint filed on the Daly Ditch decision because it appeared to be an interlocutory appeal and thus failed to state a claim on which relief may be granted. Swift v. St., 226 M 439, 736 P2d 117, 44 St. Rep. 786 (1987).

Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Appealable: A District Court order granting a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction is appealable. State ex rel. Austin v. Austin, 221 M 488, 719 P2d 429, 43 St. Rep. 998 (1986).

Judgment of Dismissal Appealable: An appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken from a judgment dismissing an action which is based on an order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and by 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint. Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962); Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Order of Dismissal Appealable — Effect: An order dismissing an action is a final judgment from which an appeal can be perfected if the order has the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Dismissal for Lack of Jurisdiction Not Appealable: The order of the District Court refusing to take jurisdiction of the application for Writ of Review was neither a judgment from which an appeal could have been taken nor an appealable order, even if it had contained a positive direction that the proceeding be dismissed. The general rule is that a judgment of dismissal for want of jurisdiction is not one from which an appeal lies; hence relator's right to relief by mandate was not barred by any right of appeal. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235, 82 ALR 1158 (1931).

Minute Entry Sustaining Dismissal Not a Judgment: A minute entry of an order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and by 25-31-503, now repealed) to the plaintiff's complaint, and directing the dismissal of his action, is not an order from which an appeal can be taken; the order is not a judgment. Pentz v. Corscadden, 49 M 581, 144 P 157 (1914), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Order Dismissing Action Not Final Judgment: An order dismissing an action for failure of defendant to demand and have entered a judgment in its favor, within 6 months after rendition of verdict, is not a final judgment nor an order from which an appeal may be taken. Hovey v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 40, 101 P 146 (1909).

DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

Stay of Custody Decree: An appeal from an order modifying a decree as to custody of children can be stayed only by an application for a stay made and granted under subdivision 2 of this section. Application of Nelson, 132 M 252, 316 P2d 1058 (1957).

Appeals From Divorce Generally: Appeals lie from final judgments in divorce action as in other actions. Judson v. Anderson, 118 M 106, 165 P2d 198 (1945), followed in In re Marriage of Butler, 243 M 521, 795 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 1376 (1990).

Suspension of Alimony Appealable: Under the rule that certiorari does not lie where appeal is available, an order so modifying a decree of divorce as to suspend payment of alimony and awarding the custody of a minor child to the father upon remarriage of the mother was a special order made after final judgment and appealable, and therefore the Writ of Review was not available to review the correctness of the order. State ex rel. Gates v. District Court, 69 M 322, 221 P 543 (1923).

Order Overruling Motion on Affidavit Not Appealable: An appeal does not lie from an order overruling a motion to strike an affidavit filed in support of a motion for the modification of a decree granting a divorce, such order not being one of the orders made appealable by this section, nor a special order made after final judgment from which an appeal may be taken. Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919), distinguished in State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Order Quashing Execution Not Special Order: An order quashing an execution issued by a Clerk of the District Court on an abstract of a Justice's judgment, filed with and docketed by him under 25-31-912 (now repealed) and striking such abstract from the files, is not a special order after final judgment made appealable by this section. Pierson v. Daly, 49 M 478, 143 P 957 (1914).

Order Supplemental to Execution as Special Order: An order made in proceedings supplemental to execution is a special order made after final judgment, and is therefore appealable. Hayes v. District Court, 11 M 225, 28 P 259 (1891); Barber v. Briscoe, 9 M 341, 23 P 726 (1890).

Order Refusing to Stay Execution as "Special Order": An order refusing to stay an execution upon a judgment is a "special order made after final judgment" and appealable. Clarke v. Gonu, 2 M 538 (1877).

FINDINGS AND VERDICT

Findings and Conclusions Not Orders or Judgment: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are not a judgment nor are they an order, as known to our practice; they are the court's statement on which he will base his order or judgment. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Anhalt, 127 M 71, 257 P2d 889 (1953).

Orders Not Appealable Generally: Appeals do not lie under this section, from orders rejecting findings of the jury, from conclusions of law, or from the action of the court in adopting certain findings of the jury and making findings of its own, the questions thus sought to be raised being reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Bode v. Rollwitz, 60 M 481, 199 P 688 (1921).

Order Correcting Verdict Not Appealable: An order of the District Court correcting the verdict in a civil action is not one from which an appeal may be taken. Frank v. Symons, 35 M 56, 88 P 561 (1907).

Denial of Motion to Reject Findings Not Appealable: An order overruling a motion to reject findings made by the jury is not appealable. Johns v. Barnes, 31 M 426, 78 P 703 (1904).

Denial of General Verdict Not Appealable: An appeal from an order denying a motion to adopt a general verdict and special findings and to set aside the special verdict in a suit in equity must be dismissed where the record shows no judgment of dismissal or other final judgment. Kinman v. Scheuer, 30 M 73, 75 P 690 (1904).

INJUNCTIONS AND RESTRAINING ORDERS

Order Refusing to Dissolve Temporary Restraining Order Not Appealable: A temporary restraining order is not an injunction within the meaning of this section, and an order refusing to dissolve such temporary restraining order is not appealable. Guardian Life Ins. Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 134 M 526, 335 P2d 310 (1959).

Interpleader Action — Injunction Appealable: A judgment and order granting an injunction in an interpleader action was appealable. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Order to Show Cause and Injunction Appealable: Where temporary injunction to abate nuisance under 45-8-112 was quashed the same day issued upon presentation of affidavit of defendant under 27-19-401 and in its stead was issued an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue and enjoining defendant from operating "contrary to the laws of the State of Montana", such order was appealable. State ex rel. Olsen v. 30 Club, 124 M 91, 219 P2d 307 (1950).

Restraining Order as Constituting Right to Injunction — Appeal Allowed: In action by public utility against Public Service Commission to enjoin it from putting into effect new rates fixed by it, upon petition for restraining order until final determination, order was granted, its action amounted to adjudication of plaintiff's right to an injunction pendente lite, from which an appeal lies under this section. State ex rel. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. District Court, 103 M 563, 63 P2d 1032 (1936).

Dissolution of Temporary Restraining Order Not Reviewable Upon Appeal of Judgment: An order denying a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction is an appealable order, and if not appealed from, the correctness of the order may not, under section 93-8022, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 2, M.R.App.P.), be reviewed on appeal from the judgment in the action in which the order was made. Little Horn St. Bank v. Gross, 89 M 472, 300 P 277 (1931).

Dissolution of Restraining Order Appealable: Where a motion to dissolve a temporary restraining order was heard at once and the matter of propriety of its issuance presented to the court as fully as it could have been on hearing of an order to show cause issued, and the court in denying the motion, instead of preserving the status quo, authorized one party to the action to harvest and sell crops (the subject in controversy) while restraining his opponent from interfering with him, its order was an adjudication of the right of the former to an injunction pendente lite, from which an appeal lay under this section. Labbitt v. Bunston, 80 M 293, 260 P 727 (1927), explained in Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 134 M 526, 335 P2d 310 (1959).

Denial of Injunction Appealable: An appeal lies from an order denying an injunction. Bown v. Somers, 55 M 434, 178 P 287 (1919), followed in Colstrip Faculty Ass'n, MEA/NEA v. Trustees, School District No. 19, 251 M 309, 824 P2d 1008, 49 St. Rep. 43 (1992).

Denial or Grant of Orders Not Appealable: There is no appeal from an order granting or refusing a restraining order pending the hearing of an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 25 M 135, 63 P 1043 (1901), distinguished in Jordan v. Andrus, 26 M 37, 66 P 502 (1901); Maloney v. King, 25 M 256, 64 P 668 (1901).

JUSTICE COURT APPEALS TO DISTRICT COURT

Order Dismissing Appeal From Justice Appealable: An order dismissing an appeal from Justice Court is a final judgment and as such is appealable. If the "order" has the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties, it is a "judgment", the title to the instrument being not conclusive; it is to be judged by its contents and substance. Ross v. Greenwald, 112 M 324, 115 P2d 290 (1941), following State ex rel. Meyer v. District Court, 102 M 222, 57 P2d 778 (1936), and overruling Palmer v. Spaulding, 34 M 1, 85 P 369 (1906).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss Appeal From Justice Not Appealable: An order of the District Court, overruling a motion to dismiss an appeal to that court from a judgment of a Justice of the Peace, is not a final judgment or a special order made after final judgment, so as to be appealable under this section. Raymond v. Raymond, 32 M 170, 79 P 1056 (1905).

"Final Judgment" Not by Justice: The "final judgment" referred to in this section is a judgment rendered by the District Court, and not that rendered by a Justice of the Peace from which an appeal is prosecuted. Raymond. v. Raymond, 32 M 170, 79 P 1056 (1905).

Order for Bond on Appeal Not Appealable: This section and the following section (section 93-8005, R.C.M. 1947, superseded by Rules 4 and 5, M.R.App.P.) being exclusive, an appeal will not lie from an order of a District Court requiring that appellee on an appeal from Justice's Court give the bond required of a plaintiff, not a resident of the state, since such an order is not designated therein. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900). See also Threlkeld v. O'Neal, 26 M 209, 66 P 940 (1901); State ex rel. Prescott v. District Court, 27 M 179, 70 P 516 (1902).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — GENERALLY

Appointment or Removal of Personal Representative and Renunciation of Right to Appointment — Standards of Review: Whether a party has a statutory priority for appointment as a personal representative in Montana as a result of appointment as a personal representative in another state, as well as a coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator, is a legal question that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law (see In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994)). A question of whether a person has renounced the right to appointment as a personal representative involves the interpretation and application of the statute governing renunciation and will be reviewed for correctness (see In re Inquiry Into A.W., D.G., & M.G., Jr., 1999 MT 42, 293 M 358, 975 P2d 1250 (1999)). Whether a District Court has erred in refusing to appoint a person as a personal administrator, because that person has a conflict with another that prevents that person from being appointed a personal administrator, will be reviewed to determine whether there has been an abuse of the District Court's discretion (see In re Estate of Obstarczyk, 141 M 346, 377 P2d 531 (1963)). In re Estate of Kuralt, 2001 MT 153, 306 M 73, 30 P3d 345 (2001).

Standing of Decedent's Relatives to Appeal Settlement and Distribution Agreements: Decedent's mother, brother, and sister sought to appeal a contested settlement agreement and a distribution agreement ordered by the District Court, but decedent's surviving spouse, Barbara, contended that there was no standing for an appeal. The Supreme Court held that: (1) Barbara was not precluded from raising the issue of standing for the first time on appeal, even though she failed to object in District Court, because objections to standing cannot be waived; (2) decedent's mother, as a creditor of the estate, had standing to appeal the appointment of Barbara as personal representative, but a brother and sister, who were neither creditors nor heirs of the estate, lacked standing; (3) because decedent's mother, brother, and sister were not successors to the estate, they had no legal interest or personal stake in the distribution of the estate and thus lacked standing to claim that the distribution agreement was improper; and (4) decedent's mother, brother, and sister were parties to the contested settlement agreement and were directly affected by the validity of the agreement and thus had standing to appeal that issue. In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996), following Holmstrom Land Co. v. Newlan Creek Water District, 185 M 409, 605 P2d 1060 (1979), Grossman v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319 (1984), and Olson v. Dept. of Revenue, 223 M 464, 726 P2d 1162 (1986). Goick was followed, as to prerequisites for standing, in In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997).

Order Sustaining Dismissal to Petition for Revocation of Probate Appealable: An order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to petition for revocation of the probate of a subsequent will is an appealable order under this section as amended by Ch. 41, L. 1941. In re Maricich's Estate, 140 M 319, 371 P2d 354 (1962).

Petition for Revocation of Testimentary Letters — Supervisory Control Applicable: An order dismissing a petition for revocation of letters testamentary is not one refusing to revoke such letters and is not appealable. Hence, the Writ of Supervisory Control may properly be resorted to to annul such order. State ex rel. Biering v. District Court, 115 M 174, 140 P2d 583 (1943).

Settlement of Executor's Accounts — No Appeal From Order: Neither an order denying a motion to reopen and amend an amended order of the District Court sitting in probate settling accounts of an executor, nor one to set such order aside is among court orders made appealable by subdivision 3; hence the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of appeals taken therefrom. In re Sullivan's Estate, 112 M 496, 118 P2d 137 (1941).

Erroneous Order Sustaining Dismissal Not Appealable: An erroneous order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to a petition for the probate of a will and dismissing the petition is neither a judgment nor an order made appealable by this section, and therefore an attempted appeal therefrom will be dismissed on motion. There is no provision in the statute for a demurrer to the petition for probate. In re Augestad's Estate, 107 M 619, 88 P2d 32 (1939).

No Appeal From Order Vacating Decree of Settlement: The provision for an appeal from an order made after judgment does not apply to probate proceedings, and as a corollary it would seem that no appeal lies from an order vacating decree of settlement, just as no appeal lies from an order refusing to vacate a decree of settlement of final account and distribution of an estate. State ex rel. Regis v. District Court, 102 M 74, 55 P2d 1295 (1936).

Order Setting Administration and Legal Fees Appealable: Action of the District Court, sitting in probate, in approving an agreement between an administratrix and attorneys who had acted for the executrix whom she succeeded in the administration of the estate as well as for herself, under which she had promised to pay them a fee of $5,000 for their services, and in fixing her fee as administratrix, was reviewable on appeal under this section, and not on application for Writ of Supervisory Control. State ex rel. Brophy v. District Court, 97 M 83, 33 P2d 266 (1934).

Order Dismissing Petition for Revocation of Probate Not Appealable: Under this section, subdivision 3, only such orders in probate proceedings as therein enumerated are appealable. Hence, an order dismissing a petition for the revocation of the probate of a will—in effect an order refusing to revoke its probate—not being included in the enumeration, is not appealable. In re Ferguson's Estate, 73 M 596, 237 P 1105 (1925).

Inheritance Tax — Appeal of Order Barred: An order of the District Court fixing the amount of an inheritance tax due from an estate and directing its payment is appealable. Hence, failure to appeal barred the State from calling in question the correctness of the order on appeal from the decree allowing the final account of the executor, after payment of the tax. In re Sattes' Estate, 59 M 220, 195 P 1033 (1921).

"Final Judgment" Defined: The term "final judgment", as used in subdivision 2 of this section, refers only to those judgments known at common law as final judgments, and has no application to the statutory determinations and orders termed "orders or judgments" in probate proceedings. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913); In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907); In re Dougherty's Estate, 34 M 336, 86 P 38 (1906); In re Kelly's Estate, 31 M 356, 78 P 579, 79 P 244 (1905); In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

"Final Judgments" Not to Include Orders: The expression "final judgment", as used in subdivision 1 of this section, refers only to those judgments known at common law as final judgments, as defined in section 93-4701, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed). It does not include statutory determinations termed "orders" or "judgments" in probate proceedings. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913).

Order to Disclose Assets Not Appealable: An order to disclose assets of a decedent's estate is not a "final judgment", within the meaning of subdivision 1 of this section, from which an appeal lies. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913).

Order Determining Inheritance Tax Appealable: The action of the court in fixing the amount of an inheritance tax, and in directing its payment, may be reviewed on appeal, either from the order itself or from the decree directing the delivery. State ex rel. Floyd v. District Court, 41 M 357, 109 P 438 (1910).

Order Granting Widow's Allowance Appealable: An order granting an allowance to a widow out of the estate of her intestate is appealable, and, where an appeal therefrom is not taken within the time allowed, it becomes final and conclusive, and may not thereafter be attacked collaterally. In re Dougherty's Estate, 34 M 336, 86 P 38 (1906).

Order Confirming Account Not Appealable: An order confirming a guardian's account, being appealable under this section, and no appeal having been taken therefrom, questions respecting its settlement cannot be considered on a subsequent appeal from an order of sale of the ward's real estate. In re Scheuer's Estate, 31 M 606, 79 P 244 (1905).

Order Disallowing Claims Against Estate: An order disallowing a claim against an estate is not appealable. In re Barker's Estate, 26 M 279, 67 P 941 (1902).

Appeals From Judgments or Orders in Probate Generally: Appeals from judgments or orders in probate proceedings are allowed only under the provisions of subdivision 3 of this section, except in the single case of an order granting or refusing a new trial, which may be taken under subdivision 2. Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE

Untimely Affidavit Void: Where a decree of distribution was entered on an estate and no appeal was taken from such decree, an affidavit thereafter filed and recorded, stating that the affiant was an heir and devisee of the will and claiming an interest in the real estate distributed, was void on its face and constituted no cloud on the title to the land. Hart v. Barron, 122 M 350, 204 P2d 797 (1949).

Order Amounting to Partial Distribution Appealable: Where, under will, widow of decedent was granted life estate in all his property, and upon her death the remaindermen, in an intermediary proceeding against executor of her separate estate, petitioned to strike from inventory of widow's separate estate an amount equal to one-half the cost of a bookkeeper for both estates and the cost of repairing property belonging to her separate estate, the "order and judgment" made therein amounted to partial distribution of the property, appealable as a final judgment. In re Yergy's Estate, 106 M 505, 79 P2d 555 (1938).

Order Refusing to Vacate Settlement Not Appealable: Under subdivision 3 of this section, orders refusing to vacate a decree of distribution and settlement of final account, and refusing to vacate an order settling an administrator's account and discharging him, are not appealable. State ex rel. Regis v. District Court, 102 M 74, 55 P2d 1295 (1936); In re Kelly's Estate, 31 M 356, 78 P 579, 79 P 244 (1905).

Erroneous Order — Supervisory Control Applicable: An erroneous order overruling a motion to vacate a decree of distribution of an estate not being an appealable one, and relatrix not having any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, supervisory control lies to annul the order. State ex rel. Rubin v. District Court, 62 M 60, 203 P 860 (1921).

Portion of Order or Judgment of Distribution Appealable: An appeal may be taken from a part of an order or judgment decreeing certain persons to be entitled to share in the distribution of an estate under a will. In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907).

Order Granting Motion to Strike Not Appealable: An order granting a motion to strike out objection to the final account of an executrix and to a petition for distribution of the estate is not appealable. State ex rel. Cotter v. District Court, 34 M 303, 87 P 614 (1906).

Denial of New Trial Appealable: An appeal lies from an order denying a motion for a new trial in proceedings for the distribution of an estate under section 91-3706, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). In re Davis' Estate, 27 M 235, 70 P 721 (1902).

Order for Partial Distribution Appealable: An appeal lies from an order for the partial distribution of an estate. State ex rel. Leyson v. District Court, 26 M 378, 68 P 411 (1902).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — REAL ESTATE CONVEYANCE

Order Directing Conveyance Appealable: An order entered by court sitting in probate directing conveyance of realty by administrator upon payment of specified sum was a final order and was also appealable as an "order directing conveyance of real property" though, upon a showing that payment had been made, the administrator was later directed to execute a deed. In re Day's Estate, 119 M 547, 177 P2d 862 (1947).

Refusal to Confirm Sale Appealable: Under subdivision 3 of this section, authorizing an appeal from a judgment or order made by the District Court sitting in probate "against . . . directing . . . the sale or conveyance of real property", an appeal lies from an order refusing to confirm an administrator's sale of such property. In re McLure's Estate, 76 M 476, 248 P 362 (1926).

"Conveyance" Not to Include Lease: An appeal will not lie from an order directing the execution of a lease of realty under subdivision 3 of this section, as the word "conveyance", as used in the statute, does not include a lease. In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

Order to Execute Lease Not Final Judgment: An order of the District Court directing an executor to execute a lease of certain realty belonging to his testator's estate is not a "final judgment in a special proceeding" from which an appeal will lie. In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

RECEIVERSHIP PROCEEDINGS

Ex Parte Appointment Appealable: An ex parte order appointing a receiver is appealable. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935); Rumney v. Donovan, 28 M 69, 72 P 305 (1903).

Portion of Appointment Appealable: Where, on motion to vacate an order appointing a receiver made some 7 years prior thereto, the court, in addition to vacating the order, directed the clerk of court to pay to defendants the funds collected by the receiver, the latter part of the order, appealed from as a whole, was appealable under this section. Burgess v. Lasby, 94 M 534, 24 P2d 147 (1933).

Order Annulling Appointment Not Appealable: An order annulling an order appointing a receiver is not appealable, but may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment. Taintor v. St. John, 50 M 358, 146 P 939 (1915).

Application for Receiver Not a "Special Proceeding": An application for the appointment of a receiver to work a mining claim pending a suit to settle a controversy as to the title is not a "special proceeding" within the meaning of this section. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 28 M 227, 72 P 613 (1903), distinguished in State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Appointment of Receiver — Refusal to Vacate Appealable: This statute should be understood as creating the right to appeal from an order refusing to vacate the order of appointment of a receiver where the motion to vacate is based, not upon the conditions existing when the order was made, but upon facts occurring subsequently to the making of the original order. Forrester v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 24 M 148, 60 P 1088, 61 P 309 (1900).

SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT

Use of Appeal, Certiorari, and Supervisory Control: Where no judgment has been entered in a civil action at the time the court without authority strikes the entry of default from the files, certiorari lies to correct the error. Where the court makes such an order within jurisdiction, and no judgment has been entered, supervisory control lies. Where such order is made after judgment, certiorari does not lie even though the court exceeded its jurisdiction, since then an appeal lies from the order as from a special order made after final judgment. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Refusal to Vacate Default Not Appealable: An order, made before final judgment, refusing to set aside a default, is not appealable. Bullard v. Zimmerman, 82 M 434, 268 P 512 (1928); Bowen v. Webb, 34 M 61, 85 P 739 (1906).

Refusal to Vacate Judgment Appealable: An order, made after judgment, denying a motion to set aside a default and judgment, is appealable under this section. Hence, where no appeal was taken, the alleged error in refusing the motion was not reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Batchoff v. Butte Pac. Copper Co., 60 M 179, 198 P 132 (1921).

Order to Set Aside Findings and Judgment Appealable: Since denial of an order to set aside the findings and judgment in an action in ejectment was a special order made after final judgment, it was appealable, and failure to appeal therefrom bars review on appeal from the judgment. Stack v. Coyle, 59 M 444, 197 P 747 (1921).

Refusal to Set Aside Judgment Appealable: An order refusing to set aside a judgment is a special one made after final judgment; and, as such, is appealable under this section. It cannot be reviewed on appeal from a new trial order, as the two proceedings are separate and distinct from each other. Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914).

APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL

Order in Criminal Cause Not Appealable:

Chapter 225, L. 1921, which added the provision abolishing the appeal from an order denying a new trial, does not offend against the provision of Art. V, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. V, sec. 11, 1972 Mont. Const.), that an act containing a subject not embraced in the title shall be void as to that subject. Kline v. Murray, 79 M 530, 257 P 465 (1927).

An order denying a new trial in a criminal cause is not reviewable on appeal from the judgment. St. v. English, 71 M 343, 229 P 727 (1924).

Appeal From Order Denying New Trial Abolished: By this section, the appeal from an order denying a new trial is abolished. Dever v. Girson, 75 M 412, 243 P 812 (1926); Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925); Lappin v. Martin, 71 M 233, 228 P 763 (1924); Frost v. Long & Co., 71 M 141, 228 P 75 (1924); Tripp v. Silver Dyke Min. Co., 70 M 120, 224 P 272 (1924).

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

GENERAL

Misinterpretation of Testimony Regarding Alleged Relinquishment of Claim — Reversible Error: Kane sued Morgan to recover the costs of two wells that Kane drilled on Morgan's property for which payment was not made. At one point in his testimony, Kane stated that he charged Morgan for the first 150 feet of drilling, but gave Morgan the rest of the 400-foot hole, and then said, "Yeah, I give it to him. I think I'd give it all to him." The District Court interpreted the statement as a relinquishment by Kane for payment of the entire well and compensated Kane only for the cost of the other well. Kane appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in In re Marriage of Kotecki, 2000 MT 254, 301 M 460, 10 P3d 828 (2000), to determine if the finding was clearly erroneous: (1) whether the finding was supported by substantial evidence in the record; (2) whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; and (3) if the first two factors are met, the Supreme Court is still left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake was made. In this case, it was held that the District Court committed a mistake and misinterpreted Kane's testimony, so the Supreme Court reversed. Neither party interpreted the remark as a gift by Kane of the entire well. The comment was not followed up by either party during direct or cross-examination. Counsel for Morgan continued questioning both Kane and other witnesses as if Kane had not relinquished his claim, nor did Morgan assert relinquishment in the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Kane v. Morgan, 2001 MT 182, 306 M 207, 32 P3d 747 (2001).

Motion In Limine Sufficient to Preserve Objection for Appeal: Defendant's motion in limine to exclude testimony regarding certain chemicals in his blood and bottles of prescription medication found in his car was sufficient to preserve the objection for appeal. The propriety of the admission of the evidence is a proper issue for the Supreme Court on appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998).

Insufficient Evidence for Finding Relating to Mother's Mental State: In an action to modify custody (now parenting plan), the District Court denied the mother's motion and in addition found that the mother was hysterical and distressed with severe emotional problems of her own. The Supreme Court held that there was no evidence to support the lower court's impressions and that therefore it erred by entering such statements into the permanent record. In re Marriage of Nevin, 284 M 468, 945 P2d 58, 54 St. Rep. 981 (1997).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss — Matter of Law: Danichek appealed the lower court's refusal to grant his motion to dismiss, which he based on the argument that double jeopardy prohibited him from being prosecuted for driving under the influence because he had already been convicted and punished for refusing to take the Breathalyzer test. The Supreme Court held that the standard of review for the District Court's conclusion of law was plenary and that it would review the decision to determine whether the lower court's conclusion of law was correct. Helena v. Danichek, 277 M 461, 922 P2d 1170, 53 St. Rep. 767 (1996), following St. v. Hansen, 273 M 321, 903 P2d 194 (1995).

General Objection to Judicial Notice Insufficient to Preserve Issue on Appeal: Loh was charged with criminal possession of a controlled substance and sought to have her confession suppressed. The District Court denied the motion to suppress, and Loh was tried on the charge. At the trial, the prosecution requested the District Court to take judicial notice of the testimony of several firefighters given at the suppression hearing. The District Court agreed, over Loh's objection, saying that judicial notice of that former testimony was the very purpose contemplated by Rule 201, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Supreme Court held that the general objection made by Loh's counsel at the suppression hearing was an insufficient objection. The Supreme Court also noted that if there was error, it was harmless error and that Loh failed to make a further objection as to the sufficiency of any evidence offered at trial. St. v. Loh, 275 M 460, 914 P2d 592, 53 St. Rep. 226 (1996).

Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion to Suppress Evidence: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court ruling on a motion to suppress evidence to determine whether: (1) there is substantial credible evidence to support the court's findings of fact; (2) the court's interpretation and application of the law are correct; and (3) the court correctly applied the findings as a matter of law. St. v. Stubbs, 270 M 364, 892 P2d 547, 52 St. Rep. 232 (1995), following St. v. Rushton, 264

M 248, 870 P2d 1355 (1994), and St. v. Pastos, 269 M 43, 887 P2d 199, 51 St. Rep. 1441 (1994). See also St. v. Devlin, 1999 MT 90, 294 M 215, 980 P2d 1037, 56 St. Rep. 383 (1999).

DNA Evidence — General Objection in Motion In Limine Insufficient to Preserve Objection for Purposes of Appeal: Weeks was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. The conviction was based in part upon DNA evidence that was combined with standard serological evidence to provide a combined statistical estimate of the probability that Weeks was the father of a child of his stepdaughter. Weeks objected to the combined evidence but not on a foundation basis. The state argued that Weeks waived any objection that he had to the combined evidence, but Weeks contended that his motion in limine preserved an objection to the evidence. The Supreme Court held that Weeks's motion in limine, which did not specify any reasons or authorities why the evidence should be excluded, did not contain an objection to the combined statistical evidence but simply concluded that the DNA evidence was prejudicial. The Supreme Court held that this objection was insufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995), followed in St. v. Loh, 275 M 460, 914 P2d 592, 53 St. Rep. 226 (1996), and followed in St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996).

Ruling Regarding Arbitrability Subject to Appellate Review: The defendants argued that the lower court's ruling that the claims of the suit were subject to arbitration under the parties' contract was interlocutory and not subject to appeal. The Supreme Court ruled that the District Court, in ordering arbitration, had made a final determination at the state court level regarding the parties claims, and therefore the decision was appealable. Larsen v. Opie, 237 M 108, 771 P2d 977, 46 St. Rep. 660 (1989).

No Ruling on Motion In Limine Prior to Trial — Waiver of Objection: Plaintiff presented District Court with a motion in limine during pretrial conference, seeking to preclude defendant's mention at trial of a collateral source of insurance. The court reserved ruling on the matter. Plaintiff did not request a ruling prior to trial, object during trial, or present the court with any motions for mistrial or to strike the alleged testimony when insurance was first mentioned by defendant at trial. Failure to object or request corrective action after the subject was mentioned constituted a waiver of objection on the issue. Stewart v. Fisher, 235 M 432, 767 P2d 1321, 46 St. Rep. 116 (1989).

Sufficient Evidence Supporting Jury Verdict Against Union Officials for Misappropriation of Funds: A union sued former officers and business managers, alleging, among other things, misappropriation and conversion of union funds and constructive fraud. The union prevailed, and money damages were awarded to the union. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the evidence supported the award of money damages even though no one had testified at trial as to the specific amount of money defendants allegedly owed to the union. The jury heard evidence on mismanagement and self-dealing with regard to union property and on the financial losses of the union during defendant Bosh's administration. Testimony of the union indicated that defendants had not kept adequate financial records. The evidence may have contained contradictions, but it was substantial and adequate. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Medical Malpractice — Ingrown Toenail — Amputation of Leg: Substantial credible evidence supported a jury verdict of medical malpractice when treatment of a state prison inmate's ingrown toenail resulted in the amputation of his leg, even though the attending physicians contended that the inmate suffered from a preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs which was the cause of the amputation. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Court Order Supported by Substantial Credible Evidence: In ruling that substantial evidence supported the Workers' Compensation Court's decision, the Supreme Court noted: (1) the claimant, the decedent's surviving spouse, was found to be a credible witness; (2) the claimant's hypothetical question presented to each party's expert was found to be accurate; (3) the claimant's medical expert was found to be more qualified and his opinion was accorded greater weight; and (4) the nature of decedent's work and the particular activity he was engaged in at the time the initial heart attack occurred supported the Workers' Compensation Court's order. Davis v. Jones, 216 M 300, 701 P2d 351, 42 St. Rep. 840 (1985).

Special Master's Report — Standard of Review: The same standard of review, that findings and conclusions will be overturned only if clearly erroneous, will be applied to a special master's report adopted by a District Court as is applied to any other District Court order. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Defective Service — Persons Entitled to Raise Issue: Questions of defective service may be raised only by a person upon whom the allegedly defective service was made, a rule that applies equally to parties and intervenors. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Defects in Issuance — Persons Entitled to Raise Issue: Defects in the issuance of Writs of Attachment may be raised only by those named as defendants in the attachment proceeding. A third party not named as a defendant may assert its interest in the attached property but may not raise defects in the Writs. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Application of Administrative Rule: The alleged application of an administrative rule would not be considered on appeal where it was not argued below. Hanley v. Dept. of Revenue, 207 M 302, 673 P2d 1257, 40 St. Rep. 2054 (1983).

No Fraud Found in Sale of Real Property — Theory of Negligent Misrepresentation Abandoned — Findings and Conclusions Not Clearly Erroneous: Where the plaintiffs agreed to purchase a bar and restaurant from the defendant seller and later brought an action for damages against the county and the county sanitarian, claiming that the sanitarian misrepresented the capacity of the sewer system and conditions of a county license, the findings and conclusions of the District Court were supported by substantial evidence and were not clearly erroneous. The District Court found that the plaintiffs failed to prove their claim of fraud and that the theory of negligent misrepresentation had been abandoned by the plaintiffs. The record contained conflicting evidence but showed that there could have been a misunderstanding between the parties, and a misunderstanding will not support a claim for fraud in the inducement. The statements made by the defendant may have been negligent, but the District Court properly concluded that by failing to argue the theory of negligent misrepresentation, the plaintiffs evidenced an intention to abandon that theory. Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086 (1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Evidence Insufficient for Involuntary Commitment: Testimony at trial did not clearly and convincingly establish that respondent, due to his mental condition, was unable to protect his life or health at the time of the trial. Therefore, the evidence that respondent was "seriously mentally ill" within the meaning of 53-21-102 was insufficient as a matter of law, and the District Court commitment order was vacated. In re R.T., 204 M 493, 665 P2d 789, 40 St. Rep. 1025 (1983).

Dissolution of Marriage — Appeal From Original Judgment Amending Order Preserves Issues of Both: Respondent husband raised the issue of the scope of the wife's notice of appeal from the District Court's order amending the decree made on dissolution of the marriage. The husband argued that the appeal should be limited solely to issues arising from the amending order. The Supreme Court said that the contention ignored the interdependent nature of the amending order and the original decree. Finality of the original judgment had to await a determination in the lower court of motions to amend or alter that judgment. The interrelationship of an amending order and an original judgment necessitated review of all issues contained in both, and thus an appeal from either incorporated all issues of both for review. This was in accord with the idea that technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the court. This was distinguished from the situation in which a party appealed from one order in a series or separate and distinct orders or from one part of a divisible judgment. An amending order and an original judgment could not be viewed as separate and distinct or divisible. The notice of appeal was therefore sufficient to preserve all issues for review. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981), distinguishing St. v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945), and Sperling v. Calfee, 7 M 514, 19 P 204 (1888), in accord with J.C. Penney and Woolworth v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep 694 (1981).

Property Held Prior to Enactment Tax Payment Requirement — No Adverse Possession Established — Court Presumed Correct Despite Lack of Finding: Plaintiffs were properly denied adverse possession of yard space on the basis of nonpayment of taxes even though no finding was made regarding whether the property was held prior to enactment of the statute requiring payment of taxes to establish adverse possession. The District Court's judgment is presumed correct, and the Supreme Court will draw every legitimate inference to support that presumption. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Involuntary Commitment — Mootness — Issues Not Raised in District Court: Where, after a brief interview with a mental health counselor-therapist, the appellant was involuntarily committed to a state mental hospital for a period of 3 months and then challenged the commitment in the District Court, the appellant's appeal would not be dismissed even though the appellant had been released prior to submission of the appeal. The important constitutional issues raised by the appellant were not rendered moot by his release because other persons would be involuntarily committed for 3 months of evaluation and testing. This time period renders a timely appeal impossible under the current rules of appellate procedure. Nor would the appeal be dismissed because of the appellant's failure to raise the constitutional issues in the District Court since the Supreme Court reserves to itself the power to examine constitutional issues that involve broad public concerns to avoid future litigation on a point of law. In re N.B., 190 M 319, 620 P2d 1228, 37 St. Rep. 2031 (1980), followed in In re Mental Health of R.M., 270 M 40, 889 P2d 1201, 52 St. Rep. 68 (1995). See also Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987), and In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Military Pension as Marital Property — Previous Ruling Requiring Remand: Where, following entry of the court's order dissolving the marriage of the appellant and respondent, who was eligible for retirement under a military pension plan, but before the parties filed their appellate briefs, the Supreme Court held in In re Marriage of Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980), that a military pension is marital property to be considered as part of the marital estate, the appellant's case had to be remanded to the District Court for additional findings of fact. Because of the many factors that could be affected by inclusion of the pension in the marital estate, the Supreme Court should not fashion a formula for disposition of the pension until the District Court has done so. Ebert v. Ebert, 189 M 477, 616 P2d 379, 37 St. Rep. 1674 (1980).

Failure to Regulate Discovery as Grounds for Reversal: Massaro failed to respond to written interrogatories, a request to produce documents, and requests for admissions, although he asked for additional time and his counsel gave assurance that a response would be forthcoming. Dunham did not move for an order compelling discovery but at trial objected to and sought restriction of certain expected proof that he had not had an opportunity to inspect. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the District Court because it failed to regulate the discovery process and accorded an unfair advantage to Massaro. Massaro v. Dunham, 184 M 400, 603 P2d 249 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Deichl, 239 M 425, 781 P2d 254, 46 St. Rep. 1801 (1989).

Clerk's Affidavit Not Acceptable as to Variant Date of Service: A District Court Clerk's affidavit should not be accepted to prove that service was made on a date other than the date shown on the certificate of mailing on the notice of entry of judgment because the affidavit is not part of the record on appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Correction of Erroneous Judgment: Case would be remanded to District Court for purpose of amending, by incorporating appropriate terms, a judgment which omitted defaulting codefendant who was jointly and severally liable on obligation. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

Denial of Change of Venue: Specification of error arising from trial court's order denying motion for change of venue was not properly before Supreme Court because timely appeal was not made from order as required by rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

SCOPE OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Counsel's Act or Omission Not Considered Trial Strategy Reviewable on Direct Appeal: Lucero contended that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because his attorney did not adequately explain the nature and terms of the state's plea bargain offer. Applying the Strickland test for ineffective assistance claims, the Supreme Court noted that before an ineffective assistance claim will be considered on direct appeal, the record must adequately document the reason why counsel acted in a particular manner, and if the record does not supply the reason, the claim is more appropriately raised in a petition for postconviction relief. However, the claimed act or omission in this case was not considered trial strategy because counsel's communication of the oral plea offer to Lucero was obligatory, not strategic. Thus, the question was not why counsel acted in a particular manner but whether counsel acted and, if so, whether counsel acted adequately, and review of an obligatory action may be reviewed on direct appeal. Lucero was fully informed of the offer and chose to go to trial anyway. Counsel's conduct in communicating the plea offer did not fall below the standard of reasonable representation,. Lucero's claim failed to meet the first prong of the Strickland test and was properly denied. St. v. Lucero, 2004 MT 248, 323 M 42, 97 P3d 1106 (2004). See also Hans v. St., 283 M 379, 942 P2d 674 (1997), St. v. Harris, 2001 MT 231, 306 M 525, 36 P3d 372 (2001), and St. v. Jefferson, 2003 MT 90, 315 M 146, 69 P3d 641 (2003).

Repealed Statute Regarding Sale or Lease of School Trust Lands to School Districts — No Justiciable Controversy or Action Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Former 20-6-621(4) allowed the Board of Land Commissioners to sell, for appraised value, or to lease, for $1 a year, school trust lands to a school district. The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation stipulated that the provision was unconstitutional because it made state lands available for less than full market value. The District Court agreed, noting that leasing school trust lands to some school districts would favor only some of the beneficiaries and not the school trust as a whole. The Legislature concurred and repealed the subsection in 1999. Plaintiff subsequently sued the Department, the Board, and the state, contending that the Department unlawfully determined that the provision was unconstitutional and failed to defend the constitutionality of the provision. The state moved to dismiss the complaint on grounds that no justiciable controversy existed and that the complaint alleged no cause of action upon which relief could be granted. The District Court granted summary judgment for the state, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Any determination that the Department exceeded its authority would have had no bearing on the existing rights or interests at issue, and a judgment granting the relief sought would not have effectively operated to resolve any issue in the case. Thus, there was no justiciable case or controversy, and the claim was properly dismissed. Advocates for Educ., Inc. v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2004 MT 230, 322 M 429, 97 P3d 553 (2004), following Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Billings, 2003 MT 332, 318 M 862, 80 P3d 1247 (2003).

No Appellate Review of Trial Court's Refusal to Allow Expert Testimony Absent Contemporaneous Objection: During Olsen's arson trial, Olsen sought to introduce testimony from a chemical engineer who had concluded that a faulty junction box was the cause of the fire. After voir dire to determine the engineer's qualifications to testify, the District Court granted the state's motion to exclude the engineer's testimony on grounds that he lacked the necessary expertise to testify on the subject of forensic electrical engineering. Olsen made no offer of proof regarding the witness's qualifications to testify or the substance of the testimony, nor did Olsen object to the refusal to allow the testimony. Nevertheless, on appeal, Olsen contended that the trial court erred in disallowing the testimony. The Supreme Court held that Olsen's failure to make a contemporaneous objection at trial constituted waiver of the objection, so the issue was not subject to appellate review. St. v. Olsen, 2004 MT 158, 322 M 1, 92 P3d 1204 (2004).

Issues Subsumed in First Appeal Res Judicata on Second Appeal: In a noncite opinion (St. v. Kallowat, 2000 MT 354N), the Supreme Court affirmed defendant's Sanders County convictions for felony DUI, driving with a suspended or revoked license, and felony bail-jumping. Kallowat's petition for postconviction relief was denied, and Kallowat appealed. The issue decided in the first appeal was whether the arresting officer had probable cause, given that the officer was a prior felon. The Supreme Court held that even if the officer's employment status was questionable, he still had probable cause to make the arrest as a private citizen. Kallowat devoted most of the motion for postconviction relief reiterating the same arguments, and because the postconviction arguments were subsumed in the issues considered in the first appeal, the issue was res judicata and the Supreme Court declined further consideration. Kallowat v. St., 2004 MT 152, 321 M 501, 92 P3d 1176 (2004).

Preservation of Right to Argue Sufficient Evidence of Negligence on Appeal From Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found for the plaintiffs. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that the domestic violence statutes did not trigger mandatory legal duties upon the Sheriff regarding arrest and seizure. On appeal, the Sheriff argued that because plaintiffs did not specifically appeal from the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violations of the arrest and weapon seizure provisions of the domestic violence law were negligence per se, plaintiffs could not argue on appeal that evidence that the statutes were violated supported the verdict. The Supreme Court examined the definitions of common-law negligence and negligence per se, noting that the jury was given the full panoply of instructions on common-law negligence and that despite the fact that negligence per se instructions were not given, plaintiffs nevertheless argued that violation of the statutes was evidence of negligence. Pursuant to Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329 (1986), even if a violation of a statute does not constitute negligence per se, the violation may nonetheless be considered as evidence of negligence. Because plaintiffs appealed from the judgment as a matter of law, they preserved their right to argue on appeal that the jury had before it sufficient evidence of negligence. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Standard of Review of Family Law Contempt Decisions: Because contempt is intended as a discretionary power necessary to enforce the dignity and authority of the court, in a family law matter, the Supreme Court will review the findings and decision not to hold a party in contempt for a blatant abuse of discretion. In the present case, the husband was essentially in compliance with previous orders regarding payment of child support, so the District Court's dismissal of contempt charges was not a blatant abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Winters, 2004 MT 82, 320 M 459, 87 P3d 1005 (2004), following In re Marriage of Baer, 1998 MT 29, 287 M 322, 954 P2d 1125 (1998).

Limited Scope of Supreme Court Review of Jury Verdict: The Supreme Court's scope of review of a jury verdict is very limited, and the court will not reverse a jury verdict that is supported by substantial credible evidence. It is within the province of the jury to determine the weight and credibility afforded to the evidence, and it is not the court's function to agree or disagree with the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court will view evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004). See also Magart v. Schank, 2000 MT 279, 302 M 151, 13 P3d 390 (2000), and Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Standard of Review of Refusal to Issue Proposed Jury Instruction: The standard of review of a District Court's refusal to issue a proposed jury instruction is whether the court abused its discretion. In reviewing for abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court does not determine whether it agrees with the District Court, but rather whether the District Court abused its discretion by acting arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or by exceeding the bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004). See also Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778 (2000), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000).

Submission of Written Motions Regarding Enforceability of Oral Marital Separation Agreement Sufficient to Preserve Issue for Appeal: The parties' oral separation agreement was read into the record but not reduced to writing before the wife moved out of state. The wife moved the District Court to enforce the oral agreement, but because 40-4-201 requires a written agreement for enforcement, the court declined and instead held a hearing on the merits. The wife claimed error in the refusal to enforce the oral agreement, but the husband contended that the issue was not preserved for appeal because the wife did not raise the issue at the hearing. The Supreme Court disagreed. The wife's written motions regarding enforceability and the District Court's refusal to enforce the oral agreement were sufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. In re Marriage of Killpack, 2004 MT 55, 320 M 186, 87 P3d 393 (2004).

Standard of Review of Motion In Limine: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court's grant or denial of a motion in limine for an abuse of discretion. A District Court abuses its discretion when it acts arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason, resulting in substantial injustice. St. v. Brasda, 2003 MT 374, 319 M 146, 82 P3d 922 (2003).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of Injunction — Manifest Abuse of Discretion: For more than 100 years, the Supreme Court has applied two different standards of review when an injunction has been granted or denied. The first standard, applied in Nelson v. O'Neal, 1 M 284 (1871), was an abuse of discretion standard. Later, in Craver v. Stapp, 26 M 314, 67 P 937 (1902), a manifest abuse of discretion standard was introduced. To rectify the disparity, the Supreme Court decided that the high degree of discretion vested in District Courts to maintain the status quo through injunctive relief warranted application of the more appropriate deferential manifest abuse of discretion standard. A manifest abuse of discretion is one that is obvious, evident, or unmistakable. Nelson and any other cases that did not apply the manifest abuse standard were overruled to the extent of their inconsistency with this holding. Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Standard of Review of Motion to Suppress Statements: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court's ruling on a motion to suppress to determine whether the District Court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether its interpretation and application of the law are correct. A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if it is not supported by substantial evidence, if the District Court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, or if the Supreme Court has a definite or firm conviction that the District Court has committed a mistake. St. v. Reavley, 2003 MT 298, 318 M 150, 79 P3d 270 (2003).

Standard of Review of Contractual Stipulated Damages Provision — Enforceable Liquidated Damages Versus Unenforceable Penalty: Whether a stipulated damages provision in a contract constitutes enforceable liquidated damages or an unenforceable penalty is a question of law, and if the underlying facts are not in dispute, the Supreme Court will review a determination of this conclusion of law for correctness. Arrowhead School District No. 75 v. Klyap, 2003 MT 294, 318 M 103, 79 P3d 250 (2003). See also Lake River Corp. v. Carborundum Co., 769 F2d 1284 (7th Cir. 1985).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict in Criminal Case: The Supreme Court reviews a denial of a motion for a directed verdict in a criminal case to determine whether, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. The decision is within the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion. Helena v. Kortum, 2003 MT 290, 318 M 77, 78 P3d 882 (2003), following St. v. Landis, 2002 MT 45, 308 M 354, 43 P3d 298 (2002).

Appellate Mediation Rule Mandatory and Self-Executing in Actions for Money Damages: Plaintiff sued for money damages, and the District Court issued an order on motion for a change of venue. Plaintiff's notice of appeal from that order stated that the appeal was subject to mediation required under Rule 54, M.R.App.P. Nevertheless, 5 days later, plaintiff filed an unopposed motion to dispense with mediation. The Supreme Court dismissed the motion to dispense with mediation and ordered mediation. It is the nature of the underlying action, not the type of order or judgment on appeal, that determines whether the appeal is subject to mediation under Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and because the underlying action sought money damages, which is clearly within the rule, mediation was mandatory. Rule 54, M.R.App.P., is self-executing, and the Supreme Court will not entertain motion practices on the rule. Liang v. Lai, 2003 MT 281, 317 M 524, 78 P3d 1212 (2003), following Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000).

Standard of Review of Evidentiary Rulings: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court's evidentiary rulings for an abuse of the lower court's broad discretion, and absent a showing of an abuse of discretion, the lower court will not be overruled. Sufficiency of evidence to support a jury verdict is reviewed to determine whether, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. St. v. Runs Above, 2003 MT 181, 316 M 421, 73 P3d 161 (2003). See also St. v. Stevens, 2002 MT 181, 311 M 52, 53 P3d 356 (2002), and St. v. Bingman, 2002 MT 350, 313 M 376, 61 P3d 153 (2002).

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990).

Acquiescence in Assessment of Interest on Unpaid Portion of Criminal Fine — Waiver of Right to Appeal: As part of a plea agreement on a felony drug charge, Micklon was fined $55,000. After hearing testimony on Micklon's financial status, the sentencing court agreed to allow five annual payments of $11,000, but assessed interest at 10% a year on the unpaid balance. Micklon appealed the interest charges on grounds that there was no statutory authority for requiring interest on a criminal fine. The state responded that appeal was waived by Micklon's failure to object to the interest provisions at the time of sentencing. The Supreme Court recognized that a defendant often must remain silent even in the face of invalid conditions to guard against the possibility that the sentencing court may forego a more lenient sentence if the defendant objects to one of the conditions, and that in those circumstances a defendant's failure to object does not necessarily constitute a waiver of the right to appeal. However, during sentencing Micklon did not remain silent, but in fact affirmatively agreed to inclusion of the interest condition in the sentence. Without addressing the legality of interest charges, the Supreme Court concluded that Micklon waived the right to appeal the issue and affirmed the sentencing court's assessment of interest on the unpaid portion of Micklon's criminal fine. St. v. Micklon, 2003 MT 45, 314 M 291, 65 P3d 559 (2003).

Voluntariness of Confession — Totality of Circumstances: When a defendant moves to suppress a confession or admission on grounds that it was given involuntarily, the prosecution must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that it was voluntary. On appeal, the Supreme Court will review denial of a suppression motion to determine whether findings of fact were clearly erroneous and correctly applied as a matter of law. A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if: (1) it is not supported by substantial evidence, which must be more than a scintilla of evidence but may be less than a preponderance of the evidence; (2) the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; or (3) the Supreme Court has a definite or firm conviction that a mistake was made. When a determination of voluntariness depends on the credibility of witnesses, the Supreme Court will defer to the trial court. The emphasis in determining voluntariness is on whether the confession was the product of free choice or compulsion, which must take into account the totality of the circumstances, including the defendant's age and education, whether the defendant was advised of Miranda rights, the defendant's prior experience with the criminal justice system and police interrogation, the defendant's background, experience, demeanor, coherence, articulateness, and capacity to make full use of faculties, the length and method of interrogation, and whether the confession or admission was extracted through force, violence, or improper influence or by direct or implied promises. If the confession or admission was involuntary, its use violates self-incrimination and due process. Here, the Supreme Court considered the totality of the circumstances and found substantial credible evidence that Hoffman's confession was voluntary. St. v. Hoffman, 2003 MT 26, 314 M 155, 64 P3d 1013 (2003).

Standard of Review of Denial of Petition for Postconviction Relief: The correct standard of review of a District Court's denial of a petition for postconviction relief is whether the court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether its conclusions of law are correct. A different standard of review, namely whether substantial evidence supports the findings and conclusions of the District Court, as set out in St. v. Coates, 241 M 331, 786 P2d 1182 (1990), Walker v. St., 261 M 1, 862 P2d 1 (1993), St. v. Moorman, 279 M 330, 928 P2d 145 (1996), and similar cases, is overruled. Porter v. St., 2002 MT 319, 313 M 149, 60 P3d 951 (2002), following St. v. Wright, 2001 MT 282, 307 M 349, 42 P3d 753 (2001).

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P., precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of Rule 17, M.R.App.P. Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

De Novo Review of Excised Search Warrant Application by Supreme Court — Standard of Review: Supreme Court review of an application for a search warrant grants great deference to the issuing magistrate's determination that probable cause existed for issuing the warrant. However, when information has been excised from an application after the fact, that deference will not be paid to the magistrate's probable cause determination and the court will review the excised application de novo to determine whether probable cause supported the issuance of the search warrant. The Supreme Court's standard of review has often been articulated as whether the magistrate had a substantial basis to issue the search warrant, while the court's conclusions tended to be focused on whether sufficient probable cause existed. For purposes of review, the phrase "substantial basis for probable cause" has the same meaning as the phrase "sufficient probable cause". St. v. St. Marks, 2002 MT 285, 312 M 468, 59 P3d 1113 (2002). See also St. v. Kuneff, 1998 MT 287, 291 M 474, 970 P2d 556 (1998).

Supreme Court Decision Binding — Relitigation of Same Issues on Subsequent Appeal Inappropriate: When a decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court on a particular issue between the same parties in the same case, whether the decision is right or wrong, that decision is binding on the parties and the courts and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. When a case is reversed and remanded, the trial court may not ignore the mandate and opinion of the reviewing court, but must proceed in conformity with the views expressed by the appellate court. In the present case, the District Court's amended conclusion was in conformity with the Supreme Court's decision in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818 (1999), and with the law of the case, and the District Court did not exceed its jurisdiction in its amended conclusions regarding Grenfell's claim for unlawful detainer or in addressing Grenfell's other claims in the original complaint. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002).

Unsupported and Incomprehensible Issues Raised by Pro Se Appellant Dismissed: The wife appealed from a marital property distribution by filing a pro se brief that alluded to libelous conduct, unscrupulous activity regarding trial documents, false testimony, judicial bias, and erroneous calculation of marital assets. The Supreme Court found that the brief contained general contentions of impropriety, but no citations to the record or supporting legal authority. Although the Supreme Court has shown some willingness to make accommodations for pro se parties by relaxing technical requirements that do not impact fundamental bases for appeal, in this case, the appeal was dismissed because of an utter failure to comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure by filing a brief that could be comprehended by the court and realistically responded to by the opposing party. In re Marriage of McMahon, 2002 MT 198, 311 M 175, 53 P3d 1266 (2002).

Failure to Properly Raise Issue in Opening Appellate Brief — Case Dismissed: In five issues presented for appeal, the appellant pro se set forth little or no argument and no citations in support of the argument in the opening brief. Instead, after setting forth the issue, the appellant simply stated that the issue was presented at face value without argument. Pursuant to Rule 23(a), M.R.App.P., in order for an appellant to properly raise an issue in an opening brief, the appellant's contentions must be listed as to the issues presented and the reasons for presenting the arguments, along with citation to the authorities relied upon. The Supreme Court will not consider unsupported issues or arguments, conduct legal research on an appellant's behalf, guess an appellant's precise position, or develop legal analysis in support of an appellant's position. The opening brief violated the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure and was therefore dismissed. In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Standard of Review for Statutes Applicable to Administrative Rules — Rules of Statutory Construction Inapplicable Absent Ambiguity in Statute or Rule — Deference Afforded Longstanding Agency Interpretation of Administrative Rule: The Supreme Court generally applies the same principles in construing administrative rules as it applies to statutes. If the plain meaning of a statute or rule can be determined from the language used, the court is not at liberty to add or detract from the language, and absent ambiguity in the language, the court may not consider legislative history or other means of statutory construction. When an agency's interpretation of an administrative rule or statute has stood unchallenged for a considerable length of time, it will be regarded as having great importance in arriving at the proper construction. However, even when a particular meaning has been ascribed to a statute by an agency through a long and continuous course of consistent interpretation, that interpretation will be afforded respectful consideration but is still not binding on the courts. Glendive Medical Center, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 131, 310 M 156, 49 P3d 560 (2002).

Standard of Appellate Review of Administrative Decision in Contested Case: When reviewing a District Court order affirming or reversing an administrative decision in a contested case, the Supreme Court employs the same standard applied by the District Court to determine whether the findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether the agency correctly interpreted the law. O'Neill v. Dept. of Revenue, 2002 MT 130, 310 M 148, 49 P3d 43 (2002), followed in Ostergren v. Dept. of Revenue, 2004 MT 30, 319 M 405, 85 P3d 738 (2004). See also Glendive Medical Center, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 131, 310 M 156, 49 P3d 560 (2002).

Issue of Counsel's Effective Use of Peremptory Juror Challenges More Appropriate When Raised as Petition for Postconviction Relief Rather Than on Direct Appeal When Record Silent: Russell was convicted of attempted deliberate homicide and appealed claiming ineffective assistance of counsel during jury selection. Russell contended that counsel failed to challenge for cause a relative of the victim and used two peremptory challenges to strike jurors who were outside the jury pool. Under the Strickland test for ineffective assistance of counsel, challenged actions of counsel are presumed to be matters of trial strategy and a silent record cannot rebut the strong presumption that counsel rendered adequate assistance and made all significant decisions in the exercise of reasonable professional judgment. Pursuant to St. v. St. John, 2001 MT 1, 304 M 47, 15 P3d 970 (2001), when the record does not illuminate the basis for the challenged acts or omissions of counsel, a claim of ineffective assistance is more appropriately raised in a petition for postconviction relief so that a supplemental record may be made. Here, the record was silent as to why Russell's counsel acted or failed to act regarding the juror challenges. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to discuss the issue on direct appeal. St. v. Russell, 2001 MT 278, 307 M 322, 37 P3d 678 (2001).

Standard of Review of District Court Jurisdictional Questions: Whether a District Court has jurisdiction to rule on a matter is a question of law that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court had authority to act. A court exceeds jurisdiction through acts that exceed the defined power of the court, whether the power is defined by constitutional provisions, express statutes, or court rules. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), following Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389 (2000), and Gen. Constructors, Inc. v. Chewculator, Inc., 2001 MT 54, 304 M 319, 21 P3d 604 (2001).

Claims Raised on Direct Appeal Barred by Statute or Res Judicata on Petition for Postconviction Relief: Dawson was convicted of robbery, four counts of aggravated kidnapping, and three counts of deliberate homicide and sentenced to death for each of three counts of aggravated kidnapping that resulted in the death of the victim. His conviction was appealed and affirmed (St. v. Dawson, 233 M 345, 761 P2d 352 (1988)). Dawson filed for postconviction relief, alleging 30 separate grounds for relief, but all except one claim, ineffective assistance of counsel, were summarily dismissed. Although res judicata prevents claims raised on appeal from being raised again in a petition for postconviction relief, Dawson argued that three of his claims for postconviction relief could not have been raised on direct appeal because they required evidence not found in the record and thus should not have been subject to summary judgment. The District Court concluded that the issues could have been raised on direct appeal and were not preserved through objection at trial and so were barred by res judicata and 46-21-105. The Supreme Court examined all three of Dawson's claims before affirming that 46-21-105 was properly applied to two of the claims and that no prejudice resulted from the application of res judicata to the third. Lastly, Dawson raised Kills On Top v. St., 279 M 384, 928 P2d 182 (1996), as grounds for reconsideration of several other claims based on serving the "ends of justice". The Supreme Court felt no compulsion to reconsider any of Dawson's claims to serve those ends because the claims were barred by res judicata. Dawson v. St., 2000 MT 219, 301 M 135, 10 P3d 49, 57 St. Rep. 883 (2000).

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Lack of Meritorious Argument on Appeal of Summary Judgment: Kinsey-Cartwright and Burleson had a dispute over an easement across Kinsey-Cartwright's property. Burleson took his attorney, Brower, to investigate the disputed easement, during which time a confrontation occurred, resulting in a complaint against Brower for assault and trespass. The District Court granted Brower's request for summary judgment, and Kinsey-Cartwright appealed. With the exception of four sentences in her reply brief, Kinsey-Cartwright's entire argument was devoted to arguing that no easement burdened her land. However, the appeal was related to the complaint of assault and trespass, not the validity of an easement. The four sentences were simply a collection of conclusions and contained no discussion of the law relating to trespass or assault, no citation to legal authority or to the record, and no application of the law to the facts. It is not the obligation of the Supreme Court to formulate arguments or locate authorities for parties who appeal. Thus, absent any meritorious argument to consider on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court award of summary judgment. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000). See also St. v. Blackcrow, 1999 MT 44, 293 M 374, 975 P2d 1253 (1999).

Offer of Proof Necessary to Enable Supreme Court Review of Ruling on Admissibility of Evidence: At Raugust's trial, he attempted to question witnesses regarding his prearrest statements, but the prosecution objected on grounds of hearsay and the trial court sustained the objections. On appeal, Raugust argued that the statements were offered to prove his state of mind rather than for the truth of the matter asserted and that he was thus denied the opportunity to present a defense because of the exclusion of evidence reflecting a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. However, when an objection to evidence is sustained and the answer of a witness is not apparent, an offer of proof is necessary to enable the Supreme Court to review the ruling. Raugust made no offer of proof or argument at trial with respect to why he felt the objection should be overruled and therefore waived his argument on appeal by failing to make an offer of proof once the objections were sustained. St. v. Raugust, 2000 MT 146, 300 M 54, 3 P3d 115, 57 St. Rep. 570 (2000). See also St. v. Jennings, 96 M 80, 28 P2d 448 (1934).

Failure to Object to Conduct of Psychological Evaluation or to Continuation of Sentencing Hearing — Waiver of Right to Consideration on Appeal: Osterloth was convicted of felony sexual assault and was required to undergo a sexual offender evaluation by a therapist of his choice at county expense. His scheduled sentencing was continued to allow the evaluation. On appeal, Osterloth contended that the District Court erred by sentencing him without an evaluation prepared by a qualified therapist, pursuant to 46-18-111, and by continuing sentencing instead of conducting a sentencing hearing without delay, as required in 46-18-115. The Supreme Court noted that under 46-20-104, it is precluded from considering an alleged error unless a timely objection was made or the criteria of 46-20-701 are met. Osterloth did not object to the evaluation being conducted by his own evaluator or to the sentencing continuation, nor did he assert that he could satisfy any of the requirements of 46-20-701. Thus, Osterloth waived the right to have the Supreme Court consider these alleged errors on appeal. St. v. Osterloth, 2000 MT 129, 299 M 517, 1 P3d 946, 57 St. Rep. 533 (2000).

Clarification of Family Law Exception to Supreme Court Review of District Court Contempt Orders — When Writ of Certiorari Required — Ancillary Order Exception: Seeking to narrow and clarify the judicially created family law exception to the writ of certiorari requirement of 3-1-523 that was expressly extended to dissolution of marriage contempt proceedings in In re Marriage of Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912 (1984), and In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988), and to balance the exception with the statute and longstanding Montana case law generally allowing no direct appeal from a contempt order unless the writ is granted, the Supreme Court concluded that it would be poor public policy to create circumstances whereby a District Court's contempt powers are diminished in any manner by one party's ability to file a direct appeal that in turn frivolously and needlessly delays that party's compliance with the lower court's judgments and orders. To cover contentious disputes that arise in family law, the court created the ancillary order exception, establishing that the family law direct appeal exception applies only when the judgment appealed from includes an ancillary order, meaning an order that determines the rights of the parties as a result of the contemptuous conduct—all under one judgment, that affects the substantial rights of the parties. The ancillary order may result from the proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction, in which case a writ of certiorari would necessarily be denied. However, a lone contempt order, regardless of the underlying law of the case, cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on direct appeal. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), followed in In re Marriage of DeLude, 2000 MT 75, 299 M 123, 999 P2d 306, 57 St. Rep. 331 (2000). See also State ex rel. Zosel v. District Court, 56 M 578, 185 P 1112 (1919), and Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

Standard for Review of Family Law Contempt Orders — Jurisdiction and Evidence — Family Law Exception Clarified: The standard for review of contempt orders, pursuant to the granting of a writ of certiorari, is, first, to determine whether the court that found contempt acted within its jurisdiction. For a court to have acted within its jurisdiction: (1) it must have cognizance of the subject matter; (2) it must have presence of the proper parties; and (3) its action must be invoked by proper pleadings and the judgment must be within the issues raised. A court lacks or exceeds jurisdiction by any act that exceeds the defined power of the court, whether that power is defined by constitutional provision, statute, or court rule or under the doctrine of stare decisis. The second part of the standard for review of contempt orders is to determine whether substantial evidence exists to support the court's findings. The family law exception relevant to review on direct appeal of a District Court judgment and orders made in cases of contempt is subject to the same standard of review. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), following State ex rel. Porter v. First Judicial District, 123 M 447, 215 P2d 279 (1950), and Kauffman v. District Court, 1998 MT 239, 291 M 122, 966 P2d 715, 55 St. Rep. 1001 (1998), and followed in In re Marriage of Coward, 2000 MT 128, 300 M 1, 2 P3d 822, 57 St. Rep. 531 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993).

Proper Cross-Appeal of Adverse District Court Decision Regarding City Court Denial of Motion for Continuance: The established doctrine governing appeals to all appellate courts is that a party must cross-appeal if the party seeks to change any part of the judgment below. Further, the Montana Supreme Court follows the rule that it has jurisdiction only over those issues addressed in the appeal or in a properly filed cross-appeal, not jurisdiction over the entire case. Conversely, it is also the general rule that a cross-appeal is not necessary to enable a prevailing party to defend its judgment on any ground properly raised below, whether or not that ground was relied upon, rejected, or even considered by the court below. The proper way for a respondent to raise an issue before the Supreme Court, if the issue would support the decision below and is an issue that the court below did not address because it found another issue to be dispositive, is to assert the issue in the brief to the Supreme Court and fully discuss it. If a respondent does not assert and fully discuss the issue, the Supreme Court may in its discretion: (1) review the issue itself; (2) decide that the respondent has waived the right to review of the issue; or (3) remand to the court below for a decision on the issue. Here, issues raised by respondent that the District Court declined to address, having found another issue dispositive, undoubtedly supported the District Court's decision reversing the City Court's judgment. Thus, because the respondent sufficiently asserted the issues and both parties fully briefed each one, the Supreme Court concluded that the respondent had properly cross-appealed and that it was proper to review the respondent's issues on appeal. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000), following In Interest of Jamie L., 493 NW 2d 56 (Wis. 1992). See also Wash. v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 US 463, 58 L Ed 2d 740, 99 S Ct 740 (1979).

Motion In Limine to Prevent In-Court Identification Considered Motion to Suppress — Standard of Review: A motion in limine to prevent an in-court identification is essentially a motion to suppress, and the standard of review of a District Court's denial of a motion to suppress is whether the court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether the findings were correctly applied as a matter of law. St. v. Clark, 2000 MT 40, 298 M 300, 997 P2d 107, 57 St. Rep. 185 (2000).

Speculative Future Use of Bridge Easement Not Within Scope of Appeal — Cross-Appeal Denied: The District Court defined the scope and extent of a bridge easement, limiting what use could be made of the bridge based on use during the prescriptive period. Appellants cross-appealed, requesting the Supreme Court to direct an amendment to the lower court judgment specifying what future uses might be permitted within the scope of the adjudicated easement. The Supreme Court held that to foreclose speculative future uses would overreach its role in considering whether the District Court erred in its decision and declined to do so. Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

California Rule Regarding Certain Issues Raised for First Time on Appeal Rejected: The corporate appellant argued that even if it was arguing for the first time on appeal that it had not transacted business in this state, that issue fell within the general exception to the rule adopted by California courts. The California cases provided that a court may address an issue raised for the first time on appeal when the facts are not disputed and the issue merely raises a new question of law. The Supreme Court held that it would not adopt the California approach and declined to review the issue raised by the appellant for the first time on appeal. Unified Indus., Inc. v. Easley, 1998 MT 145, 289 M 255, 961 P2d 100, 55 St. Rep. 574 (1998), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Review of Board of Adjustment Decision — Scope Broader Than General: A District Court's scope of review upon a writ of certiorari ordinarily cannot be extended further than to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer has regularly acted within its authority. However, under 76-2-327, a District Court has a broader scope of review of an appeal from a decision by the Board of Adjustment. The court may hold a hearing and reverse, modify, or affirm a Board decision. In reviewing a District Court decision involving the exercise of the statutory option to take additional evidence, the standard applied by the Supreme Court is whether the District Court abused its discretion and whether the decision was supported by substantial evidence. In re Petition of Sutey Oil Co., Inc. v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County Planning Bd., 1998 MT 127, 289 M 99, 959 P2d 496, 55 St. Rep. 499 (1998). See also Lambros v. Bd. of Adjustment, 153 M 20, 452 P2d 398 (1969), Cutone v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 187 M 515, 610 P2d 691 (1980), and Whistler v. Burlington N. RR Co., 228 M 150, 741 P2d 422 (1987).

Decision Regarding Preindictment Delay as Constitutional Question: A speedy trial analysis, which focuses on postindictment delay, involves an inquiry similar to that which the Supreme Court engages in when analyzing preindictment delay. Therefore, on appeal, the Supreme Court will review a District Court decision regarding preindictment delay as a question of constitutional law. The District Court's conclusions of law are reviewed to determine whether its interpretation of the law is correct. St. v. Taylor, 1998 MT 121, 289 M 63, 960 P2d 773, 55 St. Rep. 481 (1998). However, see St. v. Goltz, 197 M 361, 642 P2d 1079 (1982), in which the Supreme Court held that speedy trial guarantees do not extend to the period prior to formal accusation or arrest.

Review of Record for Substantial, Not Contrary, Evidence: When the Supreme Court reviews the record of a trial court to determine whether the trial court's findings are supported by substantial evidence, the review is a determination of whether there is substantial evidence to support the trial court's decision, not whether evidence was presented that might have supported contrary findings. St. v. Mont. Power Co., 284 M 59, 943 P2d 1251, 54 St. Rep. 747 (1997), following Buckentin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 265 M 518, 878 P2d 262 (1994).

Search Warrant Issued by Unqualified Substitute Judge Invalid — Supervisory Control Necessary to Preclude Further Proceedings: In a case in which a search warrant issued by a previously qualified but legally unauthorized substitute judge was held to be void ab initio, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control and assumed jurisdiction in order to forestall further needless and expensive litigation. The court determined that it would be fundamentally unfair and prejudicial, not to mention a waste of time and a waste of the limited resources of the court and counsel, to proceed further. Potter v. District Court, 266 M 384, 880 P2d 1319, 51 St. Rep. 853 (1994).

Agreement by County Commission to Pay Justice's Court Expenses — Failure to Object — Appeal Precluded: A Justice of the Peace requested approval of funds from the County Commission for employment of a temporary clerical assistant. The County Commission initially refused to approve the funds. The claim was then submitted for certification pursuant to Browman v. Wood, 168 M 341, 543 P2d 184 (1975), and was subsequently certified as an actual and necessary expense incurred in the performance of actual duties of the Justice's Court. When the bill was still not paid, the Justice of the Peace filed a petition for a contempt order against the County Commissioners for failure to pay the certified claim. The order was amended to include attorney fees. The County Commission then agreed to pay the claim and did not oppose the motion to amend, nor did it file a responsive brief. However, it later alleged error. The Supreme Court held that the County Commission waived the right to appeal by agreeing to pay the claim and then failing to object to the District Court order to pay the claim and taking no further action to challenge the claim. In re Certain Justice Court Expenses, 264 M 510, 872 P2d 795, 51 St. Rep. 372 (1994).

Appeal of Judgment Involving Declaratory Judgment and Injunction: Defendant argued that an appeal that concerned declaratory judgment was premature because plaintiff did not seek Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), certification of the court's order. However, because plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment involved both the declaratory judgment and an injunction issue and because plaintiff validly exercised the right to appeal the court's denial of the request for an injunction, the appeal was not considered premature and the entire case was subject to review by the Supreme Court. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Objection Raised in Trial Brief but Never Ruled Upon Not Preserved for Appeal: Defendant claimed it adequately preserved its objection by raising the issue of speculative damages for plaintiff's lost future profits in its trial briefs. However, at no time did defendant solicit a ruling from the trial court on the issue of speculative future damages. Mere inclusion of the issue in the trial brief did not preserve the objection for appeal. Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993).

District Court Findings in Quiet Title Action Not Clearly Erroneous — Standard of Review: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. The District Court awarded both Cowles and Sheeline 50% of the shares in the mining company. Sheeline appealed, claiming that nearly all of the District Court's 56 findings of fact were incorrect. The Supreme Court applied the three-part test for review of findings and conclusions announced in Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), followed in Aasheim v. Reum, 277 M 471, 922 P2d 1167, 53 St. Rep. 771 (1996). Using that test, the Supreme Court found that the District Court correctly concluded that: (1) the evidence showed an intent by the two founders of the mining company that each own equal shares in the company; and (2) that an attempt to transfer most of the stock to Sheeline's predecessors in interest was fraudulent and should not be enforced. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Standard of Review: When sufficiency of the evidence or elements of the offense issues are presented on appeal, the standard of review applied by the Supreme Court will be whether, after review of the evidence in a light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106, 49 St. Rep. 586 (1992), overruling the portion of St. v. Cope, 250 M 387, 819 P2d 1280 (1991), that holds that a "clearly erroneous" standard is to be applied to judge-made findings of fact on the substantive elements of a criminal offense, but leaving intact the Cope standard for review of findings of fact on other issues in criminal proceedings, distinguishing Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and followed, with regard to findings of fact regarding suppression hearing evidence, in St. v. Kaluza, 262 M 360, 865 P2d 263, 50 St. Rep. 1596 (1993). See also St. v. Riley, 252 M 469, 830 P2d 549, 49 St. Rep. 408 (1992), and St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Substantial Evidence of Negligence:

Although in conflict with defendant's version of facts, substantial evidence existed to support plaintiff's claim. It was foreseeable that a freestanding light standard could fall and injure anyone in its path and that someone could act with a minimal amount of force in a manner to intervene with the standard's stability. The Supreme Court will not retry a case simply because the jury chooses to believe one side's evidence to the exclusion of the other and will not disturb a jury's negligence findings unless the results are inherently impossible to believe. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

In reviewing the trial of a suit for damages suffered in a car accident, the Supreme Court refused to overturn a jury verdict of no negligence by respondent when the evidence indicated the following: (1) the respondent was traveling at a reasonable rate of speed; (2) respondent's headlamps were on and aimed properly; and (3) appellant and his companion were walking on the road, facing away from traffic, and wearing dark clothes on a dark night. Kukuchka v. Ziemet, 219 M 155, 710 P2d 1361, 42 St. Rep. 1916 (1985).

Evidence of Adequate Medical Care — Jury Finding of Lack of Medical Malpractice Affirmed: On appeal from judgment based on a jury verdict finding no medical malpractice for injuries sustained by a premature infant, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding sufficient evidence derived from expert testimony to establish a reasonable basis for the jury conclusion that medical care met or exceeded the applicable standard of care under the circumstances. Silvis v. Hobbs, 251 M 407, 824 P2d 1013, 49 St. Rep. 62 (1992).

Conflicting Evidence of Existence of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing: The Supreme Court refused to set aside a jury verdict compensating an employee for his firing. The court held that while there was conflicting evidence as to whether the employer breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

Contention of Laches and Estoppel Appealable: The city built a pumphouse that was allegedly on land of another property owner. On appeal from a judgment verdict in an inverse condemnation case, the city was found to have actively contested the boundary at trial and asserted its contention of laches and estoppel. The city could appeal these issues even though it did not present any witnesses at the first bifurcated trial, which concerned only the boundary line issue. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Jury Verdict — Substantial Credible Evidence: A jury verdict will not be overturned when the record contains substantial credible evidence to support the verdict. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986), followed in Melotz v. Scheckla, 245 M 327, 801 P2d 593, 47 St. Rep. 2165 (1990). See also Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), Arnold v. Boise Cascade Corp., 259 M 259, 856 P2d 217 (1993), and Schulke v. Gemar, 264 M 184, 870 P2d 1378, 51 St. Rep. 220 (1994).

Verdict Forms — No Finding of "Plain Error": Counsel did not commit "plain error" when, in summation to the jury, he explained to the jury two verdict forms that favored his client and incidentally explained that they should use the other two verdict forms if they found for the other party. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985).

Evidence of Emancipation of Minor Child: When evidence in a URESA action indicated that the minor child lived away from the obligee but was not earning enough money to support herself, the District Court's determination that the minor child was not emancipated was not clearly erroneous. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

No Indication of Weight Trial Court Placed on Inadmissible Evidence — New Trial: In the appeal of a conviction under 61-8-401 for driving under the influence of alcohol, the Supreme Court ruled inadmissible blood test results entered into evidence by the trial court. The Supreme Court further ruled that it could not decide whether there was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant without the blood test results because the Supreme Court had no indication of the weight the trial court placed upon the test in its decision. The case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985).

District Court Findings Presumed Correct: The appellate standard for review is clear. The findings of the trial court are presumed to be correct if supported by substantial evidence. Robinson v. Schrade, 215 M 326, 697 P2d 923, 42 St. Rep. 401 (1985).

Standard of Review in Pro Se Appeal: The Supreme Court's powers of appellate review are the same whether or not a defendant appealing from a criminal conviction is represented by counsel on the appeal. St. v. Green, 212 M 20, 685 P2d 370, 41 St. Rep. 1562 (1984).

Summary Judgment Without Evidence or Jury — Broad Review: When a case is disposed of below on motion for summary judgment before a judge sitting without a jury and no testimony is taken as the facts are relatively uncontested, the scope of review is much broader than in other appeals. The Supreme Court is free to make its own examination of the entire case and reach a conclusion in accordance with its findings. Furthermore, the court will uphold the result below if it is correct, regardless of the reasons given below for the result. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984), followed in In re Estate of Pelzman, 261 M 461, 863 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1408 (1993).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086

(1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Issues Not Argued on Appeal — Issues Merged in Claims: Though not specifically argued by either side on appeal, equal protection issue was considered on appeal where it appeared to be merged in the other considerations before the Supreme Court, which included due process claims. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Review of Substantial Credible Evidence — Property Settlement — Accounting: The husband brought an action to enforce the property settlement. The wife sought modification. The property settlement provided that the wife was to provide an accounting for all sums paid. The trial judge found that the wife had made an adequate accounting. The wife testified that she made what she thought was an adequate accounting, and the husband testified that the accounting he received was not sufficient. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that it will not substitute its judgment for that of the trier of fact but rather will only consider whether substantial credible evidence supports the finding and conclusions. Those findings will not be overturned by the court unless there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against them. The court will view the evidence in a light most favorable to the prevailing party, recognizing that substantial evidence may be weak or conflicting with other evidence, yet still support the findings. The findings are affirmed since there is not a clear preponderance of evidence against the findings. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Abuse of Discretion by Trial Court: A reviewing court is never justified in substituting its discretion for that of the trial court. In determining whether the trial court abused its discretion, the question is, did the trial court act arbitrarily without the use of conscientious judgment or exceed the bounds of reason, in view of all the circumstances, ignoring recognized principles resulting in substantial injustice. Jermunson v. Jermunson, 181 M 97, 592 P2d 491 (1979).

"Plain Error": In adopting the "plain error" doctrine appellate courts have a duty to determine whether the parties before them have been denied substantial justice by the trial court, and when that has occurred they can, within sound discretion, consider whether the trial court has deprived a litigant of a fair and impartial trial, even though no objection was made to the conduct during the trial. Such was the case when appellant was denied his day in court by the trial judge's recess and failure to reconvene. Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977). See also Graham v. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank, 204 M 141, 663 P2d 320, 40 St. Rep. 726 (1983).

Amendment of Judgment From Which No Appeal Taken: The Supreme Court exercised its power to correct the judgment against one party defendant as an incident to affording another party defendant relief upon appeal. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

NEW ISSUES RAISED ON APPEAL

Use of Nontestimonial Intoxilyzer Certification Reports in DUI Trial Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses — Crawford Rule: At Carter's DUI trial, the state introduced three certification reports in order to demonstrate that an Intoxilyzer 5000 was working properly when Carter was tested. The officers who prepared the reports did not testify at trial. Carter initially contended that the reports were hearsay, but on appeal, Carter asserted that admission of the reports violated his right to confront witnesses. Although the Supreme Court will generally not address new arguments raised on appeal, the court applied the exception in Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895 (1987), in this case because of the new confrontation clause jurisprudence set out in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), which was decided while Carter's case was pending. In Crawford, the U.S. Supreme Court for the first time distinguished testimonial and nontestimonial out-of-court statements, delineating testimonial statements, at a minimum, as applying to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial as well as to police interrogations. States are allowed flexibility in the development of hearsay law when nontestimonial hearsay is at issue. In Carter's case, the state asserted that the certification reports used at Carter's trial were nontestimonial evidence because they did not fall within the core group of statements that the confrontation clause was meant to address. The Supreme Court held that the certification reports were nontestimonial in that they were not substantive evidence of a particular offense, but rather constituted foundational evidence necessary for the admission of substantive evidence. Thus, Carter's confrontation right was not implicated despite the fact that the authors were not present to testify or be confronted. The court noted that a defendant is always free to subpoena authors of such reports if the defendant's pretrial investigation reveals that the reports are erroneous or are otherwise subject to attack. Therefore, in conformance with the Crawford rule, the Supreme Court exempted the certification reports from confrontation clause scrutiny and affirmed Carter's conviction. St. v. Carter, 2005 MT 87, 326 M 427, 114 P3d 1001 (2005).

Placement of Children With Noncustodial Parent Proper — Parental Rights Not Terminated: A mother contended that her due process rights were violated when the children were adjudicated as youths in need of care and the state placed the children with their father. The Supreme Court declined to address the due process claims because they were raised for the first time on appeal, and the court affirmed the placement. The mother's parental rights were not terminated; rather, the District Court followed the statutory procedure in 41-3-438 after finding that placement with the father was in the children's best interests. The state took the necessary steps to ensure safe placement as required in the Interstate Placement of Children Compact, and the state was properly relieved of any further obligation once the concern for the children being youths in need of care was eliminated by the placement. In re A.C., T.C., & C.W., 2004 MT 320, 324 M 58, 101 P3d 761 (2004).

Failure to Request Jury Instruction on Sudden Emergency Doctrine — Appeal Precluded: Payne's son was killed while transporting an antique tractor purchased from defendants. The jury found that more than 51% of the negligence was attributable to Payne's son. Payne appealed on grounds that under the sudden emergency doctrine set out in Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983 (1986), the son was not negligent as a matter of law. Defendants argued that the sudden emergency doctrine is no longer a recognized doctrine in Montana negligence law. Without ruling on whether the doctrine is still viable, the Supreme Court dismissed the issue because Payne failed to request a jury instruction on sudden emergency, thereby failing to preserve the issue for appeal. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

Unfounded and Unpleaded Speculative Argument Not Considered for First Time on Appeal: Kallowat contended for the first time on appeal that if the jury in his DUI case had known that the arresting officer had been convicted of a felony and was employed under questionable status, the case would in all probability have had a different outcome. However, Kallowat failed to properly plead the issue as required in 46-21-104, nor was this speculative contention supported by the record. Therefore, the Supreme Court declined to address Kallowat's unsupported argument raised for the first time on appeal. Kallowat v. St., 2004 MT 152, 321 M 501, 92 P3d 1176 (2004).

Failure to Raise Double Jeopardy Objection at Settling of Jury Instructions or to Object to Verdict Form in Which Offenses Listed as Separate Counts — Appeal Precluded: Minez was convicted of both criminal possession and criminal production of dangerous drugs. On appeal, Minez argued that conviction of both offenses, which arose out of the same transaction, constituted double jeopardy. However, at trial, Minez abandoned a request for jury instructions on double jeopardy and never returned to the issue, failed to raise a double jeopardy objection at the settling of jury instructions, and did not object to the verdict form in which both offenses were listed as independent counts. Having abandoned the constitutional double jeopardy objections at trial, Minez was precluded from raising the issue on appeal, and the convictions were affirmed. St. v. Minez, 2004 MT 115, 321 M 148, 89 P3d 966 (2004).

Failure to Raise Issue of Court Bias at Trial — Consideration of Issue Precluded on Appeal — Plain Error Doctrine Inapplicable: Following conviction for felony stalking, defendant contended on appeal that there was bias against him at trial because the victim worked for the County Attorney's office where the District Court was located, so both the office and the District Court Judge should have recused themselves. However, the plain error doctrine did not apply under the limited exceptions in St. v. Finley, 276 M 126, 915 P2d 208 (1996), and because the issue was not raised at trial, the Supreme Court declined to address it for the first time on appeal. St. v. Adgerson, 2003 MT 284, 318 M 22, 78 P3d 850 (2003).

Theory of Erroneous Jury Instruction Raised for First Time on Appeal — No Plain Error: At trial, the District Court instructed the jury to view with distrust the testimony of a witness who was legally accountable for the same crime as Daniels. Daniels objected to the instruction on grounds that the witness's testimony had changed and was no longer inculpatory, so the instruction was unnecessary. On appeal, Daniels argued that the instruction violated his right to a fair trial because it could have been construed to instruct the jury to distrust his exculpatory statements given to police immediately after his arrest, having implicated the witness in those statements. The Supreme Court found no prejudicial effect in the jury instruction, and Daniels could not argue on appeal a theory of error that was changed from the theory raised in trial court.

St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 247, 317 M 331, 77 P3d 224 (2003), followed in St. v. Rinkenbach, 2003 MT 348, 318 M 499, 82 P3d 8 (2003).

Waiver of Constitutional Issues Related to No-Bond Hold by Failure to Object in Trial Court: Hendricks contended that his constitutional right to due process and the right against excessive bail were violated when he was held without bond for more than 72 hours in violation of 46-23-1012. However, there was no factual record to support the allegations, nor did Hendricks object to the asserted constitutional violations at a revocation hearing or move to dismiss the proceedings. Failure to adequately raise the issue in District Court and to create a factual record constituted a waiver of objection and precluded review of the issue on appeal. Further, Hendricks' assertion of error in the District Court's reliance on hearsay testimony at the revocation hearing failed on the same grounds. St. v. Hendricks, 2003 MT 163, 316 M 296, 71 P3d 1212 (2003), following St. v. Azure, 2002 MT 22, 308 M 201, 41 P3d 899 (2002).

No Consideration on Appeal of Objection to Testimony Not Raised at Trial: At trial, Ely objected to the admission of expert testimony regarding the fact that Ely refused to provide a urine sample for drug testing and that the state was required to obtain a warrant to obtain one, on grounds that the probative value of the testimony would be outweighed by its prejudicial effect. On appeal, Ely asserted that the acquisition of a urine sample constituted a search and that it was impermissible for the state to use the fact that Ely exercised the constitutional right to refuse to consent to a search as evidence to establish guilt. The Supreme Court held that the objection to the testimony at trial was premised on different bases than those raised on appeal. An appellant may not change legal theories on appeal or raise issues that were not raised in the trial court. Thus, Ely abandoned the objections made at trial, and the Supreme Court declined to consider the new legal theory on appeal. St. v. Ely, 2003 MT 140, 316 M 169, 69 P3d 1189 (2003).

Termination of Parental Rights — Fundamental Fairness Issues Not Considered When Raised for First Time on Appeal: On appeal, the father raised numerous issues to support his claim that he was denied fundamental fairness in procedures resulting in the termination of his parental rights. However, by failing to raise the objections in District Court, the father failed to properly preserve the issues for appeal and waived the right to have the issues considered by the Supreme Court. A District Court cannot correct statutory deficiencies if those concerns are not brought to its attention during the course of the proceedings, and the court will not be faulted for failing to address issues not raised before it. The District Court properly considered the best interests of the children in this case, and termination of the father's parental rights was affirmed. In re T.E., M.E., & M.E., 2002 MT 195, 311 M 148, 54 P3d 38 (2002), following In re D.H., 2001 MT 200, 306 M 278, 33 P3d 616 (2001), and In re M.W., 2002 MT 126, 310 M 103, 49 P3d 31 (2002).

Alleged New Evidence Not Extending Statutory Time Bar for Postconviction Relief: Abe was found guilty of accountability for deliberate homicide and was sentenced to 60 years in prison. One year and 14 days after the deadline, Abe filed a petition for postconviction relief on grounds of newly discovered evidence. Allegedly, two jurors from Abe's trial sat in on the trial of Abe's coconspirator and heard two of the state's witnesses testify differently than they did in Abe's trial. The Supreme Court applied the factors to be considered when a District Court evaluates a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence as set out in St. v. Sullivan, 285 M 235, 948 P2d 215 (1997) (see also St. v. Greeno, 135 M 580, 342 P2d 1052 (1959)), including the requirement that the evidence must have come to the knowledge of the defendant since trial and the requirement that the evidence must not be such as will tend only to impeach the character or credit of a witness. Here, Abe's counsel knew about the alleged discrepancies after Abe's trial but prior to Abe's appeal, so the discrepancies in testimony could have been raised on direct appeal. Further, the petition for postconviction relief alleged that the discrepancies undermined the credibility of the witnesses but did not establish that Abe did not engage in the criminal conduct for which he was convicted. Thus, the District Court concluded, and the Supreme Court agreed, that the alleged new evidence did not serve to extend the statutory bar for filing a petition for postconviction relief beyond the 1-year period in 46-21-102. Although Abe correctly pointed out that the state did not raise the issue of the statutory bar in District Court and that the District Court did not rule on the issue, the general rule that the Supreme Court will not address issues raised for the first time on appeal did not apply in this case because that rule does not apply when the issue is jurisdictional. The 1-year statute of limitations for postconviction relief is a jurisdictional limit, and lack of subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time under Rule 12(h), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Dismissal of Abe's petition for postconviction relief was affirmed as procedurally barred. St. v. Abe, 2001 MT 260, 307 M 233, 37 P3d 77 (2001).

Issues Not Raised in District Court Precluded From Consideration on Appeal: The Timises sued the Youngs, alleging negligence and negligent supervision in the operation of the Youngs' day-care center. A voluntary settlement conference resulted in an oral agreement to settle the case. The Timises later repudiated the agreement and refused to sign the settlement documents. After lengthy negotiations failed to resolve the impasse, the Youngs moved to enforce the settlement agreement and dismiss the underlying case. The Timises did not respond, so the District Court granted the Youngs' motions without objection. The District Court held that the Timises' subsequent motion to set aside the order dismissing the case was denied pursuant to the 60-day limit in Rules 59 and 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Timises appealed, raising two new legal theories that were never raised, briefed, or argued in the District Court. Whatever the merits of the new issues, because they were not raised below, the Supreme Court refused to address them on appeal. Timis v. Young, 2001 MT 63, 305 M 18, 22 P3d 112 (2001).

Failure to Raise Sentencing Objections Before District Court — Issue Not Preserved for Appeal: Tucker pleaded guilty to attempted aggravated assault with a weapon. At the sentencing hearing, Tucker argued that one of the sentencing exceptions applied to him because his mental capacity was impaired because of his transsexualism combined with the stress of his fiance's custody battles. The District Court disagreed and added the minimum 2-year weapon enhancement to his sentence. At no time did Tucker complain to the court that its findings were inadequate under 46-18-223 or allege that the sentence was illegal, excessive, or improper. Instead, Tucker argued on appeal that the sentencing court erred as a matter of law in failing to state the reasons why the sentencing exception did not apply. The Supreme Court refused to remand for resentencing because Tucker failed to bring the allegations of sentencing error to the attention of the District Court in a timely manner. The purpose of the contemporaneous objection requirement is to give the District Court the first opportunity to correct any error. Failure to do so constitutes a waiver of the right to appeal the issue. St. v. Tucker, 2000 MT 255, 301 M 466, 10 P3d 832, 57 St. Rep. 1046 (2000).

Jury Instruction Disallowing Evidence of Intoxication in Determining State of Mind Not Error — Full and Fair Instructions on Law: Following Raugust's criminal trial, the court instructed the jury that it could not consider evidence of intoxication for any purpose, pursuant to 45-2-203. Raugust maintained on appeal that the instruction was in error because depriving him of the ability to admit intoxication evidence lessened the state's burden of proof and confused the jury, in violation of his due process rights. However, the error urged on appeal was not contained in the objection made to the instruction during the final settling of jury instructions, constituting waiver of the argument on appeal. Moreover, the plain error doctrine did not apply because review under that doctrine was requested for the first time on appeal. Here, the jury was instructed regarding: (1) the elements of each offense charged and the state's burden of proving each element beyond a reasonable doubt; (2) the definition of the applicable mental states—purposely and knowingly; (3) the fact that the existence of a mental state may be inferred from the acts of the accused and from the facts and circumstances connected with the offense; (4) the difference between direct and circumstantial evidence; (5) witness credibility; and (6) the need for a unanimous verdict. Read as a whole, these instructions fairly and fully instructed the jury on the law applicable to the case, and giving the instruction disallowing the defense of intoxication was not erroneous. St. v. Raugust, 2000 MT 146, 300 M 54, 3 P3d 115, 57 St. Rep. 570 (2000). See also St. v. Hagen, 283 M 156, 939 P2d 994 (1997).

Failure to Request Continuance of Trial Date — Issue Not Properly Raised or Preserved for Appeal: At a change of plea hearing 1 day before trial, Root requested that the public defender be removed and informed the court that he was seeking private counsel. The court postponed trial for 1 week, informing Root that if private counsel were retained, counsel must be ready for trial as scheduled. In the notice of substitution of counsel, Root's new counsel expressly stated an awareness of the trial date and the intention to be prepared to proceed that day. Root was convicted. On appeal, Root alleged error in the court's failure to grant a continuance of the trial. The Supreme Court noted that the trial court, either on its own motion or by granting what it considered a motion for continuance, did postpone the trial for an additional week upon learning that Root was seeking substitute counsel. Further, Root never requested a continuance, so the trial court could not be put in error on appeal regarding an issue that it had no opportunity to address. St. v. Root, 1999 MT 203, 296 M 1, 987 P2d 1140, 56 St. Rep. 792 (1999). See also St. v. Rodgers, 257 M 413, 849 P2d 1028, 50 St. Rep. 335 (1993).

Complaint Claiming Insurer Had Duty to Notify Insureds of Policy Change — Raising Statutory Duty to Inform for First Time on Appeal: Although the insureds did not raise in the District Court the statutory obligation of an insurer to inform an insured of a policy change on renewal of the policy, the insureds' complaint alleged that the insurer had a duty to notify the insureds of the policy change. Thus, the insurer's claim that the statutory obligation could not be raised on appeal because it was not raised in District Court was rejected. The statute was simply legal support for the complaint's claim of duty to notify, not a new liability theory. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Newspaper Articles Improperly Attached to Opening Brief Set Aside: Counsel for the Franks attached several irrelevant newspaper articles to an opening brief, contending that it was permissible to supplement the record on appeal with judicially recognizable material. The Supreme Court found that the articles were not judicially recognizable under this rule and were improperly attached to the brief. Affirming the District Court decision to set aside a default judgment, the Supreme Court cited Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), in cautioning counsel against attempting to introduce extraneous evidence by the back door via attachment to briefs, a practice that is not tolerated. Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998), distinguishing In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985).

Stipulation of Law or Fact as Precluding Appeal: It is improper to raise an issue on appeal as to a question of law or fact after the parties have entered into a stipulation as to that law or fact. Topco, Inc. v. St., 275 M 352, 912 P2d 805, 53 St. Rep. 175 (1996). See also Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980), and St. v. Spotted Blanket, 1998 MT 59, 288 M 126, 955 P2d 1347, 55 St. Rep. 253 (1998).

Issue of Proper Protection of Children by Guardian Ad Litem Not Raised at Trial Precluded on Appeal: Mother whose parental rights were terminated contended that the guardian ad litem compromised the rights of the children by failing to conduct an independent investigation regarding alleged abuse and neglect. However, the issue was not raised at trial and so was not properly before the Supreme Court when raised for the first time on appeal. In re B.T.B. & B.B., 254 M 449, 840 P2d 558, 49 St. Rep. 594 (1992).

Failure to Object to Character Evidence and Impeachment Testimony at Trial — Appeal Precluded: Defendant alleged District Court error in allowing evidence of other crimes or acts and certain impeachment testimony of a defense witness. However, because the transcript showed that no objections were made at trial to either the evidence or testimony, defendant was precluded from raising the errors for the first time on appeal. St. v. Webb, 252 M 248, 828 P2d 1351, 49 St. Rep. 236 (1992).

Issue for Appeal — Not Preserved by Failure to Object Dismissal Not Res Judicata: An employee sued her employer a second time, alleging damages for wrongful discharge, violation of constitutional rights, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that the employee conceded that the wrongful discharge and emotional distress claims were barred by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The Supreme Court held that those two claims were not properly before the Supreme Court, inasmuch as they were not properly preserved for appeal, but that retrial of the issues was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Water Rights Question Not Raised in Complaint or Pretrial Order and Waived at Trial Properly Excluded: Plaintiff requested the District Court to refer determination of his water rights to the Water Court. However, he did not raise the water rights question in his complaint; the District Court specifically excepted the issue from trial; the issue was not raised in the pretrial order; and the issue was expressly waived by plaintiff at the start of the trial. His request was properly denied. The Supreme Court will not hold the District Court in error for a procedure in which plaintiff acquiesced at trial. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991).

Agency — Issue Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: The Supreme Court will not determine the existence of an agency relationship for the first time on appeal. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

Claim Lower Court's Construction of Statute at Issue in Case Violates Federal Constitution's Supremacy Clause: Plaintiff's argument that the lower court's construction of statute violated the supremacy clause of the federal constitution could be advanced for the first time on appeal. It was not an independent constitutional attack on the statute, under which his workers' compensation benefits were offset by half his social security disability benefits, but rather an attack on how the lower court construed the statute at issue. Watson v. Seekins, 234 M 309, 763 P2d 328, 45 St. Rep. 1931 (1988).

Custody Petition Withdrawn at Trial Nonappealable: Father's counsel withdrew at trial the portion of father's petition seeking sole custody. Because the custody motion was excised from the petition at hearing, the issue constituted new grounds and could not be asserted on appeal. In re Marriage of West, 233 M 47, 758 P2d 282, 45 St. Rep. 1281 (1988).

New Questions of Timeliness of Motions and Affidavits Not Proper on Appeal: The Supreme Court refused to consider, for the first time on appeal, questions of timeliness of service of a motion for partial summary judgment, service of an amended notice of deposition, and filing of affidavits. Eitel v. Ryan, 231 M 174, 751 P2d 682, 45 St. Rep. 521 (1988).

Accusation of District Court Judge Misconduct Raised on Appeal — Supreme Court Not to Consider: In reviewing a child custody modification determination, the Supreme Court refused to consider an affidavit submitted to the Supreme Court alleging an improper ex parte communication between the District Court judge and a person interested in the proceeding. Appellant had made no motion for a mistrial or to remove the District Court judge from the case, nor had appellant mentioned the alleged misconduct on the record. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Judicial Notice of Maps and Descriptions on Appeal: In a dispute over control of an irrigation district's headgate, the Supreme Court permitted submission on appeal of government survey descriptions and maps that had not been introduced as evidence at trial. The court reasoned: first, that the commission comments to Rule 201, Montana Rules of Evidence, indicate that published maps or charts are included within the Rule's scope; and second, that maps and descriptions are acceptable articles of evidence by which to show a water right in the adjudication process. In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985), distinguished in Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998).

No Evidence in Record on Factual Issue — No Ruling by Court: The defendant was convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol and sentenced to serve time in the county jail. She argues that imprisonment in the county jail is cruel and unusual punishment because of conditions allegedly existing there. The record contains no evidence of conditions existing at the jail. As appeals may be taken only on the record made, not on the record which should have been made, the court will not rule. In the absence of any record concerning conditions at the jail, the court will not determine whether confinement there constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

Laches Defense Unavailable — First Raised on Appeal: Laches could not be raised for the first time on appeal as a defense to action for rescission of contract for the sale of a ranch because it is an affirmative defense that must be set forth in the answer. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

Equity Theory Raised Below but Not Argued at Length Until Appeal: The broad standard of review used in equitable cases was needed where appellant had raised two legal theories below but essentially argued only the first, the court and respondent had concentrated on the first, appellant conceded on the first theory on appeal and argued the second theory, an equitable one, at length, and the lower court's memo in support of its dismissal of the action related only to the first theory. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984).

Application of Administrative Rule: The alleged application of an administrative rule would not be considered on appeal where it was not argued below. Hanley v. Dept. of Revenue, 207 M 302, 673 P2d 1257, 40 St. Rep. 2054 (1983).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086 (1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Sufficiency of Evidence: When a motion for a new trial on ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict was not made in the lower court, the Supreme Court will review the evidence to determine whether there is any substantial evidence to justify the verdict. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), followed in Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999).

Issues First Raised on Appeal — Prejudicial Comment to Jury — Disqualification of Witnesses: Supreme Court would not review claims of defendant that prosecutor made prejudicial comment to jury and that two witnesses should have been disqualified because the claimed errors had not been previously raised or presented to the trial court. St. v. Johns, 201 M 192, 653 P2d 494, 39 St. Rep. 2049 (1982).

Issue Not in Pretrial Order: Appellant raised for the first time, on appeal, an issue that was not included on the pretrial order as an issue in dispute. The Supreme Court refused to review that issue since it was not raised in the trial court. Morse v. Cremer, 200 M 71, 647 P2d 358, 39 St. Rep. 1162 (1982).

Interlocutory Review — Issue Not Presented to District Court: In suit for damages arising out of railroad accident, issue regarding the admission of evidence of other accidents was not presented to the District Court upon application of one party for a Writ of Supervisory Control and a motion of the other party for a stay of proceedings, and thus the issue would not be addressed by Supreme Court in deciding the application and motion. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Issue Not in Complaint but in Brief, Proposed Conclusions, and Findings: Due process issue was sufficiently raised at trial to allow consideration of it on appeal where, although complaint did not refer to it, appellant's trial brief and proposed conclusions of law referred to it extensively and a finding of fact stated that plaintiff alleged that he was not accorded due process. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Issues First Raised on Appeal — Exemption From Execution: The issue of whether certain items judgment debtor claimed were exempt from execution as necessary for support of his family were in fact not necessary would not be considered on appeal where it was not raised below. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981).

Denial of Substantial Justice Below: Though objective urged for the first time on appeal will not normally be considered, the Supreme Court has the duty to determine whether parties were denied substantial justice below and can consider, within its sound discretion, whether the lower court deprived a party of a fair and impartial trial, even if an objection based on the mandate of a statute or an established precedent should have been made and was not. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Involuntary Commitment — Mootness — Issues Not Raised in District Court: Where, after a brief interview with a mental health counselor-therapist, the appellant was involuntarily committed to a state mental hospital for a period of 3 months and then challenged the commitment in the District Court, the appellant's appeal would not be dismissed even though the appellant had been released prior to submission of the appeal. The important constitutional issues raised by the appellant were not rendered moot by his release because other persons would be involuntarily committed for 3 months of evaluation and testing. This time period renders a timely appeal impossible under the current rules of appellate procedure. Nor would the appeal be dismissed because of the appellant's failure to raise the constitutional issues in the District Court since the Supreme Court reserves to itself the power to examine constitutional issues that involve broad public concerns to avoid future litigation on a point of law. In re N.B., 190 M 319, 620 P2d 1228, 37 St. Rep. 2031 (1980), followed in In re Mental Health of R.M., 270 M 40, 889 P2d 1201, 52 St. Rep. 68 (1995). See also Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987).

Mutual Assent on Elements of Contract — Raising at Trial Level: Plaintiff and defendants entered a buy-sell agreement for a parcel of land owned by defendants. From the filing of the complaint to the time of trial, both parties contended that the buy-sell was valid and enforceable against the other. The issue at trial was not the validity of the contract but whether it included certain alleged easements. Plaintiff was granted specific performance. On appeal, defendants contended that the parties had never agreed on the same terms, that there was no mutual assent or meeting of the minds, and therefore no enforceable contract. Because this contention had not been raised at the trial level, it could not be considered on appeal. Chadwick v. Giberson, 190 M 88, 618 P2d 1213, 37 St. Rep. 1723 (1980).

Laches — Issue Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: The Supreme Court will consider for review only those questions raised in the trial court hearing or in the pleadings, and the doctrine of laches therefore cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Huggans v. Weer, 189 M 334, 615 P2d 922 (1980), followed in St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

No Appeal on Issue of Joint Venture Not First Raised in District Court: Appellants cannot assert for a matter of review on appeal that their relationship with respondents was that of joint venturers because this issue was not first presented to the District Court and as such cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Mont. Williams Double Diamond v. Royal Village, Inc., 186 M 359, 607 P2d 1120 (1980); Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 237 (1979).

Workers' Compensation: In an appeal from the award of workers' compensation benefits, where the only issue raised before the workers' compensation court was whether there should be a trial de novo, the issue of sufficiency of the evidence to support the award could not be raised on appeal. Johnston v. Nat'l Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co., 184 M 538, 604 P2d 297 (1979).

Appeals — New Theories Not to Be Heard: When a decision did not involve a certain theory of law, that theory of law may not be examined on appeal. A party may not change his theory on appeal to the Supreme Court from that advanced in the trial court. Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 239 (1979), affirmed in Peters v. Newkirk, 194 M 223, 633 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 1526 (1981).

Offer of Proof — Effect on Appeal: The Supreme Court refused to review various documents attached to appellant's brief in an appeal pro se when no offer of proof was made at trial because, as such, they were not a part of the record on appeal. Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978).

Objections First Raised on Appeal: The issue of failure to appoint counsel for a dependent minor child lacked merit because it was not raised at trial. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Condemnation Proceedings — Objections First Raised on Appeal Not to Be Heard: In condemnation proceedings by the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) to condemn a right-of-way for an interstate highway which divided ranch into two large tracts making an underpass necessary, alleged error of trial court in its preliminary order of condemnation of ordering Commission at its own expense to install, construct, and maintain the underpass on the ground that the Commission had previously agreed to install the underpass could not be raised for the first time on appeal where the question was not raised at the time of the trial in the lower court. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS

Summary Judgment for Third Party Affecting Final Judgment Reviewable on Appeal: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against the subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for the tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The subcontractor contended that the judgment was not appealable because it was not designated in the notice of appeal, as required by Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. The Supreme Court noted that summary judgments are generally interlocutory and not appealable until final judgment is rendered, but also noted that under this rule, any intermediate order or decision properly objected to that involves the merits or that necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal may be taken, is subject to review. The summary judgment in this case preceded and affected the final judgment, and because the contractor's objection was preserved, the summary judgment was reviewable on appeal. Glacier Tennis Club at The Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co, Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Appropriateness of Intervention in Action Challenging Enforcement of Ballot Initiative: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, and the groups appealed. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court noted that an application for intervention as a matter of right must satisfy each of the following factors: (1) timeliness; (2) interest in the subject matter of the litigation; (3) a showing that protection of the interest may be impaired by disposition of the action; and (4) a showing that the interest is not adequately represented by an existing party. In the present case, timeliness was not disputed. Regarding the second factor, the Supreme Court cited Idaho Farm Bureau Fed'n v. Babbitt, 58 F3d 1392 (9th Cir. 1995), for the proposition that a public interest group is entitled as a matter of right to intervene in an action challenging the legality of a measure that the group has supported. The District Court did not address the third factor because it determined that the groups had no legally protectable interest in the litigation. However, the Supreme Court found that an adverse decision in the suit would impair the groups' interest in the management and protection of Montana's game animals, so the third factor was met. Finally, the District Court determined that the groups failed to demonstrate that the Attorney General, on behalf of the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, would not zealously defend the groups' position in the suit. The Supreme Court concluded that the groups that actively drafted and supported the initiative may be in the best position to defend their interpretation of the resulting legislation and may not have been adequately represented by the Department. Thus, all four factors were met, and the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to permit the groups to intervene in the case. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Order Allowing Intervention Appealable With Final Judgment: DeVoe brought an action against the state, alleging that it had abandoned property to which DeVoe was the successor in interest. The District Court granted a motion by the city of Missoula that the city be allowed to intervene. After final judgment in favor of Missoula, DeVoe appealed the District Court's order allowing Missoula to intervene. The Supreme Court held that an order granting intervention is not separately appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., because the order is not individually listed in Rule 1 as an appealable order, but held that the order is appealable after entry of final judgment. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously ruled to the same effect in Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 233 M 277, 760 P2d 73 (1988), Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808 (1992), and In re Custody of R.R.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998 (1993). DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Denial of Summary Judgment to One Party Reviewable Upon Appeal by Another Party: An order denying summary judgment to one party is reviewable upon the appeal of a final judgment by another party. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Order Denying Motion to Strike: An order denying a motion to strike is not an appealable order, it being interlocutory in nature. It is reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Fitzgerald v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 186, 577 P2d 370 (1978).

Appeal of Order Denying Summary Judgment: An order denying summary judgment is not an appealable order. Such an order is reviewable upon appeal from a final judgment. To permit review by an extraordinary writ would accomplish indirectly that which cannot be done directly. State ex rel. Kosena v. District Court, 172 M 21, 560 P2d 522 (1977).

Order Denying Summary Judgment Reviewable With Final Judgment: Although order denying summary judgment is nonappealable order at time it is made because of its interlocutory character, it is nonetheless reviewable under appellate rule providing that all nonappealable intermediate orders or decisions properly excepted or objected to which involve merits or necessarily affect the judgment are reviewable on subsequent appeal from final judgment. Brown v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 150 M 422, 435 P2d 878 (1967).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Common-Law Plain Error — Case-by-Case Review: Despite the passage of 46-20-701, Montana's plain error statute restricting the review of errors not objected to at trial, the doctrine of common-law plain error review by the Montana Supreme Court continues to exist to allow correction of errors not objected to at trial but that affect the fairness, integrity, and public reputation of judicial proceedings. The Supreme Court retains the inherent power and obligation to interpret the constitution, protect individual rights, prevent manifest injustice, and correspondingly review lower court decisions and actions for error. The power of such review is inherent in the appellate process itself. Thus, while acknowledging the constraints of 46-20-701, the Supreme Court will discretionarily review claimed errors that implicate a criminal defendant's fundamental constitutional rights even if no contemporaneous objection is made and notwithstanding the statutory criteria, in the class of cases when failure to conduct the review may result in a manifest miscarriage of justice, leave unsettled the question of the fundamental fairness of trial proceedings, or compromise the integrity of the judicial process. The doctrine will be applied sparingly and on a case-by-case basis. Nevertheless, the necessity for contemporaneous objection to claimed error remains because 46-20-701 will be applied, except in the class of cases mentioned above. St. v. Finley, 276 M 126, 915 P2d 208, 53 St. Rep. 310 (1996), followed in St. v. Monaco, 277 M 221, 921 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 604 (1996), St. v. Patton, 280 M 278, 930 P2d 635, 53 St. Rep. 1402 (1996), St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881, 56 St. Rep. 481 (1999), St. v. Pizzichiello, 1999 MT 123, 294 M 436, 983 P2d 888, 56 St. Rep. 499 (1999), St. v. Hanson, 1999 MT 226, 296 M 82, 988 P2d 299, 56 St. Rep. 891 (1999), and Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P3d 937 (2001). See also Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977), St. v. Wilkins, 229 M 78, 746 P2d 588 (1987), Seyferth v. St., 277 M 377, 922 P2d 494, 53 St. Rep. 698 (1996), and their progeny.

Order Appointing Receiver to Be Appealed: An order appointing a receiver in a mortgage foreclosure suit being an appealable one, may not under this section be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935).

Denial of Injunction — Not Reviewable if Not Appealed: An order denying a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction is an appealable order, and if not appealed from, the correctness of the order may not, under this section, be reviewed on appeal from the judgment in the action in which the order was made. Little Horn St. Bank v. Gross, 89 M 472, 300 P 277 (1931).

Order Denying Injunction Reviewable Upon Appeal of Judgment: On appeal from an order denying an injunction pendente lite where the only question presented is whether in denying it the court erred, matters of pleading and practice subsequent to settlement of bill of exceptions, or rulings upon questions of law, will not be determined, they being reviewable on appeal from the final judgment, under this section. Nat'l Bank of Mont. v. Bingham, 83 M 21, 269 P 162 (1928).

No Application to Grant of New Trial: This section has no application on appeal from an order granting a new trial. Parsons v. Rice, 81 M 509, 264 P 396 (1928).

Correction of Verdict Appealable: An order of the District Court correcting the verdict in a civil action may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Frank v. Symons, 35 M 56, 88 P 561 (1907).

Previously Appealable Order Not Reviewable With Judgment: The Supreme Court cannot, on appeal from the judgment, review an order from which an appeal could have been taken. Great Falls Meat Co. v. Jenkins, 33 M 417, 84 P 74 (1906), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Nonappealable Orders Determined by Statute: If a particular order is not enumerated in the statute among those from which an independent appeal may be taken, it must be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Raymond v. Raymond, 32 M 170, 79 P 1056 (1905); Finlen v. Heinze, 27 M 107, 69 P 829, 70 P 517 (1902).

Substitution of Parties — Certiorari Not Applicable: An intermediate order substituting a claimant of property for defendant in a claim and delivery action may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment, on exception reserved, and certiorari will not lie to have the order annulled as in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Postponement of Trial — Reviewable Upon Appeal of Judgment: While the statute does not provide for an independent appeal from an order denying a postponement of a trial, such an order may be reviewed upon appeal if an exception to it is properly preserved. State ex rel. Shores v. District Court, 27 M 349, 71 P 159 (1903).

CASES DECIDED WITHOUT REFERENCE TO RULES OR STATUTE

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Hybrid Standard of Supreme Court Review of Sentencing When Offender Ineligible for Review by Sentence Review Division: In St. v. Montoya, 1999 MT 180, 295 M 288, 983 P2d 937 (1999), the Supreme Court held that it will review a criminal sentence only for legality, discarding the previous two-tiered approach of reviewing sentences for both legality and abuse of discretion, which was considered a carryover from the days before the creation of the Sentence Review Division when the court reviewed all sentencing challenges. However, Montoya created a "no review" window once the Sentence Review Division came into being, which left offenders with unreasonable sentencing conditions, but no term of incarceration and thus no eligibility for Sentence Review Division consideration, without a remedy. Therefore, the court fashioned a hybrid standard of review to close the "no review" window. If an offender is sentenced to 1 year or more of actual incarceration and is eligible for review by the Sentence Review Division, the court will apply the Montoya standard and review the sentence for legality only, but if the offender is ineligible for review by the Sentence Review Division, the court will review a sentence for both legality and abuse of discretion, applying the two-tiered approach used prior to creation of the Sentence Review Division. St. v. Herd, 2004 MT 85, 320 M 490, 87 P3d 1017 (2004), followed in St. v. Ruiz, 2005 MT 117, 327 M 109, 112 P3d 1001 (2005).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion to Suppress Evidence of Investigatory Stop: The Supreme Court reviews the denial of a motion to suppress evidence from an investigatory stop to determine whether the trial court's finding that the officer involved had a particularized suspicion to justify the investigatory stop was clearly erroneous. The trial court's conclusions of law are reviewed to determine whether the court's interpretation of the law was correct. St. v. Lovegren, 2002 MT 153, 310 M 358, 51 P3d 471 (2002).

School District Not Liable for Injury of Child on Playground — Witness Credibility as Question for Jury — Limited Review of Jury Verdict: The Morgans complained that the school district was liable for a teacher's negligence because their daughter, who needed close supervision, was injured on playground equipment at recess. The jury found in favor of the teacher. The Morgans sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the verdict. The Supreme Court's review of a jury verdict is necessarily very limited, and a jury verdict will not be reversed if it is supported by substantial credible evidence. The gist of the Morgans' appeal concerned the credibility and consistency of statements made by the only witness to the accident—the teacher. Witness credibility is a matter for determination by the jury after proper instruction from the court. Thus, the Supreme Court deferred to the properly instructed jury's evaluation of the teacher's credibility and affirmed the verdict. Morgan v. Great Falls School District No. 1, 2000 MT 28, 298 M 194, 995 P2d 422, 57 St. Rep. 134 (2000), following Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995), and Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998). Morgan was followed, with regard to the limited scope of review of a jury verdict and the test for substantial credible evidence, in Benson v. Diverse Computer Corp., 2004 MT 114, 321 M 140, 89 P3d 981 (2004).

Statutes Presumed Constitutional — Burden of Proof — Standard of Review: In deciding whether certain statutes violated the mandates of the Montana Constitution and The Enabling Act regarding use of school trust lands, the Supreme Court eschewed standards of review suggested by both parties, holding that the proper standard was whether the District Court's conclusions of law were correct. Statutes are presumed to be constitutional, and the Supreme Court will avoid an unconstitutional interpretation if possible. A party challenging the constitutionality of a statute has the burden of proving it unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt, and any doubt will be resolved in favor of the statute. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following Steer, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 245 M 470, 803 P2d 601, 47 St. Rep. 2199 (1990), St. v. Martel, 273 M 143, 902 P2d 14, 52 St. Rep. 873 (1995), Davis v. Union Pac. RR Co., 282 M 233, 937 P2d 27, 54 St. Rep. 328 (1997), and St. v. Nye, 283 M 505, 943 P2d 96, 54 St. Rep. 766 (1997), and followed in Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. Darkenwald, 2005 MT 190, 328 M 105, 119 P3d 27 (2005).

Standard of Review of Criminal Sentence Clarified — Supreme Court Review of Legality of Sentence Only: In an effort to clear up a prevalent inconsistency in Montana case law regarding the appropriate standard of review of criminal sentences, the Supreme Court held that it will review a criminal sentence only for legality, i.e., whether the sentence is within the parameters provided by statute, which in turn implies de novo review—a sentence is either legal or it is not. The court overruled St. v. Davison, 188 M 432, 614 P2d 489 (1980), St. v. White, 200 M 123, 650 P2d 765, 39 St. Rep. 1619 (1982), St. v. Graveley, 275 M 519, 915 P2d 184 (1996), St. v. Gunderson, 282 M 183, 936 P2d 804, 54 St. Rep. 283 (1997), and any other Montana decision that suggests that the Supreme Court will also review criminal sentences for an abuse of discretion. St. v. Montoya, 1999 MT 180, 295 M 288, 983 P2d 937, 56 St. Rep. 706 (1999), followed in St. v. Shreves, 2002 MT 333, 313 M 252, 60 P3d 991 (2002). However, see St. v. Herd, 2004 MT 85, 320 M 490, 87 P3d 1017 (2004), wherein the Supreme Court fashioned a hybrid standard of review for offenders with unreasonable sentencing conditions but no term of incarceration who are ineligible for review by the Sentence Review Division. In reviewing those sentences, the court will review a sentence for both legality and abuse of discretion, applying the two-tiered approach used prior to creation of the Sentence Review Division.

Denial of Motion to Dismiss — Matter of Law: Danichek appealed the lower court's refusal to grant his motion to dismiss, which he based on the argument that double jeopardy prohibited him from being prosecuted for driving under the influence because he had already been convicted and punished for refusing to take the Breathalyzer test. The Supreme Court held that the standard of review for the District Court's conclusion of law was plenary and that it would review the decision to determine whether the lower court's conclusion of law was correct. Helena v. Danichek, 277 M 461, 922 P2d 1170, 53 St. Rep. 767 (1996), following St. v. Hansen, 273 M 321, 903 P2d 194 (1995).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of New Trial — Jury or Bailiff Misconduct: In the two most recent cases in which jury or bailiff misconduct was the basis for granting or denying a new trial, the Supreme Court stated that the standard is that the decision is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of manifest abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court reaffirmed this standard and overruled those cases with a different standard. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Standard of Review for Factfindings Made by Workers' Compensation Court: The following are principles applicable to a Supreme Court review of findings of fact made by the Workers' Compensation Court: (1) the Supreme Court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the trial court regarding the weight of evidence on questions of fact; (2) when there is substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the decision; (3) the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court in matters of witness credibility and the weight of witness testimony; and (4) it is not the responsibility of the Supreme Court to determine whether sufficient evidence supports a contrary finding—rather, review entails a determination of whether substantial evidence supports the decision of the Workers' Compensation Court. Stevens v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962, 51 St. Rep. 1396 (1994). See also Wood v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502 (1991), Nave v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 254 M 54, Confusing Medical Testimony That May Have Misled Jury — Other Evidence Sufficient to Support Verdict: Although disputed medical testimony tended to confuse the issues and may have misled the jury in a motor vehicle accident case, the police testimony and photographs alone provided sufficient evidence to support the verdict for defendant. The Supreme Court will not disturb a jury verdict when substantial credible evidence supports it, especially when the record has conflicting evidence and the jury resolves the conflict. Mason v. Ditzel, 255 M 364, 842 P2d 707, 49 St. Rep. 986 (1992).

Failure to Object to Alleged Improper Closing Comments: Failure to object at trial to alleged improper closing comments of counsel precludes an appellant from raising that issue on appeal. Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), followed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

No Appeal of Issue Not Tried in Lower Court: Objections to the admissibility of evidence may not be raised for the first time on appeal because a defendant may not appeal an issue not tried at District Court level. St. v. Long, 223 M 502, 726 P2d 1364, 43 St. Rep. 1948 (1986), citing St. v. Powers, 198 M 289, 645 P2d 1357 (1982), and St. v. Patton, 183 M 417, 600 P2d 194 (1979).

Review of Judgment Paid Under Legal Coercion: If a judgment has been paid voluntarily, it amounts to an accord and satisfaction; however, if a judgment has been paid under legal coercion, that judgment remains a proper subject for judicial review. Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

No Objection to Instructions — Law of the Case: An instruction given without objection becomes the law of the case. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Substantial Credible Evidence: A trial court's proper function is to assess the evidence, ascertain the credibility of the witnesses, and render findings based upon substantial credible evidence; and if that is accomplished, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the decision of the trial court. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982), followed in Searight v. Cimino, 221 M 277, 718 P2d 652, 43 St. Rep. 810 (1986).

REVIEW NOT TIMELY

Advisory Comments on Summary Judgment Appeal: On appeal from and reversal of grant of summary judgment, it was premature for the court to advise the parties and the trial court on the possible application of Montana law. The case was not completely before the Supreme Court, and when all pertinent facts are known, the trial court is the forum for initial application of the law. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

ISSUES CONSIDERED

Failure to Record Voir Dire Examination — Britt Test to Determine Whether Failure to Record Portions of Criminal Trial Violative of Due Process: Deschon argued that his right to a meaningful appeal of his deliberate homicide conviction was violated because he had tenable appellate theories, such as possible juror prejudice, that could not be determined without a transcript of the voir dire proceedings, and that there was no alternative to a transcript available. The state pointed out that Rule 9(d), M.R.App.P., provides a procedure whereby a party can submit its version of unrecorded portions of the record to the District Court, and then the court can generate a written summary to be included in the appeal. However, the state contended that Deschon made no effort to recreate the circumstances of voir dire and thus could not claim that the lack of a record was reversible error. The Supreme Court noted that a trial court should order its court reporter to record the voir dire examination and that diligent defense counsel should demand recording of voir dire proceedings (St. v. Seitzinger, 180 M 136, 589 P2d 655 (1979)). However, when the trial court fails to record portions of a criminal trial, Britt v. N.C., 404 US 226 (1971), is applied to determine whether due process has been violated, and two criteria are relevant to the determination: (1) the value of the transcript to defendant in connection with the appeal or trial for which it is sought; and (2) the availability of alternative devices that would fulfill the same function as a transcript, such as an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the trial. Here, Deschon established the first part of the Britt test by showing that a transcript was valuable in determining whether any jurors were prejudiced by pretrial publicity. The second part of the Britt test would be satisfied by a written summary prepared pursuant to Rule 9(d), M.R.App.P., but lacking that summary, the Supreme Court remanded for an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the voir dire proceedings. St. v. Deschon, 2002 MT 16, 308 M 175, 40 P3d 391 (2002). Following remand and an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded voir dire portions of Deschon's trial, Deschon appealed again on grounds that the hearing was insufficient to provide information to determine whether jurors were biased. The Supreme Court concluded that, taken as a whole, the combined testimony from jurors, attorneys, and Deschon, together with the trial notes in exhibit, created a record of sufficient completeness to ensure that Deschon's right to due process was not violated and that the reconstruction hearing comprised an adequate alternative to the verbatim voir dire transcript to establish a fair and accurate picture of what transpired that was sufficiently complete to accord review of Deschon's issues on appeal, satisfying the second part of the Britt test. St. v. Deschon, 2004 MT 32, 320 M 1, 85 P3d 756 (2004). See also U.S. v. Cashwell, 950 F2d 699 (11th Cir. 1992), and U.S. v. Preciado-Cordobas, 981 F2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1993).

Failure to Present Issue to First Level Appellate Court as Precluding Consideration at Second Appellate Level: At their initial trial in Municipal Court, defendants raised an issue of reliance on treaties entered into by the United States, but the issue was not raised at the first level of appeal when the case was considered by the District Court pursuant to 3-6-110. As a result, the issue was held to be not properly before the Supreme Court at the second level of appeal. Missoula v. Asbury, 265 M 14, 873 P2d 936, 51 St. Rep. 383 (1994), followed in Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000).

Failure to Object to Evidence at Trial — No Right to Claim Error on Appeal: By failing to object to admission of evidence at trial, defendant waived his right to claim error on appeal. Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988). See also Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993).

Consent to Retroactive Increase in Judgment — Merits of Increase Waived: Wife obtained an increase in child support and maintenance after claiming the original amounts were not correctly determined. Husband consented to retroactively apply the increase back to the date of the original decree. This consent made it unnecessary for the Supreme Court to consider the merits of the wife's request for modification. The consent indicated the original decree was not correct. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Rule 3. Suspension of the rules.

Advisory Committee Notes

This rule is taken from Rule 2 of the Federal Draft. Its purpose is explained by the Federal Advisory Committee's Note. Adjusted to state practice, this purpose is to make clear the power of the supreme court to expedite the determination of cases of pressing concern to the public or to the litigants by prescribing a time schedule other than that provided by the rules. The rule also contains a general authorization to the supreme court to relieve litigants of the consequences of default where manifest injustice would otherwise result. Rule 21(b) prohibits the supreme court from extending the time for taking appeal.

Case Notes

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended: Although an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable, the Supreme Court suspended the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure based on the facts that both parties apparently relied on the Court's statement in a prior case that the issue may be appealable, a significant period of time had passed with resulting uncertainty in the children's lives, and if the appeal was dismissed, there was a likelihood of a petition for writ of certiorari, habeas corpus, or supervisory control concerning the same issues. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Appealability of District Court Order Granting Judgment as Matter of Law — Rules Suspension: Plaintiffs contended that an order granting judgment as a matter of law is not an appealable order because it is not among the enumerated orders listed in Rule 1, M.R.App.P.

Following Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228 (1996), the Supreme Court, expressing concerns regarding judicial economy and the near certainty of future appeals following a new trial on damages, exercised its authority under this rule to suspend the requirements of the rules of appellate procedure in the interest of expediting a decision and considered the appeal of the order granting judgment as a matter of law in the limited class of cases like this, when the order granting judgment as a matter of law is taken in conjunction with an order granting a new trial. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended — Procedure on Appeal: A petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services was filed by the prosecutor under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). Temporary custody of K.H. was later awarded to county welfare department under 41-3-403 (renumbered (41-3-423). The District Court found probable cause for state intervention and ordered temporary investigative authority, custody in the mother, and restrictions on the father's visitation. The parents appealed the order, an appealable order within Rule 1, M.R.App.P., but not an adequate remedy because of the time involved. Relief should properly be pursued through a Writ of Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, or Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court treated the matter as a Writ of Certiorari and denied it on the grounds that the District Court proceedings were in substantial compliance with law and that the petitioners were not prejudiced thereby. In re K.H., 216 M 267, 701 P2d 720, 42 St. Rep. 796 (1985). However, see In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), in which it was held that because an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P.

Failure to Timely Transmit Transcript — Refusal to Dismiss Appeal: Although the Supreme Court received the transcript 12 days beyond the 40-day deadline and the transcript lacked pertinent documents, the court refused to dismiss the appeal. The court noted that the procedural violation was not one that would affect the validity of the appeal, caused no substantive harm, and was not intended to mislead the court. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Despite failure to comply with the M.R.App.P., the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

"Plain Error": In adopting the "plain error" doctrine appellate courts have a duty to determine whether the parties before them have been denied substantial justice by the trial court, and when that has occurred they can, within sound discretion, consider whether the trial court has deprived a litigant of a fair and impartial trial, even though no objection was made to the conduct during the trial. Such was the case when appellant was denied his day in court by the trial judge's recess and failure to reconvene. Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal: The Supreme Court has no authority to permit an appeal to be taken after the expiration of the time fixed by Rule 5, M.R.App.P. If an extension of time is sought, the proper forum to make such a request is the District Court. An appellant must request any extension no later than 60 days from service of notice of entry of judgment. Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Emergency Restraining Order Denied: Petition by female minor who was denied injunction prohibiting rodeo from refusing to allow her to participate as a bareback bronc rider was not such an emergency as to invoke the extraordinary remedies of the Supreme Court, ex parte, without notice, without bond, and without hearing. State ex rel. Reno v. District Court, 165 M 289, 529 P2d 1407 (1974).

II. Appeals From Judgments and Orders of District Courts

Rule 4. How taken.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned after Rule 3 of the Federal Draft, but excludes references to criminal cases, habeas corpus proceedings and bankruptcy. Nothing other than the filing of a notice of appeal in the district court is required for the perfecting of an appeal. In the interest of providing the supreme court with prompt notice that its jurisdiction has been invoked, the rule directs the clerk of the district court to forward a copy of the notice of appeal to the clerk of the supreme court. The requirement that the appellant furnish the clerk with the necessary number of copies of the notice of appeal and that the clerk endorse on each copy served the date on which the notice was filed are for the convenience of the clerk and litigants respectively.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendments have been adopted in part from Rule 3 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In (a) deleted former second sentence that read: "Concurrent with filing the notice of appeal, appellant shall provide a copy to the clerk of the supreme court"; inserted (c)(1) concerning filing of certification; and inserted (c)(2) concerning notice pursuant to (c)(1). Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

1996 Amendment: In (a) inserted second sentence concerning filing with Clerk of the Supreme Court; and in (c) substituted second sentence concerning compliance with Form 1 in the Appendix of Forms to Rule 54 for former text that read: "Form 1 in the Appendix of Forms is a suggested form of notice of appeal" and in last sentence inserted last clause concerning information contained in Form 1 in the Appendix of Forms to Rule 54. Amendment effective October 1, 1996.

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (b), in catchline, inserted "or consolidated", in first sentence inserted "timely" and "and they may thereafter proceed on appeal", and inserted second sentence relating to consolidation of appeals; in (c), in first sentence, inserted "or part thereof" and inserted third sentence relating to dismissal for informality; and made minor changes in grammar and punctuation.

GENERAL

Summary Judgment for Third Party Affecting Final Judgment Reviewable on Appeal: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against the subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for the tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The subcontractor contended that the judgment was not appealable because it was not designated in the notice of appeal, as required by Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. The Supreme Court noted that summary judgments are generally interlocutory and not appealable until final judgment is rendered, but also noted that under Rule 2, M.R.App.P., any intermediate order or decision properly objected to that involves the merits or that necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal may be taken, is subject to review. The summary judgment in this case preceded and affected the final judgment, and because the contractor's objection was preserved, the summary judgment was reviewable on appeal. Glacier Tennis Club at The Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co, Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Failure to Address Applicability of Alternative Dispute Resolution Process in Appeal of Child Support Case Not Grounds for Automatic Dismissal — Complicity of Clerk of District Court in Appellant's Failure to Follow Statutory Requirements: A father appealed a District Court determination of past-due child support amounts, but failed to address the applicability of alternative dispute resolution in the appeal notice, as provided in Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and subsection (c) of this rule. The Clerk of the District Court subsequently failed to notify the father of the necessity to file an amended notice of appeal within 7 days. The mother contended that the appeal should be dismissed, citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d

71 (2000), for the proposition that failure to comply with applicable appellate rules will result in dismissal. The Supreme Court held that a court may dismiss an appeal for failure to comply with Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and subsection (c) of this rule, but overruled Dobrocke to the extent that failure to comply will result in automatic dismissal. The court found the Dobrocke rule to be too severe, particularly when the Clerk of Court is complicit in the appellant's failure to abide by the statutory requirements, because it is unfair for all the consequences to fall on the appellant when the Clerk of Court also fails to adhere to the statutes. Rather, the Supreme Court will look at all circumstances surrounding the appeal before deciding whether to dismiss for failure to comply with Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and subsection (c) of this rule. In this case, dismissal was not proper because the Clerk of Court never issued the father the proper notice to file an amended appeal. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002).

Failure to Certify Applicability of Arbitration in Appeal of Case Seeking Monetary Damages to Result in Dismissal of Case: Plaintiff appealed a summary judgment dismissing her negligence suit against the city of Columbia Falls, but totally failed to address the requirements of Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and subsection (c) of this rule regarding the use of alternative dispute resolution procedures. The city argued that the rules applied because plaintiff was seeking monetary damages, so failure to address dispute resolution was indefensible and the appeal should be dismissed. Plaintiff pointed out that the appeal was from a summary judgment holding that no cause of action existed, rather than from a monetary judgment. The Supreme Court concluded that the determining factor was the relief sought and not the order or judgment being appealed. Plaintiff sought damages, so the rules applied. However, because it was a case of first impression and part of the blame for not addressing dispute resolution lay with the District Court Clerk, who failed to direct plaintiff to file an amended notice of appeal containing the necessary certification, the Supreme Court did not dismiss this plaintiff's appeal, concluding that dismissal would be too harsh a remedy. Nevertheless, in the future, the consequence of failing to comply with Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and subsection (c) of this rule will be to subject the appeal to dismissal. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000), overruled in Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002), to the extent that failure to comply will result in automatic dismissal.

Indian Defendant — Failure to Challenge Transfer to District Court and Failure to Reserve Right to Appeal Issues — District Court Jurisdiction Upheld: After the state filed an amended petition in Youth Court to have Spotted Blanket declared a delinquent youth and a serious juvenile offender, the state and Spotted Blanket stipulated to transferring the case to District Court. Later, Spotted Blanket objected to the jurisdiction of the District Court, arguing that the Youth Court abused its discretion in making the transfer because there was insufficient evidence that the juvenile facilities were inadequate, as required by 41-5-206(1)(d)(ii) (see 1997 amendment), and because the District Court failed to make a finding of probable cause concerning some of the counts against him, as required by the same statute. The Supreme Court declined to address those issues, noting that: (1) Spotted Blanket's notice of appeal was limited to the District Court order denying his motion to dismiss and did not include the order transferring the case to District Court; (2) Spotted Blanket never challenged the propriety of the transfer to District Court and, citing the requirements of 46-12-204, St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477 (1995), and St. v. Swoboda, 276 M 479, 918 P2d 296 (1996), holding that claims of error not properly preserved in the trial court are barred from appellate review; (3) Spotted Blanket stipulated to the transfer and that a probable cause hearing would not be necessary; and (4) Spotted Blanket pleaded guilty to the felony counts and noting that the plea acts as a waiver of nonjurisdictional defects under the Supreme Court's prior opinions in St. v. Butler, 272 M 286, 900 P2d 908 (1995), and Stilson v. St., 278 M 20, 924 P2d 238 (1996). St. v. Spotted Blanket, 1998 MT 59, 288 M 126, 955 P2d 1347, 55 St. Rep. 253 (1998).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), for additional briefing time and must rule on a Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Use of "Et Al." in Notice of Appeal as Sufficient Identification of Appellants: Appellants' notice of appeal, filed on behalf of 152 discharged employees, was headed "Larry Deeds, et al.", which respondent contended was insufficient to convey notice under the decision in Torres v.

Oakland Scavenger Co., 487 US 312, 101 L Ed 2d 285, 108 S Ct 2405 (1988), wherein the U.S. Supreme Court found that Rule 3(c), Fed.R.App.P. (identical to this rule), was jurisdictional in nature and required the listing of all parties taking part in the appeal. The Montana Supreme Court distinguished Torres and chose instead to adopt the holding in Nat'l Center for Immigrants' Rights v. I.N.S., 892 F2d 814 (9th Cir. 1989), that the use of "et al." in the caption of the notice clearly indicated that all defendants were appealing the decision below. To require all 152 appellants in this action to be named in the appeal would take two full pages and would be onerous. Rather, the use of "et al." as a common informality constituted sufficient notice of appeal under this rule. Deeds v. Decker Coal Co., 246 M 220, 805 P2d 1270, 47 St. Rep. 1902 (1990).

Technical Defect Not Bar to Appeal: The claimant in a workers' compensation case appealed the lower court's denial of his motion for a rehearing. The Supreme Court held that although he should have appealed from the findings and conclusions of the lower court in order to place the proper issues before it, technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the courts. Wilhelm v. Owens Enterprises, Inc., 242 M 285, 790 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 699 (1990).

Effect of Failure to Designate Dismissed Charge as Subject of Appeal: State's argument that it was error to dismiss a charge had merit, but the issue was not properly before the court and would not be considered because the notice of appeal did not designate an appeal from the dismissal of that charge. St. v. Delap, 237 M 346, 772 P2d 1268, 46 St. Rep. 856 (1989), followed in St. v. Spotted Blanket, 1998 MT 59, 288 M 126, 955 P2d 1347, 55 St. Rep. 253 (1998), and Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Cross-Appeal: Respondent raised two issues on appeal not addressed by appellant. The court did not consider the issues because respondent had not perfected a cross-appeal. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695; 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984). See also Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Supreme Court Equally Divided on Sufficiency of Notice of Appeal — Judgment Appealed From Affirmed: When the Supreme Court was equally divided on the issue of whether a defendant's notice of appeal was legally sufficient, three justices having voted that the notice was sufficient, three justices having voted that it was not sufficient, and one justice having abstained, the court ruled that there had not been a determination by the majority of the court that the notice was sufficient and that therefore the court did not have jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982).

Conditional Notice of Appeal: Appellant filed a conditional notice of appeal conditioned upon the Supreme Court finding that the judgment being appealed was a final judgment. Because the notice was conditioned upon an action to be taken at an undetermined time in the future, it was totally ineffective. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Joint and Several Liability — Failure to Include Issue in Notice of Appeal: Where codefendant's notice of appeal did not include a certain item of damages, the Supreme Court must assume the other defendant was not informed by the notice of an intention to challenge responsibility for those damages, found below to be joint and several. The issue whether appellant was liable was not properly before the Supreme Court, and finding of joint and several liability must stand. McPherson v. Kerr, 195 M 454, 636 P2d 852, 38 St. Rep. 2021 (1981).

Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court — Starting Point for the Period for the Filing of Appeal: For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the period for filing notice of appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 (now repealed) shall be the starting point for the period for filing the notice of appeal. In this case the court therefore had jurisdiction over the appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports but consolidated for purposes of appeal with second case filed by plaintiff against Anaconda Co. and reported at 678 P2d 661 (1984)).

Dissolution of Marriage Appeal From Original Judgment or Amending Order to Preserve Issues of Both: Respondent husband raised the issue of the scope of the wife's notice of appeal from the District Court's order amending the decree made on dissolution of the marriage. The husband argued that the appeal should be limited solely to issues arising from the amending order. The Supreme Court said that the contention ignored the interdependent nature of the amending order and the original decree. Finality of the original judgment had to await a determination of the lower court regarding motions to amend or alter. The intertwining of an amending order and an original judgment necessitated review of all issues contained in both, and thus an appeal from either incorporated all issues of both for review. This was in accord with the idea that technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the court. This was distinguished from the situation in which a party appealed from one order in a series or separate and distinct orders or from one part of a divisible judgment. An amending order and an original judgment could not be viewed as separate and distinct or divisible. The notice of appeal was therefore sufficient to preserve all issues for review. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981), distinguishing St. v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945), and Sperling v. Calfee, 7 M 514, 19 P 204 (1888), in accord with J.C. Penney and Woolworth v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of Rule 5, M.R.App.P., which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P., are automatically put into play, adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P., comes into play, extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979).

Series of Proceedings — Jurisdiction on Appeal: The Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to review a series of legal proceedings surrounding a divorce decree other than the last decision and judgment because the appellant failed to give timely notice of appeal of the prior proceedings. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Extraordinary Relief Denied: When petitioner for Writ of Supervisory Control had filed notice of appeal from a judgment 9 days prior to application for Writ, without showing of extenuating circumstances, the Supreme Court would not issue an extraordinary writ as a method to shortcut appeal. In re Crist, 172 M 38, 560 P2d 531 (1976).

Determining Propriety of Appeal — Excusable Neglect: Court was without jurisdiction to dismiss an appeal because Supreme Court has sole jurisdiction to determine propriety of appeal. A change of mind is not "excusable neglect". McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal — Jurisdictional Defect: Failure to comply with rule relating to filing notice of appeal creates a jurisdictional defect which the Supreme Court will alter only on most extenuating circumstances. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Untimely Appeal From Motion for New Trial: When motion for new trial was filed without notice of hearing, the motion was automatically denied 10 days after service notwithstanding letter from clerk notifying movant of denial on some other date. Appeal filed later than 60 days after denial of the motion was untimely. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Failure to Serve Notice of Appeal — Appellate Jurisdiction Never Acquired: Where notice of appeal was not served on the respondent party within 6 months of the date of judgment, the Supreme Court could not acquire jurisdiction even though notice was filed with the District Court within the statutory period. Seiffert v. Police Comm'n, 144 M 52, 394 P2d 172 (1964).

Amending Notice of Appeal: Amendment of a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court after the time period for notice has run is not possible. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

DISTRICT COURT DEPRIVED OF JURISDICTION AFTER APPEAL FILED

Deficiency Judgment Embraced Within Assignment Order Seeking to Enforce That Judgment — Appeal of Assignment Order Divesting District Court of Jurisdiction to Address Motion to Set Aside Deficiency Judgment: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, and on the same day moved to set aside the deficiency judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), claiming that the judgment was improperly based on the value of the property from the Sheriff's sale rather than the fair market value of the property. The District Court declined to address Andersen's Rule 60(b) motion on grounds that the appeal of the assignment order divested the court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. The assignment order and the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment were inextricably intertwined. The Rule 60(b) motion challenged the validity of the very deficiency judgment on which the appealed assignment order was based and that the assignment order sought to enforce. The District Court did not err in finding that appeal of the assignment order divested the court of its jurisdiction to address the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), following McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Child Custody — District Court Order Issued After Appeal Vacated: Following mother's appeal of a District Court decision to the Supreme Court, the District Court ordered a temporary change in child custody, a temporary restraining order, and an order to show cause. The long-established rule in Montana is that when a notice of appeal has been filed, jurisdiction passes from the District Court and vests with the Supreme Court. Although some exceptions apply, none were applicable to the present situation. The District Court, though arguably acting in the child's best interests, was without jurisdiction to generate any orders relating to issues on appeal to the Supreme Court, and those orders were vacated. Because of the sensitive nature of the case, power was reinvested with the District Court, the case was remanded for the limited purpose of determining custody, and a hearing on the matter was required to be expedited. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Perfected Appeal Despite Attempted "Withdrawal" — No District Court Jurisdiction Unless Properly Dismissed: The father filed a notice of appeal after the District Court denied his motion for a change of custody. He then filed a document entitled "Withdrawal of Appeal" with the District Court. Later the father filed a petition for change of custody and a motion to consolidate his petition with a dependency and neglect action filed by the State. After a trial, the mother appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that when a notice of appeal has been filed, jurisdiction passes to the Supreme Court. All that is required to perfect an appeal is the timely filing of a notice of appeal. The District Court could have dismissed the appeal before it was docketed upon motion and notice. The record discloses no motion or notice. The District Court was therefore without jurisdiction to hear the case. In re M.L.Y. & M.Y., 201 M 467, 655 P2d 499, 39 St. Rep. 2238 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Same Day Filing of Appeal and Motion for Rehearing: The filing of an appeal to the Supreme Court stays proceedings in the lower court, thereby removing jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter from the lower court; thus, the Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss the appeal, which was based on the fact that the notice of appeal and movant's motion for rehearing were filed on the same day. Green v. C.R. Anthony Co., 194 M 102, 634 P2d 629, 38 St. Rep. 1638 (1981).

Notice of Appeal Filed — District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Enter Nunc Pro Tunc Order: The findings, conclusions, and decree of dissolution were filed on December 2, 1980. Appellant filed a motion to alter the court's findings and conclusions on December 4, 1980, and filed a notice of appeal on January 7, 1981. On January 20, 1981, the District Court entered amended findings and conclusions and dated them, nunc pro tunc, December 12, 1980. The Supreme Court held that a trial court cannot enter supplemental findings after a notice of appeal has been filed. Bartmess v. Bartmess, 193 M 200, 631 P2d 299, 38 St. Rep. 1097 (1981).

Notice of Appeal Filed After Order but Before Findings and Conclusions Entered: An employer appealed from an order of the Workers' Compensation Court determining that its former employee was permanently totally disabled. Through various states of the case, the court failed to make findings of fact. Notice of appeal to the Supreme Court was filed after the court entered its order. A week later the court entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of its original order reinstating benefits cut off by the employer. The Supreme Court agreed with the appellant/employer that the supplemental findings entered after the notice of appeal was filed could not be considered. The trial court had lost jurisdiction, except for ancillary matters, when the notice of appeal was filed. The order reinstating the claimant's benefits, determining that she was permanently totally disabled, and ordering the employer to pay a penalty and attorney fees was not an interim order because, unless appealed, it would have to be obeyed. Therefore, proper findings and conclusions were needed to support the order. A new hearing was ordered with discovery to be enforced against both parties. Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing Notice of Appeal — Findings and Conclusions Improperly Amended: In an action for damages resulting from the defendants' breach of contract by failing to complete the construction of a road for the plaintiff, the trial court committed reversible error in attempting to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law after the defendants filed a notice of appeal. Since 1954 it has been the rule in Montana that when a notice of appeal is filed, personal and subject matter jurisdiction pass from the District Court to the Supreme Court. When the District Court amended its findings and conclusions after filing of the notice of appeal, it did so without jurisdiction and the amendments were therefore void. Julian v. Buckley, 191 M 487, 625 P2d 526, 38 St. Rep. 128 (1981). See also St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Motion to Set Aside Judgment — Jurisdiction Not Retained by District Court After Appeal Taken: When petitioner moved the District Court to set aside its judgment and thereafter filed a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, the District Court properly asserted that it had no authority to rule on petitioner's motion. Upon a proper appeal being taken, jurisdiction of the cause passes to the Supreme Court, subject to the right of the District Court to correct clerical errors. N. Plains Resource Council v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 184 M 466, 603 P2d 684 (1979), followed in Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2003 MT 368, 319 M 105, 82 P3d 896 (2003).

Loss of Jurisdiction to Hear Motion to Dismiss: Where District Court signed an order extending time to file an appeal alleging excusable neglect and notice of appeal was filed the same day, District Court was without jurisdiction to grant a motion to dismiss said appeal as upon the original filing of notice of appeal. Supreme Court was given sole jurisdiction to determine propriety of appeal. McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Defaulting Adverse Party — Severable Appeal: A defaulting defendant must be served with notice of appeal if a reversal of the judgment may affect him adversely. Where in a foreclosure action all but one of several defendants defaulted, the plaintiff could not have a reversal thereof in its entirety without making the defaulting defendants adversely affected by it parties to the appeal and serving notice thereof upon them. But where a judgment is severable as between coparties to an action, an appeal may be taken as to any one of the coparties. And if a lone answering defendant makes no objection, reversal may be had as to him alone, but not favoring the others. W. Holding Co. v. NW. Land & Loan Co., 113 M 24, 120 P2d 557 (1941).

Multiple Appeals Covered by One Notice: An order settling an administrator's account, disallowing two certain items, and directing him to deliver certain stock to a special administratrix, though included in one paper, is in effect several distinct and separate orders, and, though embraced in one notice of appeal, will be so treated for the purposes of the appeal. Rule 5. Time for filing notice of appeal.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned after Rule 4 of the Federal Draft. (Provisions for appeals in bankruptcy, petitions for impeachment, under the Railway Labor Act, under the Interlocutory Appeals Act, and in criminal cases, are omitted.) It materially shortens the time for taking an appeal.

The Federal Draft provides that the notice of appeal shall be filed within 30 days "of the date of the entry of the judgment order appealed from." The change, which measures the time from service of notice of entry of the judgment, is for the purpose of avoiding uncertainty as to what is a judgment and reducing the possibility of lack of knowledge of the entry of the judgment or order.

The provision for added time for appeal by other parties after notice of appeal is filed by one party is new. The Federal Advisory Committee Note explains this as follows: "It not infrequently happens that a party considers himself aggrieved by the final judgment but is willing to abide by it if it is to be the final result of the action. Such a party should be protected against the possibility that another party may file a final hour appeal and thereby oblige the forbearing party to undergo the expense of an appeal without the opportunity of presenting his own grievance" to the supreme court.

The time limit for taking an appeal would not prevent the taking of an appeal at any time after the entry of the judgment or order and before service of notice of entry.

The final paragraph permits an extension of the time for taking an appeal by the district court "upon a showing of excusable neglect." In view of the ease with which an appeal may be taken—the filing of a simple notice with the clerk of court—and the unlikelihood that there will not be actual notice of the entry of the judgment or order, it would be an extraordinary case which would justify an extension. But the district court should have the authority to extend time in extraordinary cases where injustice would otherwise result. The phrase "by any party" makes it clear that the district court may extend the time allowed for filing a cross or separate appeal after an initial appeal has been filed.

NOTE TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: None.

Since Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., only requires service of notice of entry of judgment in cases where an appearance has been made, no time appears to be provided for filing notice of appeal from judgments in default cases. This amendment is designed to supply the deficiency.

The addition of the phrase, "or any political subdivision thereof," is added to make it clear that the 60-day provision applies to cities, counties, etc.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

Extensive amendments of the rule have been made, adopting in some cases language similar to Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. Significant changes have been made by the adoption of subsections (2), (4) and (5).

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendment makes a motion for extension of time for filing a notice of appeal applicable to both civil and criminal appeals. The previous rule was applicable to civil appeals only.

Compiler's Comments

1998 Amendment: In (b) in first sentence after "judgment" inserted reference to 46-18-116 and after "60 days" inserted "after entry of judgment appealed from"; and inserted second sentence concerning oral pronouncement of decision. Amendment effective December 1, 1998.

1997 Amendment: In (a)(1), in first clause after "appealed from", deleted "except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment" and in second clause, after "judgment or order", substituted "provided, however, that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, said 30 days or 60 days, as the case may be, shall not begin to run until service of notice of entry of judgment" for "or 60 days from the service of notice of the entry or judgment"; in (a)(2), at beginning, deleted "Except as provided in subsection (a)(4) of this Rule 5", after "but" deleted "prior to the time that the appeal period begins to run under subsection (a)(1) of this Rule 5, i.e.", and after "appealed from" deleted "or the service of the notice of entry of judgment as the case may be" and inserted second sentence concerning date of filing of appeal filed before notice of entry of judgment; in (a)(4)(iv) substituted second sentence concerning no requirement for filing for "A notice of appeal filed before the disposition of any of the above motions shall have no effect" and substituted third sentence concerning filing date before disposition of motions for "A new notice of appeal must be filed within the prescribed time measured from the entry of the order disposing of the motion as provided above, or if applicable, from the date of the expiration of the 60-day period established in Rule 59(d), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. No additional fees shall be required for such filing"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

1995 Amendment: In subsection (a)(4), in two places, increased time for appeal from 45 days to 60 days. Amendment effective December 19, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Substituted (c) concerning extension of time for filing a notice of appeal for former (5) that read: "The district court, upon a showing of excusable neglect or good cause, may extend the time for filing a notice of appeal upon motion filed not later than 30 days after the expiration of the time prescribed by this Rule 5(a). Any such motion which is filed before expiration of the prescribed time may be ex parte unless the court otherwise requires. Notice of any such motion which is filed after expiration of the prescribed time shall be given to the other parties in accordance with local rules. No such extension shall exceed 30 days past such prescribed time or 10 days from the date of entry of the order granting the motion, whichever occurs later."

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, substituted present language (for text see 1987 MCA) for former Rule 5 that read: "The time within which an appeal from a judgment or an order must be taken shall be 30 days from the entry thereof, except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment, but if the state of Montana, or any political subdivision thereof, or an officer or agency thereof is a party the notice of appeal shall be filed within 60 days from the entry of the judgment or order or 60 days from the service of notice of the entry of judgment. If a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, any other party may file a notice of appeal within 7 days of the date on which the first notice of appeal was filed, or within the time otherwise provided by this rule, whichever period last expires.

The running of the time for filing a notice of appeal is suspended as to all parties by a timely motion filed in the district court by any party pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure hereafter enumerated in this sentence, and the full time for appeal fixed by this rule commences to run and is to be computed from mailing by the clerk of notice of the entry of any of the following orders made upon a timely motion under such rules: (1) granting or denying a motion for judgment under Rule 50(b); (2) granting or denying a motion under Rule 52(b) to amend or make additional findings of fact, whether or not an alteration of the judgment would be required if the motion is granted; (3) granting or denying a motion under Rule 59 to alter or amend the judgment; (4) denying a motion for a new trial under Rule 59.

Upon showing of excusable neglect, the district court may extend the time for filing the notice of appeal by any party for a period not to exceed 30 days from the expiration of the original time prescribed by this rule."

Amendments: The amendment of September 29, 1967, in the first sentence of the first paragraph, inserted "a judgment or" before "an order"; substituted "except that . . . the time" for "and the time within which an appeal from a judgment must be taken"; deleted "as provided in Rule 77(d) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure" after "entry of judgment"; and inserted "or any political subdivision thereof" after "state of Montana".

GENERAL

No Jurisdiction to Hear Criminal Appeal Filed More Than Sixty Days After Judgment — Deadline Not Extended by Mailing Extension Rule: Dill filed notice of an appeal of a judgment in a criminal action 63 days after judgment was entered. Rule 5(b), M.R.App.P., requires filing of an appeal within 60 days after entry of judgment. Dill contended that the deadline should be extended because Rule 21(e), M.R.App.P., allows an additional 3 days when service of a paper is made by mail. The District Court order was mailed to Dill, so Dill argued that the deadline was actually 63 days. The Supreme Court noted that under Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003), Rule 21(e) applies only to situations involving response-type pleadings, but when a deadline is required by court rule to be filed within a specified time, Rule 21(e) does not apply. Dill's criminal appeal was filed more than 60 days after judgment was entered, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear it, so the appeal was dismissed. Billings v. Dill, 2005 MT 134, 327 M 262, 113 P3d 302 (2005).

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The District Court erred in not applying Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

Failure of Counsel to Properly Withdraw or Preserve Direct Appeal — Denial of Postconviction Petition Erroneous: Adams filed a pro se petition for postconviction relief, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel because his original court-appointed attorney failed to move to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial and because his subsequently appointed trial counsel offered a lesser included instruction on aggravated assault to the jury and failed to appeal to the Supreme Court following Adams' conviction, despite Adams' request to do so. The petition was denied on grounds that Adams failed to file an appeal within 60 days of judgment as required by this rule, and Adams appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 46-8-103, appointed counsel is required to continue representation until final judgment, including appellate review, unless counsel is relieved by court order. Adams' counsel failed to comply with the requirements of 46-8-103 and effect a valid withdrawal, so the right to appeal was not preserved. When a defendant would have appealed but for counsel's deficient performance, the error is prejudicial. Thus, denial of Adams' petition for postconviction relief on procedural grounds was reversible error, and on remand, Adams was allowed to raise the issues that would have been raised on direct appeal but for counsel's abandonment of the appeal, as well as the issues raised in the petition for postconviction relief that were not previously raised. St. v. Adams, 2002 MT 202, 311 M 202, 54 P3d 50 (2002), following In re Petition of Hans, 1998 MT 7, 288 M 168, 958 P2d 1175 (1998), and St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Civil Procedure Rule That Notice of Entry of Order Be Served by Prevailing Party Inapplicable in Postconviction Relief Proceeding: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court addressed whether the notice of entry of judgment requirement under Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), applied to postconviction relief proceedings governed by Title 46, ch. 21. The court previously held in cases unrelated to postconviction proceedings that only when the notice is served does a prospective appellant's time for filing a notice of appeal begin to run. (See In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989), Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).) Here, Garner was convicted of forgery and felony theft and contended that because the state was the "prevailing party", notice should have been provided to him of the entry of the District Court's order and that because notice was not provided, the 60 days within which to appeal could not have expired because it never commenced to run. However, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply in a postconviction relief proceeding only when they are applicable and not inconsistent with postconviction statutes. Section 46-21-203 specifically requires that an appeal in postconviction proceedings be taken within 60 days of the entry of the order, which is inconsistent with the general notice rule in Rule 77(d). The Supreme Court applied the particular provision over the general provision and concluded that Rule 77(d) has no application in postconviction relief proceedings, so the 60-day filing deadline in 46-21-203 commences in all instances and without more upon entry of the court's order granting or denying postconviction relief. St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Authority to Defer Imposition of Sentence When Financial Condition Imposed — Failure to File Timely Appeal: Ingersoll filed for postconviction relief, arguing that the District Court lacked statutory authority to either impose consecutive deferred sentences or to defer imposition of his sentence in excess of 3 years. The Supreme Court found that the District Court had statutory authority at the time of sentencing under 46-18-201 to impose a deferred sentence for up to 6 years for Ingersoll's felony conviction for criminal mischief. Therefore, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, Ingersoll had 60 days after sentencing to appeal the court's authority to impose the sentence. Failure to file a timely appeal rendered Ingersoll's claim procedurally barred in a postconviction hearing. Ingersoll v. St., 1999 MT 215, 295 M 520, 986 P2d 403, 56 St. Rep. 843 (1999).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under this rule, on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P.: (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Notice or Motion Not Required to Correct Clerical Error in Order — Reentry of Judgment Not Required: The District Court entered judgment terminating parental rights but misspelled the father's first name. One week later, the court issued an amended order correcting the clerical error but made no other changes. The state did not notify appellant of entry of the amended judgment. Seventeen months after the termination of parental rights, appellant served notice of the amended order on the state and filed a notice of appeal from the amended order based on this rule, contending that the state never entered the amended judgment and that therefore the 60-day appeal period did not run until the amended judgment was entered by the appellant's attorney. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the District Court has inherent power at any time to correct clerical errors in its own judgments in order to ensure that the record speaks the truth and reflects the court's decision. A notice or motion is not required to rectify a clerical error, nor must the order that makes the correction be denominated a nunc pro tunc order. An error may also be corrected by the issuance of a new order that does not contain the clerical error and that entirely replaces the old order. In the present case, appellant was properly notified when judgment was entered and the original order was handed down. The state was not required to enter judgment again after the amended new order was issued or to notify appellant of the entry of the amended order in order to keep the appeal clock running. Because appellant failed to file a notice of appeal within 60 days of the entry of judgment, the appeal was dismissed as untimely. In re N.K.O. & Z.J.M., 277 M 122, 919 P2d 394, 53 St. Rep. 570 (1996), distinguishing El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704 (1986), Kenny v. Failure of State to Appeal — County Attorney Representation of State Position as Sufficient Opportunity for Hearing: Despite a District Court order in 1993, Sheppard was not admitted to phase II of the sexual offender program at the state prison. In 1995, Sheppard moved the District Court to order his enrollment in the program, serving the motion on the County Attorney who had prosecuted him for the underlying offense, but not on the state attorney for the Department of Corrections. The County Attorney appeared at the hearing on the motion and, pursuant to 7-4-2716, advanced the state's position that Sheppard was not eligible for the treatment program because he failed to accept responsibility for the crime. The court affirmed its 1993 order and ordered that Sheppard be allowed into the program. The state did not timely appeal the decision and thus was bound by the 1993 order. The representation by the County Attorney of the state's position at the hearing, coupled with the state's opportunity to address the issue at prior hearings, was adequate consideration. St. v. Sheppard, 277 M 76, 919 P2d 1057, 53 St. Rep. 548 (1996).

No Final Judgment When Conditions in Decree Anticipate Subsequent Modification — Appeal of Decree Not Limited: An original dissolution decree was made conditional on whether wife exercised her option to purchase the family business, leaving the rights and obligations of the parties with regard to maintenance, child support, and other matters uncertain until the purchase option period expired. After several court orders rendered her efforts to exercise the option unsuccessful, wife appealed 170 days after the original decree was entered, which husband contended was barred by the 30-day appeal limit in this rule. While noting that under 40-4-108 a decree of dissolution is final when entered, the Supreme Court nevertheless adopted the holding in Heater v. Boston & Mont. Corp., 84 M 500, 277 P 11 (1929), that the finality of a judgment depends to a great extent on its apparent purpose and whether it contains provisions for subsequent modification. Because of the conditional language in the original decree, it could not be considered final until the option period expired, and orders issued prior to that time were interlocutory in effect, absent a final determination of the parties' rights. Wife's appeal filed 6 days after expiration of the option period was therefore timely and subject to appellate review. In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78, 50 St. Rep. 945 (1993), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993).

Ineffective Appeal After Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Failure to Cure Results in Dismissal: On April 30, Grounds filed a motion to alter or amend a judgment partially granting her former husband's (Coward's) posttrial motions. On May 17, before Grounds' motion was ruled upon, Coward filed a notice of appeal from the disposition of his pretrial motions. The Supreme Court held that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the day the order was issued on his motions is not to be counted and that because the time for serving a motion to alter or amend judgment is less than the 11 days referred to in Rule 6(a), intervening Saturdays and Sundays are not counted. Therefore, the District Court could still rule on Grounds' motion. Under subsection (a)(4) of this rule, Coward filed a premature notice of appeal and should have waited until Grounds' motion was disposed of or considered denied. Failure of Coward to file a new notice of appeal after Grounds' motion was considered denied means that his own appeal must be dismissed. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Retention of District Court Jurisdiction After Filing of Appeal: A motion filed under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), must be determined by the District Court within 45 days. If the court fails to rule within that time, the motion is considered denied. Subsection (a)(1) of this rule requires the notice of appeal in civil cases to be filed within 30 days of judgment. However, if a motion is timely filed under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., the time for appeal runs from the entry of an order granting or denying the motion or, if applicable, from the time the motion is considered denied at the end of the 45-day period. If a notice of appeal is filed before the motion is disposed of, the notice of appeal has no effect. Semenza v. Hartelius, 248 M 294, 811 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 356 (1991).

Prevailing Party — Proper Notice of Entry of Judgment: The prevailing party in an action has the duty of serving notice of entry of judgment, together with a copy of the judgment or a description of the nature and amount of relief and damages granted, on all parties who have made an appearance. If proper notice of entry of judgment is never served, the time for filing a notice of appeal never begins to run. El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704, 43 St. Rep. 1575 (1986). See also Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Bond Not Jurisdictional: Respondent contended an appeal to the Supreme Court should be dismissed for failure to file an undertaking for costs on appeal as stated in Rule 6(a), M.R.App.P. Respondent argued that posting of bond is jurisdictional. The court noted that while under section 9733, R.C.M. 1935, posting a bond for costs on appeal was jurisdictional, that is no longer the case. The only step necessary to perfect an appeal is filing a notice of appeal within the time allowed by Rule 5, M.R.App.P. While the filing of a bond for costs may be required, failure to file the bond does not affect the validity of the appeal. Failure to effect timely filing of the bond should not, without more, result in dismissal. There were no other circumstances mandating dismissal in this case. Westmont Tractor Co. v. Leighty, 222 M 336, 722 P2d 617, 43 St. Rep. 1309 (1986).

Permissible to Provide Reasons for Certification After Appeal Filed: The failure of the District Court to provide its reasons for a proper certification until after the notice of appeal was filed does not render the certification defective as long as the guidelines of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., have been complied with. Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), overruling Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981).

Conditional Notice of Appeal: Appellant filed a conditional notice of appeal conditioned upon the Supreme Court finding that the judgment being appealed was a final judgment. Because the notice was conditioned upon an action to be taken at an undetermined time in the future, it was totally ineffective. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Dissolution of Marriage — Appeal From Original Judgment or Amending Order to Preserve Issues of Both: Respondent husband raised the issue of the scope of the wife's notice of appeal from the District Court's order amending the decree made on dissolution of the marriage. The husband argued that the appeal should be limited solely to issues arising from the amending order. The Supreme Court said that the contention ignored the interdependent nature of the amending order and the original decree. Finality of the original judgment had to await a determination of the lower court regarding motions to amend or alter. The intertwining of an amending order and an original judgment necessitated review of all issues contained in both, and thus an appeal from either incorporated all issues of both for review. This was in accord with the idea that technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the court. This was distinguished from the situation in which a party appealed from one order in a series or separate and distinct orders or from one part of a divisible judgment. An amending order and an original judgment could not be viewed as separate and distinct or divisible. The notice of appeal was therefore sufficient to preserve all issues for review. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981), distinguishing St. v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945) and Sperling v. Calfee, 7 M 514, 19 P 204 (1888), in accord with J.C. Penney and Woolworth v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Effect of Failure to Send Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: Under 72-3-318, the court may vacate orders in a formal probate proceeding within the time allowed for appeal. Since the clerk failed to send notice of entry of an order as required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., the time allowed for appeal had not begun to run and the party was still entitled to request the court to modify or vacate its order. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Sole Jurisdiction of Supreme Court to Determine Propriety of Appeal: Court was without jurisdiction to dismiss an appeal because Supreme Court had sole jurisdiction to determine propriety of appeal. A change of mind is not "excusable neglect". McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Commencement of Sixty-Day Period — Letter of Clerk of No Effect: Sixty-day allotted period in which to file an appeal commenced to run the day after motion for new trial was considered denied under the self-executing provision of Rule 59(d) which provides that a motion for a new trial which does not contain a notice of hearing and upon which no hearing is held is automatically denied 10 days after service; District Court Clerk's letter mailed 22 days after service of notice stating that the motion for new trial had been denied had no effect on the commencement of the 60-day period in which appellants had to file their appeal. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Amending Notice of Appeal: Amendment of a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court after the time period for notice has run is not possible. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

EXCUSABLE NEGLECT

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to subsection (a)(5) (now (c)) of this rule for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in Rules 59(d) and 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Counsel's Busy Schedule: Counsel's busy schedule is not a basis for a finding of excusable neglect. In re Marriage of Bahm, 225 M 331, 732 P2d 846, 44 St. Rep. 279 (1987).

Excusable Neglect — Appeal Timely Filed: On September 11, 1984, defendant filed a motion to set aside a default judgment. Since no hearing was held within 10 days as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., the motion was considered denied on September 21, 1984. Defendant filed a notice of appeal on October 26, 1984, 35 days after his motion was considered denied. Plaintiff contended the notice of appeal was not timely filed. However, the Supreme Court pointed out that upon a showing of excusable neglect, the District Court may extend the time for filing the notice of appeal by any party for a period not to exceed 30 days from the expiration of the original time prescribed by this Rule. Defendant was granted an extension on October 26, 1984, upon a showing of excusable neglect. The notice of appeal was filed within the 30-day extension of time authorized by this Rule; thus, it was timely filed. Milbank Mut. Ins. Co. v. Eagleman, 218 M 58, 705 P2d 1117, 42 St. Rep. 1393 (1985).

Motion to Vacate Considered Denied — Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: A motion to vacate judgment was served on May 22, 1981, was set for hearing and heard on June 30, 1981, and was denied on July 28, 1981. The defendant filed a notice of appeal on August 3, 1981. Because Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., requires a motion to vacate to be heard within 10 days after its service, it was considered denied on June 1, 1981. The notice of appeal, therefore, was not timely because it was not filed within 30 days of denial of the motion to vacate. Lerum v. Logue, 198 M 194, 645 P2d 418, 39 St. Rep. 873 (1982).

Excusable Neglect — Motion for Extension Properly Denied: The reasoning of Winchell v. Lortscher, 377 P2d 247 (8th Cir. 1967), applies to the present case. Plaintiff's attorney had notice shortly after the judgment was entered. Plaintiff actually knew that the case had been decided against him. He knew that he had 30 days from the entry of judgment within which to file an appeal, and yet he waited approximately 8 weeks to contact his attorney. Given these factors, plus the fact that the attorney was served with the required notice, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding there was no excusable neglect. Neuringer v. Wortman, 186 M 298, 607 P2d 543 (1980).

Change of Mind: In determining what constitutes "excusable neglect", court held affidavit which reflected appellant decided not to appeal and then, after time for filing a notice of appeal lapsed, decided to appeal; this change of mind is not an extraordinary case for which an extension of time to file an appeal is allowed. McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), followed in In re Marriage of Bahm, 225 M 331, 732 P2d 846, 44 St. Rep. 279 (1987).

TIMELY FILING OF NOTICE

Appeal of Appointment of Personal Representative Not Timely: The District Court appointed a son as personal representative of his mother's estate and ordered that letters of administration be issued to him, and his sister appealed the appointment. Pursuant to In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994), the Supreme Court reviewed the appointment to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law. Under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., an order granting letters of administration is appealable, but this rule provides that an aggrieved party has 30 days from the date of entry of an order to file a notice of appeal. By the time that the sister appealed, her brother had been personal representative of the estate for 14 months, so the appeal was not timely. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004).

Conversion of Probate Proceeding From Informal to Formal Proceeding and Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notices: When the personal representative of an estate in informal proceedings petitioned for judicial approval of his final account and for the settlement and distribution of the estate, the proceeding was converted into a formal proceeding for those purposes. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal proceedings. The bank, which was a creditor of the estate and filed a claim against the estate, was entitled to notice of the hearing on the petition and entitled to an opportunity to appear and contest. Because the notice was not given, the court's decree was void and reversed as to the bank. The bank was also entitled to notice of the entry of the formal estate decree, and because that notice was not given, the 30-day time period for the bank to appeal did not run and the bank's appeal, filed after that period, was timely. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002).

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P., precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of Rule 17, M.R.App.P. Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), Rule 17, M.R.App.P., and 27-25-103 require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to this rule, a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Petition for Postconviction Relief Both Procedurally and Time Barred: Wells pleaded guilty to felony assault, and the District Court entered its written judgment and sentence on January 2, 1998. Wells did not appeal, and the time for filing an appeal expired 60 days later, on March 3, 1998, which became the date of final conviction. In order to come within the 1-year period for a petition for postconviction relief, Wells needed to file by March 3, 1999, but the petition was not filed until December 22, 1999, when Wells asserted a double jeopardy claim for weapons enhancement based on St. v. Guillaume, 1999 MT 29, 293 M 224, 975 P2d 312 (1999). The District Court dismissed the petition as untimely. Wells argued on appeal that the 1-year limitation is not a jurisdictional limitation, but rather a statute of limitations subject to equitable tolling, and contended that a tolling should be applied to the time period that Wells was incarcerated in New Mexico without adequate legal assistance. The Supreme Court recalled the holding in St. v. Rosales, 2000 MT 89, 299 M 226, 999 P2d 313 (2000), when it was held that the postconviction statute of limitations is indeed a jurisdictional limit on litigation to be waived only if there is a clear miscarriage of justice and defendant alleges newly discovered evidence that defendant did not commit the offense. Wells presented no new evidence of innocence. Further, Wells could have raised the Guillaume claim on direct appeal, but did not. Wells' petition was thus both procedurally and time-barred. St. v. Wells, 2001 MT 55, 304 M 329, 21 P3d 610 (2001), overruled in St. v. Whitehorn, 2002 MT 54, 309 M 63, 43 P3d 922 (2002), to the extent that Wells was barred from raising a double jeopardy claim in a petition for postconviction relief pursuant to 46-21-105 for failing to raise the issue on direct appeal.

Lack of Objection to Expert Testimony on Hedonic Damages — Testimony Allowed: In order to preserve an objection to the admission of evidence for purposes of appeal, the objecting party must make a timely objection and state specific grounds for the objection. To be timely, an objection must be made as soon as the grounds for the objection become apparent. Here, defendant became aware at least 1 year before trial that plaintiff intended to introduce expert testimony regarding plaintiff's hedonic damages for loss of enjoyment of life, but failed to file a motion in limine at that time seeking to have the evidence excluded. Defendant had another opportunity to object to introduction of the evidence when the District Court issued its pretrial order listing witnesses and exhibits to be used at trial, but defendant failed to object until the second day of trial. Thus, the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert testimony because of the lack of a timely and specific objection or in denying defendant's motion for a new trial on grounds that the admission of the evidence resulted in an unfair trial and excessive damages. Hunt v. K-Mart Corp., 1999 MT 125, 294 M 444, 981 P2d 275, 56 St. Rep. 503 (1999), following Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

No Distinction Between Civil and Criminal Appellants With Regard to Filing of Timely Notice of Appeal: Roullier neglected to file notice of appeal of his criminal case in the District Court within the 60-day period required by subsection (b) of this rule. The state cited the lack in subsection (b) of a provision, similar to that for civil cases in subsection (a) of this rule, that permits notice of an appeal mistakenly filed in the Supreme Court to be considered filed in the District Court on the date that it was filed in the Supreme Court and contended therefore that timely filing in the Supreme Court was of no significance and that the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the merits of Roullier's mistakenly filed appeal. Citing an interpretation of identical Rule 4, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, in Brannan v. U.S., 993 F2d 709 (9th Cir. 1993), the Supreme Court found no rational basis for distinguishing between civil and criminal appellants in this procedural regard. Thus, when a criminal appellant has mistakenly filed a notice in the Supreme Court but has done so within the 60-day period established in this rule and has complied with the rules in substantive respects, the criminal appellant will be given the same opportunity as the civil appellant to have the appeal determined on its merits. St. v. Roullier, 1999 MT 37, 293 M 304, 977 P2d 970, 56 St. Rep. 157 (1999).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under this rule, on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P.: (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Criminal Case — Court Modification of Sentence — No Extension of Time to Appeal: In a 1995 suspended sentence order, the defendant was ordered to pay restitution and was restricted from entering Cascade County. When the court modified the sentence in 1997 to order additional payment of restitution, the defendant appealed the order to remain out of Cascade County. The Supreme Court held that the modification of restitution did not reimpose the conditions of the suspended sentence and did not create a new sentence from which the defendant could appeal. St. v. Richards, 285 M 322, 948 P2d 240, 54 St. Rep. 1172 (1997).

Time Limit for Filing Cross-Appeal Jurisdictional, Not Discretionary With Court: The respondent requested permission to file a cross-appeal 52 days after the first notice of appeal was filed by the appellant. The Supreme Court ruled that the time limit for filing a cross-appeal in Montana is jurisdictional and that the respondent's failure to file the cross-appeal within the 14-day limit precludes the Supreme Court from considering the motion for leave to file a cross-appeal. Joseph Eve & Co. v. Allen, 284 M 511, 945 P2d 897, 54 St. Rep. 987 (1997).

Motion for Reconsideration Held Not to Be Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Subsection (a)(1) of This Rule Held Applicable — Notice of Appeal Filed Before Receipt of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Premature: In an action to enforce the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the Shieldses filed a motion for reconsideration shortly after the District Court dismissed their first amended complaint. Before the District Court ruled on the motion for reconsideration, the Shieldses filed a notice of appeal. The defendants claimed that the motion for reconsideration should be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and that because subsection (a)(4) of this rule specifies that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a motion to alter or amend judgment has no effect until the motion to alter or amend judgment is disposed of, the Shieldses' notice of appeal was ineffective. The Supreme Court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not one of the motions provided for or authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court reviewed the substance of the motion for reconsideration to determine whether, under Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the motion could be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment and held that the motion could not be so treated. Because the motion could not be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment, the time for the Shieldses to file a notice of appeal was governed by subsection (a)(1) of this rule and not by subsection (a)(4). Under subsection (a)(1), the Shieldses had 30 days from the time of notice of entry of judgment under Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), in which to file their notice of appeal. However, the Supreme Court also noted that there was nothing in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure that prevented the Shieldses from filing their notice of appeal earlier than provided under Rule 77(d), and for that reason, the Supreme Court held the filing of the notice of appeal to be effective. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), for additional briefing time and must rule on a Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Time for Filing Appeal When Required Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Made: As the prevailing party, defendants were required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to serve plaintiffs with notice of entry of judgment. Under this rule, when such a notice is required, the time for filing a notice of appeal is within 30 days after service of the notice of entry of judgment. Because defendants failed to serve plaintiffs with a notice of entry of judgment, the 30 days never began to run. Therefore, notice of appeal filed on November 8, 1995, from an order filed on August 29, 1995, was timely. Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364, 53 St. Rep. 1024 (1996).

Judgment as Including Sentence — Sentence Not Strictly Premised on Punishment: A defendant has 60 days under subsection (b) of this rule to appeal a final judgment. Although prior to the 1991 enactment of 46-1-202, "sentence" was interpreted as being the same as "punishment", 46-1-202 now defines a sentence as any judicial disposition of a criminal proceeding upon a plea, verdict, or finding of guilt. The judicial disposition is itself a sentence regardless of whether actual punishment is deferred or imposed immediately. This broader definition applies to deferment cases, but in double jeopardy cases, the narrower meaning premised on the punishment factor still applies. Therefore, a judgment that includes a deferred sentence is final for purposes of appeal, and an appeal filed more that 60 days after sentencing was dismissed as untimely. St. v. Rice, 275 M 81, 910 P2d 245, 53 St. Rep. 48 (1996), followed in St. v. Woods, 286 M 355, 951 P2d 981, 54 St. Rep. 1445 (1997), and Davis v. St., 2004 MT 112, 321 M 118, 88 P3d 1285 (2004).

Child Custody Dispositional Hearing — Timely Filed Notice of Appeal: In a dispositional hearing on petitions by the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and former foster parents for permanent custody of a child, the District Court dismissed the foster parents' petition and mailed denial on August 25. The foster parents filed an objection and motion to amend the court's order, which was considered denied 45 days later after the court failed to rule on the motion. Notice of appeal, which was filed on November 26, was well within the 60-day period provided for in this rule. When a motion is made to alter or amend a judgment pursuant to Rule 52 or Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the time for filing a notice of appeal runs from the entry of an order in which the motion is denied or from the time that the motion is considered denied at the expiration of the 45-day period. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994).

Calendaring Error — "Good Cause" and "Excusable Neglect" Properly Applied to Allow Late Filing: Following judgment, Dvoraks made a motion for extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. The motion was made after expiration of the 30-day limit provided in this rule. The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order, arguing that the District Court should not have found either good cause or excusable neglect based upon Dvoraks's counsel's failure to properly calendar the motion. Citing Pioneer Inv. Serv. Co. v. Brunswick Associates Ltd. Partnership, 507 US 380, 123 L Ed 2d 74, 113 S Ct 1489 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly construed the rule and had more opportunity to judge the good faith of counsel and prejudice to Dvoraks. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Grant of Motion for Extension of Time for Appeal as Appealable Order: The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order. Dvoraks claimed that the order was not appealable because it was not specifically set forth in Rule 1, M.R.App.P. Citing Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556 (1993), the Supreme Court held that an order extending the time to file a notice of appeal was a "special order made after final judgment" within the language of Rule 1, M.R.App.P. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Rule 5(c) "Good Cause" Construed — Extension of Time Because of Calendaring Error Properly Allowed: The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order. Northwest argued that the District Court should have construed the "good cause" standard of subsection (c) of this rule in a manner similar to the construction of Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure given in Oreg. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 680 F2d 1300 (9th Cir. 1982), in which the court held that "good cause" applies only to motions made within the 30-day limit of the rule. Citing Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229 (1991), the Supreme Court rejected Northwest's argument and allowed the filing of the motion for extension made after the 30-day limit. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Denial of Motion to Set Aside Default as Final Judgment — Appeal Timely Filed: An order made after final judgment setting aside or refusing to vacate a default judgment is a special order that may be considered by the Supreme Court on appeal. During a hearing on a motion to set aside default, the District Court denied the motion, thus making a final determination of the parties' rights. An appeal perfected and filed within 30 days of dismissal of the motion was timely. In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), or Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). A notice of appeal filed under this rule prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to subsection (a)(5) (now (c)) of this rule for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in Rules 59(d) and 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Failure to Perfect Appeal Within Time Limits as Precluding Jurisdiction: Failure to perfect an appeal within the time limits provided by law prevents the Supreme Court from acquiring jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. First Sec. Bank of Havre v. Harmon, 255 M 168, 841 P2d 521, 49 St. Rep. 955 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001). See also St. v. Shockley, 2001 MT 180, 306 M 196, 31 P3d 350 (2001).

Extension of Time to File Notice Granted — Notice Timely Filed: After a District Court jury awarded the plaintiff employee judgment, the employer, Semitool, Inc., filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that the notice of appeal was timely filed because Semitool had filed and the District Court had granted a motion to extend the time for filing its notice. Under this rule, the time for filing the notice may be extended by the District Court if a motion to extend is filed within 30 days of expiration of the time for filing the notice and good cause is shown. It was unclear to counsel for Semitool whether counsel's posttrial motions had been denied from the bench or would be denied later in writing. The District Court found this to be good cause for extension of the time to file and granted the motion for extension. Filing within the extended time period therefore perfected the appeal. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Jurisdiction When Notice of Appeal Prematurely Filed: In order to prevent taking jurisdiction away from a District Court prior to the disposition of all matters before it, subsection (a)(4) of this rule provides that a prematurely filed notice of appeal has no effect. Therefore, a notice of appeal that is filed too early does not vest jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, but rather leaves jurisdiction in the District Court. Plains & Prairie Implement, Inc. v. Ag-Management & Associates, 243 M 235, 794 P2d 332, 47 St. Rep. 933 (1990).

More Than One "Prevailing Party" — Effect of Failure to Timely File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Appeal Allowed: Where the plaintiff was successful in his claim for conversion and the defendant was successful in his counterclaim for trespass, both parties were considered to have prevailed and both parties were responsible for the failure to technically comply with the filing requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The defendant could not enforce technical compliance with the filing requirements of Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., against the plaintiff when he had not complied with the same requirements. In this case, the time limitations for filing an appeal began to run on the date the plaintiff filed a notice of entry of judgment, 71 days after judgment on the posttrial motions. The appeal, filed on the same day, was timely filed, and the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied in toto M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court and because, in his official capacity, the Attorney General may not appeal a decision that is within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. The latter appeal being invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

Notice of Denial of Motion Not Required — Appeal Period: Appellant's posttrial motion for a new trial was considered denied upon failure of the District Court to rule on it for 45 days, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. No notice of such denial is required under Rule 5, M.R.Civ.P. The 30-day period for appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P., begins to run upon expiration of the 45-day period of Rule 59(d). Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Notice Timely Filed: Under this Rule a party has 30 days to file a notice of appeal after a motion to set aside a default judgment is denied or after denial by operation of law. In the present case, the motion to set aside the default judgment was filed on September 14, 1984, under Rules 55(c) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., provides that motions filed pursuant to Rule 60(b) shall be heard and determined within the times provided by Rule 59. That Rule requires that a hearing on the motion shall be had within 10 days after it has been served. Here the motion was filed on September 14 and the hearing set for September 17, well within the 10-day limit. The court initially continued the hearing to October 11, which was within the 30-day limit prescribed by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The court then continued the hearing beyond the 30-day limit to November 26. As a result, the motion to vacate the default judgment was considered denied on October 17. The appellant then filed the notice of appeal on October 24, well within the 30-day period under this Rule. The notice of appeal was timely filed. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Timely Hearing on Motion to Amend — Appeal Timely: A hearing on a motion to amend a judgment was within the 40 days which Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), allows for such hearing. The notice of appeal filed under this rule was filed exactly 30 days from the denial of the motion for amendment of the judgment. Therefore, the notice of appeal was timely filed. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Late Appeal — New Grounds for Argument Below — Failure to Argue on Appeal: The merits of appellants' arguments in support of removal of personal representative of an estate could not be considered on appeal from denial of final order denying motion to remove when: (1) since the order was final and appealable, it had to be appealed within 30 days of notice of its entry; (2) appeal was filed 34 days after notice of entry of the order; and (3) though appellants had, within the 30 days prior to their notice of appeal, filed a second petition for removal that raised a new ground for removal, appellants did not argue that failure to raise the ground earlier was excusable because of inadvertence, excusable neglect, or newly discovered evidence, and the lower court found appellants had earlier been in possession of all the facts. The order was conclusive as to all matters that could have been raised under the issues raised in the original petition for removal. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

Order Denying Venue Change Motion — Time Period for Appeal Calculated From Time of Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment: This rule provides that ordinarily an appeal from a judgment or an order must be filed within 30 days of its entry. In this case the order denying defendant's motion to change venue was entered on December 8, 1982, and notice of appeal was not filed until April 25, 1983. However, the rule further provides that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., the 30 days are to be counted from the date of service of the notice of entry of judgment. Here notice of the denial of the motion was given to defendant on April 4, 1983, so defendant's notice of appeal was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Technical Compliance With Rule on Notice of Entry of Judgment Required: It is the filing of the notice of entry of judgment that begins the running of the time limitations for filing a notice of appeal. Even though findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a decree were mailed to the parties by the Clerk of Court, no notice of entry of judgment was filed, and the time for filing a notice of appeal did not begin to run at that time. Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1031 (1983).

Motion Objecting to Costs — No Suspension of Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Motion to Amend Judgment Untimely Filed — Expiration of Time for Appeal: After the plaintiff and defendant stipulated to costs in a quiet title action, an amended judgment was entered by the District Court on October 29, 1981, but on November 13, the plaintiff filed a motion to amend judgment. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the motion to amend judgment was not timely filed, the motion did not suspend the running of the time for appeal, and that because the running of the time for filing an appeal had not been suspended, the notice of appeal was filed too late and the court lacked jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Motion to Amend Judgment Considered Denied Before Hearing — Untimely Appeal: Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982). See also Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Served by Mail — Effect on Time for Appeal:

The final notice of entry of judgment was mailed on November 5. This rule required an appeal to be taken within 30 days after the service of the notice of entry of judgment. A notice of appeal was filed on December 7. Although more than 30 days had passed, allowing 3 days for the mailing of the notice of entry of judgment, the notice of appeal was filed within the 30-day requirement. Rudio v. Yellowstone Merchandising Corp., 200 M 537, 652 P2d 1163, 39 St. Rep. 1923 (1982).

Where, following a judgment for the defendants, one of whom was the city of Lewistown, the defendants served notice of entry of the judgment upon the plaintiffs by mail on June 13, that notice, for purposes of calculating the 60-day time limit for appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P., became effective on June 16 by operation of Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. A notice of appeal filed on August 13 was therefore timely filed 2 days before the 60-day time limit had expired. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Util. Builders, Inc., 170 M 292, 552 P2d 1100 (1976).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Late Entry of Order Granting Extension: The time for filing the notice of appeal from District Court may, upon a showing of excusable neglect, be extended for up to 30 days. However, that period is added to the initial 30 days, plus 3 days for mailing. Even though the Clerk of the Court neglected to send notice of entry of judgment to defendant's cocounsel in Missouri, which may have caused confusion constituting excusable neglect, the order granting an extension of time was not even entered until after the 63-day period, was beyond the limits of Rule 5, M.R.App.P., and was therefore erroneous. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Agra-Steel Corp., 193 M 437, 632 P2d 330, 38 St. Rep. 1257 (1981), followed in In re M.B., L.B., & F.B., 282 M 150, 935 P2d 1129, 54 St. Rep. 291 (1997). See also St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court — Starting Point for the Period for Filing of Appeal: For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the period for filing notice of appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 (now repealed) shall be the starting point for the period for filing the notice of appeal. In this case the court therefore had jurisdiction over the appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports but consolidated for purposes of appeal with second case filed by plaintiff against defendant and reported at 678 P2d 661 (1984)).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Modification Order: The lower court order modified the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under Rule 5, M.R.App.P., and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Time for Appeal Following Motion for New Trial Made Without Hearing — Time Limits of Rules Jurisdictional Regardless of Stipulation: Where, following a judgment against the defendant for damages caused by fraudulent misrepresentation and breach of warranty, the defendant and plaintiff orally agreed to waive the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, filed on April 23, and denied by the court on May 15, the defendant's notice of appeal filed on June 12 was untimely and the plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal was granted. Because no hearing was held on the motion for a new trial, the motion was considered denied, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., 10 days after it was made and the time for appeal expired on June 2. The defendant's argument that the stipulation meant the motion for a new trial would be considered submitted "at the completion of briefing" cannot extend the time for the court's ruling, as the time limits imposed by the rules of procedure are mandatory and the parties may not by stipulation confer jurisdiction on the court beyond the time provided by the rules. Marvel Brute Steel Building, Inc. v. Bass, 189 M 480, 616 P2d 380, 37 St. Rep. 1670 (1980), distinguished in In re Marriage of Bryant, 276 M 317, 916 P2d 115, 53 St. Rep. 412 (1996).

Supreme Court — Acquisition of Appellate Jurisdiction: The time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. An appellant has a duty to perfect an appeal in the manner and within the time limits provided by law. Absent such compliance, the Montana Supreme Court does not acquire jurisdiction to entertain and determine an appeal. Price v. Zunchich, 188 M 230, 612 P2d 1296 (1980), followed in Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 234 M 466, 764 P2d 471, 45 St. Rep. 2054 (1988), and in Anderson v. Bashey, 241 M 252, 787 P2d 304, 47 St. Rep. 200 (1990).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Extended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6 appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Notice of Appeal on Default Judgment: The court dismissed the appeal and stated it had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal because the notice of appeal was not timely filed pursuant to Rule 5, M.R.App.P. It was filed more than 5 months after the entry of a default judgment. No notice of entry of judgment was served on appellants, and no such service is required. Snyder v. Gommenginger, 183 M 375, 600 P2d 171 (1979).

Thirty-Day Limit Not Affected by Petition for Attorney's Fees Filed After Its Expiration: Appellant had 30 days to appeal after he was served with notice of entry of an order denying his petition to modify a decree of dissolution, and the filing of a petition by respondent almost 3 months later for attorney's fees incurred by her in defense of appellant's petition did not affect the 30-day limit. McDonald v. McDonald, 183 M 312, 599 P2d 356 (1979), followed in Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 234 M 466, 764 P2d 471, 45 St. Rep. 2054 (1988).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the workers' compensation court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of Rule 5, M.R.App.P., which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P., are automatically put into play adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P., comes into play extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979). See also Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 234 M 466, 764 P2d 471, 45 St. Rep. 2054 (1988).

Second Motion for New Trial — Filing Deadline Not Suspended: The filing of a second motion for a new trial after denial of the first motion does not suspend the time for filing the notice of appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made; thus the court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978), followed in Granite Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 204 M 10, 662 P2d 1312, 40 St. Rep. 630 (1983).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under Rule 5, M.R.App.P. Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Series of Proceedings — Jurisdiction on Appeal: The Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to review a series of legal proceedings surrounding a divorce decree other than the last decision and judgment because the appellant failed to give timely notice of appeal of the prior proceedings. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Extension of Time Limit: A notice of appeal filed 53 days after judgment was entered was timely because the court granted an extension based on an affidavit signed by defense attorney alleging personal illness. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal Extension by District Court: The Supreme Court has no authority to permit an appeal to be taken after the expiration of the time fixed by Rule 5, M.R.App.P. If an extension of time is sought, the proper forum to make such a request is the District Court. An appellant must request any extension no later than 60 days from service of notice of entry of judgment. Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 565 P2d 311 (1977), followed in In re M.B., L.B., & F.B., 282 M 150, 935 P2d 1129, 54 St. Rep. 291 (1997). See also St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Order to Vacate Order Changing Venue: Defendant's appeal of the order denying his motion to vacate an order changing venue should be dismissed since an order to vacate is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P., and if treated as an appeal from the order for change of venue, it was not timely made. Myskewitz v. Berg, 173 M 46, 566 P2d 64 (1977).

Parties Entitled to Sixty-Day Period: When a party to an action is a state officer, state agency (including a municipality), or the State, any party may file notice of appeal within the 60-day limit of the rule, irrespective of whether or not State, political subdivision, or agency is appellant. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Util. Bldrs., Inc., 170 M 292, 552 P2d 1100 (1976).

Untimely Appeal From Motion for New Trial: When motion for new trial was filed without notice of hearing, the motion was automatically denied 10 days after service notwithstanding letter from clerk notifying movant of denial on some other date. Appeal filed later than 60 days after denial of the motion was untimely. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Extension of Time — Notice: An order granting appellant additional time "to effect the composition of the record on appeal" was not an extension of time for filing notice of appeal. It is not necessary to serve a copy of the judgment on adverse party. Jackson v. Tinker, 161 M 51, 504 P2d 692 (1972).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Petition for Postconviction Relief Time-Barred Absent Showing of Exceptions: Sanchez was convicted of deliberate homicide and sentenced to life in prison. Sentence was imposed on November 14, 1997, and Sanchez had 60 days to appeal. Sanchez filed no direct appeal, and sentence was final on January 13, 1998, for purposes of postconviction proceedings. Sanchez first filed for postconviction relief on August 31, 2000, and filed an amended petition for postconviction relief on December 5, 2002. Although 46-21-102 allowed 5 years for filing for postconviction relief when the crime was committed, the section was amended in 1997 and allowed only a 1-year period for filing when Sanchez's conviction became final and when the petitions were filed. Thus, Sanchez's first filing was 1 1/2 years late, and the amended petition was nearly 4 years late. Absent a showing that any exceptions to the statutory time bar applied, such as newly discovered evidence or that a miscarriage of justice occurred, Sanchez's petitions for postconviction relief were properly denied as untimely. Sanchez v. St., 2004 MT 9, 319 M 226, 86 P3d 1 (2004).

Failure to Take Appeal — Supervisory Control Inapplicable: Where the plaintiff failed to take his appeal within the statutory time limitation he could not obtain relief by a Writ of Review or a Writ of Supervisory Control. McVay v. McVay, 128 M 31, 270 P2d 393 (1954).

Appeal Proper — Supervisory Control Inapplicable: An application for a Writ of Supervisory Control will be denied since an appeal may be taken from a special order made after judgment which modifies a judgment theretofore entered and adversely affects the rights of a party to the litigation. State ex rel. Ferris v. District Court, 126 M 623, 255 P2d 687 (1953).

Status of Findings and Conclusions: The findings of fact and conclusions of law in an equity case do not constitute the judgment but are merely the foundation for the judgment within the meaning of this section. Hence, where respondents did not perfect their cross-appeal until more than 6 months after the filing of the findings, but within 6 months after the filing of the judgment, their appeal was timely and not subject to a motion for dismissal. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Time for Cross-Appeal: Subdivision 1 of this section applies where a respondent takes a cross-appeal under section 93-8023, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 14, M.R.App.P.), for the purpose of having rulings made against him during the course of the trial reviewed. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Findings and Conclusions — Time Limits Inapplicable: Where the trial court, in a probate proceeding, filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law 3 weeks before entry of the decree, stating in effect that formal decree would follow (a practice commended as enabling the parties to move for amendment of findings and conclusions before entry of decree), the statutory period for appeal ran from the date of entry of the decree and not from the time the findings and conclusions were filed. In re Toomey's Estate, 96 M 489, 31 P2d 729 (1934).

Appeal From Minute Order Proper: On July 1 the District Court made an order, entered in the minutes, vacating one confirming a sale of real property belonging to an estate. On July 12 a formal order was made and filed. On September 7 an appeal was taken from the latter order. The order of July 1 was the order from which the appeal should have been taken. The order made on July 12 did not alter or amend the former one nor extend the time within which the appeal could be taken. Therefore, the appeal was not taken within the 60-day period prescribed by subdivision 4 and was vulnerable to a motion to dismiss. In re McCracken's Estate, 87 M 342, 287 P 941 (1930).

Effect of Failure to Appeal Within Time Provided: Where a creditor of an insolvent bank by order of court is denied a preference of payment of his claim but fails to appeal therefrom within the time allowed by this section, the order becomes final and the propriety of the court's order is not subject to review on appeal. State ex rel. Rankin v. Wibaux County Bank, 85 M 532, 281 P 341 (1929), followed in Colstrip Faculty Ass'n, MEA/NEA v. Trustees, School District No. 19, 251 M 309, 824 P2d 1008, 49 St. Rep. 43 (1992).

Multiple Parties — Parties Affected by Appeal: Where only one of a number of creditors of an insolvent bank, grouped under a certain class, appealed within 60 days from an order of the District Court refusing them a preference right to payment of their claims, and secured a reversal thereof as to her, the order as to the nonappealing claimants became final, and the action of the court in thereafter reinstating them as preferred creditors and prorating the money available in the bank for that purpose among them and the successful appellant was error. State ex rel. Rankin v. Banking Corp., 80 M 49, 257 P 1020 (1927).

Dismissal of Appeal: An appeal from a final judgment, not taken within the time provided for appeal will be dismissed. Hodson v. O'Keeffe, 71 M 322, 229 P 722 (1924); Wilson v. Norris, 43 M 454, 117 P 100 (1911); Reynolds v. Fitzpatrick, 40 M 593, 107 P 902 (1910); Kaufman v. Cooper, 38 M 6, 98 P 504 (1908); Ramsey v. Burns, 24 M 234, 61 P 129 (1900); Gallagher v. Cornelius, 23 M 27, 57 P 447 (1899).

School Superintendent Decisions — Time for Appeal: No time having been fixed by statute within which an appeal may be taken from the decision of a County Superintendent of Schools, and in the absence of regulations by the state superintendent with relation thereto, the appeal may be taken within a reasonable time after the making of the decision, a limitation of 6 months being deemed reasonable. State ex rel. School District v. Trumper, 69 M 468, 222 P 1064 (1924).

Amendment of Judgment — Time for Appeal: Where, in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, an erroneous description of the land in the judgment was not corrected until some 70 days after its entry, the property rights of the defendant thus not becoming affected until after amendment, the rule that an order amending a judgment after entry is a special order after final judgment, and therefore appealable only within 60 days, does not apply, but the computation of time within which to perfect an appeal from the judgment dates from the time the amendment was made. St. Bank of New Salem v. Schultze, 63 M 410, 209 P 599 (1922).

Failure to File Timely Notice: This note reviews the decision of St. v. Frodsham, 139 M 222, 362 P2d 413 (1961), in which the Supreme Court held that failure of counsel to file a notice of appeal within the time limits required deprives the court of jurisdiction but that the court would consider the merits in the interests of justice. 23 Mont. Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

Rules 7 and 8 of the Federal Draft contain provisions for appeal bonds and the stay of judgments and orders. These provisions are not followed in the rule. Rather Rules 6, 7 and 8 hereof are substituted. These provisions are believed to be more in accord with state practice and to better fit into Montana statutes than do the provisions of the Federal Draft. This rule supersedes R.C.M. 1947, sections 93-8005, 93-8006, 93-8012, 93-8015, and compares with Federal Rule 73(c) and (e).

The amount of the undertaking has remained at $300 since 1895, and the rule would increase it to $500. Also, express provision is made for corporate sureties as may be authorized by law. Such authorization is found in R.C.M. 1947, section 93-8711 [33-26-101(part), MCA].

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendment makes the filing of a bond or providing other security discretionary with the judge, the same as provided in Rule 7 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, rather than mandatory as provided heretofore.

Compiler's Comments

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, substituted present language (for text see 1987 MCA) for former Rule 6 which read: "Undertaking for costs on appeal. (a) [Form of undertaking—time for filing]. Within 10 days after service of notice of appeal an undertaking for costs on appeal shall be filed in the district court, or a deposit of the money in the amount thereof be made with the clerk of the district court to abide the event of the appeal, or the undertaking be waived by the adverse party in writing. The undertaking must be executed on the part of the appellant by at least 2 sureties, or by a corporate surety as may be authorized by law, to the effect that the appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him on the appeal, or on the dismissal thereof, not exceeding $500. If the undertaking on appeal is not filed within the time specified, or if the undertaking filed is found insufficient, and if the action is not yet docketed with the supreme court, an undertaking may be filed at such time before the action is so docketed as may be fixed by the district court. After the action is so docketed, application for leave to file an undertaking may be made only in the supreme court. The undertaking for costs herein provided may be combined in a single document with a supersedeas bond under Rule 7."

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

Bond for Costs on Appeal May Not Include Attorney Fees: When allowed by law, attorney fees that a party incurs on appeal may be recovered by that party if that party prevails on appeal. Section 39-2-915 provides that if a party in a wrongful discharge proceeding declines an offer to arbitrate and then loses in court, the party that offered to arbitrate is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred after the offer was made, including those incurred on appeal. However, for purposes of determining the amount of a bond or security under this rule, a District Court may not include anticipated attorney fees for the future defense of an appeal as part of the anticipated costs on appeal. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 285 M 188, 948 P2d 211, 54 St. Rep. 1104 (1997).

Appeal From Unlawful Detainer Judgment — Bond Based on Amount of Taxes, Appeal Expenses, and Inability to Invest Land Sale Proceeds: In a tenant's appeal from summary judgment for the landowner in an unlawful detainer action, the only factor preventing the closing of a sale to a third party was the tenant's refusal to leave the property. The District Court properly and reasonably calculated the amount of a supersedeas bond that it required the tenant to post based on the interest lost from the owner's inability to reinvest sale proceeds, the amount of taxes on the land, and appeal expenses. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Purpose of Supersedeas Bond: The purpose of requiring an appellant to post a supersedeas bond as a condition to staying execution on a judgment is to secure the rights of the judgment creditor during the appeal process. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Test for Review of Amount of Supersedeas Bond: In reviewing the amount of a supersedeas bond, the Supreme Court determines whether the lower court acted arbitrarily without using conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Bond Not Jurisdictional: Respondent contended an appeal to the Supreme Court should be dismissed for failure to file an undertaking for costs on appeal as stated in Rule 6(a), M.R.App.P. Respondent argued that posting of bond is jurisdictional. The court noted that while under section 9733, R.C.M. 1935, posting a bond for costs on appeal was jurisdictional, that is no longer the case. The only step necessary to perfect an appeal is filing a notice of appeal within the time allowed by Rule 5, M.R.App.P. While the filing of a bond for costs may be required, failure to file the bond does not affect the validity of the appeal. Failure to effect timely filing of the bond should not, without more, result in dismissal. There were no other circumstances mandating dismissal in this case. Westmont Tractor Co. v. Leighty, 222 M 336, 722 P2d 617, 43 St. Rep. 1309 (1986).

Supreme Court — Acquisition of Appellate Jurisdiction: The time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. An appellant has a duty to perfect an appeal in the manner and within the time limits provided by law. Absent such compliance, the Montana Supreme Court does not acquire jurisdiction to entertain and determine an appeal. Price v. Zunchich, 188 M 230, 612 P2d 1296 (1980).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

GENERAL

Governmental Entities — Undertaking for Costs on Appeal: The Division of Motor Vehicles, being a governmental entity, is not required to file an undertaking for costs on appeal of the denial of its motion for rehearing. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985).

Receivership Proceedings — Supersedeas Bond Required: Where the District Court appointed a receiver to preserve property pendente lite, from which order plaintiff appealed, he was not entitled to a stay without a supersedeas bond. The bond described by this section was not enough. Demos v. Doepker, 115 M 183, 141 P2d 372 (1943).

Deposit in Lieu of Undertaking — Statement of Purpose Not Required: While a written undertaking on appeal must specify the purpose for which it is given, where money is deposited in lieu of such undertaking no writing is required, the statute declaring the purpose for which it is deposited. In re McGovern's Estate, 77 M 182, 250 P 812 (1926).

Multiple Appellants in Probate Proceeding — One Bond Required: Where the purpose of a petition in an estate matter was to have the executor render a final account, settle the estate, and deliver possession of the real estate to the devisees, on appeal from the order denying the petition and dismissing the proceeding the appellants were required to furnish but one joint appeal bond in the sum of $300. In re McGovern's Estate, 77 M 182, 250 P 812 (1926).

New Trial Motion After Appeal From Judgment: In view of this section, 25-11-102, and section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 1, M.R.App.P.), the trial court, notwithstanding and perfecting of an appeal from a judgment, retains jurisdiction over a motion for a new trial; and an appeal may be taken from an order denying the new trial, although, before such order was entered, an appeal from the judgment has been perfected. Molt v. N. Pac. Ry., 44 M 471, 120 P 809 (1912).

One Bond Allowed — Purpose: The purpose of the provision contained in the first sentence of this section is to enable an appellant to have one set of sureties execute one instrument instead of several, and to make the merely formal parts of one of the obligations assumed by them answer for all, and thus relieve him of the necessity of writing out each instrument in full. Sullivan v. Fried, 42 M 335, 112 P 535 (1910).

Instrument Combining Undertakings Allowed — Satisfaction of Amounts Required Separately: Whatever may be the number of appeals taken at the same time, only one undertaking need be filed, but the penalty in all cases, except where the appeals from the final judgment are combined with an appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial, taken at the same time, must be sufficient in amount to support all of them, and the references must be so made to each of them that the penalty may be properly apportioned. In re Kappler's Estate, 38 M 419, 100 P 228 (1909).

Nugatory Undertaking: An undertaking on appeal is abortive if words are used therein which render it meaningless and nugatory as an indemnity for costs in any amount. In re Kappler's Estate, 38 M 419, 100 P 228 (1909).

Signature of Appellant Not Required: An undertaking filed in conformity with this and the following section need not be signed by the party in whose behalf it is given. Russell v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Ry., 37 M 10, 94 P 501 (1908).

Separate Undertaking for Each Appeal Required: Where appeals are taken from a judgment and from any order other than one denying a new trial, or from more than one order, a separate undertaking in the sum of $300 must be filed for each, or, if both are included in the same paper, appropriate references must be made to show which appeal each is intended to effectuate, even though one of the orders appealed from may be a nonappealable order. Pirrie v. Moule, 33 M 1, 81 P 390 (1905).

Undertaking as Bond: An undertaking on appeal is technically a "bond" within the common-law definition, save that it need not be under seal. King v. Pony Gold Min. Co., 24 M 470, 62 P 783 (1900).

Joinder of Appeals Under Single Undertaking — Language Required: Where the appeal bond, on appeal from a final judgment and from an order denying appellant's motion for a new trial, was conditioned that it should be void if appellant paid all damages and costs awarded against it "on said appeals, or on a dismissal thereof", not exceeding the sum of $300, the undertaking was insufficient in that the words "or either of them" should have been inserted in each of the alternative conditions, and because of such omission the sureties were not liable upon said undertaking unless both appeals should be affirmed or both dismissed. Baker v. Butte City Water Co., 24 M 31, 60 P 488 (1900). See also Ramsey v. Burns, 24 M 234, 61 P 129 (1900); Coleman v. Perry, 24 M 237, 61 P 129 (1900); Frary v. Dwyer, 26 M 414, 68 P 1133 (1902).

Substitution for Defective Undertaking Allowed: An undertaking on appeal which provides for the payment by appellants of all damages and costs which may be awarded against them on the appeal, but omits the words "or on a dismissal thereof", is defective but not void, and a motion to dismiss the appeal for such defect will be denied where a new and sufficient undertaking is filed before the motion is heard. Woodman v. Calkins, 12 M 456, 31 P 63 (1892), distinguished in Creek v. Bozeman Water Works Co., 22 M 327, 56 P 362 (1899).

AMBIGUOUS UNDERTAKING

Supersedeas and Cost Bond Treated as Separate: If there be any ambiguity in the undertaking so far as it relates to the supersedeas, that would furnish no ground for the dismissal of the appeal for want of an undertaking for costs. Rader v. Taylor, 134 M 419, 333 P2d 480 (1958).

Appeal From Order Treated as Abandoned: Where an appellant served notice that he desired to appeal from a judgment and an order denying a new trial, but the undertaking referred to an appeal from the judgment only, the appeal will be treated as abandoned as far as it relates to the order denying a new trial, and to that extent will be dismissed, irrespective of the intention of appellant. Hurley v. O'Neill, 24 M 293, 61 P 658 (1900).

Ambiguous Undertaking Invalid: Where an appeal undertaking recited four distinct appeals, one from the judgment and three from orders, and that, in consideration "of such appeal, etc., appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against her", the undertaking was invalid for ambiguity, in not stating which appeal it was intended to secure. Creek v. Bozeman Water Works Co., 22 M 327, 56 P 362 (1899). See also Murphy v. N. Pac. Ry., 22 M 577, 57 P 278 (1899); Washoe Copper Co. v. Hickey, 23 M 319, 58 P 866 (1899); Grage v. Paulson, 23 M 337, 59 P 1 (1899); Richter v. Eagle Life Ass'n, 24 M 346, 61 P 878 (1900); Pirrie v. Moule, 33 M 1, 81 P 390 (1905); Faust v. Rustler Min. & Mill. Co., 34 M 368, 86 P 421 (1906); In re Kappler's Estate, 38 M 419, 100 P 228 (1909), distinguished in In re McGovern's Estate, 77 M 182, 250 P 812 (1926).

Ambiguous Undertaking Void — Avoidance: If an appeal undertaking, reciting separate appeals from the judgment and from different orders, is void for ambiguity as to which appeal it is intended to refer to, appellant cannot escape the effect of the ambiguity by claiming that the orders are not appealable, and the bond therefor refers to the judgment, as the court, in determining the validity of the undertaking, will not examine the record to see what orders are appealable. Creek v. Bozeman Water Works Co., 22 M 327, 56 P 362 (1899). See also Gassert v. Strong, 38 M 18, 98 P 497 (1908).

Rule 7. Stay of judgment or order pending appeal.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule supersedes subdivisions (a) and (d) of Rule 62 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. It also supersedes section 93-8013[, R.C.M. 1947; 25-33-205(2), 25-33-206, MCA] in so far as applicable to appeals from district courts to the supreme court. However, since these rules do not apply to appeals from police and justices' courts, section 93-8013 is not superseded in so far as it provides that in cases where an undertaking is required on appeal by the provisions of sections 93-7901 to 93-7908[, R.C.M. 1947; 25-33-102 through 25-33-104, 25-33-201 through 25-33-205, 25-33-207, 25-33-301 through 25-33-306, MCA], "a deposit in the court below of the amount of the judgment appealed from, and three hundred dollars in addition, shall be equivalent to filing the undertaking; and . . . the undertaking or deposit may be waived by the written consent of the respondent." Also section 93-8014[, R.C.M. 1947] is superseded, and subdivision (c) of this rule is patterned after the last part of that section.

The provision of this rule that, upon entry of a judgment or order a party may apply to the district court on notice or ex parte for a stay of execution, is designed to afford time to obtain a supersedeas bond during which the status quo is maintained by court order. The power of the supreme court recognized by the last sentence of subdivision (a) supplements the power of the district court.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendments limit the stay of execution to a 30 day period in certain cases and otherwise clarifies the rule.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (a), in first sentence inserted "in a civil case" and inserted third sentence providing a 30-day limit for a stay of execution; in (b) substituted present first sentence (for text see 1987 MCA) for "Upon service of notice of appeal, if the court has made no such order or the appellant desires a stay for a longer period than ordered, he may present to the district court and secure its approval of a supersedeas bond which shall have such surety or sureties as are required for an undertaking for costs on appeal prescribed by Rule 6(a)"; inserted (e) relating to stays in criminal cases; and reoutlined.

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

When Supersedeas Bond Remains in Effect Following Remand: On remand, a surety remains in effect when the question is the amount of damages, and not whether a party is entitled to damages. If a question of liability or a question of whether a party is entitled to damages remains after an appeal, the bond may lapse. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003), following Tenn. Valley Authority v. Atlas Mach. & Iron Works, 803 F2d 794 (4th Cir. 1986), and Beatrice Foods Co. v. New England Printing, 930 F2d 1572 (Fed. Cir. 1991).

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Request for Stay of Execution Not Required: Following entry and satisfaction of judgment in District Court, the parties were aware of a contemplated appeal, but no stay of execution was requested or supersedeas bond posted. After plaintiff acquired title to the disputed property pursuant to the judgment, defendant filed a notice of appeal and lis pendens, effectively preserving the status quo pending appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss, contending that by voluntarily satisfying the judgment, defendants waived their right to appeal. Applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), the Supreme Court held that the parties' course of conduct illustrated the involuntary, rather than voluntary nature of the satisfaction of judgment. Because satisfaction was involuntary, the right to appeal was not waived. Further, under this rule, a party may request a stay of execution, but the request is not mandatory, even though a party choosing not to seek a stay runs the risk of having the appeal become moot. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was denied. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Mootness as Separate From Question of Waiver of Appeal Rights — Voluntary Versus Involuntary Performance: The question of whether compliance with a judgment was voluntary or not has bearing on whether a party has waived the right to appeal, but it has no bearing on the question of mootness, which arises when an appellate court cannot grant effective relief. The issue of mootness is separate and distinct from the question of waiver of appeal rights. Complying with the judgment does not necessarily render the appeal moot. However, if compliance is voluntary, the party may be said to have waived any objection to the judgment. In deciding whether a case is moot, it must be determined whether effective relief is available. The fact that a party has not voluntarily waived the right to appeal does not necessarily mean that effective relief can still be provided on appeal, nor may a party claim an exception to the mootness doctrine when the case became moot through that party's own failure to seek a stay of judgment. Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), following and clarifying State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), and Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143 (1985), overruling any contrary holding in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357 (1986), Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477 (1988), LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740 (1988), and Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993), and followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999). See also Gates v. Deukmejian, 987 F2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1993).

Voluntary Versus Involuntary Performance — Bar of Appeal Because of Waiver: Appellants allowed a foreclosure sale to proceed, did not stay the proceedings, and did not post a supersedeas bond. Because of the danger of dismissal for mootness, there is a special need for seeking a stay when the sale of property is ordered and is not enjoined. A party confronted with a judgment ordering a foreclosure sale who allows the sale to proceed runs the risk that an appeal will be rendered moot. The question of whether compliance with a judgment was voluntary or not has bearing on whether a party has waived the right to appeal. If an appellant has voluntarily complied with or performed a judgment, that voluntary compliance may result in a waiver of that party's right to appeal and preclude the necessity of the Supreme Court addressing the issue of mootness. Similarly, when compliance is involuntary, as in most foreclosure actions, the appeal is not barred or waived but may nevertheless be moot to the extent that the Supreme Court cannot grant effective relief. Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), following State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), First Sec. Bank of Kalispell v. Income Properties, Inc., 208 M 121, 675 P2d 982 (1984), and Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143 (1985), and followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Foreclosure Action — Appeal Not Moot Because of Owners' Failure to Post Bond or Stay Appeal: In a foreclosure action, the bank prevailed in District Court. The owners did not voluntarily relinquish the property. The bank foreclosed. The owners' failure to post a supersedeas bond or otherwise stay the proceedings in District Court did not render their appeal moot. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Waiving Right to Homestead Exemption: The defendant used his home as security for an appeal in a civil case in lieu of a supersedeas bond. In the court documents relating to the security for the appeal, the defendant specifically agreed to not file for a homestead exemption on the property. Subsequently, the defendant filed for a homestead exemption. The Supreme Court ruled that although no specific provision of the homestead laws would allow the plaintiff to have the homestead exemption invalidated, the defendant had specifically waived any right he had to the homestead exemption. Amundson v. Wortman, 244 M 103, 796 P2d 205, 47 St. Rep. 1427 (1990).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Appeal Not Rendered Moot: If a judgment is satisfied by an involuntary payment or performance, the appeal from the judgment is not thereby rendered moot. First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 43 St. Rep. 1326 (1986), overruling Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), and In re Black's Estate, 32 M 51, 79 P 554 (1905), and followed in LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988), with LeClair distinguished in Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993), Giles and LeClair were overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). Turner was followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Bond Covering Judgment — Use of Bond in Companion Case: District Court did not abuse its discretion in requiring a supersedeas bond in an amount large enough to cover the judgment, including interest, or in concluding that a bond deposited in companion cases was not available to satisfy the judgment in this case. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 215 M 420, 697 P2d 1354, 42 St. Rep. 509 (1985).

No Stay of Execution Sought — Appeal Moot: Defendant bought property under a trust indenture from First National Bank of Kalispell in 1975. Defendant defaulted on the terms in 1981. The property was noticed for a public trustee's sale and was purchased by plaintiff. Plaintiff gave defendant written notice to vacate. Defendant refused, and plaintiff brought an unlawful detainer action. Defendant filed an answer questioning the propriety of the sale and plaintiff's title. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment, alleging it was a bona fide purchaser for value and that defendant's complaint was with the trustee or beneficiary under the trust indenture. No responsive pleadings were filed by defendant. The court granted summary judgment; a Writ of Possession was prepared, and damages were awarded. Defendant then filed an appeal without ever applying to the District Court for a stay of execution or supersedeas bond. By surrendering the property and paying damages under the judgment, defendant removed from the Supreme Court the authority to grant relief. The issue of damages was not before the court, only the summary judgment. The appeal was dismissed as moot. First Sec. Bank of Kalispell v. Income Properties, Inc., 208 M 121, 675 P2d 982, 41 St. Rep. 212 (1984).

Procedure for Judgment Debtor to Stay Execution of Judgment — Bond Not Approved: Petitioner requested a Writ of Supervisory Control to have an ejection order in a property dispute declared illegal. The Supreme Court in reviewing the proceedings stated that a judgment debtor desiring to stay the execution of a judgment or order of a District Court must proceed under Rule 7, M.R.App.P. That rule provides that if an appellant desires a stay of proceedings where the court has made no such order, he may present to the court and secure its approval of a supersedeas bond. In this case, the District Court fixed the amount of the bond but the bond was never presented to the court for approval prior to the ejection order. Therefore, the judgment holder was entitled to enforcement of the judgment by execution under 25-13-101 and 25-13-201. The District Court followed these statutes and was authorized to order delivery of the possession of the property under 25-13-307. State ex rel. Cady v. District Court, 203 M 522, 662 P2d 602, 40 St. Rep. 610 (1983).

Stay of Execution of Judgment — Effect on Priority: On June 22 Colonial obtained a judgment against Schmidt. On June 30 Schmidt obtained a judgment against the city of Kalispell. On July 2 Colonial filed a Writ of Execution in Flathead County. On July 2 Schmidt executed a note to his bank assigning the funds from the Kalispell judgment as collateral. On July 23 the Missoula County Court issued a charging order pursuant to 35-10-505 directing that any proceeds received by Schmidt be used to satisfy Colonial's judgment. Schmidt subsequently appealed the Colonial judgment and was granted a stay of execution pending appeal. In an action to determine priority to the Kalispell judgment as between Colonial and the bank, the funds were properly applied first to the bank. Colonial was stayed from taking any action to execute on its judgment pending a decision on its appeal. Stenerson v. Colonial Terrace Assoc., 200 M 160, 649 P2d 1344, 39 St. Rep. 1646 (1982).

Bond for Judgment — Remedy for Failure to Post: Plaintiff contended defendant's appeal should be dismissed for failure to post a supersedeas bond for the full amount of the judgment for plaintiff. The contention was without merit. Plaintiff's remedy for defendant's failure to post a bond was to execute on the judgment. Failure to post a bond did not affect the right to appeal. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

No Stay of Execution — Failure to Follow Internal Guidelines: The District Court held that C. M. Russell High School had been illegally excluded from the Montana Class AA football championship playoffs and ordered them back into the playoffs, with the playoffs to start no later than 7 days from the date of the order. The Montana High School Association sought a stay of judgment pending appeal. The Supreme Court held that in order to preserve the status quo, it would not be enough to determine if the Association was correct on the merits in excluding C. M. Russell because of the alleged ineligibility of players. The court would also have to determine whether the Association followed its own rules and did not violate the law itself in reaching its decision. A new hearing would be required. A new hearing would effectively mean there would be no 1981 Class AA state football playoff. That result would be caused by the Association itself. The Supreme Court refused to grant a stay because it determined even without a record that the Association violated its own rules and therefore its decision could not stand. State ex rel. Mont. High School Ass'n v. District Court, 38 St. Rep. 1847 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

District Court — No Authority to Order Dismissal of an Appeal: Under Rule 7, M.R.App.P., the District Court is given the power to stay the execution of a judgment entered in its court and has broad discretion in fixing the amount of a supersedeas bond upon which a stay of execution may be conditioned. The District Court does not have authority to order dismissal of an appeal, which authority is exclusively in the Supreme Court. Hadford v. Hadford, 189 M 329, 615 P2d 920 (1980).

Substitution of Other Security for Supersedeas Bond or Bond in Lesser Amount Than Judgment: The Supreme Court denied a motion for substitution of other security or a bond in a lesser amount because neither would protect the rights of the judgment creditor. The security offered, common stocks and pledges of personal assets, is subject to fluctuations in value. The moving party might suffer some financial hardship, but he did not make prompt and thorough attempts to obtain a bond. Paulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 183 M 439, 600 P2d 206 (1979).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

Custody Proceedings — Allegation Regarding Environment Absent: The Supreme Court vacated an earlier order which stayed the District Court's judgment ordering return of custody of a child to the mother because the father was petitioning to modify custody within 2 years of the custody decree with no allegation concerning what kind of environment the mother would provide in another state. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 176 M 488, 580 P2d 104 (1978).

Satisfaction of Judgment Precluded: The District Court's grant of a stay of disbursement and defendants' posting of a supersedeas bond precluded satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment. Therefore, plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal was denied. Erdman v. C & C Sales, Inc., 176 M 177, 577 P2d 55 (1978).

Failure to Apply for Stay — Effect on Appeal: When plaintiff neither applied for a stay of execution nor filed a supersedeas bond but accepted and cashed warrants issued to him for reimbursement of taxes, penalty, and interest paid on a tax deed, he was not entitled to appeal. Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977).

Filing of Supersedeas Bond on Appeal Not to Suspend Decree's Provision Regarding Child Support: Supreme Court will not sanction nonpayment of support money decreed in District Court on appeal where need for such funds is shown but will require that such support payments be kept current until final determination of the appeal. Woolverton v. Woolverton, 169 M 490, 549 P2d 458 (1976).

Restitution of Funds — Previous Judgment Vacated on Appeal: The Supreme Court denied the defendant's request for a Writ of Supervisory Control requiring the District Court to order an accounting and restitution of funds, since execution was based upon a previous judgment reversed only as to damages and because the defendant failed to post a supersedeas bond. State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 480, 548 P2d 1390 (1976).

Protective Order — Stay of Proceedings: When the Public Service Commission assumed jurisdiction over matters which were at issue in an appeal before the Supreme Court, the court granted a protective order to enjoin the P.S.C. and Consumer Counsel from undertaking actions which interfered with the court's appellate jurisdiction and declared that the actions of the P.S.C. in reopening its docket and issuing further orders were beyond its jurisdiction. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 177, 541 P2d 769 (1975).

Authority to Approve Bond Granted: Order of the Supreme Court giving the District Court authority to approve bond for stay of judgment does not give District Court any authority to dismiss appeal if bond is not filed. Bryant Dev. Ass'n v. Dagel, 166 M 8, 531 P2d 1319 (1974).

Constitutional Power — Stay of Mandamus Allowed: Supreme Court's constitutional power under Art. VIII, sec. 3, 1889 Mont. Const., to issue writs necessary to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction overrode the provision in subsection (c) of this rule prohibiting stay of a Writ of Mandamus, and Supreme Court could stay a District Court Writ of Mandamus ordering the superintendent of banks [functions transferred to Department of Business Regulation by executive reorganization] to issue a bank charter since a stay was necessary to make the right of appeal effectual. State ex rel. Bennett v. Dowdall, 157 M 11, 482 P2d 572 (1971).

Monetary Requirement Deviated From: The requirement of a monetary amount to be at issue before a stay is granted was deviated from because the appeal would be ineffectual without a stay. State ex rel. Bennett v. Dowdall, 157 M 11, 482 P2d 572 (1971).

Application for Reduction of Bond: An application for reduction in the amount of a supersedeas bond should be submitted to the District Court that set the amount. State ex rel. Adams v. District Court, 155 M 309, 471 P2d 537 (1970).

Supersedeas Bond Required — Dismissal of Appeal: Failure of defendant to file supersedeas bond pursuant to this section resulted in dismissal of appeals since such bond is only method to stay execution of judgment and after judgment is paid, it passes beyond review. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), distinguished in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), overruled in First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 43 St. Rep. 1326 (1986). Mont. Nat'l Bank and Giles were overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Eminent Domain Proceeding — No Bond Required: Where Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) filed notice of appeal and perfected its appeal after Writ of Execution under 70-30-308 had issued, the appeal stayed the judgment although no bond was filed as required by this section, since under Rule 62(e), no security was required from the State. Robertson v. St. Highway Comm'n, 148 M 275, 420 P2d 21 (1966).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Ability of District Court to Correct Errors: Upon an appeal being taken, jurisdiction thereof passes from the District Court to the Supreme Court, subject to right of District Court to correct clerical errors. Polson v. Thomas, 138 M 533, 357 P2d 349 (1960).

Mandate to Compel Licensure — Authority of Supreme Court: Though this section may not provide a stay of execution in case a Writ of Mandate is issued by a District Court to compel the issuance of a license, the Supreme Court may nevertheless issue any appropriate writ to insure an appeal. Gill v. Rafn, 133 M 505, 326 P2d 974 (1958), followed and clarified, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), and distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Mandate and Prohibition — Moot Question on Appeal: Where Writ of Prohibition was issued against Liquor Control Board prohibiting the issuance of licenses except to persons who have Indian tribal permits and a Writ of Mandate was also issued compelling the issuance of licenses to certain persons, which Writs were complied with after the District Court refused to stay the Writs, so that the licensees invested and established businesses and could not be returned to the status quo, the questions on appeal were moot. State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Probate Proceedings — Loss of Jurisdiction After Appeal: Where an appeal was taken from an order appointing a person executor, the District Court and its Clerk were then without jurisdiction to issue letters testamentary to the executor and allow him to qualify. In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Jurisdiction of District Court Passed to Supreme Court: Where a notice of appeal from a judgment was served and filed, jurisdiction over the parties to the controversy and the subject matter thereof passed from the District Court and vested in the Supreme Court. It then became the duty of the Supreme Court to maintain the status quo of the parties and their rights until the controversy could be determined in this court, so that rights involved in such appeal may not be lost or prejudiced prior to such determination. Benolken v. Miracle, 128 M 262, 273 P2d 667 (1954).

Usurpation of Office — Application to Statutory Disqualification From Office: The provision relating to proceedings wherein judgment relates to defendants guilty of usurping, or intruding into, or unlawfully holding public office, etc., applies not only in quo warranto proceedings, but also to all judgments, including one rendered in a proceeding brought under the Corrupt Practices Act, sections 94-1427 to 94-1474, R.C.M. 1947 (partially repealed), where a finding of the violation of a statute disqualifies the defendant from holding office and authorizes a finding that the office is vacant. State ex rel. Kommers v. District Court, 109 M 287, 96 P2d 271 (1939).

Usurpation of Office — Undertaking Not to Act as Stay: The filing of an undertaking on appeal from a judgment removing a Sheriff from office for violating the provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act, sections 94-1427 to 94-1474, R.C.M. 1947 (partially repealed), and declaring the office vacant, does not operate as a supersedeas or stay of execution, and therefore does not prevent the County Commissioners from filling the office pending appeal. State ex rel. Kommers v. District Court, 109 M 287, 96 P2d 271 (1939).

Mandate to Transfer Cause — Authority of Supreme Court: Though this section may not provide a stay of execution, in case a Writ of Mandate is issued by the District Court to compel the transfer of a cause from a police to a Justice's Court (a question not decided), the Supreme Court may nevertheless issue any appropriate writ to insure an appeal. State ex rel. Brass v. Horn, 36 M 418, 93 P 351 (1908).

Advisory Committee Notes

The provisions of subdivision (a) of the rule with respect to proceedings against sureties is patterned after Rule 8(b) of the Federal Draft. Subdivision (b) of the rule follows the existing Montana practice provided by R.C.M. 1947, section 93-8013[; 25-33-205(2), 25-33-206, MCA], but the language is changed to avoid confusion where there are cross appeals or mixed forms of relief and to make it clear that either appellant or respondent, or both, may except to the sufficiency of sureties on a bond or undertaking furnished by the other.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

When Supersedeas Bond Remains in Effect Following Remand: On remand, a surety remains in effect when the question is the amount of damages, and not whether a party is entitled to damages. If a question of liability or a question of whether a party is entitled to damages remains after an appeal, the bond may lapse. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003), following Tenn. Valley Authority v. Atlas Mach. & Iron Works, 803 F2d 794 (4th Cir. 1986), and Beatrice Foods Co. v. CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Exceptions to Sufficiency — Application and Meaning: Exception to the sufficiency of sureties on an undertaking or bond within the meaning of this section has reference to their solvency or pecuniary sufficiency, rather than their qualifications to act as such. Objection to the form of the undertaking challenges their qualifications in respects other than their financial worth. Whitcomb v. Beyerlein, 84 M 470, 276 P 430 (1929).

Failure to Justify — Effect: The provision of this section, that unless the sureties justify when excepted to, execution of the judgment or order appealed from is no longer stayed, does not render the appeal ineffectual because of the failure to justify, but only destroys the effect of the undertaking insofar as it may operate as a supersedeas—the appeal remains though execution is no longer stayed. Threlkeld v. O'Neal, 26 M 209, 66 P 940 (1901); King v. Pony Gold Min. Co., 24 M 470, 62 P 783 (1900).

Application to Ejectment Action: This section applies in case of an appeal by defendant in ejectment involving an unpatented mining claim. The statutes and courts of this state do not recognize any distinction between possessory rights to mining claims upon public lands and real estate held under other titles. State ex rel. Baker v. District Court, 24 M 330, 61 P 882 (1900). See also Cobban v. Meagher, 42 M 399, 113 P 290 (1911).

Liability of Sureties When Execution Already Had: Sureties on a stay bond on appeal were not liable, though they failed to justify as required, where respondent, before determination of the appeal, issued execution against appellant. State ex rel. Reins v. District Court, 22 M 449, 57 P 89 (1899).

Waiver of Undertaking by Respondent Allowed: The statute requiring a justification of sureties on a stay bond is directory, and meant to be for respondent's not appellant's benefit, and may be waived by respondent. State ex rel. Reins v. District Court, 22 M 449, 57 P 89 (1899). See also Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Rule 9. The record on appeal.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned after Rule 10 of the Federal Draft.

Subdivision (a). This subdivision provides for the use of the original trial record as the official record on appeal, and judgment rolls are nowhere provided for in these Rules. This use of the trial record is now provided for in all federal circuit courts.

Subdivision (b). The Federal Advisory Committee's Note states: "The appellant is required to serve a statement of the issues which he intends to present on appeal if only a part of the proceedings is transcribed solely to allow the appellee to determine whether the partial transcript will be adequate for the determination of the issues presented by the appeal. Such a statement is not the equivalent of an assignment of errors, which is nowhere required in the proposed rules, and the statement would not result in limiting the issues on appeal. The precise statement of the issues presented by the appeal is to be made in the brief. An appellee who can show that he was misled by the statement required by this subdivision and in consequence failed to designate for transcription material parts of the reported proceedings may seek relief under subdivision (e) of this rule."

The second and third sentences of this subdivision following the title are added to the Federal Draft to make the duty which rests on the appellant more specific. Also, the second paragraph of this subdivision has been expanded to afford protection to an appellant against payment of costs of a transcript of unnecessary portions of the proceeding ordered by a respondent. And the last paragraph, requiring the reporter to certify the correctness of the transcript, has been added to the Federal Draft.

Subdivision (c). The provision of the Federal Draft for settlement has been expanded, patterned after section 93-5508[, R.C.M. 1947; superseded by this rule]; also, because memories are short, there has been added a time limit for the preparation of the statement.

Subdivisions (d) and (e) are the same as the provisions of the federal draft, adjusted to the Montana court system.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 9(c). The amendment authorizes transcripts to be furnished to defendants without financial means and provides for procedure in the supreme court in the case of denial by the trial court.

Subdivision 9(f). This section as it previously appeared in the rules has been deleted because the inclusion of findings of fact and conclusions of law in a brief or appendix is now covered by Rules 23 and 25.

1996 Amendment: In (b), at beginning of first sentence, substituted language concerning stipulation filed pursuant to Rule 54(c) for former text that read: "Except as hereafter set forth". Amendment effective October 1, 1996.

1994 Amendment: In (a) inserted second sentence concerning duty of party seeking review to provide sufficient record and inserted third sentence concerning sanctions for inadequate record; in (b), at beginning of first sentence, inserted exception clause, near middle substituted "all" for "such parts", and after "file" deleted "as the appellant deems necessary", deleted former third sentence that read: "In all cases where the appellant intends to urge insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, order or judgment in the district court, it shall be the duty of the appellant to order the entire transcript of the evidence", and deleted former fifth sentence that read: "Wherever the sufficiency of the evidence to support a special verdict or answer by a jury to an interrogatory, or to support a specific finding of fact by the trial court, is to be raised on the appeal by the appellant, the appellant shall be under a duty to include in the transcript all evidence relevant to such verdict, answer or finding"; in (b), at beginning of first sentence of second paragraph, substituted "If the appellant determines, on the basis of the issues raised on appeal, that the entire transcript is not necessary" for "Unless the entire transcript is to be included", after "within" substituted "10 days" for "time", after "provided" inserted "order only such parts of the proceedings not already on file as the appellant deems necessary and also", after "which the appellant" inserted "determines to be unnecessary and which it", after "intends to" substituted "exclude from" for "include in", and after "record" substituted "along with" for "and" and in second sentence, after "transcript of", substituted "the" for "other", after "proceedings" inserted "to be excluded", after "reporter or" inserted "file and serve notice on the appellant in writing of respondent's intention to", and after "procure" inserted "at a date, time and place certain within 10 days of such notice"; and in (b) inserted third paragraph concerning failure of either party to file and serve notice as creating a presumption.

Applicability: The Supreme Court Order dated June 30, 1994, was effective for notices of appeal filed on or after September 15, 1994.

1993 Amendment: In (b) inserted second sentence concerning filing of copy and inserted fourth sentence concerning responsibility for cost of transcript.

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (b), at beginning of second paragraph, inserted the exception clause; inserted (c) relating to transcripts of proceedings in criminal cases; deleted former (f) that read: "(f) Findings of fact and conclusions of law. In all nonjury cases where judgment is rendered on the basis of findings of fact and conclusions of law such findings and conclusions by the district court should be incorporated in the appendix to appellant's brief, along with the district court's opinion, if any"; and reoutlined.

1971 Amendment: The 1971 amendment added subdivision (f). (See 1986 amendment note for text.)

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

Failure to Provide Trial Record Precluding Review of Trial Court Evidentiary Rulings: In an employment discrimination case, Rolison moved for a new trial in District Court on grounds that he was denied a fair trial when the employer did not disclose certain exhibits before trial and the trial court made an evidentiary ruling refusing any evidence of discrimination following Rolison's complaint to the Commission on Human Rights. The District Court denied the motion for a new trial, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Rolison did not mention the District Court's reasoning for denying the motion and did not provide a trial transcript or record for review on appeal. Absent an adequate record, the Supreme Court could not discern the substance of the anticipated testimony or whether any prejudice resulted from its exclusion. Absent a showing of a manifest abuse of discretion, denial of the new trial motion was affirmed. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005).

Electronic Recording of Municipal Court Evidentiary Hearing Part of Record on Appeal: Lyons contended on appeal of a DUI case that because the electronic recording of the Municipal Court's evidentiary hearing was not considered by the District Court, it was not part of the record and could not be considered on appeal. The Supreme Court disagreed. Regardless of whether the recording was used in District Court, it was part of the record available for Supreme Court review. Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Failure to Record Voir Dire Examination — Britt Test to Determine Whether Failure to Record Portions of Criminal Trial Violative of Due Process: Deschon argued that his right to a meaningful appeal of his deliberate homicide conviction was violated because he had tenable appellate theories, such as possible juror prejudice, that could not be determined without a transcript of the voir dire proceedings, and that there was no alternative to a transcript available. The state pointed out that subsection (d) of this rule provides a procedure whereby a party can submit its version of unrecorded portions of the record to the District Court, and then the court can generate a written summary to be included in the appeal. However, the state contended that Deschon made no effort to recreate the circumstances of voir dire and thus could not claim that the lack of a record was reversible error. The Supreme Court noted that a trial court should order its court reporter to record the voir dire examination and that diligent defense counsel should demand recording of voir dire proceedings (St. v. Seitzinger, 180 M 136, 589 P2d 655 (1979)). However, when the trial court fails to record portions of a criminal trial, Britt v. N.C., 404 US 226 (1971), is applied to determine whether due process has been violated, and two criteria are relevant to the determination: (1) the value of the transcript to defendant in connection with the appeal or trial for which it is sought; and (2) the availability of alternative devices that would fulfill the same function as a transcript, such as an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the trial. Here, Deschon established the first part of the Britt test by showing that a transcript was valuable in determining whether any jurors were prejudiced by pretrial publicity. The second part of the Britt test would be satisfied by a written summary prepared pursuant to subsection (d) of this rule, but lacking that summary, the Supreme Court remanded for an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the voir dire proceedings. St. v. Deschon, 2002 MT 16, 308 M 175, 40 P3d 391 (2002). Following remand and an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded voir dire portions of Deschon's trial, Deschon appealed again on grounds that the hearing was insufficient to provide information to determine whether jurors were biased. The Supreme Court concluded that, taken as a whole, the combined testimony from jurors, attorneys, and Deschon, together with the trial notes in exhibit, created a record of sufficient completeness to ensure that Deschon's right to due process was not violated and that the reconstruction hearing comprised an adequate alternative to the verbatim voir dire transcript to establish a fair and accurate picture of what transpired that was sufficiently complete to accord review of Deschon's issues on appeal, satisfying the second part of the Britt test. St. v. Deschon, 2004 MT 32, 320 M 1, 85 P3d 756 (2004). See also U.S. v. Cashwell, 950 F2d 699 (11th Cir. 1992), and U.S. v. Preciado-Cordobas, 981 F2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1993).

Newspaper Articles Improperly Attached to Opening Brief Set Aside: Counsel for the Franks attached several irrelevant newspaper articles to an opening brief, contending that it was permissible to supplement the record on appeal with judicially recognizable material. The Supreme Court found that the articles were not judicially recognizable under this rule and were improperly attached to the brief. Affirming the District Court decision to set aside a default judgment, the Supreme Court cited Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), in cautioning counsel against attempting to introduce extraneous evidence by the back door via attachment to briefs, a practice that is not tolerated. Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998), distinguishing In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985).

Order Granting Temporary Guardianship Held Final Order and Special Proceeding for Purposes of Appeal — Noncompliance With This Rule Excused — Expiration of Temporary Guardianship Held Not to Render Issue Moot: After a District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation except a minute entry entered by the Clerk of Court, Klos filed a motion to set aside the second order of guardianship. The guardians argued that an order appointing a temporary guardian is not subject to appeal and that Klos had not complied with this rule because she did not file a transcript of a hearing appointing the guardians. The Supreme Court held that in as much as Rule 1(b)(3), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), does not differentiate between a permanent order and a temporary order, a temporary order qualified as an appealable order. The Supreme Court also held that the temporary order is a "special proceeding", as defined by 27-1-102(2), for the purposes of Rule 1(b)(1), M.R.App.P., and therefore appealable for that reason as well. Concerning the argument on noncompliance with this rule, the Supreme Court noted that no transcript could be provided because none was ever made and held that Klos had substantially complied by notifying the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the lack of a transcript and by providing the District Court Clerk's minute entry. Citing Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564 (1987), the Supreme Court also noted that just because the order had expired by operation of law did not mean that the issue of appealability was moot because the guardians had twice been appointed by a temporary order that expired by operation of law and could be appointed in the same manner again. Thus, if the order was not appealable, it would be "capable of repetition, yet evade review". In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

No Obligation for State to Furnish Summaries of Testimony — Failure to Provide Transcript — No Surprise or Prejudice Found: Sol was convicted in Justice's Court of DUI and appealed to District Court. He argued that the state had failed to make available to him summaries of witnesses' testimony and had failed to deliver to him a copy of a summary of the testimony of one of the state's experts after he was informed of the identity of the expert. The Supreme Court held that there was no requirement in 46-15-322 for the state to provide a summary of the testimony of any witness and that the state's obligation to provide reports completed by its expert had been satisfied by notification of where the reports could be obtained. The Supreme Court also noted that Sol was unable to point to any prejudice or surprise that he suffered as a result of the alleged discovery violations. Because Sol had failed to order a transcript of the District Court trial in compliance with subsection (b) of this rule, the Supreme Court was unable to determine whether disputed evidence had been offered at trial and, if it was, whether it resulted in surprise or prejudice. St. v. Sol, 282 M 69, 936 P2d 307, 54 St. Rep. 246 (1997).

Case Remanded — Insufficient Record: The Supreme Court stated that the record before it was lacking any factual record or findings by the lower court. The Supreme Court held that in light of the importance of the issues involved in the case, it was not prepared to make any rulings when there was insufficient information on which to base a ruling and therefore remanded the case to the District Court with instructions to develop an appropriate record. Balyeat Law, PC v. Pettit, 281 M 95, 931 P2d 50, 54 St. Rep. 77 (1997).

Failure to File Workers' Compensation Insurer's Claims File on Appeal — No Presumption of Error in Trial Court In Camera Inspection: Miller contended that the Workers' Compensation Court's order on disclosure of the insurer's claims file did not indicate whether certain documents not disclosed contained factual information otherwise discoverable. Miller could not prevail because she did not seek to have the insurer's claims file filed with the Supreme Court as a part of the record on appeal. As appellant, it was Miller's obligation to ensure the completeness and accuracy of the record and to have included all documents, discovery, and evidence related to the errors claimed. Without the file, there was no way for the Supreme Court to review the Workers' Compensation Court's decision to exclude some documents in the file from discovery and to produce other documents; therefore, the Supreme Court would not presume error in the in camera inspection. An appellant may not predicate error on an incomplete record. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994), followed in St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Entire Transcript Not Included in Record — Notification of Respondent Required: When the entire transcript is not included in the record on appeal, the provisions of this rule require the appellant to notify the respondent of the issues that the appellant intends to raise on appeal so that the respondent can determine whether a transcript of parts of the proceeding that are not included in the record will be required. S.M. v. R.B., 261 M 522, 862 P2d 1166, 50 St. Rep. 1437 (1993).

Supplementation of Record to Account for Circumstances Occurring Subsequent to Appeal Impermissible: Supplementation of the record to take into account circumstances occurring subsequent to the appeal is beyond the scope of this rule and is impermissible. Trieweiler v. Spicher, 254 M 321, 838 P2d 382, 49 St. Rep. 711 (1992).

Rule Inapplicable When Record Not Part of Lower Court Proceedings: Appellant claimed that the original record on appeal was void of certain documents unavailable at the time of the lower court trial and sought to modify the record under subsection (f) of this rule to include the missing documents. To prevail, appellant must show that the record does not truly disclose what occurred in the court below. Modification was inappropriate because the record that appellant sought to introduce was not part of the proceedings below at the time of those proceedings. Richter v. Indus. Indem. Co., 241 M 518, 788 P2d 308, 47 St. Rep. 467 (1990).

Failure to Follow Rule Not Absolute Bar to Appeal: Appellant filed only a partial transcript of the lower court record with his appeal but did not provide a description of the included parts or a statement of the prospective issues to the respondent as required by this rule. Although dismissal of the appeal would be appropriate, an appeal need not be dismissed in every instance where there has not been strict compliance. Where the record contained sufficient information to consider some issues, the court considered those issues. Williams v. Rigler, 234 M 161, 761 P2d 833, 45 St. Rep. 1812 (1988).

Preservation of Record for Appeal — Counsel Duty: It is the duty of counsel to preserve the record for appeal. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 748 P2d 948, 45 St. Rep. 46 (1988).

Failure to File Transcript — Extension of Time: When the appellant's late filing of an appeal was held timely because the respondent had also failed to comply with the technical filing requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure and when the District Court had granted a request for an extension of time to the court reporter to complete a transcript of the proceedings, the appeal was properly before the court. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Record on Appeal — Lack of Transcript: Arguments on the sufficiency of the evidence in action on charges of unfair labor practices could not be considered without a transcript of the testimony at the original administrative hearing. The cause was remanded to the trial court for election by the employee either to order and pay for the transcript so the trial court could receive it and enter further judgment or to accept affirmation of the trial court's decision. Klundt v. St., 222 M 172, 720 P2d 1181, 43 St. Rep. 1148 (1986).

Accusation of District Court Judge Misconduct Raised on Appeal — Supreme Court Not to Consider: In reviewing a child custody modification determination, the Supreme Court refused to consider an affidavit submitted to the Supreme Court alleging an improper ex parte communication between the District Court judge and a person interested in the proceeding. Appellant had made no motion for a mistrial or to remove the District Court judge from the case, nor had appellant mentioned the alleged misconduct on the record. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Judicial Notice of Maps and Descriptions on Appeal: In a dispute over control of an irrigation district's headgate, the Supreme Court permitted submission on appeal of government survey descriptions and maps that had not been introduced as evidence at trial. The court reasoned: first, that the commission comments to Rule 201, Montana Rules of Evidence, indicate that published maps or charts are included within the Rule's scope; and second, that maps and descriptions are acceptable articles of evidence by which to show a water right in the adjudication process. In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M

315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985), distinguished in Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998).

Necessity of Trial Transcript: A challenge to a final judgment cannot be reviewed on appeal in the absence of a transcript. Lutzenhiser v. Holzworth, 213 M 260, 690 P2d 990, 41 St. Rep. 2102 (1984).

County Resolution — Record Incomplete — Appeal Denied: An appeal from a District Court's granting motions to dismiss and quash in a case revolving around a county resolution was dismissed because the record on appeal did not contain the resolution or any reference to it. Bukvich v. Butte-Silver Bow, 200 M 259, 650 P2d 783, 39 St. Rep. 1727 (1982).

Appeal Denied for Failure to Keep Record: The Supreme Court noted in Guardianship of Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977), that the District Court is, by statute, a court of record, and this implies that a record will be kept of the proceedings. Recently in Schneider v. Ostwald, 190 M 29, 617 P2d 1293, 37 St. Rep. 1728 (1980), a trial court contempt order was set aside because the contempt of court proceedings were not recorded. The same result obtains in the instant case. The record is silent as to why a court reporter was not present. But reasons aside, the failure to record the property distribution hearings has effectively denied the husband appellate review of the trial court's judgment. Malley v. Malley, 190 M 141, 619 P2d 531, 37 St. Rep. 1827 (1980).

Review of Equity Cases on Record Only: Where judgment was rendered against the appellant in a proceeding to quiet title and for an accounting of rents and profits from real property and appellant subsequently appealed to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court would not consider depositions taken in a different action and submitted by the appellant but not made a part of the record in the case before the court. In appeals from equitable proceedings, the Supreme Court may not consider evidence extraneous to the record. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), followed in In re George Trust, 253 M 341, 834 P2d 1378, 49 St. Rep. 424 (1992).

Agreed Statement Insufficient: In a marriage dissolution case where the appellant challenged the sufficiency of the evidence, his "agreed statement of facts" was insufficient to comply with Rule 9(d), M.R.App.P., because it merely recited the undisputed facts of the marriage and did not show ". . . how the issues presented by the appeal arose and were decided in the district court . . .". Harrington v. Harrington, 181 M 451, 594 P2d 319 (1979).

Agreed or Approved Statement — Failure to Provide: Appellant's challenge of the trial court's findings of fact was dismissed because he failed to provide the Supreme Court with a transcript or to comply with Rule 9(c) or 9(d), M.R.App.P. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Clerk's Affidavit Not Acceptable as to Variant Date of Service: A District Court Clerk's affidavit should not be accepted to prove that service was made on a date other than the date shown on the certificate of mailing on the notice of entry of judgment because the affidavit is not part of the record on appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Offer of Proof — Effect on Appeal: The Supreme Court refused to review various documents attached to appellant's brief in an appeal pro se when no offer of proof was made at trial because, as such, they were not a part of the record on appeal. Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978).

Property Disposition — Insufficient Evidence: Lack of a court reporter's record was not a fatal error. As substitute, a bystander's bill and exhibits admitted at trial disclosed insufficient credible evidence to support a property disposition because certain assets were not considered. Martinez v. Martinez, 175 M 280, 573 P2d 667 (1978).

Failure to Transmit Transcript: Defendants demonstrated a complete lack of adherence to the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Their failure to transmit the transcript of the trial court proceedings required dismissal of the appeal. Yetter v. Kennedy, 175 M 1, 571 P2d 1152 (1977), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Failure to State Evidence at Issue: Appeal was dismissed for inadequacy of record where there was no statement of the evidence and sufficiency of evidence was in issue, even though appellant contended that only an issue of law was presented. Washington v. Washington, 161 M 516, 507 P2d 1071 (1973).

Failure to Perfect Appeal: Appeal was dismissed where appellants had failed to request parts of the transcript within the time allowed by subsection (b) of this rule, had not requested preparation of any portion of the record on appeal, had failed to pay for copies of documents requested or portions of the transcript prepared, had failed to transmit any part of the record on appeal to the Supreme Court, had failed to docket the appeal or pay the docket fee, and had failed, within the time allowed by the Chief Justice, to replace counsel desiring to withdraw with good cause. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. United Bank of Pueblo, 158 M 223, 490 P2d 352 (1971).

Cost of Transcript: Under rule providing that District Court "may impose upon the respondent the cost of producing any part of the record which it deems unnecessary for the determination of the issues", court determined that cost of portion of transcript ordered by respondent, which did not bear on any issue presented upon appeal, should be assessed against respondent. (See 1993 amendment.) Ratcliff v. Murphy, 150 M 31, 430 P2d 627 (1967).

Failure to Provide Judge's Certificate on Evidence: Merits of appeal could not be determined where purported transcript on appeal did not contain certificate of judge that records included in the transcript had been used at the hearing. Anderson v. Mennie, 144 M 105, 394 P2d 853 (1964).

Late Presentment of Bill: A bill of exceptions presented after the time prescribed in section 93-5505, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 9, M.R.App.P.), was a nullity and could not be considered on appeal. Anderson v. Mennie, 144 M 105, 394 P2d 853 (1964).

Amendment of Notice of Appeal Not Allowed: Where appellant sought to amend notice of appeal from a nonappealable order so as to make it an appeal from final judgment, the Supreme Court acquired no jurisdiction to allow such amendment when the statutory provisions for time and manner of appeal were not complied with. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Copy of Notice of Appeal Required: Where no copy of any notice of appeal appears in either the transcript on appeal or in the files of the Supreme Court or having been supplied in the court, the purported appeal will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Hansen v. Hansen, 129 M 516, 290 P2d 438 (1955).

Superfluous Papers Incorporated in Transcript on Appeal: Papers and documents incorporated in the transcript on appeal from a final judgment which are not properly a part of the judgment roll and not included in a bill of exceptions duly settled are no part of the record and will be stricken therefrom. Thompson v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Ry., 78 M 170, 253 P 313 (1927).

Rule 10. Transmission of the record.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is taken from Rule 11 of the Federal Draft.

Subdivision (a). This subdivision fixes the time for transmission rather than for filing at 40 days after the filing of the notice of appeal, thus enabling the parties to know with certainty precisely when the complete record must be transmitted to the supreme court. The only justification for delay between filing the notice of appeal and the transmission of the record to the supreme court is the time required for securing a transcription of the trial proceedings. If the appellant is prevented from securing the necessary transcript within the 40-day period by circumstances beyond his control, he may seek an extension of time for transmitting the record.

The requirement that the appellant take any other action necessary to enable the clerk to assemble and transmit the record emphasizes the primary responsibility of the appellant for effecting timely transmission of the record. His responsibilities include, for example, the payment of any required fee or charge.

Subdivision (b). The appellant is allowed 40 days between the filing of the notice of appeal and the transmission of the record in order to allow him to secure the necessary transcript. If the transcript is available sooner, the allowance is unnecessary, and either party may oblige the clerk of the district court to transmit the record forthwith. On the other hand, unless the record contains the necessary transcript, the clerk is not to transmit it.

Subdivision (c). Cause for extension of the time by either the district or the supreme court must be shown. The final sentence permits any party to expedite the appeal in cases in which the record is complete by obtaining an order that the record be transmitted and the appeal docketed at a date earlier than otherwise allowed or fixed.

Subdivision (d). This subdivision permits the record to be retained in the district court by order of the supreme court, or order of the district court subject to the order of the supreme court. Especially in cases where the judgment or order does not dispose of the entire litigation, retention of the record in the district court may be a convenience for counsel and the district court. In some cases there may be no need for the transmission of the record, and the labor and expense of transmission may be saved.

Subdivision (e). This subdivision permits parties to stipulate against transmission of designated parts of the record free from the fear that a mistake may substantially affect the scope of the appeal. The final sentence makes it clear that a stipulation that designated parts of the record not be transmitted in no way diminishes the record itself. In effect, a party may at any time revoke his stipulation against transmission of parts of the record.

Subdivision (f). The substance of this subdivision was taken from Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 75(j).

NOTE TO JUNE 30, 1981, AMENDMENT

The amendment is made for the purpose of economizing as to the expense of appeals to the Montana Supreme Court, and also assisting the court in solving a filing space problem which confronts the court. The amendment recognizes that no one, including the court, the parties and the clerk of court, has any real need for more than three copies of the transcript on an appeal, nor will any such need exist when the court is expanded to seven Justices, commencing January 1, 1981.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendment is designed to remove uncertainty as to service and to include additional matter to be included in a motion for an extension of time for transmission of the record.

NOTE TO NOVEMBER 1, 1988, AMENDMENT

The amendment is designed to provide appropriate security and chain of custody procedures.

1988 Amendment: In (b), near middle of third sentence after "containers", deleted "and physical exhibits other than documents"; inserted fourth sentence relating to physical exhibits other than documents or photographs; inserted fifth sentence relating to motion for transmitting physical exhibit; and inserted sixth sentence relating to content of motion. Amendment effective November 1, 1988.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

1996 Amendment: In (a), at end of first sentence, inserted exception concerning stipulation filed pursuant to Rule 54(c). Amendment effective October 1, 1996.

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in first paragraph of (c) substituted last three sentences (for text see 1987 MCA) for "If a request for an extension of time for transmitting the record has been previously denied, the motion shall set forth the denial and shall state the reasons therefor, if any were given."

1981 Amendment — Reasons — Effective Date: Supreme Court Order 10750, June 30, 1981, provided in part:

"1. The Court received from the Advisory Committee to the Supreme Court of the State of Montana on Rules of Civil Procedure its Report and Proposal that Rule 10(a) of the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure be amended to provide that three copies of each transcript, instead of six copies, be filed with the clerk of this Court on appeals.

2. On December 9, 1980, in an order entered in our cause no. 10750 (1980), we directed that notice of said proposal be given as required by section 3-2-703, MCA, and further directed that within six months of the filing of the petition by the Advisory Committee members of the bar or bench might file suggestions regarding the proposal, or request hearing thereon within said six month period.

3. No request for hearing has been filed within the said time by any member of the bench or bar.

4. The association of Montana judges has adopted a resolution requesting (1) delay of one year in adopting the proposal for the purpose of a study; (2) requesting hearings outside the six month period provided by section 3-2-703, MCA, on the proposal, and (3) requesting the aid of this Court in procuring increased allowances for transcripts from the legislature.

5. The legislature, in Chapter 295, Laws of Montana (1981), increased the permissible folio charge allowed to court reporters from 7 ½ cents per folio to 10 cents per folio, effective October 1, 1981.

6. The reason given by the Advisory Committee in submitting the proposal are these:

"COMMENT: The amendment is made for the purpose of economizing as to the expense of appeals to the Montana Supreme Court, and also assisting the court in solving a filing space problem which confronts the court. The amendment recognizes that no one, including the court, the parties and the clerk of court, has any real need for more than three copies of the transcript on an appeal, nor will any such need exist when the court is expanded to seven Justices, commencing January 1, 1981."

7. The Court finds that the reasons given by the Advisory Committee for the proposal outweighs any need for delay in adopting the proposal, and that the matter of increased allowances for court reporters is a legislative matter outside the province of this Court unless such allowance became so unreasonable as to affect the business of this Court. . . .

9. Said amendment shall be effective as to all transcripts required to be filed in this Court, based on notices of appeal filed and served on or after July 1, 1981 or proceedings had or taken to this Court commencing on and continuing from July 1, 1981."

Note: The Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure are now cited as the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Case Notes

Appeal Not Dismissed for Appellant's Failure to Comply With Rule 10(c): More than 90 days elapsed from date of filing notice of appeal and forwarding of the record to Supreme Court. The court noted that the District Court had no authority to grant an extension, and that both appellant and the District Court displayed a relaxed attitude about the Appellate Rules, which the Supreme Court did not encourage. However, the violation was not egregious and there was no evidence that it was anything but inadvertent. The Supreme Court refused to dismiss. Scheitlin v. R&D Minerals, 217 M 8, 701 P2d 1388, 42 St. Rep. 986 (1985).

Failure to Timely Transmit Transcript — Refusal to Dismiss Appeal: Although the Supreme Court received the transcript 12 days beyond the 40-day deadline and the transcript lacked pertinent documents, the court refused to dismiss the appeal. The court noted that the procedural violation was not one that would affect the validity of the appeal, caused no substantive harm, and was not intended to mislead the court. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Despite failure to comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Suspension of Rules: Appellants, upon petition to the Supreme Court, were granted a suspension of time limits set forth in Rules 10, 11, and 26, M.R.App.P., and substitution of specified time limits. Bd. of Natural Resources & Conservation v. N. Plains Resource Council, 183 M 540, 601 P2d 28, 35 St. Rep. 414 (1978).

Failure to Transmit Transcript: Defendants demonstrated a complete lack of adherence to the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Their failure to transmit the transcript of the trial court proceedings required dismissal of the appeal. Yetter v. Kennedy, 175 M 1, 571 P2d 1152 (1977), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Error of Defendant — Refusal to Dismiss Appeal: Supreme Court refused to dismiss appeal for failure to file record within time limit where appellant-defendant had been granted a 90-day extension for filing the record, but through error of defendant or District Court, the order granted the appellant over 130 days in which to file record and where appellant at the end of that period moved for a 30-day extension which was granted and on the day of that motion filed the record. Hannifin v. Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n, 162 M 170, 511 P2d 982 (1973).

Extension of Time — Notice: An order granting appellant additional time "to effect the composition of the record on appeal" was not an extension of time for filing notice of appeal. It is not necessary to serve a copy of the judgment on adverse party. Jackson v. Tinker, 161 M 51, 504 P2d 692 (1972).

Dismissal of Appeal — Failure to Comply With Rules: Appeal was dismissed where appellants had not transmitted any part of the record on appeal within the time required by subsection (a) of this rule, had not applied for an extension of time, had not requested parts of the transcript from the District Court Clerk within the time allowed, had not requested preparation of any part of the record on appeal, had not paid for copies of documents requested or portions of the transcript prepared, had not docketed the appeal or paid the docket fee, and had failed, within the time allowed by the Chief Justice, to replace counsel desiring to withdraw with good cause. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. United Bank of Pueblo, 158 M 223, 490 P2d 352 (1971).

Rule 11. Docketing the appeal — filing of the record.

Advisory Committee Notes

This rule is patterned after Rule 12 of the Federal Draft, with adjustments to state practice. The provision of section 82-503[, R.C.M. 1947; 3-2-403, 3-2-404, MCA] for a fee for filing the "transcript" on appeal will apply to the "record" on appeal pursuant to these rules.

The appellant's responsibility with respect to docketing and filing are specified. The appellant may pay the filing fee at any time after filing the notice of appeal, and it is then the duty of the clerk of the supreme court to enter the appeal on the docket. The appellant's responsibility is (1) to pay the filing fee at or before the time allowed or fixed for transmission of the record, and (2) to insure that the record is transmitted to the supreme court within the time allowed or fixed for its transmission. The clerk of the supreme court is directed to assign to cases on appeal the title which was used in the district court in the interest of facilitating future reference and citation and location of cases in indexes.

Rader v. Taylor, 134 M 419, 333 P2d 480 (1958).

Delay in Filing Transcript — No Laches Found: A motion to dismiss an appeal on the grounds that no transcript or brief of appeal had been served or filed by the appellants within the time prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court will be denied when it appears that prior to the consideration of the motion to dismiss the appellant's transcript had been filed with the Supreme Court and the record perfected to the satisfaction of the court and the delay in filing such transcript has been without laches on the part of the appellants. McNaught v. McCahan, 126 M 616, 250 P2d 912 (1952).

Failure to Prosecute Appeal — Default Judgment Affirmed: The District Court entered a default judgment, and Reese appealed but failed to prosecute his appeal by ordering the necessary transcripts. Upon motion by plaintiff and without objection by Reese, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal with prejudice. The dismissal affirmed the order of the District Court and became the law of the case. The District Court did not err in refusing to set aside the default judgment. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Reese, 260 M 24, 858 P2d 357, 50 St. Rep. 925 (1993).

Second Appeal Denied: Appellant who requested dismissal of his appeal from ruling denying motion to set aside summary judgment cannot later make a second appeal attacking the validity of the summary judgment. United Bank of Pueblo v. Iverson, 164 M 473, 525 P2d 21 (1974).

Gray v. Bohart, 131 M 522, 312 P2d 529 (1957), followed in S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990).

Modification of Dismissal Order as Plaintiff's Remedy: If plaintiffs are aggrieved by dismissal, their remedy is to promptly apply to Supreme Court to have order of dismissal modified and not to take another appeal from the same judgment. Libin v. Huffine, 124 M 361, 224 P2d 144 (1950).

Subsequent Appeal Not Proper Remedy for Dismissal: Where appeal was dismissed a subsequent appeal taken from the same judgment within the time allowed for taking appeals must likewise be dismissed. Libin v. Huffine, 124 M 361, 224 P2d 144 (1950).

Dismissal for Failure of Service — Effect: An appeal by plaintiff in an action against a county may be dismissed for failure to serve the Attorney General with a copy of the transcript and appellant's brief, and such dismissal, unless done without prejudice, will be in effect an affirmance of the judgment. CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Letters Issued Pending Appeal: The District Court proceeded without jurisdiction when its Clerk issued letters testamentary to a person appointed executor when an appeal was taken from the order appointing such person executor and such appeal was taken before the executor qualified. Neither his letters nor his acts done thereunder are saved by this section inasmuch as he never qualified. In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Qualification Pending Appeal: Where a person was appointed administrator, but before he qualified an appeal was taken from the order appointing him, such person could not then qualify and enter into administration of the estate, for at the time of attempting to qualify, the District Court had lost jurisdiction of the matter because of the appeal. In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Acts Taken Under Voidable Appointment Valid: Where the court appointed decedent's "nominee" in an instrument not qualifying as a will, as against the petition of the public administrator, decedent having died intestate, such appointment was not void but voidable only, and whatever proper steps in the administration were taken and done under the appointment before reversal must be taken as lawfully performed and valid. In re Rohkramer's Estate, 113 M 545, 131 P2d 967 (1942), distinguished in In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

No Error in Giving Jury Instructions Regarding Intervening Cause When Jury Did Not Consider Issue: Pula sued the state for negligence related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. The District Court's special verdict form required jurors to answer a series of questions on breach of duty, causation, and damages, and then, depending on the answers, to move on to succeeding questions, one of which was the issue of whether there was an intervening cause. Pula asserted error in that the instructions on independent intervening causation were incorrect statements of the law. However, the first question for the jury was whether the state was negligent, which was answered affirmatively, so the jury moved on to the second question, which was whether the negligence resulted in Pula's injuries. The answer was negative, so the jury was instructed not to consider the third question, which was whether there was an intervening cause. Because the jury never considered the issue of intervening cause in reaching its verdict, the instructions on intervening cause had no effect on the outcome of the trial. The Supreme Court declined to assign reversible error to instructions addressing an issue that was never reached. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002). See also Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980).

Controversial Evidence Erroneously Admitted — Appeal Showing Substantial Rights Affected — Not Harmless Error: When controversial evidence was erroneously admitted at trial and when on appeal a showing was made that substantial rights might well have been affected, the error was not harmless. Beil v. Mayer, 242 M 204, 789 P2d 1299, 47 St. Rep. 661 (1990). See also St. Highway Comm'n v. Churchwell, 146 M 52, 403 P2d 751 (1965).

Incorrect Calculations Inappropriate for Judicial Notice — Harmless Error: The trial court took judicial notice of two calculations that proved incorrect. The inferences drawn from these figures were used to support the court's decision. The Supreme Court stated that the trial court erred by taking judicial notice of facts not appropriate for judicial notice, but the error was harmless since other evidence supported the court's decision. Rose v. Myers, 223 M 13, 724 P2d 176, 43 St. Rep. 1493 (1986).

Slight Dollar Amount Errors in Findings — Harmless Error: That certain monetary amounts in the findings varied slightly from the proof at the trial was harmless error not requiring reversal, when the variation had no effect on the outcome of the issues. Farmers St. Bank of Victor v. Imperial Cattle Co., 218 M 89, 708 P2d 223, 42 St. Rep. 1419 (1985).

No Ruling Against Respondent — Issue Not Reviewable: When there was no ruling by the Workers' Compensation Court against claimant on the issue of the present value discount of claimant's net award, and claimant had made no objections on this issue, the claimant could not raise the issue under this section. Conway v. Blackfeet Indian Dev., Inc., 217 M 54, 702 P2d 970, 42 St. Rep. 1020 (1985).

Perfected Cross-Appeal Necessary to Address Separate Issues: Respondent raised two issues not addressed by appellant. The court did not consider the issues because respondent did not perfect a cross-appeal. Rule 14, M.R.App.P., provides for review of matters by cross-assignment of errors, but this does not eliminate the necessity for cross-appeal by a respondent who seeks review of matters separate and distinct from those sought to be reviewed by appellant. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695, 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984), followed in Tigart v. Thompson, 237 M 468, 774 P2d 401, 46 St. Rep. 974 (1989). See also Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Cross-Appeal Necessary — Damages: Defendant could not, on plaintiff's appeal, challenge failure to award defendant damages, as defendant did not cross-appeal. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983). See also Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Consent to Alleged Error: On appeal, a father suing for injury to his son found submerged in defendant's swimming pool alleged pretrial discovery abuse by defendant in that defendant was allowed to add a witness the day before trial and had known the location of the witness but failed to inform the father of the address, in violation of defendant's duty to supplement its interrogatory answers. It was not reversible error to allow the witness to testify. The testimony was probative on important fact issues, and the father interviewed the witness before trial and rejected an offered continuance. The father was not entitled to have his cake and eat it too. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

When Cross-Appeal Required: The respondent in an appeal sought review under this rule of an alleged inequitable property distribution. Because the respondent sought a determination more favorable than that made by the lower court, a cross-appeal was necessary. Converse v. Converse, 198 M 227, 645 P2d 413, 39 St. Rep. 887 (1982).

Cross-Appeal Necessary — Attorney Fees: Johnson, an attorney, brought suit against Tindall to recover attorney's fees. The record in the case contains a substantial basis for awarding all the fees claimed, but the District Court reduced the fees in the judgment. Tindall appealed the decision, and on appeal Johnson asked the court to review the decision to reduce the fees under Rule 14, M.R.App.P. The court held that absent a cross-appeal by Johnson, the court cannot review the decision to reduce the fees. Johnson v. Tindall, 195 M 165, 635 P2d 266, 38 St. Rep. 1763 (1981), followed in Johnson v. Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438, 40 St. Rep. 1255 (1983), and in Neumann v. Rogstad, 232 M 24, 757 P2d 761, 45 St. Rep. 837 (1988).

Trade Secrets as Protectable Property — Necessity to Consider Under This Rule: Although the District Court finding that trade secrets are protectable property was not appealed, the Supreme Court considered the determination sine qua non to its decision in a utility ratemaking case, and it was also required to be considered under this rule. Mtn. States Tel. and Tel. Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 277, 634 P2d 181, 38 St. Rep. 1479 (1981).

Delinquent Youth Conviction — Inadmissible Hearsay — Corroboration of Testimony of Others Accountable for Same Offense: After a minor was cited for running a red light and for driving without a license, the County Attorney charged he was a delinquent youth under the Youth Court Act, alleging the minor had taken the car without the owner's consent. The minor appealed stating that the testimony of two police officers concerning the stolen property report was inadmissible hearsay and that his conviction declaring him a delinquent youth was improperly based on the testimony of other individuals who were legally accountable for the offense. The Supreme Court found that the officers' testimony was inadmissible hearsay. The court also found that the corroborating evidence supplied by the officer who stopped the vehicle tended to connect the youth directly with the offense and that, therefore, the testimony of other minors responsible or legally accountable for the same offense was properly admitted. Despite the fact that the testimony of the other youths in the car, in conjunction with the independent corroborating evidence, could support a conviction in some cases, the reviewing court reversed the conviction. It found that the admission of the hearsay so affected the substantial rights of the accused as to require reversal. In re D.W.L., a Youth, 189 M 267, 615 P2d 887 (1980).

No Reversible Error on Damage Instructions When Jury Did Not Reach Issue: Where the jury does not reach the issue of damages, on appeal no reversible error can be predicated on damage instructions. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980). See also Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002).

Opinion Testimony as to State of Intoxication — Harmless Error: Failure to allow witnesses to answer defense attorney's question of whether they thought defendant was drunk or on drugs, when witnesses had testified as to defendant's erratic actions, responses, appearance, and condition and defendant's expert witness had testified concerning the effect of alcohol and drugs, was at most harmless error not affecting the substantive rights of the defendant. St. v. Hardy, 185 M 130, 604 P2d 792 (1980).

Denial of Discovery: Motion to discover papers went unruled upon, and no objection was made. Therefore, substantial rights of defendant were not violated and conviction will not be overturned due to harmless error. St. v. Armstrong, 172 M 296, 562 P2d 1129 (1977).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

GENERAL

Dismissal of Parties — Remedy by Cross-Appeal: Where the trial court in an action against a corporation and two of its employees granted a motion of the latter two for a directed verdict and ordered judgment in their favor for costs, plaintiff's (respondent's) remedy was by cross-appeal, not by cross-assignment of error. Truzzolino Food Prod. Co. v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 108 M 408, 91 P2d 415 (1939).

Instructions to Jury Disregarded — When Harmless Error: The Supreme Court will not, when the record discloses that the jury disregarded a specific instruction, inquire whether the instruction is correct, but will direct a new trial on that ground, except when the evidence was sufficient to have justified the verdict, in which case the appellant would be entitled, under this section, to have the judgment affirmed. De Young v. Benepe, 55 M 306, 176 P 609 (1918).

Appeal by Plaintiff — Insufficiency of Evidence Raised by Defendant: Where the plaintiff, on appeal from a judgment in his favor, complains that it is for an insufficient amount, but the defendant correctly insists that the complaint is insufficient to support any judgment, the Supreme Court will reverse the judgment with directions to sustain the demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint. Manhattan Co. v. White, 48 M 565, 140 P 90 (1914).

New Trial Granted — Application of Statute: The rule that an order granting a new trial will be upheld, if any ground of the motion supports such order, is applicable only where the order is a general one, not disclosing the particular ground upon which the court acted, or where counsel have invoked the provisions of this section for the compensation of errors. Harrington v. Butte Miner Co., 48 M 550, 139 P 451 (1914).

COMPENSATING ERROR

Failure to Appeal as Precluding Consideration of Error: In action to foreclose lien by taker up of animals under 81-4-217, where defendant appealed but plaintiff did not cross-appeal, a cross-assignment of error by plaintiff contending that allowance of 10 cents per goat per day for caring for animals was not a reasonable allowance but that allowance should have been 50 cents per goat per day, could not be considered since the error was not of a compensatory character. Doornbos v. Ihde, 124 M 570, 228 P2d 235 (1951).

Separate Causes of Action — No Effect by Separate Error: Where the complaint consisted of two causes of action each relating to separate transactions independent of each other, cross-assignments relating to the trial of the one could not compensate or render harmless error committed in the trial of the other, and therefore such assignments were not available to respondent. J. M. Hamilton Co. v. Battson, 99 M 583, 44 P2d 1064, 101 ALR 520 (1935).

New Trial Granted — Error to Be Considered: A new trial should never be granted when it is apparent that the result reached would not be changed on a retrial, and in passing on an appeal from an order granting a new trial the Supreme Court may consider an assignment of error that if the trial court had not committed error against respondent during the trial a cause would be presented in which a new trial should not have been granted, under the doctrine of compensatory error. Parsons v. Rice, 81 M 509, 264 P 396 (1928).

Requirements and Effect of Statute:

It is only where alleged errors assigned by respondent under his cross-assignment of error compensate appellant for errors committed against him that the Supreme Court is required to affirm the judgment under this section. Murray v. Creese, 80 M 453, 260 P 1051 (1927).

Since the enactment of this section, the Supreme Court is required on appeal to review not only the errors assigned by appellant, but the cross-assignment made by respondent if made to appear in the record by bill of exceptions, and under the doctrine of compensatory error thereby established, the court cannot reverse the judgment for error committed against appellant if the same result would have been attained had the trial court not committed errors against respondent. Nitsche v. Sec. Benefit Ass'n, 78 M 532, 255 P 1052 (1927).

Under this section authorizing review of cross-assignments of error made by the successful party, the Supreme Court will affirm the judgment if error committed against the appellant is compensated by that committed against respondent. Hale v. Belgrade Co., Ltd., 75 M 99, 242 P 425 (1925).

This section requires the Supreme Court to review the errors made, not only against the appellant, but also those made in his favor, if they are made to appear in the record by bill of exceptions, and prohibits the reversal of the judgment upon any error complained of by the appellant, if, but for the error against the respondent, the result of the trial would have been the same. In re Murphy's Estate, 43 M 353, 116 P 1004 (1911).

Exception of Parties in Record — Use by Prevailing Party: By virtue of this section and of section 93-5509, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 9, 10, and 25, M.R.App.P.), the exceptions of both parties may be incorporated in the record, and the prevailing party is always in a position to inform the Supreme Court that he has not been permitted to introduce all of his evidence. State ex rel. La France Copper Co. v. District Court, 40 M 206, 105 P 721 (1909).

CROSS-APPEALS

Issue Not Raised by Appellant: The appellant's workers' compensation benefits had been terminated on the basis that his conviction for growing marijuana demonstrated that his injury was not permanent. The State Fund argued that the appellant should have been ordered to reimburse the fund for all payments received. The Supreme Court held that the issue had not been raised by cross-appeal and therefore was not properly before the court. Baldwin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 242 M 373, 791 P2d 49, 47 St. Rep. 810 (1990). See also Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Cross-Appeal Still Required for Consideration of Separate Error: Where respondent desires a review of rulings of the trial court upon a cause of action separate and distinct from that which the appellant seeks to have reviewed on his appeal, he must prosecute a cross-appeal, even though the causes were tried in the same action, this section authorizing review of cross-assignments of error not being intended to do away with the necessity of a cross-appeal under such conditions. Francisco v. Francisco, 120 M 468, 191 P2d 317, 1 ALR 2d 625 (1947); Osnes Livestock Co. v. Warren, 103 M 284, 62 P2d 206 (1936); Best v. London Guar. & Accident Co., 100 M 332, 47 P2d 456 (1935); In re Silver's Estate, 98 M 141, 38 P2d 277 (1934); Cook v. MacGinniss, 72 M 280, 233 P 129 (1925).

Time Limits Applicable to Cross-Appeals: The provision of section 93-8004, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 5, M.R.App.P.), that an appeal from a final judgment must be taken within 6 months after entry thereof, applies where a respondent takes a cross-appeal under this section, for the purpose of having rulings made against him during the course of the trial reviewed. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

CROSS-ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR

Mutual Failure to Cross-Assign Excused: Where appellant did not make an assignment of error, the court will likewise excuse the failure of the respondent to make a cross-assignment of error. Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Kruse, 121 M 202, 192 P2d 317 (1948).

No Cross-Assignment Considered Where Cross-Appeal Not Taken: Where no cross-appeal was taken, the court declined to consider a cross-assignment of error, stating that it was evident that it could in nowise compensate for the alleged errors claimed by appellant. Hitchner & Hitchner, Inc. v. Fox, 109 M 593, 98 P2d 327 (1940).

Application of Statute — Cross-Assignments Required:

A statute authorizing cross-assignments of error applies only where the respondent makes such assignments upon rulings adverse to him and preserves them in the bill of exceptions, to enable the Supreme Court to determine whether the errors complained of by appellant were compensated for or were rendered harmless by reason of them. Phelps v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 105 M 195, 71 P2d 887 (1937).

This section has application only to cases in which the respondent makes cross-assignments upon errors in rulings adverse to him and preserved in a bill of exceptions, its purpose being to enable the Supreme Court to determine whether those complained of by the appellant were compensated or rendered harmless by reason of those complained of by respondent. In re Silver's Estate, 98 M 141, 38 P2d 277 (1934); Cook v. MacGinniss, 72 M 280, 233 P 129 (1925).

Application to Claim and Delivery: This section has no application to a case wherein the verdict in claim and delivery fails to find that there was an unlawful taking or detention. It has application only to cases in which the respondent makes cross-assignments upon errors on rulings adverse to him and preserved in a bill of exceptions, in order to enable the Supreme Court to determine whether those complained of by the appellant were compensated or rendered harmless by reason of them. Olcott v. Gebo, 54 M 35, 166 P 300 (1917).

Cross-Appeal or Assignment of Error Required: On a plaintiff's appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant cannot complain where he has not appealed nor even, by cross-assignment in his brief, asked that the judgment be modified. Williams v. Johnson, 50 M 7, 144 P 768 (1914).

SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS TO BE AFFECTED

Failure to Read Testimony of No Effect: Affidavit of eight of the jurors, who were enough to render a verdict, stated that they were not in disagreement as to what the evidence showed. The only jurors who desired some or all of the testimony read were those who finally voted against the verdict. They had hoped to influence the other jurors to change their minds by having testimony read. The other jurors being two-thirds of them, stated definitely that their verdict would not have been different had the testimony or any part of it been read to them. The irregularity, if it actually existed, did not affect verdict and was not cause for reversal where it was clear that it did not affect substantial right of plaintiff. Galiger v. Hansen, 133 M 34, 319 P2d 1051 (1957).

No Application to Lack of Evidence: The portion of this section declaring that no judgment shall be reversed for trivial or nonprejudicial error does not extend to proceeding where in addition to prejudicial error in admission of testimony, the evidence in support of dismissal was meager and unconvincing while that for the prosecution was direct and forceful. St. v. Patton, 102 M 51, 55 P2d 1290, 104 AlR 76 (1936).

Substantial Justice to Be Done: The Supreme Court will dispose of a case according to the substantial rights of the parties, as shown by the record. Manhattan Co. v. White, 48 M 565, 140 P 90 (1914).

CASES DECIDED UNDER RULES

Appeal Moot for Inability of Supreme Court to Grant Relief: Plaintiffs owned a ranch, but being in default and facing foreclosure, they made a deal with defendant Bell whereby Bell would borrow money to pay off plaintiffs' debt and plaintiffs would receive an ownership interest in Bell's company formed to manage the ranch. However, the mortgage was never transferred into the company, and plaintiffs sued Bell for fraud and breach of contract. A jury granted plaintiffs $500,000 in damages for Bell's breach of contract, and Bell appealed. Bell ultimately declared bankruptcy and sold the ranch to pay off the loan and to pay off the money judgment owed to plaintiffs, whereby plaintiffs' mortgage on the ranch was released. Plaintiffs moved that Bell's appeal be dismissed for mootness, and the Supreme Court agreed. The $500,000 judgment could not simply be reversed with plaintiffs retaining ownership because the ranch had been sold, and Bell would be considerably richer than he was at the beginning of the deal, having invested little of his own money, and plaintiffs would have nothing. Therefore, applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996), the Supreme Court held that Bell's claim was moot based on the court's inability to grant effective relief. Graveyard Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Bell, 2005 MT 172, 327 M 491, 116 P3d 779 (2005).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Verdict: The Supreme Court held that the respondent was not entitled to recover under any of the damage theories he had presented. The court reversed the District Court's judgment and refused to grant a new trial for a case in which a party could at most recover only nominal damages upon retrial. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Erroneous Judgment — Reversal — Effect: The trial court held that Fix was the owner of a state lease, based on an oral agreement to assign the lease. The Supreme Court reversed the decision in Aye v. Fix, 176 M 474, 580 P2d 97 (1978). Bruski, the assignee of the lease, contended that the reversal on the first appeal precluded the trial judge from relying on his original finding that Fix was rightfully in possession under a sublease from Aye. A reversal, however, extends only to those issues that the appellate court actually decided or decided by necessary implication; it does not affect collateral matters not before the court, so that the finding that Fix was rightfully in possession was allowable. Fix was liable to Bruski, however, for payments made to producers who raise crops in accordance with federal guidelines. A party who has been dispossessed of property by an erroneous judgment is entitled, upon reversal, not only to specific restitution of the property, but also to rents, issues, and profits therefrom. Had it not been for the trial court's erroneous judgment, Bruski would have been in possession of the land and entitled to the payments. Aye v. Fix, 192 M 141, 626 P2d 1259, 38 St. Rep. 578A (1981). See also Slater v. Cent. Plumbing & Heating Co., 1999 MT 257, 297 M 7, 993 P2d 654, 56 St. Rep. 1023 (1999).

Practice of Additur: The rule of additur given in Zook Bros. Constr. Co. v. St., 171 M 64, 556 P2d 911 (1976), may be invoked only for an adjustment of an award of damages made by a District Court sitting without a jury and only to correct an error ascertainable by mathematical calculation. Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117, 35 St. Rep. 1878 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Partnership Dissolution — Unjust Benefit Required Restitution: The District Court erred in refusing motion of appellant for order of restitution in proceedings dissolving partnership between two brothers. One of the brothers, pursuant to original judgment of the District Court, obtained possession and control over all of the property of the partnership, save that portion paid into court, in an attempt to satisfy the judgment in respect to appellant, the other brother, where there was an unjust benefit conferred upon purchaser as a result of the District Court's judgment. He had no legal right to the amount given him of the proceeds of the partnership and the judgment had been modified declaring appellant the owner of certain property previously paid over to the purchaser. Hanson v. Hansen, 134 M 290, 329 P2d 791 (1958).

Right to Deny License Subject to Restitution: The right of the Montana Liquor Control Board to deny a license is not personal to the members or of such nature that the license may be subject of restitution under this section. Gill v. Rafn, 133 M 505, 326 P2d 974 (1958), followed and clarified, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Jurisdiction Available to Enforce Restitution: While the subject of the controversy and the parties are before the court, it has jurisdiction to enforce restitution of an amount lost through the enforcement of a judgment subsequently reversed. Waggoner v. Glacier Colony of Hutterites, 131 M 525, 312 P2d 117 (1957).

Restitution Impossible — Issues Moot: Where District Court issued a Writ of Prohibition prohibiting the Liquor Control Board from issuing licenses to persons other than those who had permits, and also issued a Writ of Mandate directing the issuance of licenses to certain persons, which Writs the court refused to stay pending appeal, and the parties to whom the licenses were issued engaged in the business of selling liquor at retail; the questions on appeal are moot, since the court on appeal could not restore the parties to the status quo and could not effect restitution. State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Restitution of Books and Papers to Officer: Under this section, the Supreme Court may order restitution in a proper case or direct the District Court to do so. Hence, where a city officer was wrongfully ousted from office in quo warranto proceedings, the appellate court on reversal of the judgment may remand the cause with direction that the books and papers of the office be turned over to the successful appellant. State ex rel. Kurth v. Grinde, 96 M 608, 32 P2d 15 (1934), distinguished in State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956); explained in Gill v. Rafn, 133 M 505, 326 P2d 974 (1958).

Manner of Compelling Restitution: The District Court improperly vacated an order appointing a receiver in a mortgage foreclosure suit and directed the clerk of court to pay over to defendant the money collected during the receivership. With knowledge that the order was subject to review and possible reversal, the money was at once obtained from the clerk. Under this section the Supreme Court may either compel restitution by its mandate or direct the District Court to do so, or the plaintiff mortgagee may maintain a separate action for that purpose. Burgess v. Lasby, 94 M 534, 24 P2d 147 (1933).

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Judgment Pursuant to Mandate Becomes Final Judgment: The entry of the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court by the Clerk of the District Court as directed by statute ipso facto modifies the judgment theretofore entered by the District Court. The judgment of the Supreme Court so entered becomes the final judgment in the cause. Hansen v. Hansen, 130 M 496, 304 P2d 1107 (1956).

Modification of Judgment — Language Incorrect: Where Supreme Court, on appeal, by its judgment and remittitur, modified the judgment of the lower court, an entry by the lower court to the effect that its former judgment "stand for naught" is error and can be corrected. Hansen v. Hansen, 130 M 496, 304 P2d 1107 (1956).

Application of Statutes Directing Entry of Judgment: A mandate of the Supreme Court, reversing a judgment and remanding the case, with directions to enter judgment, must be interpreted in the light of the statutes governing the entry of a judgment after appeal, and the direction to enter judgment as directed must be construed as addressed to the clerk of the trial court. State ex rel. Dolenty v. Reece, 43 M 291, 115 P 681 (1911).

Recording of Judgment Proper: The practice of the clerk of the trial court of signing and recording a formal judgment, on receipt of a remittitur by the Clerk of the Supreme Court, is proper, in the absence of any other legislative direction. State ex rel. Dolenty v. Reece, 43 M 291, 115 P 681 (1911).

Duty of Clerk Ministerial Duty: The duty which this section imposes upon the Clerk of the District Court, in requiring him to enter on his docket the judgment of the Supreme Court rendered in any cause before it on appeal, is a purely ministerial one. State ex rel. Dolenty v. District Court, 42 M 170, 111 P 731 (1910).

Mandamus Against District Court Improper — Duty Upon Clerk: Since the duty of entering a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court in disposing of an appeal rests upon the Clerk of the District Court from which the appeal was taken, such court, or its judge, may not be compelled by mandamus to perform the act thus imposed by law upon the Clerk. State ex rel. Dolenty v. District Court, 42 M 170, 111 P 731 (1910).

Compiler's Comments

2002 Amendments: In (e) in last sentence near end after "initials" deleted "or first names". Amendment effective February 1, 2003.

In (e) at end of paragraph inserted last sentence concerning use of initials rather than names of certain parties. Amendment effective March 15, 2002.

2000 Emergency Rule: In an order dated June 28, 2000, the Supreme Court adopted rule modifications on an emergency basis. The portion of the order affecting this rule provided: "Shortened Briefs and Petitions. The word and page limitation for briefs specified in Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P., is modified as follows: A principal brief must not exceed 10,000 words and a reply brief, amicus brief or petition for rehearing must not exceed 5,000 words. Rule 27(d)(ii), M.R.App.P., is modified as follows: a principal brief must not exceed 30 pages and a reply brief, amicus brief or petition for rehearing must not exceed 14 pages. Petitions filed under Rule 17(b), M.R.App.P., must not exceed 5000 words or 14 pages. These modifications apply to all briefs and petitions filed on or after August 1, 2000. Except as modified herein, all other provisions of the referenced Rules remain unchanged."

1999 Amendment: At end of last sentence of (b) inserted exception clause; in (e) in first sentence inserted "in summary fashion and", at end of second sentence inserted language concerning summarizing authorities, and substituted third sentence concerning not filing separate memorandum or brief for former sentence requiring filing memorandum or authorities; substituted (f) concerning procedure upon filing of application for former text that read: "The supreme court shall consider an application for an extraordinary writ at the court's next court conference following the filing of the application. On the basis of the application filed, the court shall as promptly as possible, dismiss the petition, accept jurisdiction, or order a response reserving the question of jurisdiction. Only in extraordinary cases will the court grant oral argument to determine the necessity and propriety of accepting jurisdiction.

Unless oral argument is ordered by this court in order to establish jurisdiction, the court will enter an appropriate order forthwith. Such order may dismiss the petition, grant the relief requested, order a hearing on the application, or issue any other writ or order deemed appropriate in the circumstances"; and in (h) in first sentence substituted "more extensive briefing" for "oral argument" and inserted "unless otherwise ordered" and at end of second sentence deleted "and in no event later than 24 hours prior to the time fixed for oral argument". Amendment effective August 15, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Inserted (i) concerning copies of petitions. Amendment effective June 23, 1997.

1992 Amendment: Deleted language at end of subsection (b) referring to Rule 27, M.R.App.P., which language was previously deleted from that rule; and inserted subsection (c) concerning notice to a District Judge.

1971 Amendment: The 1971 amendment added to the second sentence of subdivision (b) the clause excepting typewritten papers; added the third sentence to subdivision (b); and added the final sentence to subdivision (d).

Supreme Court Rules Superseded: As to the advisory committee note above, see the compiler's comments to Rule 43 (now Rule 53), M.R.App.P., and to this chapter.

Case Notes

General 1293
Writ of Supervisory Control 1296

GENERAL

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P., precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of this rule. Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

District Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law in Determining Whether Implied Consent Statute Applicable to Blood Drawn for Medical Reasons — Supervisory Control Accepted: The District Court suppressed the results of a blood test taken for medical reasons after a DUI suspect declined to give consent for a blood test following a car accident in which the use of alcohol was suspected. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law, and that if the mistake was left uncorrected, the state would be without an adequate remedy on appeal. Given the state's limited ability to appeal an evidentiary ruling, the Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction in the matter to prevent the introduction of evidence when correction of the ruling by a later court decision would be ineffective. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001), following State ex rel. Mazurek v. District Court, 277 M 349, 922 P2d 474 (1996), and Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267 (1998).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), Rule 1, M.R.App.P., 27-25-103, and this rule require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to Rule 5, M.R.App.P., a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Criteria Met for Supreme Court Jurisdiction of Death Row Petition for Injunctive Relief: Pursuant to the version of 46-19-103 that was in effect at the time that Langford was sentenced for execution, he affirmatively elected that death be imposed by hanging rather than lethal injection. Langford appealed to the District Court for a declaration that execution by hanging was cruel and unusual punishment that violated the eighth amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The District Court denied the motion, holding that Langford's choice of hanging rendered the cruel and unusual punishment argument moot. Langford appealed to the appropriate federal courts for a writ of habeas corpus, applying the same argument. During the pendency of Langford's federal habeas corpus proceedings, the Montana Legislature met and amended 46-19-103 by removing the hanging option, rendering the federal proceedings moot and nonjusticiable. Langford then filed an original proceeding with the Montana Supreme Court, asserting that the state impermissibly truncated his ability to fully appeal his death sentence by removing hanging as a means of execution and that the state should be permanently enjoined from executing him under the current version of 49-19-103. After examining the applicable statutory criteria, the Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction of the petition for writ of injunction because: (1) the state was clearly a party to the action; (2) the public had an interest in establishing and maintaining the validity of state actions in a proceeding that attempted to curtail the state's ability to enact, amend, and enforce state legislation; and (3) Langford's imminent execution constituted sufficient emergency circumstances to render due consideration in the trial court and appeal to the Supreme Court an inadequate remedy. Langford v. St., 287 M 107, 951 P2d 1357, 54 St. Rep. 1522 (1997).

Factors Necessary for Acceptance of Original Jurisdiction:

Although it is correct that prior to the decision in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004 (1990), the Supreme Court had exercised supervisory control under all three circumstances set forth in the Racicot test, subsequent decisions interpreted Racicot to mean that all three circumstances must be present before supervisory control will be accepted. However, the Supreme Court recognizes that there will be circumstances that are appropriate for the exercise of supervisory control that do not satisfy the three-part test. To the extent that Racicot suggests that all three elements must be established and to the extent that subsequent decisions have applied the test in that fashion, they are reversed. Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996).

Once standing to bring an action is established, the question shifts to whether the action meets the necessary factors for the Supreme Court to accept original jurisdiction. Assumption of original jurisdiction is proper when: (1) constitutional issues of major statewide importance are involved; (2) the case involves purely legal questions of statutory and constitutional construction; and (3) urgency and emergency factors exist, making the normal appeal process inadequate. Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. St., 235 M 398, 768 P2d 327, 46 St. Rep. 87 (1989), followed in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004, 47 St. Rep. 1785 (1990), and Montanans for the Coal Trust v. St., 2000 MT 13, 298 M 69, 996 P2d 856, 57 St. Rep. 73 (2000). See also State ex rel. Greely v. Water Court, 214 M 143, 691 P2d 833 (1984), State ex rel. Nelson v. District Court, 262 M 70, 863 P2d 1027, 50 St. Rep. 1447 (1993), and Craig v. District Court, 262 M 201, 864 P2d 791, 50 St. Rep. 1515 (1993).

No Legal Duty to Provide Party Copies of Transcripts in Pending Matter: Walker petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus ordering the District Court to provide him with copies of the transcripts, minutes, and documents in his pending criminal case. The Supreme Court refused to issue the order on the basis that there was no clear legal duty requiring the District Court to provide the requested information and that Walker could appeal any final decision by the District Court. Walker v. Colberg, 250 M 382, 822 P2d 82, 48 St. Rep. 971 (1991).

Supreme Court — Refusal to Determine Factual Issues: In an original proceeding before the Supreme Court, petitioners protested the physical conditions under which they were held in a county jail. They alleged a tort cause of action and violation of their constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. They sought relief under the habeas corpus and declaratory judgment statutes. It is not the role of the Supreme Court to function as the primary fact finder, and petitioners have demonstrated no emergency justifying departure from the usual proceedings in District Court to decide the merits of the issues raised by their allegations. Therefore, there is no basis on which the Supreme Court should accept original jurisdiction. Gates v. Missoula County Comm'rs, 235 M 261, 766 P2d 884, 45 St. Rep. 2370 (1988).

Writ Denied — No Abuse of Discretion: Relator failed to show that the District Court abused its discretion by denying her motion for visitation pending the outcome of the appeal; consequently, her petition for a writ directing the court to allow such visitation was denied. State ex rel. C.M.J. v. District Court, 179 M 32, 585 P2d 1312 (1978).

Petition Attacking Bar Unification: A petition to test the efficacy, constitutional legality, and beneficial application of the Supreme Court order and opinion of January 29, 1974, unifying the Montana Bar was dismissed for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. In re Petition of Morris, 175 M 456, 575 P2d 37 (1978).

Writ of Supervisory Control — Lower Court Order to Seek: The Writ of Supervisory Control was denied even though petitioner was ordered by the lower court to seek the Writ to determine jurisdiction in a child custody case. State ex rel. Jennings v. District Court, 178 M 187, 582 P2d 1260 (1978).

Original Jurisdiction Accepted: The Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction pursuant to this rule because of the shortness of time before the next meeting of the Legislature. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976).

Emergency Review — Constitutionality of Legislative Finance Committee: Since substantial questions of constitutionality existed with 5-12-102 through 5-12-402 (5-12-402 now repealed), except 5-12-304, establishing and empowering defendant Legislative Finance Committee and its office of Legislative Fiscal Analyst and because operation of these laws would have such significant impact on state government functions during delay before final resolution by Supreme Court, original jurisdiction of Supreme Court for declaratory judgment as to constitutionality was properly invoked. State ex rel. Judge v. Legislative Fin. Comm., 168 M 470, 543 P2d 1317 (1975).

Injunction Against State Agency — Protection of Court's Jurisdiction: Where Public Service Commission reopened its docket and issued further orders in connection with rate schedule change which was being challenged in courts at that time, Commission had no authority to take that action, and protective order was issued enjoining respondents from taking actions which interfere with court's appellate jurisdiction. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 177, 541 P2d 769 (1975).

Emergency Nature: Since the effect of Ch. 417, L. 1971, concerning minimum wages, was broad and touched all of the state's citizens, the Supreme Court accepted an original action alleging the unconstitutionality of the act as an emergency matter. Billings v. Smith, 158 M 197, 490 P2d 221 (1971).

Denial of Injunction — No Emergency: Supreme Court declined jurisdiction in original proceeding seeking injunction restraining defendant school districts from collecting certain fees and levies and requiring students to purchase certain material because no emergency existed, class action could be established in District Court, and thorough examination into multiple problems presented could not have been achieved. State ex rel. Thompson v. Elementary School District, 156 M 79, 474 P2d 700 (1970).

Writ of Review When Appeal Available: Notwithstanding the fact that appeal was available as a remedy, the Supreme Court determined that a Writ of Review was available when children were made illegitimate and support was cut off by action which exceeded court's jurisdiction. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Alternative Writ to Review Discovery Order: Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission), ordered by District Court to produce certain appraisals under discovery rules, was entitled to have order reviewed on allegations that order required production of irrelevant and privileged matter in excess of lower court's jurisdiction, that it was not an appealable order, and that Commission had no remedy at law, which allegations were sufficient to authorize issuance of alternative Writ. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 149 M 384, 427 P2d 49 (1967).

WRIT OF SUPERVISORY CONTROL

Discovery of Corporate Communications Conducted During Former Director's Tenure — No Violation of Attorney-Client Privilege: Plaintiff corporation sought a writ of supervisory control on grounds that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law by controlling a discovery attempt by the former director of a corporation to discover communications between the corporation's current directors and corporate counsel that occurred while the former director was a director. Plaintiff contended that allowing discovery violated the attorney-client privilege. The Supreme Court concluded that although the corporation was the client, the directors were jointly responsible for the management of the corporation and that, consistent with this responsibility, the directors must be treated as joint clients with the corporation when legal advice is rendered to the corporation through its officers or directors. When the former director was a corporate officer, he was entitled to access attorney-client communications, and the fact that he was no longer a director was not sufficient cause to render those communications privileged against him. The confidentiality of the attorney-client privilege is not violated when a former director of a closely held corporation who brings claims against the corporation is allowed to discover communication between corporate counsel and other directors that occurred during the former director's tenure as a director. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to accept supervisory control. Inter-Fluve v. District Court, 2005 MT 103, 327 M 14, 112 P3d 258 (2005).

Supervisory Control Appropriate to Address Res Judicata Claim: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. The Supreme Court held that the case was appropriate for supervisory control because if the res judicata claim was correct, Lane was entitled to summary judgment, but if denial of the summary judgment motion was in error, Lane would be required to defend against the same claim a second time and incur the attendant delay and expense, resulting in a gross injustice. The case was remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Dual Insurance Claims — Supervisory Control Proper to Facilitate Convenience and Judicial Economy: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims, and the couple sought relief from the order on grounds that they would be prejudiced by having to prosecute two separate trials. The Supreme Court concurred with the couple and, in the interests of the convenience of the parties and judicial economy, agreed to exercise supervisory control. State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1238 (1997).

Temporary Custody Order Not Considered Final for Purposes of Appeal — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate Mechanism to Challenge Temporary Custody: The District Court ordered temporary legal custody for a child, and the child's mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that orders of temporary legal custody do not embrace a final determination of the rights of the parties contemplated in Rule 1, M.R.App.P., that would subject the temporary order to direct appeal. Rather, temporary custody orders are considered interlocutory orders from which the Supreme Court will grant relief in extraordinary circumstances. This ensures the expeditious review of legal errors while still protecting children from the instability of protracted, piecemeal litigation. However, qualifying temporary custody orders as interlocutory does not leave a parent who is aggrieved by an erroneous order without a remedy. The parent may invoke the extraordinary remedy of a writ of supervisory control, which is the appropriate mechanism to challenge an order of temporary custody. In re D.A., 2003 MT 109, 315 M 340, 68 P3d 735 (2003). See also G.B. v. M.M.B., 670 A2d 714 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1996).

Supervisory Control Proper to Determine Whether Admission of Evidence of Subsequent Accidents With Nonparties Admissible to Disprove Liability for Damages: Following Truman's injury in an automobile accident, she was involved in a second automobile accident and in an accident involving an ultralight aircraft. The District Court held that evidence of Truman's injuries in the second automobile accident and the aircraft accident would be admissible in a trial related to the first automobile accident to disprove causation. Truman requested that the Supreme Court exercise supervisory control because the District Court made a mistake of law that would place Truman at a significant disadvantage in litigating the case. If the District Court's conclusion, that evidence of subsequent accidents with nonparties was admissible, proved incorrect, that conclusion would impact all aspects of the trial, render the trial results unreliable, and substantially increase the cost to Truman in both time and finances. Therefore, the Supreme Court acceded to the request and exercised supervisory control to determine whether the District Court was proceeding based upon a mistake of law. Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Supervisory Control Proper to Determine Scope of Court-Ordered Medical Examination: Pursuant to Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the District Court ordered plaintiff to undergo an extensive independent medical examination by an expert 750 miles away. The examination would have subjected plaintiff to burdensome, painful, invasive, elective, and potentially harmful procedures. Plaintiff requested that the Supreme Court assume supervisory control, asserting that the District Court was proceeding on a mistake of law that posed a risk of gross injustice to plaintiff. The Supreme Court agreed. The extent to which Rule 35 permits an individual to be subjected to extensive and potentially harmful procedures is an issue of statewide importance, and an appeal from a mistake of law compelled by the rule would be an inadequate remedy. Therefore, the Supreme Court determined that supervisory control was appropriate to determine whether the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law in ordering the examination. Simms v. District Court, 2003 MT 89, 315 M 135, 68 P3d 678 (2003). See also Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001).

Supervisory Control of Issue Related to Wrongful Death and Survival Action and Evidence of Economic Consumption: Plaintiff sought supervisory control of an action related to evidence of economic consumption as it pertained to a survival action and wrongful death. The Supreme Court found that allowing the District Court to permit the jury to consider evidence of economic consumption in this case would be a mistake of law constituting a deviation from well-established jurisprudence that would alter the cost of and preparation for trial, affect settlement negotiations, and call into question the value of any potential verdict, resulting in additional time and expense for appellate resolution and subsequent litigation. Any remedy available to plaintiff on direct appeal would thus prove inadequate, resulting in a gross injustice. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that this was an appropriate case in which to exercise supervisory control. Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Supervisory Control Granted to Address Stay of Declaratory Judgment Until Settlement Reached or Judgment Entered: Hill was injured in a vehicle accident caused by the negligence of Bennett, an insured of Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco). Although Safeco apparently paid some of Hill's initial medical bills, Safeco eventually disputed the causal relationship between the accident and the injuries, refusing to pay any further medical bills after a specific date. Hill sued Bennett for negligence and Safeco for nonpayment of medical expenses, seeking a declaratory judgment that he was entitled to advance payment of medical costs prior to settlement or final judgment and claiming that a declaratory judgment was proper under the Unfair Trade Practices Act and Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The District Court granted the declaratory judgment, and Safeco sought a writ of supervisory control because a direct appeal would be an inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court agreed and granted the writ. Safeco's application presented an appropriate legal issue for supervisory control because if the ordered payment of medical expenses was a mistake of law or incorrect, the delay in awaiting the outcome of the corollary litigation could create an unfair prejudice for Safeco, while any unnecessary delay in the payment of the medical costs would certainly prejudice Hill. Ultimately, the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000).

Youth Considered in Custody — Supervisory Control Appropriate When Lower Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law: Fourteen-year-old Evans was taken by his mother to the Flathead County Sheriff's office, upon request of the Deputy Sheriff, because he had been observed talking to a child on the day of her disappearance. Evans and his mother were separated upon arrival at the office, and Evans was taken to a 9-by-9-foot windowless interrogation room with a shut door where he was questioned for 2 ½ hours by two officers wearing badges and weapons. Evans waived his Miranda rights outside the presence and without the consent of his mother and without an opportunity to discuss his rights or the waiver with counsel. The officers did not tell Evans that he could leave the interrogation room or consult with his mother, and during the course of the interview, Evans' mother was denied contact with Evans. Although initially adamantly denying involvement, the officers repeatedly suggested that Evans had "more to tell them" and mislead him into believing that the police had fingerprints from the girl's body that could be matched to his. Toward the end of the interrogation, Evans confessed that he drowned the child and was charged with her death, arrested, handcuffed, and escorted to juvenile detention without an opportunity to speak to his mother. Evans filed a motion to suppress the confession on grounds that his waiver of rights while in custody was invalid under 41-5-331. The District Court denied the motion, concluding that Evans was not in custody during the interview and that the confession was voluntary. Accepting supervisory control because the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law, the Supreme Court, finding it difficult to imagine a more "custodial" setting, applied the factors in St. v. Staat, 251 M 1, 822 P2d 643, 48 St. Rep. 1041 (1991), and concluded that Evans was in custody during the interview, that his waiver of rights without the consent of a parent or advice of counsel was invalid under 41-5-331, and that the confession was not voluntary under the totality of the circumstances. Although the record on appeal was not sufficient to determine whether the state had other evidence sufficient to charge Evans, the case was nevertheless remanded for consideration of the evidence without the confession. Evans v. District Court, 2000 MT 38, 298 M 279, 995 P2d 455, 57 St. Rep. 175 (2000), followed, with regard to applicability of the totality of circumstances test for determining voluntariness of a juvenile's waiver and consent, in In re C.T.P., 2004 MT 63, 320 M 279, 87 P3d 399 (2004). See also State ex rel. D.M.B. v. District Court, 2004 MT 335, 324 M 190, 103 P3d 514 (2004).

Examination of Defendant by State Psychiatrist — Supervisory Control Granted to Prevent Denial of Defendant's Fifth Amendment Right Against Self-Incrimination: Park, who was charged with forgery and deliberate homicide, filed notice of his intent to use the affirmative defense that extreme mental and emotional stress caused him to commit the offenses and gave notice of his intent to use expert psychological testimony in the course of his defense. The state requested an examination of Park by its own psychological expert, but Park objected to the oral part of the requested examination on the grounds that, first, his defense was not reliance upon a mental disease or defect and the state therefore had no right to a psychological examination, and, second, he did not want to discuss his offenses with the psychological expert for fear of waiving his constitutional right against self-incrimination. The Supreme Court, citing Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91 (1991), held that the case was appropriate for supervisory control because Park was faced with the loss of a constitutional right as part of the psychological interview and appeal could not prevent the loss of that right. Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998).

Court Reporter Salary Dispute — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate: The Board of Lewis and Clark County Commissioners set the salary for court reporters, based on its interpretation of the 1997 amendment to 3-5-602. The salary did not include fringe benefits because the statute states that a court reporter is to receive the base salary "and no other compensation except as provided in 3-4-604", which allows a court reporter to collect only certain fees for providing transcripts. The District Court Judges ordered the Board to give the court reporters the maximum raise allowed and to continue their benefits at the prior level. The Board appealed the order directly to the Supreme Court. The judges contended that the appeal was improper because the Board filed no appropriate underlying civil action, whether a petition for a writ of mandamus, a petition for a writ of prohibition, or another action, and sought to have the appeal dismissed. The Board characterized the judges' order as a final appealable order rather than an administrative action. The Supreme Court found some merit to both arguments. Applying the rationale in Awareness Group v. School District, 243 M 469, 795 P2d 447 (1990), the court found that neither a writ of mandamus nor a writ of prohibition was appropriate and that they would not provide meaningful relief because it would be futile to seek to prohibit or to compel an act already accomplished. While granting the judges' motion to dismiss without prejudice to the underlying merits of the case, the Supreme Court held that if the Board decided to do so, it could file a petition for a writ of supervisory control with the Supreme Court, pursuant to this rule, and could raise whatever legal questions that it determined were at issue. If the Supreme Court determined it necessary, it could then remand for an evidentiary hearing in a neutral District Court in the same manner as in Gallatin County v. District Court, 281 M 33, 930 P2d 680 (1997). In re District Court Budget Order, 1998 MT 4, 287 M 137, 952 P2d 427, 55 St. Rep. 9 (1998).

Writ Granted — District Court's Order Error: The petitioner requested that the Supreme Court accept supervisory control over his petition for dissolution on the basis that the District Court was ordering him to have his trust land appraised in order to help the District Court determine the property settlement. The Supreme Court stated that based on prior decisions, it was clear that a state court may not distribute Indian trust land and that it therefore followed that a state court may not order an appraisal of the land. In order to avoid substantial injustice, the Supreme Court would accept supervisory control and reverse the District Court's order that the petitioner have the land appraised. Smith v. McKeon, 284 M 528, 946 P2d 117, 54 St. Rep. 990 (1997).

Bifurcation of Breach of Insurance Contract and Bad Faith Claims — Use of Supervisory Control to Require That Both Claims Be Tried to Same Jury: After the District Court bifurcated the Malta school district's insurance contract and bad faith claims, the school district requested by motion that both claims be tried to the same jury, one claim immediately following the other. The District Court denied the motion, and the school district sought a writ of supervisory control. The Supreme Court granted the writ and directed the District Court to try the contract claim and the bad faith claim to the same jury. Because 33-18-242 contains no standards governing whether a bifurcated case should be tried to the same jury, the Supreme Court looked to cases decided under Rule 42(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), for guidance and, after finding the state and federal versions of the same rule sufficiently similar, relied upon Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co., 85 FRD 654 (1980). The Supreme Court held that a two-step process should be used; it should first be determined whether bifurcation is appropriate and then whether the interests of judicial economy, fairness to the parties, clarity of the issues, and convenience require trial of the issues to the same or a different jury. In determining whether to grant the writ of supervisory control, the Supreme Court weighed the same or similar considerations also weighed by the Supreme Court pursuant to Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co. to determine whether separate juries should be used. The Supreme Court reviewed the circumstances of the case and found that the writ of supervisory control should be granted and that the District Court abused its discretion in refusing to try the two claims to the same jury. Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1335, 54 St. Rep. 486 (1997), followed in State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003).

Court Order for Suitable Jury Room — Supervisory Control Properly Used — Inherent Powers Not Implicated — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: Judge Moran issued an order pursuant to 3-5-404 (now repealed) for the Gallatin County Sheriff to provide a specific space in the Gallatin County courthouse for use as a jury room and to have the room remodeled and for the expenses to be paid from the Gallatin County general fund. Gallatin County requested the Supreme Court to take supervisory control to prevent protracted litigation, a request with which Judge Moran joined. However, Judge Moran asked that a District Court Judge be appointed to make findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction in order to prevent protracted litigation of the issues and appointed a neutral District Court Judge, Judge Wilson, to hold a hearing and make findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court held that Judge Moran had the authority under 3-5-404 (now repealed) to issue an order to the Sheriff to provide a suitable jury room; that the space provided by the Sheriff pursuant to the order was "suitable", within the dictionary definition of that word; that because the Legislature provided the authority under which Judge Moran acted, the implied powers of the District Court and the separation of powers doctrine were not implicated by Judge Moran's action; and that the findings of fact concerning the suitability of the room provided by the Sheriff and the suitability of another alternative jury room designated by the County Commissioners were not clearly erroneous. Gallatin County v. District Court, 281 M 33, 930 P2d 680, 54 St. Rep. 46 (1997).

Constitutionality of Statute Regarding Multiple Defendants Proper Issue for Supervisory Control: Although all three circumstances for the exercise of supervisory control in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004 (1990), were not present, the Supreme Court nevertheless concluded that the constitutionality of 27-1-703(6) was an appropriate issue to decide by supervisory control after finding that any remedy available to plaintiffs by appeal was inadequate and that denial of a speedy remedy by supervisory control would be a denial of justice. (See 1997 amendment.) Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), following State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396 (1986), and followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997), and Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998).

District Court Without Authority to Issue Writ of Supervisory Control to City Court: Maloney was convicted in City Court of speeding and driving under the influence of alcohol. Maloney appealed his conviction de novo for a trial in District Court and, at the same time, filed a petition for a writ of review, mandamus, and supervisory control, asking the District Court to direct the City Court to dismiss the charges. The District Court denied the petition. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had no authority to issue a writ of supervisory control to a City Court. Maloney v. Gordon, 254 M 314, 837 P2d 1341, 49 St. Rep. 834 (1992).

Defendant's Discovery Needs Balanced by Plaintiff's Right to Privacy: The defendant in a personal injury case sought access to the files of Mapes's psychologist. Mapes resisted the motion on the basis that it violated his right to privacy. The Supreme Court held that granting the supervisory writ was necessary because the defendant's discovery rights and the plaintiff's statutory privacy rights were in conflict. The court further held that the defendant could seek information pertaining only to prior physical or mental conditions that might relate to the damages being claimed in the present action. State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91, 48 St. Rep. 954 (1991), followed in Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998), and Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001).

Writ Proper to Avoid Needless and Expensive Litigation: The lower court erred in granting the plaintiff's summary judgment motion on the question of liability. The Supreme Court ruled that its granting of a writ of supervisory control requested by the defendant was proper in order to avoid a trial only on the question of damages. Such a trial would constitute needless and expensive litigation because the question of liability had been improperly excluded by the lower court. State ex rel. First Bank System v. District Court, 240 M 77, 782 P2d 1260, 46 St. Rep. 1956 (1989), followed in St. v. District Court, 265 M 445, 877 P2d 1008, 51 St. Rep. 599 (1994).

Writ Proper to Clarify Law and Provide Judicial Economy: In a negligence action against a school district and its employees, the District Court granted summary judgment dismissing the school district defendant pursuant to the immunity provisions of 2-9-111 and allowed plaintiffs to amend their complaint to name particular school district employees, namely school janitors, as defendants. This is a proper case for a writ of supervisory control to clarify the law and promote judicial economy. The lack of any issue of material fact renders the case appropriate for disposition upon summary judgment. The problem confronting the District Court is whether 2-9-111 provides immunity to school district employees, thereby entitling them to summary judgment. State ex rel. Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363, 46 St. Rep. 1929 (1989).

Appropriateness of Writ of Supervisory Control Regarding Motion to Compel Discovery — Discovery of Potentially Privileged Material: Although a discovery order is interlocutory and normally not appealable, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control in a case involving the discovery of potentially privileged material when it was apparent that the discovery order would place the defendant at a significant disadvantage in litigating the merits of the case. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989), followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997). See also Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998).

Exercise of Supervisory Control Improper — No Ruling by Trial Court on Subject: The defendants' motion in limine granted by the trial court excludes references to judicial statements made in the underlying action in the present voir dire of prospective jurors, opening statements, and examination of witnesses, until the trial court has ruled the statements are admissible. The plaintiff thus is not prevented from applying to the trial court for a pretrial determination of the admissibility of such statements. It is improper for the Supreme Court to exercise supervisory control in advance of any rulings by the trial court on this subject. Also, such rulings may be reviewed on appeal. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Fundamental Rights of Petitioner in Jeopardy — Appeal — May Be Inadequate Remedy: Plaintiff in an action against an insurance company for payment of a judgment under an insurance policy was granted a Writ of Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court determined that there were procedural entanglements caused by rulings made in the trial court that might prolong the litigation and potentially make an appeal an inadequate remedy. Fundamental rights of the petitioner are in sufficient jeopardy as to require supervisory control. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985), followed in State ex rel. Boyne USA, Inc. v. District Court, 228 M 314, 742 P2d 464, 44 St. Rep. 1550 (1987). See also State ex rel. Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363, 46 St. Rep. 1929 (1989), and State ex rel. USF&G. Co. v. District Court, 240 M 5, 783 P2d 911, 46 St. Rep. 1896 (1989).

Criminal Trial Pending — No Emergency Shown — Writ Denied: In 1980, defendant was convicted of the deliberate homicide of his wife. The conviction was reversed in 1982 (St. v. Forsyth, 197 M 248, 642 P2d 1035). Upon his retrial, the jury was deadlocked and a mistrial was declared. Upon the scheduling of the third trial, defendant moved to dismiss: first, for double jeopardy and lack of due process predicated upon a claim of jury tampering and prosecutorial misconduct in the second trial; and second, for lack of a speedy trial. Defendant also moved for a change of venue. The motions were denied by the District Court. Defendant then petitioned the Supreme Court for a Writ of Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court refused to issue the Writ, ruling that, with respect to all four issues, defendant had failed to demonstrate that any emergency exists which renders appeal an inadequate remedy. State ex rel. Forsyth v. District Court, 216 M 480, 701 P2d 1346, 42 St. Rep. 65 (1985).

Supervisory Control of Water Court Accepted — Federal Reserved Water Rights: Following the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Ariz. v. San Carlos Apache Tribe, 463 US 545, 77 L Ed 2d 837, 103 S Ct 3201 (1983), that to the extent state courts have taken jurisdiction over Indian water rights, such jurisdiction is proper, the state requested that the Montana Supreme Court exercise its powers of supervisory control over the state Water Court concerning the adjudication of federal reserved water rights. In assuming jurisdiction, the Supreme Court concluded that factors of urgency and emergency argued for acceptance of original jurisdiction. The request is not barred by the suspension provisions of 85-2-217, as the proceeding will not generally adjudicate an Indian reserved water right or any federal reserved water right. The issues before the court are limited to a determination of the effect of the so-called disclaimer clause of Art. I of the Montana Constitution on subject matter jurisdiction by the Water Court, and whether the Water Use Act is adequate to adjudicate Indian reserved water rights. State ex rel. Greely v. Water Court, 214 M 143, 691 P2d 833, 41 St. Rep. 2373 (1984).

Same Defendant — Similar Facts — Change of Venue Required: Paisley appealed to the District Court a conviction of a misdemeanor sexual assault. The case was to be tried de novo in the District Court. Earlier in St. v. Paisley, 204 M 191, 663 P2d 322, 40 St. Rep. 763 (1983), the Supreme Court had approved an order granting a change of venue in companion cases on felony charges. In the interests of consistency, the Supreme Court issued a Writ of Supervisory Control ordering the District Court to grant a change of venue. State ex rel. Paisley v. District Court, 673 P2d 815, 40 St. Rep. 1852 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Appellate Review on Motion for Writ of Supervisory Control — Issues Not Raised Below: In suit for damages arising out of railroad accident, issue regarding the admission of evidence of other accidents was not presented to the District Court upon application of one party for a Writ of Supervisory Control and a motion of the other party for a stay of proceedings, and thus the issue would not be addressed by Supreme Court in deciding the application and motion. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Error Below — Finding of Federal Preemption of Issue: Petition for Writ of Supervisory Control, brought by plaintiff suing railroad in crossing accident case, was granted where District Court incorrectly decided that federal law preempted the field of warning devices on locomotives and that the jury could thus not deliberate on the question of whether the railroad had the duty to equip its locomotives with devices other than those required by federal law. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Interlocutory Review of Interrogatories Rulings — Exhaustion of Remedies Required: Applicant for a Writ of Supervisory Control seeking reversal of lower court's order denying applicant's objections to interrogatories failed to exhaust its remedies in lower court where it did not apply there for a protective order under this rule or for an order under Rule 37(a)(4), M.R.Civ.P., assessing costs and attorney fees against its opponent should the lower court order be reversed on appeal. State ex rel. Guarantee Ins. Co. v. District Court, 194 M 64, 634 P2d 648, 38 St. Rep. 1682 (1981).

Supervisory Writ Granted Where Right of Access to Courts Impaired: A Writ of Supervisory Control is an appropriate form for judicial review where, as here, no direct appeal was available from the District Court's order requiring petitioners to pay respondent's attorney's fees as a condition to allowing petitioners to revise their second amended complaint and where, as here, extraordinary and compelling circumstances are presented. If the Supreme Court declined to review the claim, petitioners could be precluded from proceeding on all counts they consider necessary for appropriate relief, resulting in a possible improper denial of petitioners' right of access to the courts. St. v. District Court, 193 M 413, 632 P2d 318, 38 St. Rep. 1204 (1981).

District Court Without Authority to Order "Interviews" of Witnesses — Supervisory Control: In a personal injury case, the defendant obtained a court order stating that the plaintiff had waived her physician-patient privilege and that the plaintiff's doctors were to be treated as any other witnesses in the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the order on its face but held that the District Court did not have the power under the rules of discovery to order private interviews between counsel for one party and possibly adverse witnesses, expert or not. The Supreme Court noted that other rules of discovery serve to supplement Rule 26(a), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court must relate discovery it allows and enforces to one of the methods provided for in that rule. A Writ of Supervisory Control was issued in this case. Jaap v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Order Vacating Default Judgment Nonappealable — Supervisory Control Inappropriate: Where, after obtaining a default judgment in a breach of contract action against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a review, both by appeal and Writ of Supervisory Control, of the court's order setting aside the default judgment, the Supreme Court held that the order was interlocutory and nonappealable. The Supreme Court also held that a Writ of Supervisory Control was inappropriate to review the court's order, for to issue the Writ would be to allow the appellant to do indirectly what could not be done directly. Kinion v. Design Sys., 190 M 226, 620 P2d 852, 37 St. Rep. 2036 (1980), overruled in part in Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Rights of Legal Heir Adequately Represented by Special Administrator — Intervention Denied: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

No Supervisory Control Power in District Court: Relator was arrested for driving while intoxicated. He refused to take a blood alcohol test and subsequently applied to the District Court for a Writ of Supervisory Control on the issue of the admissibility of evidence of the refusal, arguing that the nonlawyer Justice of the Peace was ill-equipped to handle the constitutional aspects of his case. Relator appealed from the District Court's ruling against him after hearing the Writ on the merits. The Supreme Court found no power in the District Courts to exercise supervisory control and stated that a Writ of Supervisory Control was not to be used as a means to circumvent the appeal process. Only in the most extenuating circumstances will a Writ be granted. State ex rel. Ward v. Schmall, 190 M 1, 617 P2d 140, 37 St. Rep. 1720 (1980). See also Joslyn v. City Court, 198 M 223, 645 P2d 428, 39 St. Rep. 884 (1982).

Supervisory Control — Denial of Dismissal in Complex Workers' Compensation-Related Action: When an employee alleged a "wanton" negligent tort against his employer and third parties as an additional remedy to workers' compensation and the employer, after being denied a motion to dismiss by the District Court, applied for supervisory control alleging that the case involved complex liability claims against multiple defendants that would require extended and complicated discovery, the situation existed where there was no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law and there was no right to appeal the order of the District Court. Therefore, it was a proper circumstance for the Supreme Court to assume jurisdiction and to order supervisory control to dismiss the employee's complaint against the employer because the action, not being an intentional tort, belonged exclusively within the purview of the Workers' Compensation Act. Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717 (1980).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied — Remedy by Appeal Adequate: Review by Writ of Supervisory Control of the decision of a District Court that resulted in an estimated tax loss of over $2 million and that also will result in appeals to the District Courts of 25 counties was denied since the decision of the District Court had been appealed to the Supreme Court and was ready to be set for the next court calendar. The remedy by appeal was adequate precluding review by supervisory control. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 185 M 172, 605 P2d 170 (1980).

Writ of Supervisory Control to Terminate Needless Litigation: Where a Writ of Supervisory Control will not terminate needless litigation, the Supreme Court will not issue the Writ. Beamer v. Rice, 182 M 1, 594 P2d 321 (1979).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor Rule 1, M.R.App.P., provide for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Prosecutorial Immunity — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Invocation of original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was a proper remedy for the state, Department of Justice, and Attorney General to seek in order to establish that a third party's civil damage suit against them charging malicious prosecution was barred under the doctrine of prosecutorial immunity. State ex rel. Dept. of Justice v. District Court, 172 M 88, 560 P2d 1328 (1976).

Restitution of Funds — Previous Judgment Vacated on Appeal: The Supreme Court denied the defendant's request for a Writ of Supervisory Control requiring the District Court to order an accounting and restitution of funds, since execution was based upon a previous judgment reversed only as to damages and because the defendant failed to post a supersedeas bond. State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 480, 548 P2d 1390 (1976).

Request to Convene Grand Jury Denied — Review: Although there is no statutory means provided for appealing from the denial of a request to convene a grand jury, a Writ of Supervisory Control may issue so that the decision by the lower court may be reviewed by the Montana Supreme Court. State ex rel. Woodahl v. District Court 166 M 31, 530 P2d 780 (1975).

Needless Litigation Prevented: Writ of Supervisory Control was proper where District Court orders requiring Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) to quiet title against all possible lienholders of land subject to condemnation and to use valuation date more than 3 years beyond the alleged proper date were not appealable until after final judgment, and this would result in extended and needless litigation if District Court was wrong. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 160 M 35, 499 P2d 1228 (1972), followed in Cont. Oil Co. v. Elks Nat'l Foundation, 235 M 438, 767 P2d 1324, 46 St. Rep. 121 (1989).

Class Action — Writ of Supervisory Control Unjustified: Writ of Supervisory Control granting relief from District Court order permitting maintenance of class action was not justified since the order was subject to alteration or amendment as the matter progresses and since the question can be considered on appeal from final judgment. State ex rel. Anaconda Aluminum Co. v. District Court, 158 M 228, 490 P2d 351 (1971).

Writ of Supervisory Control — Dismissal of Removal Petition: Writ of Supervisory Control to compel dismissal of removal petition that could not be granted even if the facts alleged were proved was a necessary and proper supervision of District Court. State ex rel. Arnot v. District Court, 155 M 344, 472 P2d 302 (1970).

Appeal Inadequate — Writ of Supervisory Control Available: Although denial of Writ of Assistance, placing purchaser at Sheriff's sale under mortgage foreclosure into possession of lands involved, by District Court was appealable under rule either as "an order directing . . . surrender of property" or as "any special order made after final judgment", Writ of Supervisory Control to compel the District Court to issue Writ of Assistance was available as remedy since remedy by appeal was neither speedy nor adequate. State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 152 M 73, 446 P2d 707 (1968).

Sustaining of Demurrer — Right to Supervisory Writ: Notwithstanding that former statute providing for appeals gave party against whom demurrer (abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed) was sustained plain and speedy remedy by appeal, court would not dismiss application for Supervisory Writ where judgment sustaining demurrer also stayed proceedings and expressly accorded losing party right to apply for Supervisory Writ. State ex rel. Cave Constr. Co. v. District Court, 150 M 18, 430 P2d 624 (1967).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss — Writ Proper to Prevent Needless Litigation: Where the District Court improperly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim in a contract action against the defendant, a Writ of Supervisory Control will be issued directing that the order denying the defendant's motion be vacated. The order denying the defendant's motion is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.Civ.P., and the Writ is therefore proper to prevent needless litigation when no claim has in fact been stated. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Motion to Dismiss Improperly Denied — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Writ of Supervisory Control was proper where lessor's motion to dismiss sublessees' action for breach of lease agreement, to which sublessees were not parties, was denied by the District Court, the order denying the motion to dismiss not being appealable under this rule. State ex rel. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied: When appeal is available from a summary judgment, the Supreme Court will not issue a Writ of Supervisory Control without extremely extenuating circumstances. Circumstances here were insufficient. State ex rel. Kober v. District Court, 147 M 116, 410 P2d 945 (1966).

Rule 18. Applications and manner of proceeding.

Advisory Committee Notes

This rule is patterned after Rule 23 of the Federal Draft, but omits the last clause of the Federal Draft reading "and may request that the appeal be heard on the original record without an 'appendix'." This change is made because these rules do not adopt the appendix system of Rule 30 of the Federal Draft. See Rule 25. This rule is believed to be consistent with R.C.M. 1947, section 93-8625 [25-10-404, MCA].

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is taken from Rule 25 of the Federal Draft, but the phrase "including any transcript" has been added to subdivision (b) to make it clear that copies of any transcript are to be served on all parties. The first paragraph of Montana Supreme Court Rule III is superseded.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 20(e). The amendment is intended to clarify the number of copies of various instruments which should be filed. The absence of such a general provision in the past has led to confusion in many cases. The term "procedural motions" is used to describe motions which do not substantially affect the rights of the parties or the ultimate disposition of the appeal. Examples of procedural motions are motions for extensions of time and motions to enlarge length of briefs.

NOTE TO NOVEMBER 1, 1988, AMENDMENT

The amendment clarifies the rule in order to make certain that a signed original is filed.

Rule 21. Computation and extension of time.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned after Rule 26 of the Federal Draft. There are omitted provisions of the Federal Draft with respect to petitions for allowance, applications for permission to appeal, appeals from advisory agencies, and a definition of "legal holiday." A definition of "legal holiday" is contained in R.C.M. 1947, section 19-107.

It is believed that these provisions are consistent with R.C.M. 1947, section 90-407 [1-1-306, MCA].

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendment is designed to facilitate the handling of motions for extension of time.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: In (b) in exception clause inserted reference to subsection (d) and after "rule" deleted "relating to appeals in termination of parental rights and abused, dependent and neglected children cases"; in (c) after "abused" deleted "dependent"; and inserted (d) concerning extensions of time in all cases not governed by subsection (c). Amendment effective July 24, 2001.

2000 Emergency Rule: In an order dated June 28, 2000, the Supreme Court adopted rule modifications on an emergency basis. The portion of the order affecting this rule provided: "Motions for Extension of Time. Recognizing that a significant part of the delay in the present appellate system is at the briefing stage and that it is necessary we eliminate this source of delay, commencing January 1, 2001, motions for extension of time to file briefs will no longer be routinely granted except in cases where the inability to timely file a brief is caused by the inability of the court reporter to timely transcribe the proceedings.

All motions for extension of time to file briefs must be supported by an affidavit demonstrating diligence and substantial need. All such motions must be filed at least seven (7) days before the expiration of the time prescribed for the filing of the brief. The affidavit in support must state: (1) when the brief is due; (2) when the brief was first due; (3) the length of the requested extension; (4) the reason the extension is necessary; (5) the movant's explanation establishing that the movant has exercised diligence and has substantial need for the extension and that the brief will be filed within the time requested; and (6) whether any other party separately represented objects to the request. A conclusory statement of justification being the "press of other business" will not constitute a showing of diligence and substantial need.

To this extent Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P., is modified accordingly." See 2001 amendment officially adopting the emergency modification.

2000 Amendment: At beginning of (b) inserted exception clause; inserted (c) concerning requirements for motion and brief for extension of time in cases involving termination of parental rights and abused, dependent, and neglected children; and inserted last sentence in (c)(6) concerning conclusory statements being insufficient. Amendment effective June 1, 2000.

1993 Amendment: In (a), in last sentence, increased time from 7 days to 11 days.

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (b), in first sentence, substituted "except the court in a civil case" for "but the court" and inserted second and third sentences concerning notification to opposing counsel and time limits related to motions and orders for extension of time.

Case Notes

No Jurisdiction to Hear Criminal Appeal Filed More Than Sixty Days After Judgment — Deadline Not Extended by Mailing Extension Rule: Dill filed notice of an appeal of a judgment in a criminal action 63 days after judgment was entered. Rule 5(b), M.R.App.P., requires filing of an appeal within 60 days after entry of judgment. Dill contended that the deadline should be extended because Rule 21(e), M.R.App.P., allows an additional 3 days when service of a paper is made by mail. The District Court order was mailed to Dill, so Dill argued that the deadline was actually 63 days. The Supreme Court noted that under Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003), Rule 21(e) applies only to situations involving response-type pleadings, but when a deadline is required by court rule to be filed within a specified time, Rule 21(e) does not apply. Dill's criminal appeal was filed more than 60 days after judgment was entered, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear it, so the appeal was dismissed. Billings v. Dill, 2005 MT 134, 327 M 262, 113 P3d 302 (2005).

Allowance of Additional Time After Service by Mail Applicable Only to Response-Type Pleadings — Inapplicable When Filing Deadline Specified: The Supreme Court entered an opinion in this case on December 31, 2002. On January 16, 2003, remittitur was entered, and the next day, defendants filed a petition for rehearing. After being advised that the petition was beyond the 10 days allowed under Rule 34, M.R.App.P., defendants claimed that subsection (e) of this rule provided an additional 3 days for timely filing. The Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the application of subsection (e) of this rule, holding that the rule applies only to response-type pleadings when parties are required or permitted to file a document or brief after having been served with a document or brief. When a filing deadline is specified by the Supreme Court or when a document is required to be filed with the court within a specified time, the rule does not apply and the party does not get the benefit of an extra 3 days for mailing. Rule 34, M.R.App.P., allows petitions for rehearing to be filed within 10 days after a Supreme Court decision is rendered. Because this time period is specified by court rule, and because the petition for rehearing was not a response-type pleading, defendants' petition was not timely. However, defendants did not have the benefit of this interpretation when their petition was filed, so in the interest of fairness, the court applied this holding prospectively only and decided to entertain defendants' petition in this instance. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003).

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although subsection (b) of this rule precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of Rule 17, M.R.App.P. Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

Computation of Time for Appeal Following Mailing of Final Notice of Entry of Judgment: The final notice of entry of judgment was mailed on November 5. Rule 5, M.R.App.P., required an appeal to be taken within 30 days after the service of the notice of entry of judgment. A notice of appeal was filed on December 7. Although more than 30 days had passed, allowing 3 days for the mailing of the notice of entry of judgment, the notice of appeal was filed within the 30-day requirement. Rudio v. Yellowstone Merchandising Corp., 200 M 537, 652 P2d 1163, 39 St. Rep. 1923 (1982).

Late Entry of Order Granting Extension: The time for filing the notice of appeal from District Court may, upon a showing of excusable neglect, be extended for up to 30 days. However, that period is added to the initial 30 days, plus 3 days for mailing. Even though the Clerk of the Court neglected to send notice of entry of judgment to defendant's cocounsel in Missouri, which may have caused confusion constituting excusable neglect, the order granting an extension of time was not even entered until after the 63-day period, was beyond the limits of Rule 5, M.R.App.P., and was therefore erroneous. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Agra-Steel Corp., 193 M 437, 632 P2d 330, 38 St. Rep. 1257 (1981).

Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Despite failure to comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal — Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of Rule 5, M.R.App.P., which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P., are automatically put into play, adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P., comes into play, extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal: The Supreme Court has no authority to permit an appeal to be taken after the expiration of the time fixed by Rule 5, M.R.App.P. If an extension of time is sought, the proper forum to make such a request is the District Court. An appellant must request any extension no later than 60 days from service of notice of entry of judgment. Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Rule 22. Motions.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule supersedes Montana Supreme Court Rule XI. It is patterned after Rule 27 of the Federal Draft, but the last sentence of the Federal Draft requiring the filing of three copies of motions and supporting papers has been omitted. Also, there has been added as a last paragraph the amendment of the Montana Supreme Court Rule XI, effective January 1, 1965.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendments are designed to insure that opposing counsel have been contacted, to limit the necessity of submitting proposed orders to procedural motions only and to place the expenses of mailing orders upon the parties. For the definition of a "procedural motion" see Advisory Commission Note to Rule 20(e).

Compiler's Comments

2002 Amendments: At end of first paragraph in last sentence near end after "initials" deleted "or first names". Amendment effective February 1, 2003.

At end of first paragraph inserted last sentence concerning use of initials rather than names of certain parties. Amendment effective March 15, 2002.

2001 Amendment: In fourth sentence after "papers" inserted "whether required by these rules or otherwise, or submitted in a party's discretion". Amendment effective July 24, 2001.

2000 Emergency Rule: In an order dated June 28, 2000, the Supreme Court adopted rule modifications on an emergency basis. The portion of the order affecting this rule provided: "Over Length and Supplemental Briefs. From and after August 1, 2000, motions to file over length and supplemental briefs will no longer be routinely granted except in capital cases. Motions to file such briefs in other cases must be supported by an affidavit demonstrating extraordinary justification. To this extent, Rules 22 and 23(g), M.R.App.P., are modified accordingly." See 2001 amendment officially adopting the emergency modification.

1997 Amendment: In first paragraph inserted seventh sentence concerning signing of motion by appellant personally. Amendment effective April 3, 1997.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in first paragraph, inserted third sentence concerning notification of and objection by opposing counsel and deleted fifth sentence that read: "Motions for procedural orders may be determined ex parte"; and in second paragraph inserted "procedural" near beginning and inserted "as well as stamped envelopes addressed to all counsel of record".

Supreme Court Rules Superseded: As to the advisory committee note above, see the compiler's comments to Rule 43 (now Rule 53), M.R.App.P., and to this chapter.

Case Notes

No Pretrial Determination Regarding Whether Statement Admissible for Impeachment Purposes — Waiver of Right to Object to Admissibility: At the time of arrest, Harris admitted an act of sexual intercourse with his adopted daughter. Prior to trial, Harris moved to suppress the statement on grounds that it was involuntary and obtained in violation of his fifth amendment rights under the United States Constitution. The District Court agreed that the statement could not be used, but expressly stated that its limited suppression order did not address whether it could be used by the state for impeachment purposes in the event that Harris testified, essentially reserving its ruling for a later time, as authorized in 46-13-104. Harris's testimony about the statement during direct examination brought the statement into evidence by his own volition, constituting waiver of the right to appeal the admissibility of the statement for use as impeachment. St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881, 56 St. Rep. 481 (1999), distinguishing St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996), and St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Denial of Bond Pending Appeal — Method of Supreme Court Review — Jurisdiction: After conviction for negligent homicide and on related charges, Ingraham moved the District Court to continue bond pending appeal. The District Court denied the motion, finding that Ingraham was a danger to the community and therefore did not meet the requirements of 46-9-107. Ingraham then moved the Supreme Court, pursuant to this rule, to continue bond pending appeal or, in the alternative, to accept appeal of the District Court's order denying bond, pursuant to Rule 1, M.R.App.P., and 46-20-104. The Attorney General moved to dismiss, contending that there was no provision in law for appeal from a District Court order denying bond pending appeal and that Ingraham should have brought an original habeas corpus proceeding. The Supreme Court agreed with the Attorney General and dismissed Ingraham's motion or appeal, holding that Ingraham should have brought a petition for a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 46-22-103. Ingraham then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which was filed with Justice Trieweiler pursuant to 3-2-212. Justice Trieweiler granted the petition to the extent necessary for the District Court to hold an evidentiary hearing as provided by statute, under the theory that the District Court was the more appropriate court for the hearing than was the Supreme Court. The Attorney General opposed the order by applying to the full Supreme Court for a writ of supervisory control, arguing, contrary to the state's previous position, that 46-22-103 does not really apply to persons convicted in a criminal case and that the more appropriate procedure was an original proceeding "in the nature of habeas corpus" before the full Supreme Court. The application for a writ of supervisory control was denied, was treated by the Supreme Court as a late-filed response to Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and was referred to Justice Trieweiler. Justice Trieweiler determined that it was inappropriate for him alone to determine the form of review of the District Court's denial of bond. Justice Trieweiler also determined that: (1) Ingraham had no constitutional right to bond pending appeal; (2) Ingraham did have a right to the proper exercise of the District Court's discretion in the application of 46-9-107; and (3) that right was a substantial right for the purposes of 46-20-104. For these reasons, Justice Trieweiler vacated his previous order granting Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus and referred the matter to the full Supreme Court for review of the District Court's order denying bond pending appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Rule 23. Briefs.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned after Rule 28 of the Federal Draft, adjusted to state practice. The second paragraph of subdivision (e) of the Federal Draft is omitted, since these rules do not adopt the "appendix" system of Rule 30 of the Federal Draft. See Rule 25.

Also, in the Federal Draft, subdivision (f) requires reproduction of statutes, rules, regulations, etc. This has been changed, so that reproduction is permissive, unless ordered by the supreme court.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

Subdivision 23(a)(6). Heretofore, parties have often failed to include the designated documents, which are often crucial to the decision, in their briefs or appendix.

Subdivision 23(g). The amendment is intended to bring the rule up-to-date with current reproduction processes.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

COMMISSION NOTE TO 1993 AMENDMENT

The amendments conform the rule to the 1991 amendments of the Federal Rule.

In (d) at end of paragraph inserted last sentence concerning use of initials rather than names of certain parties. Amendment effective March 15, 2002.

Case Notes

Mailing to Attorney of Record and Party's Last-Known Address Considered Adequate Notice — Personal Service Not Required: After 11 years passed from the time that a dissolution decree was entered, the wife moved to obtain her share of the husband's retirement benefits as ordered in the decree. Notice of the action was sent to the husband's last attorney of record, who filed a motion to dismiss, and by mail to the husband's last-known address in Hawaii. The husband contended that personal service was required because so much time had passed since the decree and because the attorney-client relationship was stale. However, the husband cited no authorities for the argument that personal service was required because the passage of time concluded the attorney-client relationship or that service requirements were modified based upon the last date of activity in a case. The attorney was clearly acting as the husband's attorney, and the decree was intended to extend to the issue of retirement, which had only recently occurred. Thus, under Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), service was perfected and complete upon mailing a copy to the husband's last attorney of record and to the husband's last-known address. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Offset of Unpaid Retirement Benefits Proper Under Prior Family Law Order: The District Court ordered the husband to pay $734 a month from his retirement benefits, as ordered in a dissolution decree, and allowed the wife to offset her obligations to the husband when he became eligible to share in her retirement benefits to cover accrued payments of more than $10,000 owed by the husband. On appeal, the husband contended that he was exempt from this legal process under 19-2-1004 because 11 years had passed since the decree was issued, so the decree should no longer be considered a family law order under 19-2-907. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. The husband cited no authority for the proposition that a family law order is no longer a family law order after 11 years. The District Court did not err in allowing the wife to collect accrued payments by setoff or otherwise. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Unsupported and Incomprehensible Issues Raised by Pro Se Appellant Dismissed: The wife appealed from a marital property distribution by filing a pro se brief that alluded to libelous conduct, unscrupulous activity regarding trial documents, false testimony, judicial bias, and erroneous calculation of marital assets. The Supreme Court found that the brief contained general contentions of impropriety, but no citations to the record or supporting legal authority. Although the Supreme Court has shown some willingness to make accommodations for pro se parties by relaxing technical requirements that do not impact fundamental bases for appeal, in this case, the appeal was dismissed because of an utter failure to comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure by filing a brief that could be comprehended by the court and realistically responded to by the opposing party. In re Marriage of McMahon, 2002 MT 198, 311 M 175, 53 P3d 1266 (2002).

Failure to Properly Raise Issue in Opening Appellate Brief — Case Dismissed: In five issues presented for appeal, the appellant pro se set forth little or no argument and no citations in support of the argument in the opening brief. Instead, after setting forth the issue, the appellant simply stated that the issue was presented at face value without argument. Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, in order for an appellant to properly raise an issue in an opening brief, the appellant's contentions must be listed as to the issues presented and the reasons for presenting the arguments, along with citation to the authorities relied upon. The Supreme Court will not consider unsupported issues or arguments, conduct legal research on an appellant's behalf, guess an appellant's precise position, or develop legal analysis in support of an appellant's position. The opening brief violated the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure and was therefore dismissed. In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Denial of Will Contestants' Discovery Requests for Probate and Adoption Files Affirmed: The will contestants questioned Lande's testamentary capacity and asserted undue influence, claiming District Court error in failing to strike privilege-based objections from the record and to require production of Lande's complete estate planning files, particularly Lande's wife's file and a son's adoption file. The suggestion that the court was required to strike privilege-based objections, in addition to rejecting the applicability of the privilege, was raised without supporting authority as required by subsection (a)(4) of this rule and thus was disregarded as without merit. The Supreme Court, citing Duck Inn, Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ., 285 M 519, 949 P2d 1179 (1997), stated that having failed to advance supporting authority, the contestants cannot establish error in this regard. Lande's wife's file was irrelevant because it had been completed years prior, and the question of when it was prepared bore no connection to the underlying questions of Lande's testamentary capacity or undue influence. The adoption file was also irrelevant because the contestants conceded that the adopted son had long been a substantial devisee and they did not challenge the son's adoption or status as a beneficiary. The contestants further failed to show that the entire estate planning files were not produced and thus failed to meet their burden of establishing District Court error. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 162, 295 M 160, 983 P2d 308, 56 St. Rep. 642 (1999).

Response and Cross-Appeal Brief Limited to 14,000 Words: Idaho Asphalt Supply, the respondent in an appeal, filed with the Montana Supreme Court a combined response brief and cross-appeal brief containing 90 pages and 20,163 words. When the Supreme Court returned the brief because it failed to comply with the length limitation provided in Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P., Idaho Asphalt Supply filed a motion for order allowing it to file an overlength brief, arguing that it was entitled under Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P., and subsection (h) of this rule to file a response brief of a maximum of 14,000 words and a cross-appeal brief of 14,000 words and that there was no rule limiting it to a combined brief of 14,000 words. The Supreme Court pointed out that the language of subsection (h) of this rule regarding briefs involving cross-appeals requires that the respondent's brief address the cross-appeal "as well as" respond to the appellant's brief. The Supreme Court therefore read Rule 27(d)(i) and subsection (h) of this rule together to provide that in the case of a cross-appeal, a respondent may file one principal brief serving the purposes of both a response brief and a cross-appeal brief and that the combined brief is limited to a maximum of 14,000 words. The Supreme Court noted that although it is fairly liberal in allowing overlength briefs, there was nothing particularly unusual or complex about the issues involved in Idaho Asphalt Supply's response and cross-appeal. The Supreme Court therefore held, because it was given no compelling reasons to allow the overlength brief, that the 14,000-word limitation would apply to the combined brief. Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 1998 MT 312, 292 M 162, 974 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1287 (1998).

Failure to Cite Authority or Legal Analysis — No Error Established: Carter contended on appeal that admission of the results of a blood test taken as part of a DUI arrest was improper but cited no authority or legal analysis to support the argument. Failure to cite authority for the position being advanced on appeal precluded Carter from establishing any error in the trial court's admission of the blood test results. St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Failure to Cite Authority — Constitutional Argument Not Addressed: In a property dispute over the existence of an easement, the Goods, who appeared pro se, argued that the District Court unconstitutionally took their property, because the District Court did not find an easement in their favor. The Supreme Court noted that the Goods had the burden of proof on the issue of the establishment of their easement and also that this rule requires that the party advancing an argument cite authority that supports the party's argument. Because the Goods cited no authority for their position, the Supreme Court refused to address the constitutional issue raised by the Goods. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court — Failure to Include Citation of Authority for Lack of Jurisdiction — Jurisdictional Argument Not Addressed on Appeal: Sol appealed his DUI conviction in Justice's Court to the District Court. In the Supreme Court, Sol argued that the failure of the Justice's Court Clerk to timely transmit the file to the District Court within the time provided by 46-17-311 deprived the District Court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court noted that Sol had failed to cite any authority, as required by this rule, for his assertion that the clerk's failure deprived the District Court of jurisdiction. For this reason, the Supreme Court declined to address the issue of the District Court's jurisdiction. St. v. Sol, 282 M 69, 936 P2d 307, 54 St. Rep. 246 (1997).

Corporate Officer Without Authority for Pro Se Representation of Corporation — Refusal to Consider Brief: Plaintiff realty corporation brought an action in District Court to find defendants in default for failure to make payments under a contract for deed. Plaintiff was represented by counsel in District Court, but on appeal, it was represented by the president of the corporation. The Supreme Court, sua sponte, raised the issue of whether the corporation could be represented by its president and held that it could not. Citing Weaver v. Law Firm of Graybill, 246 M 175, 803 P2d 1089 (1990), the Supreme Court held that a corporation is a separate legal entity and cannot appear on its own behalf through an agent other than an attorney. The Supreme Court therefore determined not to consider the brief filed by the president on behalf of the corporation. Cont. Realty, Inc. v. Gerry, 251 M 150, 822 P2d 1083, 48 St. Rep. 1134 (1991).

Damages to Respondent for Appeal Taken Without Substantial Grounds — Skimpy Briefs: Damages to respondent were proper when counsel for appellant was repeatedly informed by the trial judge of the need to establish a duty owing by the respondent, but no evidence of a duty was presented. Assessment of damages was further warranted because appellant's brief did not contain: (1) a statement of the case; (2) citations to authority for numerous contentions; (3) citations to pages of the record relied upon; and (4) accurate quotations of case law, commissioners' comments, and the record. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Excluded Documents Never Offered and Refused as Exhibits — Refusal to Consider on Appeal — Admonishment for Attaching to Appeal Brief: Medical documents that were excluded as evidence but were never offered as exhibits at trial and thus were not in the record as refused exhibits were included as part of an appendix to the defendant's appeal brief. The Supreme Court held that it was unable to evaluate or rule on the admissibility of documents that were never offered into evidence or described in the record and admonished counsel for attaching extraneous material to briefs as an attempt to introduce evidence through the "back door". Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986), followed in Murphy v. St., 248 M 82, 809 P2d 16, 48 St. Rep. 335 (1991).

Motion to Strike Reply Brief Denied: Respondent made a motion before the Supreme Court to strike appellants' reply brief in its entirety because it raised as a new matter a constitutional argument. The court denied the motion, stating that the court would not consider any portion of the reply brief not in conformance with Rule 23(c), M.R.App.P. Denend v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 218 M 505, 710 P2d 61, 42 St. Rep. 1778 (1985).

Jury Instruction Error — How Set Forth in Brief: When an appellant claims jury instruction error, he should set forth the text of the instructions in the brief as well as the trial court's ruling on the instructions and any related instructions the appellant claims should have been given. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

No Statement of Issues: When appellant fails to set forth the issues of its case on appeal the Supreme Court will discuss the matter on issues delineated and set forth by respondent. School District v. Driscoll, 173 M 492, 568 P2d 149 (1977).

Rule 25. The appendix to the briefs.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

Rules 30 and 31 of the Federal Draft, require post-brief appendices, unless dispensed with by court rule or order. The rule does not follow the Federal Draft at this point. Rather, under this rule the supreme court may order an appendix, or either party may if he chooses use an appendix. When an appendix is used it is to be filed and served with the brief.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendment adds essential materials to the appendix. Heretofore Rule 9(f) covered findings and conclusions but 9(f) has been deleted in favor of inclusion of findings, conclusions and other materials in a more logical place.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (b), in (2), substituted "given or refused jury instruction" for "portions of the charge" and, in (3), inserted "findings of fact, conclusions of law" and "together with the memorandum opinion, if any, in support thereof".

Rule 26. Filing and service of briefs.

Advisory Committee Notes

This rule is patterned after Rule 31 of the Federal Draft.

Subdivision (a) follows the time fixed for filing of briefs provided in the Federal Draft, and that is the time now allowed by a majority of the federal circuits.

Subdivision (b) of the federal Draft is omitted, since it provides a post-brief time for filing the appendix. Under Rule 25 an appendix must be filed and served with the brief, unless otherwise ordered by the supreme court.

Subdivision (b) of this rule is patterned after subdivision (c) of the Federal Draft. The number of copies to be filed and served, however, are adjusted to fit state practice and the present requirement of Montana Supreme Court Rule II.

Subdivision (c) of this rule follows subdivision (d) of Rule 31 of the Federal Draft.

1988 Amendment: The amendment clarifies the rule in order to make certain that a signed original is filed.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

The amendments are designed to resolve problems of construction which have arisen in the past.

Rule 27. Form of briefs and other papers — duplication.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

Rule 32 of the Federal Draft is adjusted to conform to the paper and forms prescribed for state practice and Montana Supreme Court Rule II, as amended effective January 1, 1965. The provisions requiring the use of pica type and two typewritten originals are stricken as being obsolete or unnecessary.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

Rule 27 has been completely revamped in order to bring it up-to-date with current reproduction processes. The requirements of subdivision (c) have been adopted from Rule 32(a) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Papers and attachments thereto are often filed which are illegible, sometimes caused by excessive reduction in size. Illegible papers are subject to being returned and may be the subject of sanctions imposed by the Montana Supreme Court.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: In (f) in first sentence inserted second clause concerning certified questions. Amendment effective January 1, 2004.

2001 Amendment: In (d)(i) reduced principal brief from 14,000 words to 10,000 words and reduced reply brief, amicus brief, or petition for rehearing from 7,000 words to 5,000 words; in (d)(ii) reduced maximum length allowed for principal brief from 40 pages to 30 pages, reduced maximum length allowed for reply brief, amicus brief, or petition for rehearing from 20 pages to 14 pages, and inserted last sentence concerning petitions filed under Rule 17(b).

2000 Emergency Rule: In an order dated June 28, 2000, the Supreme Court adopted rule modifications on an emergency basis. The portion of the order affecting this rule provided: "Shortened Briefs and Petitions. The word and page limitation for briefs specified in Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P., is modified as follows: A principal brief must not exceed 10,000 words and a reply brief, amicus brief or petition for rehearing must not exceed 5,000 words. Rule 27(d)(ii), M.R.App.P., is modified as follows: a principal brief must not exceed 30 pages and a reply brief, amicus brief or petition for rehearing must not exceed 14 pages. Petitions filed under Rule 17(b), M.R.App.P., must not exceed 5000 words or 14 pages. These modifications apply to all briefs and petitions filed on or after August 1, 2000. Except as modified herein, all other provisions of the referenced Rules remain unchanged." See 2001 amendment officially adopting the emergency modifications.

1999 Amendment: In (d)(i) near beginning after "brief" deleted "or petition for writ"; and in (d)(ii) near beginning after "Briefs" deleted "or petitions for writs". Amendment effective August 15, 1999.

1997 Amendments: In first sentence of (c) after "right side" inserted "and left side" and after "1 inch wide" deleted "and on the left side not less than 1 ½ inches wide". Amendment effective November 4, 1997.

In (a), in first sentence, substituted "standard printing, word processing, typewritten or equivalent process" for "standard printing process, by typewriter or by an equivalent process" and at end deleted "or standard quality, opaque, unglazed, white paper. All print must appear in at least a 12 point Courier font (not more than 10 characters per inch)"; inserted (b) concerning typeface and text style; in (c), near end of first sentence, substituted "the foregoing size limitations" for "12 point type" and deleted former last sentence that read: "Petitions, motions and other like papers filed with the clerk of the supreme court shall contain numbered lines"; inserted (d) concerning calculations and length; in (e), at end of first sentence, deleted references to subdivision (a) and paper, size, form and pagination; and in (f) inserted second sentence concerning colors and materials to be avoided. Amendment effective March 21, 1997.

1996 Amendment: In (a) deleted former third sentence that read: "After January 1, 1994, only on standard quality, opaque, unglazed, acid-free recycled paper, 25% cotton fiber content, a minimum of 50% recycled content of which 10% shall be post-consumer waste", near beginning of fourth sentence substituted "a 12 point Courier font (not more than 10 characters per inch)" for "Courier 10 characters per inch type on opaque, unglazed paper", and near end of fifth sentence substituted "12 point type" for "11 point type"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 1, 1996.

1994 Amendment: In an order dated April 5, 1994, the Supreme Court in the fourth sentence substituted "Courier 10 characters per inch type" for "11 point type".

1993 Amendment: In an order dated March 25, 1993, the Supreme Court in (a), near end of first sentence before "paper", deleted "white" and inserted second and third sentences concerning recycled paper; and in (b), in first sentence before "paper", deleted "white".

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, substituted present Rule 27 (for text see 1987 MCA) for former rule that read: "Form of briefs, the appendix, motions and other papers.

(a) Form of briefs, appendices and separate volumes of exhibits. Briefs, appendices and separate volumes of exhibits may be produced by standard typographic printing or by any duplicating or copying process capable of producing a clear black image on white paper. Typewritten copies of briefs, appendices and separate volumes of exhibits may not be submitted without permission of the chief justice of the supreme court, except in behalf of parties allowed to proceed in forma pauperis. Pica solid is the smallest letter and the most compact form of composition allowed for all printed matter. Briefs, appendices and separate volumes of exhibits shall be on white uncalendered book paper in book or booklet form. If produced by the standard typographic printing process, the pages shall be 10 inches long and 7 inches wide, with a margin on the outer edge not less than 1 inch wide and on the inner edge not less than 2 inches wide. If produced by a duplicating or copying process, the pages shall be 11 inches long and 8 ½ inches wide, with a margin on the outer edge not less than 1 inch wide and on the inner edge not less than 2 inches wide. The pages shall be fastened at the side and numbered at the top.

(b) Typewritten papers and motions. Papers not required to be produced in a manner prescribed by subdivision (a) of this rule shall be plainly and legibly written by a typewriter with a new black ribbon and new black carbon paper of good grade, in double spacing, except that quotations may be single spaced, on one side only of white typewriter paper, 8 ½ inches wide and 13 inches long, numbered at the bottom, with a ruled margin of 1 ½ inches on the left-hand side of the page and 1 inch on the right-hand side, and numbered lines, not more than 32 lines to the page. The pages shall be bound at the left-hand side into volumes not containing more than 250 pages; provided, however, that if the pages number 50 or less they may be bound at the top.

In collating typewritten papers the copies shall not be mixed, but each copy shall consist throughout of uniform pages. Each page of every copy shall be opaque and each line of print thereon plainly legible. The difficulty of examining transparent, illegible and nonuniform typewritten copies has become so great that this rule will be strictly applied and papers not complying with it will not be received.

(c) First page and cover. All papers shall be bound in cardboard or pasteboard covers, unless bound at the top under subdivision (b) of this rule, in which case they may be bound in cover paper. On the first page and cover of all papers must be stated the title of this court, the title of the case as in the court below, adding to the words "Plaintiff" and "Defendant," the words "Appellant" and "Respondent" as the case may require, the names of counsel for appellant and respondent, the title of the papers, as "Appellant's Brief," "Appendix to Appellant's Brief," etc., and the venue from which the appeal is taken."

Case Notes

Response and Cross-Appeal Brief Limited to 14,000 Words: Idaho Asphalt Supply, the respondent in an appeal, filed with the Montana Supreme Court a combined response brief and cross-appeal brief containing 90 pages and 20,163 words. When the Supreme Court returned the brief because it failed to comply with the length limitation provided in subsection (d)(i) of this rule, Idaho Asphalt Supply filed a motion for order allowing it to file an overlength brief, arguing that it was entitled under Rule 23(h) and subsection (d)(i) of this rule to file a response brief of a maximum of 14,000 words and a cross-appeal brief of 14,000 words and that there was no rule limiting it to a combined brief of 14,000 words. The Supreme Court pointed out that the language of Rule 23(h) regarding briefs involving cross-appeals requires that the respondent's brief address the cross-appeal "as well as" respond to the appellant's brief. The Supreme Court therefore read Rule 23(h) and subsection (d)(i) of this rule together to provide that in the case of a cross-appeal, a respondent may file one principal brief serving the purposes of both a response brief and a cross-appeal brief and that the combined brief is limited to a maximum of 14,000 words. The Supreme Court noted that although it is fairly liberal in allowing overlength briefs, there was nothing particularly unusual or complex about the issues involved in Idaho Asphalt Supply's response and cross-appeal. The Supreme Court therefore held, because it was given no compelling reasons to allow the overlength brief, that the 14,000-word limitation would apply to the combined brief. (See 2001 amendment.) Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 1998 MT 312, 292 M 162, 974 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1287 (1998).

Rule 29. Oral argument.

Advisory Committee Notes

This rule is patterned after Rule 34 of the Federal Draft, but the time provisions are more liberal than those of the Federal Draft which allows 30 minutes to each side. It is intended that the time be afforded to opposing interests rather than to individual parties, as is true under the Federal Draft. Thus, if there are multiple appellants they have together but 40 minutes, and multiple respondents have a total of 30 minutes. The 40 minutes for the appellant or applicant may be divided between the opening and closing statement, as the appellant or applicant chooses.

In other particulars this rule follows the usual practice among the federal circuits.

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned after Rule 36 of the Federal Draft. The purpose is to clarify what constitutes an entry of a judgment or order. The provision for mailing by the clerk is for the convenience of the parties but does not affect the time for taking an appeal, which is controlled by Rule 5. As to the entry of judgments, see M.R.Civ.P., Rule 58.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The deletions conform the style of the rule with the other rules and omit the word "judgment" because of its inapplicability to the supreme court.

Case Notes

General Rules for When Interest Begins to Accrue: As this rule sets forth, in those cases in which a judgment for money in a civil case is affirmed, whatever interest is allowed by law is payable from the date on which the judgment was entered in the District Court. In those cases in which a money judgment is either modified or reversed by virtue of a decision of the Supreme Court, the following rules apply:

a. To the extent that a discreet and identifiable portion of the original judgment is upheld on appeal, the amount of that judgment bears interest from the date on which the original judgment was entered in the District Court.

b. In those cases in which a money judgment is modified or reversed by the Supreme Court, with the result that the money judgment is increased over that entered by the District Court, the amount representing the increase bears interest from the date on which the new judgment is entered on remand pursuant to the Supreme Court's direction.

c. In those cases in which a money judgment rendered in the District Court is reversed, modified, or vacated on appeal, with the consequence that the District Court is directed to enter an entirely new judgment, no portion of which is discreetly identifiable from the original verdict or judgment, then interest on the new judgment begins to accrue from the date on which the new judgment is entered on remand pursuant to the Supreme Court's direction.

The portion of Resner v. N. Pac. Ry., 161 M 177, 505 P2d 86 (1973), announcing the manner in which postjudgment interest should be assessed following reversal or modification of a judgment is overruled. Woods v. Burlington N. Ry., 2004 MT 384, 325 M 106, 104 P3d 1045 (2004).

Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to 25-9-205. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife's money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendency of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife's alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband's mother under a "conspiratorial sham" designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Award of Postjudgment Interest Improper When Money Judgment Not Affirmed: In a prior appeal, the wife asserted that the District Court had erroneously valued her possessory interest in the family home (see In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997)). The Supreme Court agreed and reversed for consideration of evidence regarding the value of the wife's possessory interest. On remand, the District Court awarded the wife postjudgment interest accrued on a $400,000 equalization cash payment between the date of the initial decree and the date that the payment was finally made. The husband appealed the award of postjudgment interest, contending that the interest was not owing because the wife had appealed the initial distribution of the marital estate, seeking a greater share, and lost. The wife responded that under this rule, it is irrelevant who appealed or cross-appealed when determining whether a judgment creditor is entitled to postjudgment interest. The Supreme Court noted that the question of the propriety of an award of postjudgment interest depended on whether the District Court's judgment was affirmed on appeal. In this case, the distribution of the marital estate, and thus the cash equalization payment, was not affirmed; therefore, the award of postjudgment interest was reversible error. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 2000 MT 100, 299 M 268, 999 P2d 340, 57 St. Rep. 406 (2000).

Suspension of Accrual of Interest Appropriate: The trustees appealed the Supreme Court's directive to suspend the interest accruing on a loan from the date of the Sheriff's sale to the date of entry of the new judgment. The Supreme Court ruled that although the District Court decision was not reversed, the judgment was modified in respect to the deficiency amount allowed. Since instructions pursuant to interest allowance were provided, the directive to suspend interest until entry of the new judgment was appropriate. Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158, 48 St. Rep. 724 (1991), affirming Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989).

Interest Payable From Date of Judgment: Interest due on the amount wife was ordered to pay husband under the dissolution judgment is calculated from the date of the judgment. In re Marriage of Dalley, 237 M 287, 773 P2d 295, 46 St. Rep. 808 (1989).

Modification of Judgment — Recalculation of Damages Based on When Interest to Accrue: The jury set the date on which interest on damages would begin to accrue as October 16, the expected date of harvest according to the jury form. Defendant argued that the determination was nonsensical because it put the date of expected harvest after the date in October on which the replacement crop was actually harvested. In modifying the judgment, the Supreme Court found no appearance of jury passion or prejudice in reaching the verdict and remanded for recalculation of damages using October 2 as the expected date of harvest. Vandalia Ranch, Inc. v. Farmers Union & Oil Supply Co., 221 M 253, 718 P2d 647, 43 St. Rep. 790 (1986).

Modification of Incorrect Money Judgment — Interest Due on Retroactively Due Increase: If a judgment is effective from the date of entry and any changes to the judgment relate back to the entry date, it follows that interest is assessed from the date of judgment. Where a child support and maintenance decree was later modified and larger payments granted, with the increase made retroactive to the date of the original decree, interest was due on that retroactive amount, beginning on the date of the original decree. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Court — No Interest on Claimants' Judgments: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that claimant was not entitled to interest based on past due compensation and medical benefits awarded by its earlier judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The penalties and assessments allowed against an insurer under the Workers' Compensation Act are the exclusive penalties and assessments that can be assessed against an insurer in absence of authorizing legislation. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Property Settlement — Liability for Interest Pending Appeal — Burden of Parties: Where, following a decree dissolving the marriage of the parties and awarding a money judgment to the wife, the husband obtained a stay of execution pending appeal, the trial court did not err upon remand in ordering the husband to pay interest upon the previous judgment, calculated from the day the judgment was originally rendered. Under the holding in Kerner v. N. Pac. Ry., 161 M 177, 505 P2d 86 (1973), a judgment bears interest from the date of its entry even though it is subject to direct attack. As the husband made no attempt to see what obligations were accruing, the court will not allow the husband to avoid his interest obligations by claiming that his wife did not do enough to secure it. Knudson v. Knudson, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981).

Reversal Without Directions: Where Supreme Court by its reversal of judgment granted plaintiff's demand for payment of dishonored checks, further evidence as to damages would not be proper; and although court omitted specific directions, there was no need for a new trial. Sun River Cattle Co. v. Miners' Bank of Mont., 164 M 479, 525 P2d 19 (1974).

Case Notes

Substantial Grounds for Appeal of Marital Property Valuation and Distribution — Costs of Appeal Denied: The wife sought sanctions based on the husband's allegedly unreasonable appeal of the parties' marital property valuation and distribution. The Supreme Court denied sanctions after finding that the husband's appeal was based on substantial and reasonable grounds and was not intended to cause delay. Collins v. Collins, 2004 MT 365, 324 M 500, 104 P3d 1059 (2004). See also In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322 (1999).

Assertion of Interpretation of Rule Regarding Remand of Pending Appeal — No Award of Sanctions: While a jurisdictional question was pending in a civil action seeking monetary damages, Nielsen contended that a settlement agreement was reached and filed a complaint in District Court to enforce the alleged agreement. The motion was dismissed because the underlying action was pending on appeal. Nielsen then appealed, but dismissal was affirmed. The Brocksmiths sought sanctions. However, Nielsen had participated in mediation and believed that an agreement was reached and thus presented the issue to the Supreme Court regarding remand of a pending appeal to settle an alleged agreement question, an issue not previously addressed. Because Nielsen's action could not be considered entirely unfounded, the Brocksmiths' motion for sanctions was denied. Nielsen v. Brocksmith, 2004 MT 259, 323 M 98, 99 P3d 181 (2004).

Sanctions Appropriate for Appeal Without Merit or Legal Support: Following affirmation of all underlying legal issues in this case in Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002), defendants filed another appeal seeking a determination of whether the District Court improperly denied their motion seeking relief from judgment. Following examination of the record, the Supreme Court concluded that defendants' brief was less an appeal to revise a judgment based on a supportable legal analysis and precedent than it was a vexatious personal attack on the presiding District Court Judge, which unreasonably lengthened the proceedings, resulted in unnecessary costs to the parties, and unnecessarily consumed court time. Therefore, sanctions were warranted and were ordered to be paid by defendants' attorney pursuant to 37-61-421 and this rule. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2003 MT 368, 319 M 105, 82 P3d 896 (2003).

Reasonable Grounds for Appeal of Child Medical Support Case — Sanctions Inappropriate: Cynthia waited 6 years to file a claim to require Lorney to pay his portion of their child's medical expenses and then requested sanctions on grounds that Lorney caused delay by appealing the trial court's decision. The Supreme Court found no evidence of delay caused by Lorney's appeal and concluded that there were substantial and reasonable grounds for the appeal, so sanctions were not imposed. In re Marriage of Deist, 2003 MT 263, 317 M 427, 77 P3d 525 (2003).

Sanctions Not Presumptively Assumed on Appeal Barred by Res Judicata: Defendant contended that sanctions were appropriate because plaintiff brought an appeal that was barred by res judicata. However, the fact that an appeal is barred by res judicata does not mean that an award of sanctions is presumptively appropriate. Absent a showing that the appeal was entirely unfounded, intended to cause delay, or constituted an abuse of the judicial system, sanctions are not appropriate. Johnson v. Hamilton, 2003 MT 199, 317 M 24, 75 P3d 778 (2003).

Failure to Cite Supporting Authority or File Record on Appeal — Sanctions Awarded: Hodge appealed the distribution of the marital estate, but failed to cite any authority to support his positions on the issues or file a record upon which the Supreme Court might base its review in considering his claims. Hodge's actions constituted an abuse of the judicial system, and sanctions were awarded to the wife for the costs and attorney fees associated with the appeal. In re Marriage of Hodge, 2003 MT 146, 316 M 194, 69 P3d 1192 (2003), following In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Appeal of Parenting Plan Not Unfounded — Award of Attorney Fees Declined: Each parent submitted a different plan for custody and visitation. The District Court adopted most provisions of the mother's proposed plan, and the father appealed. The Supreme Court ruled in the mother's favor, and she requested attorney fees and costs on grounds that the father's appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds. The Supreme Court found that the appeal was not entirely unfounded or intended to cause delay and did not constitute an abuse of the judicial system, so the request for attorney fees and costs was denied. In re Marriage of Carter, 2003 MT 19, 314 M 84, 63 P3d 1124 (2003).

Groundless Appeal of Easement Case — Damages Assessed: In District Court, defendant proceeded with an easement case, contending that a road did not exist in 1985, even though aerial photographs clearly showed that the road existed in exactly the same location since 1979. Fees and costs were assessed against defendant for unreasonably and vexatiously multiplying the proceedings, yet defendant brought exactly the same arguments on appeal. The Supreme Court awarded plaintiff reasonable attorney fees for defending an appeal taken without substantial or reasonable grounds. Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002).

Appeal of Denial of Motion to Compel Arbitration Not Considered Frivolous: An employer failed to timely respond to an employee's request for arbitration, and subsequently moved to compel arbitration. When the District Court denied the employer's motion to compel, the employer appealed. The employee then sought sanctions pursuant to this rule, contending that unnecessary delay and needless increase in the costs of litigation were compounded by the employer's appeal. The Supreme Court was not convinced from the record that the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds and thus declined to award sanctions. Firestone v. Oasis Telecommunications, Data & Records, Inc., 2001 MT 297, 307 M 469, 38 P3d 796 (2001).

Reasonable Grounds for Appeal of Trial Court's Imposition of Sanctions — No Sanctions Awarded on Appeal: The District Court awarded sanctions against Pospisil in favor of his ex-wife and a bank because the complaint was groundless and was not pursued in good faith and because Pospisil's conduct was not reasonable under the circumstances. Pospisil appealed, and the ex-wife also sought sanctions on appeal. Although the trial court's award of sanctions was proper, there were reasonable grounds for Pospisil to appeal the sanctions, so the Supreme Court declined to award additional sanctions on appeal. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Failure to Succeed on Appeal Not Equated to Taking Appeal Without Substantial or Reasonable Grounds — Attorney Fees Denied: The Supreme Court dismissed the father's appeal in a custody dispute because it was not timely filed, and the mother sought attorney fees as damages, contending that because the father had repeatedly sought custody over a short span of time in three different states, presenting different arguments depending on which state's court that he was appearing in, and that all of the claims lacked merit. The mother also contended that the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, so attorney fees were warranted. The Supreme Court noted that it did not reach the merits of the father's claim and thus was unable to determine whether the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds and that even if it had reached the merits of the appeal, the failure to succeed on appeal does not necessarily equate to taking an appeal without substantial or reasonable grounds. Further, the lack of timeliness of the appeal was not blatant and was not the focus of the mother's request for attorney fees, so the fees were denied. In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001).

Sanction for Alleged Frivolous Appeal and Undue Influence Refused Against Party Who Partly Prevailed on Appeal: The wife in a divorce case argued that her attorney fees on appeal should be ordered paid by the husband because his appeal of denial of enforcement of a settlement agreement was frivolous and because he continually attempted to use his superior financial position to leverage her into a disadvantageous settlement. The Supreme Court would not impose sanctions because there were reasonable grounds for appeal, as evidenced by the Supreme Court's reversal in the husband's favor on the issue of the apportioning of the marital assets. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Appeal Taken Without Substantial or Reasonable Grounds — Sanctions Imposed: With the exception of four sentences in her brief, plaintiff's entire argument on appeal was devoted to arguing that no easement burdened her land. However, the appeal was related to a complaint of assault and trespass, not the validity of an easement. The four sentences were simply a collection of conclusions and contained no discussion of the law relating to trespass or assault, no citation to legal authority or to the record, and no application of the law to the facts. The Supreme Court found this to be a proper case in which to impose sanctions for a frivolous appeal and remanded for a determination of defendant's reasonable attorney fees and costs incurred on appeal. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000).

Attorney Fees Not Imposed Absent Evidence That Pro Se Appeal Brought in Bad Faith: As a general rule, the Supreme Court will not impose sanctions under this rule unless an appeal is entirely unfounded and intended to cause delay or unless counsel's actions otherwise constitute an abuse of the judicial system. Here, even though a plaintiff's pro se arguments were legally unsound and untimely, there was no indication that the arguments were brought in bad faith, so the court declined to award defendants their attorney fees on appeal. Greenup v. Russell, 2000 MT 154, 300 M 136, 3 P3d 124, 57 St. Rep. 610 (2000).

Lack of Respect for Judicial Process and Appeal Without Reasonable Grounds — Award of Fees and Costs Appropriate: The Supreme Court held that under this rule, sanctions were appropriate against appellant who proceeded without respect for the judicial process and did so without sufficient reasonable grounds. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000). See also Spoonheim v. Norwest Bank Mont., 277 M 417, 922 P2d 528, 53 St. Rep. 764 (1996).

Motion for Relief From Judgment Barred by Res Judicata — Sanctions Appropriate: McLaughlins moved for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), but the motion was denied by the District Court. On appeal, McLaughlins raised 14 different reasons why the District Court's judgment following remand was void. The thrust of their argument was that the District Court failed to follow statutory law when awarding punitive damages against them. In denying the Rule 60(b) motion, the District Court noted that the issues raised by the motion had been appealed three times to the Supreme Court and affirmed each time in noncite opinions and held that the Rule 60(b) motion was dilatory in nature and without substance in law or fact. On this fourth appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, finding that all of the issues raised by the McLaughlins in their Rule 60(b) motion were barred by res judicata because they either had been previously litigated or could have been litigated in prior proceedings. Further, because the latest appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, it was frivolous pursuant to this rule, so sanctions in the form of reasonable costs and attorney fees were ordered to be added to the judgment against McLaughlins on remand. Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662, 56 St. Rep. 1276 (1999). See also Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), Searight v. Cimino, 238 M 218, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217 (1989), and Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995).

Failure to Participate in Water Court Hearing — Attorney Fees Assessed as Sanction for Defense of Unreasonable Appeal: Despite warnings from the Water Court of the consequences, plaintiffs chose not to participate in a Water Court hearing, thereby creating no record of their issues and preserving none of their arguments for appeal. They appealed anyway, contending that the Water Court's findings were in error. The Supreme Court first found that the findings and conclusions were correct, then sanctioned plaintiffs pursuant to this rule, finding that defendant was entitled to attorney fees incurred in defending an appeal that was taken without any substantial or reasonable grounds, that delayed the case, and that wasted the resources of defendant and the Supreme Court. Swinger v. Collins, 1999 MT 202, 295 M 447, 984 P2d 151, 56 St. Rep. 787 (1999).

Issue of Sanctions as Meritorious Question — Award of Damages Declined: Respondents sought damages pursuant to this rule, arguing that attorney fees and costs were appropriate because an appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds. Appellants had raised the question on appeal as to whether Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), sanctions could be imposed jointly and severally. The Supreme Court, noting that the appeal was not taken solely for delay or harassment and that the issue was a meritorious question worthy of appeal, declined to award damages. Morris v. Big Sky Thoroughbred Farms, Inc., 1998 MT 229, 291 M 32, 965 P2d 890, 55 St. Rep. 957 (1998).

Section 1983 Action — Denial of Summary Judgment on Qualified Immunity Held Not Appealable — Lack of Supreme Court Jurisdiction — Sanctions Awarded: After a riot at the Montana State Prison (MSP) in which several prison inmates were killed or injured, inmates brought a negligence and section 1983 action against MSP officials. The MSP officials moved for summary judgment on the issue of qualified immunity from the section 1983 action. The District Court denied the motion, and the MSP officials appealed the denial. The Supreme Court held that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction over the appeal from the District Court's denial of the summary judgment motion because the District Court order is not a final judgment within the meaning of Rule 1(b)(1), M.R.App.P. and that the appeal was likewise not authorized by Rule 1(b)(2) or (b)(3), M.R.App.P. The Supreme Court noted that this result was not changed by the state's allegation that the record was "ripe for appeal" and was "easily reviewable". The Supreme Court also held that the case law of the federal courts interpreting 28 U.S.C. 1291, especially Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 US 511 (1985), and Johnson v. Jones, 515 US 304, 132 L Ed 2d 238, 115 S Ct 2151 (1995), was not relevant because the Montana Supreme Court derives its authority over appeals from the state constitution and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure and not from 28 U.S.C. 1291. Because the appellants had not made any arguments in favor of their appeal, the Supreme Court determined that it was frivolous and, pursuant to this rule, awarded the respondents their attorney fees on appeal. In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

Good Faith Argument Despite Lack of Underlying Law — Damages Unwarranted: Although plaintiff's argument regarding the doctrine of equitable tolling was unconvincing, absent evidence that the argument was not made in good faith or that the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, defendant's claim for damages was denied. Sorenson v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 279 M 527, 927 P2d 1030, 53 St. Rep. 1269 (1996).

Attorney Fees: Whenever an appeal is entirely unfounded and causes delay, the other party should be reimbursed to a reasonable extent for his costs and attorney fees in connection with the appellate proceedings. Spoonheim v. Norwest Bank Mont., 277 M 417, 922 P2d 528, 53 St. Rep. 764 (1996); Reilly v. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane, 261 M 532, 863 P2d 420, 50 St. Rep. 1441

(1993), followed in CNA Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 273 M 295, 902 P2d 1014, 52 St. Rep. 981 (1995); Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981); Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979). See also Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998).

Sanctions Applicable Based on Conflicting Positions, Baseless Claims, and Inaccurate Citations: The Supreme Court applied this rule in holding that sanctions were appropriate against an appellant who had taken inconsistent and conflicting positions throughout the case, asserted baseless claims on appeal, and used inaccurate citations in its appellate brief. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 277 M 134, 920 P2d 97, 53 St. Rep. 618 (1996), followed in Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998). On remand, defendant was entitled to present proof to the jury that third-party defendant, which had been sanctioned for prosecuting a meritless appeal, was involved in a continuing course of bad faith postjudgment conduct, and proof of that conduct was admissible to prove malice. Third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. The evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999), followed in Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P3d 864, 57 St. Rep. 1288 (2000).

Sanctions Warranted by Petition in Workers' Compensation Court When Jurisdiction of District Court Previously Invoked: After Dunn brought an action in District Court pursuant to 39-71-515 and 39-71-516 against an uninsured employer, CNA Insurance brought a petition in the Workers' Compensation Court for that court to determine Dunn's insurance coverage. The Supreme Court held that since the employer could admit liability, the petition in Workers' Compensation Court served no purpose other than to attempt to circumvent or delay the District Court action. The Supreme Court therefore awarded a $500 sanction against CNA and its counsel. CNA Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 273 M 295, 902 P2d 1014, 52 St. Rep. 981 (1995), distinguished in Neustrom v. St., 283 M 179, 939 P2d 990, 54 St. Rep. 552 (1997). See also Krause v. Neuman, 284 M 399, 943 P2d 1328, 54 St. Rep. 937 (1997), and Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 2001 MT 8, 304 M 83, 18 P3d 994 (2001), in which the court enjoined the claimant from filing further civil appeals until the sanction was paid.

Appeal From Order Removing Counsel From Duties as Personal Representative — No Basis for Sanctions for Bringing Meritless Appeal: An attorney appealed an order removing him for cause from his duties as personal representative in an informal probate proceeding. Based on the record in this case, there was no basis for sanctions to be assessed against appellant for attorney fees and costs pursuant to this rule for bringing a meritless appeal. In re Estate of Peterson, 265 M 104, 874 P2d 1230, 51 St. Rep. 454 (1994).

Costs Denied Winner of Trust Invalidation Case: Under the circumstances of the case, the Supreme Court declined to order that the sons challenging parts of their father's trust benefiting his wife be assessed costs of appeal on the grounds that they appealed without substantial or reasonable grounds. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Appeal Taken Without Reasonable Grounds — Sanctions Imposed: Sanctions were imposed against a pro se appellant who was no stranger to litigation when the appeal was not warranted by existing law, no good faith argument was made for a change in the existing law, and the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds under the circumstances. Mogan v. Cargill, Inc., 259 M 400, 856 P2d 973, 50 St. Rep. 851 (1993).

Appeal of Dismissal of Parties After Prior Concurrence — Fees and Costs Warranted: Despite the fact that he agreed to dismissal of several parties at the District Court level, plaintiff argued on appeal that dismissal was improper. The appeal was barred by plaintiff's prior acquiescence to the dismissal. Assessment of attorney fees and costs of appeal against him was appropriate. Buck v. Billings Mont. Chevrolet, Inc., 248 M 276, 811 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 431 (1991).

Insurance Company's Appeal of Lower Court's Interpretation of Insurance Law Not Without Merit: An applicant for an insurance policy answered "no" to a question on the insurance form as to whether he had visited a physician for any purpose during the previous 3 years. In fact, the applicant had been treated for alcoholism and depression. Subsequently, the insurance company alleged that the insured committed suicide, and the insurance company refused to pay on the policy. The death was later ruled to not be suicide. The Supreme Court held that if alcoholism was a material concern of the insurance company, then it should have specifically requested information concerning alcohol use on the application form as it did with respect to other medical conditions, such as heart or kidney disease. The court also held that the defendant was not liable for damages on the basis that its appeal was without merit because the questions presented on appeal were not clearcut but delved into an area in which there was little state case law. Schneider v. Minn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 247 M 334, 806 P2d 1032, 48 St. Rep. 224 (1991).

Sanctions Imposed in Visitation Rights Case: Parental and visitation rights were the subject of at least five separate legal actions or proceedings over a 2-year period, all but one of which were initiated by the father. Each proceeding caused unnecessary emotional and financial distress for all parties involved, including a profound adverse effect on the well-being of the child involved. Wishing to put an end to the father's abuse of the judicial system, especially regarding appeals taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, the Supreme Court imposed $250 in damages on the father. Thomas v. Hale, 246 M 64, 802 P2d 1255, 47 St. Rep. 2261 (1990).

Modification of Support and Maintenance — Not Frivolous Appeal: In a divorce action, the husband brought a motion to modify support and maintenance on the basis that he had remarried and had a new family to support. The lower court refused to modify the original decree, and the husband appealed. The wife argued that she was entitled to damages and attorney fees incurred as a result of the appeal. The Supreme Court held that the appeal was not without merit and therefore the wife was not entitled to fees and costs. In re Marriage of Jones, 242 M 119, 788 P2d 1351, 47 St. Rep. 595 (1990).

Appeal of Settled Issue — Sanctions Appropriate: After several trials and hearings concerning the construction of an airfield on the appellants' land by the respondent, the appellants brought a motion to set aside most of the prior rulings by the District Court, arguing that the court did not have subject matter jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that the issue of jurisdiction could have been raised on several prior occasions and public policy dictated that at some time litigation must come to an end. The court additionally held that the appellants were merely attempting to open the case and relitigate previously settled issues and therefore imposed damages in the amount of $500 on the appellants. Searight v. Cimino, 238 M 218, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217 (1989), followed in S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990), and cited in Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 269 M 32, 887 P2d 193, 51 St. Rep. 1345 (1994).

Damages to Respondent for Appeal Taken Without Substantial Grounds — Skimpy Briefs: Damages to respondent were proper when counsel for appellant was repeatedly informed by the trial judge of the need to establish a duty owing by the respondent, but no evidence of a duty was presented. Assessment of damages was further warranted because appellant's brief did not contain: (1) a statement of the case; (2) citations to authority for numerous contentions; (3) citations to pages of the record relied upon; and (4) accurate quotations of case law, commissioners' comments, and the record. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Attorney Fees Denied: When a reasonable ground for an appeal exists, no sanctions under this rule will be imposed. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988), followed in Bickler v. The Racquet Club Heights Associates, 258 M 19, 850 P2d 967, 50 St. Rep. 409 (1993), and Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154, 55 St. Rep. 131 (1998). See also In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996). However, see Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998).

Frivolous Appeal in Dissolution Case From Distribution of Property and Award of Child Support: In dividing a modest amount of marital property and awarding child support in this dissolution action, the District Court apparently tried to make certain that each party had an automobile and his own pension benefits and personal property and set the child support amount well within child support guidelines. The husband's appeal was obviously trifling, without substantial basis, and perhaps mean-spirited. The wife is entitled to an award of damages in the form of her attorney fees incurred in the appeal. In re Marriage of Larson, 234 M 400, 763 P2d 1109, 45 St. Rep. 2003 (1988).

Repeated Custody Challenges — Attorney Fees Proper — Meritless Appeal Warranting Sanctions: The District Court's determination that the father's repeated actions for sole custody were intended to harass, obstruct, and delay the mother's right to joint custody and were an abuse of process highly detrimental to the best interests of the children was sufficient to trigger the award of attorney fees and costs against the father under 40-4-219. Appeal of the custody question to the Supreme Court was meritless, and sanctions were proper under this rule. In re Marriage of West, 233 M 47, 758 P2d 282, 45 St. Rep. 1281 (1988).

Intervening Statutory Amendment as Justification for Appealing Question of Law Decided Previously: When appellant based its appeal on a question of law previously decided, its appeal was not taken without reasonable grounds when the law in question had since been amended. Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Claim — Penalty Denied: A penalty under this section was inappropriate when the insurer pursued substantial and reasonable legal grounds throughout the protracted litigation. Conway v. Blackfeet Indian Dev., Inc., 217 M 54, 702 P2d 970, 42 St. Rep. 1020 (1985).

Frivolous Appeal Without Purpose of Delay — No Attorney's Fees Awarded: Although appeal appeared to be taken without substantial reasonable grounds, the rule allowing damages for a frivolous appeal has another prong. The appeal must be taken for purposes of delay only. Finding no such purpose, the Supreme Court denied respondent's petition for attorney's fees and costs for the appeal, except as provided in Rule 33, M.R.App.P. Smith v. Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912, 41 St. Rep. 1695 (1984).

Damages for Frivolous Appeal on Claim of Judicial Prejudice: On November 17, 1981, the Supreme Court decided Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. Bouma, 195 M 351, 639 P2d 47, 38 St. Rep. 1911 (1981). In that case the court partially affirmed a summary judgment for the plaintiff and remanded the case to modify the accounting decree in accordance with its opinion. Defendant sought to disqualify the District Court Judge, and a hearing was held. No bias or prejudice was found, and at a later hearing the accounting decree was modified. Defendant then appealed, claiming that the District Court Judge and the Supreme Court had violated his rights to due process because of prejudice. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal as frivolous and assessed damages in the amount of $500 against the appellant. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. Bouma, 39 St. Rep. 2126 (1982) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Award of Fees Reasonable — Appeal to Clarify Alternative Judgment Not Frivolous: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, attorneys for defendant requested fees of $11,000. The District Court awarded fees of $2,000 based on testimony received. The Supreme Court found that this finding was not clearly erroneous. The court also declined to award attorney fees under Rule 32, M.R.App.P., for the appeal because plaintiffs were justified in bringing the appeal to clarify the alternative judgment. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Appeal Taken to Prevent Amendment — Sanction Imposed: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that the filing of the notice of appeal divested the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. The court further stated that sanctions under Rule 32, M.R.App.P., would be imposed on parties using this type of unfair procedural tactic. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Abuse of Process to Delay Possession of Real Property — Damages Awarded: In a suit brought by Sun Dial to regain possession of land from Gold Creek, a settlement was reached on the day set for trial. The settlement required Gold Creek to pay Sun Dial $1.3 million within 1 year of the settlement date. Payment was not made and the court ordered judgment for Sun Dial's immediate possession of the land. Gold Creek then began various legal maneuvers that culminated in this appeal. The Supreme Court found that the purpose of these maneuvers was to give Gold Creek more time to sell the land and that this amounted to abuse of the appeal process. A judgment was entered against Gold Creek under this rule. Sun Dial Land Co., Inc. v. Gold Creek Ranches, Inc., 198 M 247, 645 P2d 936, 39 St. Rep. 908 (1982).

Unequal Division of Marital Assets — Reasonable Grounds for Appeal: Where the court divided the marital assets unequally, abuse of discretion was reasonably at issue, thereby precluding respondent from recovering attorney fees on appeal. In re the Marriage of Martens v. Martens, 196 M 71, 637 P2d 523, 38 St. Rep. 2135 (1981).

Child Custody Case — Appeal Held Not Frivolous: Where, following a decree awarding all of the children of the parties to the father, the mother appealed, alleging generally that the record did not support the award of custody, the Supreme Court refused to find that the appeal was frivolous. The court held that, unlike the case of Billings v. Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104 (1980), the mother did not appear to be motivated by a desire to needlessly tie up the litigation process and that, although the facts afforded the appellant little hope of prevailing an appeal, the court would find an appeal in a child custody case to be frivolous in only the most limited circumstances. In re Marriage of Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Frivolous Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court: An appeal by an insurance company from a decision of the Workers' Compensation Court to not assume jurisdiction over an action filed by the insurance company was frivolous where the insurance company filed the action in Workers' Compensation Court subsequent to an action filed in District Court for the purpose of obtaining a declaratory ruling on an issue being addressed in District Court. This is "an instance where an insurance company has abused the court system in its efforts to avoid meeting the issues head-on in District Court", and as a real party in interest, the insurance company bears the responsibility for the appeal and is liable for penalties to be paid to the parties forced into Workers' Compensation Court proceedings. Alaska Pac. Assurance v. L.H.C., Inc., 191 M 120, 622 P2d 224, 38 St. Rep. 23 (1981). The Supreme Court declared its opinion to be substituted for the opinion in Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 37 St. Rep. 1616 (1980).

Removal of Child From State — Appeal Held Not Frivolous: The mother, custodian of the couple's child, moved to North Carolina without informing the District Court as required by the divorce decree. The father brought suit for change of custody, which was denied. The mother contended that his appeal was frivolous and sought attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that neither of the mother's contentions was proper, as she had forced the father to initiate the litigation by moving to North Carolina without first getting a change in the visitation privileges. In re Marriage of Winn, 190 M 73, 618 P2d 870, 37 St. Rep. 1734 (1980).

Motion for Modification of Divorce Decree Not New Action Supporting Venue Change: After a divorce was granted, the husband filed three petitions for modification of the divorce decree over a period of 6 years, the third of which sought custody of the minor son of the marriage. Since the divorce, the mother had moved to another county, and upon the third petition by her former husband, she moved for a change of venue to her county of residence. Her primary argument for this motion was that she was entitled to a change of venue under 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118) because the former husband's petition was the commencement of a new action. The Supreme Court called this frivolous and said it would assess damages under Rule 32, M.R.App.P., in future appeals of this nature. In re Billings v. Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104, 37 St. Rep. 1704 (1980).

Workers' Compensation Court — Declaratory Judgment — Frivolous Appeal: The Workers' Compensation Court properly refused to take jurisdiction of a petition seeking, in essence, a declaratory judgment that petitioner, Raines, was an employee rather than an independent contractor so as to relieve him of liability in a wrongful death action filed in District Court. The decision was one for the District Court since the workers' compensation court is not empowered to issue declaratory judgments. The insurance company and its counsel are charged with such minimum knowledge and, thus, must pay a $500 penalty for filing a frivolous appeal. Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 37 St. Rep. 1616 (1980). (This opinion was withdrawn by the opinion in Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 191 M 120, 622 P2d 224, 38 St. Rep. 23 (1981).)

No Frivolous Appeal — Bona Fide Difference of Opinion: Albertson's requested the court to impose sanctions upon the Department of Business Regulation for a frivolous appeal under Rule 32, M.R.App.P. The request was denied. The Department's position is well within the bounds of legitimate argument on a substantive issue on which there is a bona fide difference of opinion. The appeal is not frivolous within the meaning of the rule. Albertson's v. Dept. of Business Regulation, 184 M 12, 601 P2d 43 (1979).

Sanctions Inappropriate — Sufficiency of Evidence as to Competency to Make Will: The specifications of error raised by appellants regarding sufficiency of evidence as to competency of decedent to make a will are not groundless or unreasonable. Thus Rule 32 damages are not appropriate in this appeal. In re Holm, Holm v. Parsons, 179 M 375, 588 P2d 531 (1979).

Arguable Contentions: While the Supreme Court did not find that the arguments advanced by the plaintiff on appeal were controlling, his contentions were certainly arguable. Hence defendant's request for costs and attorney's fees under this rule was denied. LaForest v. Texaco, Inc., 179 M 42, 585 P2d 1318 (1978), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988).

Sanctions Not Authorized Against Respondent: The sanctions for bringing a frivolous appeal are authorized against an appellant, not a respondent in whose favor the District Court ruled. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 179 M 1, 585 P2d 1296 (1978).

Sufficiency of Evidence at Issue: The question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment was reasonably in issue, thus respondent was not entitled to damages under this rule. Erdman v. C & C Sales, Inc., 176 M 177, 577 P2d 55 (1978).

Damages Denied: The Supreme Court held that an appeal of the granting of motion for summary judgment was not taken "without substantial or reasonable grounds" and declined to grant damages under this rule. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Reasonable Grounds for Appeal: The Supreme Court failed to find substantial evidence that an appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds or only for purposes of delay. Poeppel v. Fisher, 175 M 136, 572 P2d 912 (1977).

Quiet Title Action — Tax Deed: Appeal from judgment against plaintiff in action to obtain a tax deed from the county and quiet title to property was not frivolous. Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977).

Frivolous Appeal — Writ of Execution: Where defendants, who were liable under two judgments to pay plaintiff in excess of $16,000, offered him $152 as satisfaction in full pursuant to a stipulation by the parties' attorneys allegedly authorizing such a settlement, then appealed issuance of a Writ of Execution to enforce the judgment after plaintiff's rejection of their tender, they were guilty of attempting to delay payment of their debt by means of a frivolous appeal, and plaintiff was entitled to damages under this rule. Heller v. Osburnsen, 169 M 459, 548 P2d 607 (1976).

Damages Denied — Question Not Previously Decided: Assessment of damages against appellants was declined where issue of penalty payment due to professional employee was arguable and had not previously been decided by the appellate court. Hammill v. Young, 168 M 81, 540 P2d 971 (1975).

Frivolous Appeal — Striking of Documents: Strangers to action who filed various documents which were stricken as frivolous, then appealed from such striking, were assessed $1,000 damages under this rule. Farmers St. Bank of Conrad v. Iverson, 162 M 130, 509 P2d 839 (1973).

Damages Not Allowed: Appellee was not entitled to recover additional damages under this rule where appellant had a reasonable ground for appeal. Larry Larson & Assoc. v. John R. Daily, Inc., 158 M 231, 490 P2d 355 (1971).

Rule 33. Costs in civil cases.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is a combination of Rule 39 of the Federal Draft and Montana Supreme Court Rule XVIII. With some adjustment of language, subdivision (a) is taken from the Montana Rule; subdivisions (b) and (c) from the Federal Draft; and subdivisions (d), (e) and (f) from the Montana Rule.

NOTE TO SEPTEMBER 10, 1968, AMENDMENT

The amendments to Rule 33(a), (b), (c) and (f) are to make it clear that all costs on appeal are claimed in the court below after remittitur and eliminate the former duplication of cost bills in both the supreme court and district court.

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (a) inserted "in civil cases" and made minor changes in phraseology in first sentence; and in (f) inserted "civil" before "cases" in first sentence.

Amendments: The amendment of September 10, 1968, in subdivision (a), added the last sentence; in subdivision (b), deleted "in the supreme court" after "taxable" and deleted a second sentence reading "A party who desires such costs to be taxed shall state them in a verified bill of costs which he shall file with the clerk, with proof of service, within 14 days after entry of judgment"; in subdivision (c), substituted the present caption for "costs taxable in the District Court[s]"; in subdivision (f), inserted "the" before "costs in accordance", deleted "in the supreme court" before "in accordance" and substituted "by" for "to" before "him".

Supreme Court Rules Superseded: As to the above advisory committee note, see the compiler's comments to Rule 43 (now Rule 53), M.R.App.P., and to this chapter.

Case Notes

Prevailing Party Entitled to Costs of Appeal on Remand: In Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001), the Supreme Court found for defendants and remanded. Defendants asked for costs of the appeal, but the District Court refused to award them on remand. Defendants appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. As the prevailing party in the 2001 appeal, defendants were entitled to the costs of their appeal as a matter of law, and the District Court abused its discretion in failing to award reasonable costs for that appeal. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Statute Allowing Attorney Fees in Appeal From Small Claims Court Not Applicable to Appeal From District Court: Plaintiffs prevailed in an appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court, which began as an appeal from Small Claims Court, and sought attorney fees and costs related to the appeal, citing 25-35-806. The Supreme Court held that 25-35-806 applies only to appeals from Small Claims Court to District Court, and declined to award plaintiffs their attorney fees incurred during the appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court. However, as the prevailing party in the Supreme Court appeal, plaintiffs were entitled to costs under this rule. Allen v. Hubbard, 2002 MT 95, 309 M 375, 46 P3d 639 (2002).

Costs and Attorney Fees Awarded to Prevailing Party on Appeal of Civil Rights Case: Laudert was the prevailing party in a civil rights case and was awarded full attorney fees. That award was appealed, and Laudert prevailed again. The Supreme Court cited Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439 (2000), in holding that as the prevailing party in the underlying civil rights action, Laudert was entitled to reimbursement of fees reasonably incurred, whether the fees were incurred in the original civil rights trial and appeal, in proving those fees, or in defending the District Court's fee award. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2001 MT 287, 307 M 403, 38 P3d 790 (2001).

Award of Attorney Fees Based on Contract — Prevailing Party Entitled to Attorney Fees on Appeal: When an award of attorney fees is based on a contract, the prevailing party is entitled to reasonable attorney fees on appeal. Eschenbacher v. Anderson, 2001 MT 206, 306 M 321, 34 P3d 87 (2001). See also Smith v. Johnson, 245 M 137, 798 P2d 106 (1990).

Fees for Posttrial Work and Appeal Denied in Light of Generous Award of Attorney Fees at Trial: The Slacks accepted a Department of Transportation offer to pay $168,069, plus interest and necessary litigation expenses, in a property condemnation case, but the amount of litigation expenses was disputed and was not settled by the District Court until some years later. The Department appealed the award, and the Slacks cross-appealed, seeking attorney fees for posttrial work and for responding to the appeal. The Supreme Court noted that although the District Court's findings justifying its award of necessary litigation expenses were not clearly erroneous, the District Court's attorney fee award was clearly generous and that Slack's attorney was granted everything that he requested despite two witnesses for the Department who testified that the attorney's claims were excessive and duplicative. The Supreme Court declined to award additional attorney fees for posttrial work and the appeal. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001).

Transcript Cost Recoverable if Necessary for Appeal Determination: Parents for whom the Department of Public Health and Human Services had filed a petition for temporary investigative services appealed an order by the District Court that denied recovery of the cost for reproducing a transcript incurred on a previous appeal. The parents argued that Rule 9(b), M.R.App.P., required them to order a transcript of the entire proceedings not already on file. In affirming the District Court's denial of recovery, the Supreme Court held that although Rule 9 is the general authority that guides the ordering, preparation, and filing of transcripts, this rule is the specific rule controlling whether the cost of reproducing the transcript can be taxed as a cost. This rule clearly establishes that appeal transcript costs are recoverable only if the transcript was necessary for the determination of the appeal. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying recovery because the transcript was not required to resolve the legal issue on appeal. In re Inquiry Into A.W., 2000 MT 311, 302 M 447, 14 P3d 1252, 57 St. Rep. 1317 (2000).

Recovery of Attorney Fees, Including Appeal Costs, Based on Indemnification Provision in Underlying Contract: Four people decided to start a business, but ultimately three decided to opt out and exchange their respective corporate shares of stock for cash. The release agreement also held the three harmless from all causes of action relating to the incorporation and provided an indemnification clause that held each party harmless from and against all liability, claim, loss, damage, or expense, including attorney fees, incurred or required to be paid by the other parties by reason of any breach or failure of observance or performance of any representation, warranty, or covenant or other provision of the agreement. Nevertheless, the corporation subsequently sued one of the three resigning members for breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, actual and constructive fraud, and negligent misrepresentation, seeking $110,000 in general damages and also punitive damages. Defendant counterclaimed that by filing a claim that was barred by the release agreement, the corporation had breached its contract. Following trial, the District Court awarded only $3,673.53 for constructive fraud, but also concluded that all claims based on the parties' contractual relationship were barred. Each party then requested attorney fees as the prevailing party pursuant to the indemnification clause, but the court denied the motions, holding that there was no prevailing party because each party had gained a victory but also suffered a loss. The corporation appealed, seeking attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to the reciprocal right under 28-3-704, the corporation had the statutory right to recover attorney fees, but only the fees incurred in defending the breach of contract counterclaim as the prevailing party, pursuant to the contractual indemnification provision. Under the same reasoning, the Supreme Court awarded attorney fees for costs of appeal as well, remanding for a determination of fees. Transaction Network, Inc. v. Wellington Technologies, Inc., 2000 MT 223, 301 M 212, 7 P3d 409, 57 St. Rep. 920 (2000), followed in Peschel Family Trust v. Colonna, 2003 MT 216, 317 M 127, 75 P3d 793 (2003).

Performance of Public Service in Enforcement of Constitutional Provisions Through Litigation — Costs and Attorney Fees Payable: Plaintiffs successfully contested the constitutional validity of a Department of Revenue administrative rule regarding the confidentiality of corporate tax information. In doing so, plaintiffs performed a public service by enforcing a portion of the Montana Constitution that would otherwise have been violated. Because of the public benefits gained through plaintiffs' efforts, the Supreme Court spread the cost of the litigation among its beneficiaries and awarded plaintiffs their costs and reasonable attorney fees, including those incurred on appeal. Assoc. Press, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 2000 MT 160, 300 M 233, 4 P3d 5, 57 St. Rep. 657 (2000).

Bond for Costs on Appeal May Not Include Attorney Fees: When allowed by law, attorney fees that a party incurs on appeal may be recovered by that party if that party prevails on appeal. Section 39-2-915 provides that if a party in a wrongful discharge proceeding declines an offer to arbitrate and then loses in court, the party that offered to arbitrate is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred after the offer was made, including those incurred on appeal. However, for purposes of determining the amount of a bond or security under Rule 6, M.R.App.P., a District Court may not include anticipated attorney fees for the future defense of an appeal as part of the anticipated costs on appeal. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 285 M 188, 948 P2d 211, 54 St. Rep. 1104 (1997).

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs on Appeal of Contract Action: Under this rule, costs in civil actions are automatically awarded to the prevailing party and, additionally, when an award of attorney fees is based on a contract, the prevailing party is also entitled to an award of reasonable attorney fees incurred on appeal. Chamberlin v. Puckett Constr., 277 M 198, 921 P2d 1237, 53 St. Rep. 593 (1996). See also Quigley v. Acker, 1998 MT 72, 288 M 190, 955 P2d 1377, 55 St. Rep. 295 (1998), and Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001).

Future Fees Payable Under Underlying Mortgage: Attorney fees incurred in an appeal were payable by debtor when an underlying mortgage obligated debtor to pay creditor's attorney fees incurred in connection with any future foreclosure action. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Newton, 252 M 336, 829 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 267 (1992).

Provision for Fees by Contract or Statute: Attorney fees are allowed when they are provided for by statute or contractual provision. Poulsen's, Inc. v. Wood, 232 M 411, 756 P2d 1162, 45 St. Rep. 1154 (1988), followed in Wise v. Sebena, 248 M 32, 808 P2d 494, 48 St. Rep. 309 (1991), and in Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Attorney Fees as Element of Costs Granted Against Governmental Entity: In a case where the Department of Revenue sought back child support, received and cashed a check from defendant in an accord and satisfaction, then 1 year later levied execution on defendant's accrued and future wages and, although under a restraining order not to attempt collection or enforcement of a distraint warrant, intercepted defendant's federal and state income tax refunds, the District Court properly awarded costs to the defendant in the form of attorney fees under 25-10-711. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing the holding in State ex rel. Florence-Carlton Consol. School District v. District Court, 193 M 413, 632 P2d 318, 38 St. Rep. 1204 (1981), that if, under all the circumstances of a case, justice would require the imposition of costs, equity can further provide in extreme cases to allow attorney fees as an element of those costs. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987), distinguished, in the absence of proof of extreme state conduct, in Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Minor Changes in Grant of Custody on Remand — No Legal Issues Reversed: In affirming a decision on remand by the District Court to hold each party responsible for its own costs of the original appeal and to equally divide the costs of the children's lawyer, the court followed State ex rel. Nesbitt v. District Court, 119 M 198, 173 P2d 412 (1946), in holding that under Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), the slight modification in the previous decree did not make appellant the successful party on appeal and that absent reversal of legal questions in favor of either party, assignment of individual costs was proper. In re Marriage of Kuzara, 224 M 124, 728 P2d 786, 43 St. Rep. 2068 (1986).

Rule 34. Petitions for rehearing.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule is patterned in part after Rule 40 of the Federal Draft. However, the first sentence is added from Montana Supreme Court Rule XV, as is the statement of the grounds for the petition and the procedure for serving and filing objections; also the 14 days for filing provided in the Federal Draft has been shortened to conform to state practice, and the number of copies required has been reduced from 25 to 6. The second sentence provides for filing of the petition within 10 days after "the decision of the supreme court has been rendered," rather than after "entry of judgment" as provided by the Federal Draft. The purpose is to avoid uncertainty as to when a judgment has been entered, which might exist under the language of the Federal Draft where the mandate of the supreme court is returned to the district court and there entered.

NOTE TO SEPTEMBER 29, 1967, AMENDMENT

Source: None.

This amendment would dispense with requests by the court as a condition to filing replies to petitions for rehearing, and would permit petitions and objections thereto be typewritten in the form prescribed by Rule 27(b).

NOTE TO MAY 1, 1990, AMENDMENT

The above [sic] amendments are designed to neutralize the gender language presently found in the rule. No substantive change is intended.

Compiler's Comments

1996 Amendment: In last sentence substituted requirement for a signed original and 7 copies for six copies and deleted option of typewritten form. Amendment effective August 27, 1996.

1990 Amendment: The May 1, 1990, amendment made language in the rule gender neutral.

Amendments: The amendment of September 29, 1967, substituted "fact" for "facts" following the colon; deleted a former, next to last sentence reading: "No reply to a petition for rehearing will be received unless requested by the court, but a petition for rehearing will not ordinarily be granted in the absence of such a request"; and substituted "and six copies of objections . . . form" for "produced in accordance with Rule 27(a)".

Supreme Court Rules Superseded: As to the above advisory committee notes, see the compiler's comments to Rule 43 (now Rule 53), M.R.App.P., and to this chapter.

Case Notes

Improper Denial of Motion to Amend Prior Judgment on Remand Under Law of Case Doctrine: Following remand of Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001) (Muri I), defendants moved to amend the judgment to conform to the Supreme Court decision. The District Court denied the motion and instead made new findings of fact that conflicted with the previously unchallenged findings upon which the Supreme Court's decision was based. Defendants appealed the denial of their motion, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under the doctrine of the law of the case, a prior Supreme Court decision resolving an issue between the same parties is binding and may not be relitigated. Because plaintiff did not appeal the findings upon which the Supreme Court relied in Muri I, the District Court had no authority to reconsider the findings on remand, and denial of the motion to amend the previously amended judgment was reversible error. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Retroactivity of New Judicial Rules and Judicial Interpretation — Section 46-23-1012 (1999) Applied Retroactively to Parole Revocations Between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001: On April 26, 2001, the Supreme Court held that a probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender had been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. On May 4, 2001, Goebel petitioned the court to look beyond the plain language of 46-23-1012 and hold that the probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender has been arrested by a probation officer rather than pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. Effective May 1, 2001, the Legislature amended 46-23-1012 to delete the requirement for a probable cause hearing. On May 9, 2001, Giddings filed a petition for rehearing, asking the court to direct the District Court to dismiss the petition to revoke Giddings' suspended sentence on grounds that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to revoke the suspended sentence because of the amendment to 46-23-1012, contending that application of the new statute would violate the constitutional ban on ex post facto legislation. The Supreme Court declined to modify the decision in either Goebel or Giddings because no material fact or question decisive of the cases themselves was overlooked and the decisions did not conflict with any express statute or controlling decision. However, the court did discuss the retroactive application of judicial rules of criminal procedure and the judicial interpretation of a statute, as well as the claim that the retroactive application of 46-23-1012 was a violation of the ex post facto clause. Citing Rivers v. Roadway Express, 511 US 298 (1994), the court held that a court's interpretation of a statute is never new law because the decision declares what the statute meant from the day of its enactment, not from the date of the decision. In determining whether a statute violates the ex post facto clause, the court referred to the test in St. v. Duffy, 2000 MT 186, 300 M 381, 6 P3d 453 (2000), which provided that to be in violation of the clause, a statute must be retrospective and must disadvantage the offender affected by it. In this case, Giddings was not disadvantaged because the statutory change did not alter the definition of or punishment for the probation violation that Giddings was charged with. Further, the error that was the basis for reversal of Giddings' case was jurisdictional, so all proceedings in the District Court were void ab initio, and the state was entitled to proceed anew, following the procedure outlined in the newly amended version of 46-23-1012. The Supreme Court's decisions based on the 1999 version of 46-23-1012 were applicable retroactively to persons whose probation or parole was revoked between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001. Thus, if a person was arrested during that period pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge and was not afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did not have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing, so the state could refile the petition to revoke the person's probation pursuant to the 2001 version of 46-23-1012, as long as the probationer was still under the custody or supervision of the Department of Corrections on May 1, 2001. If the person was afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing. St. v. Goebel, 2001 MT 155, 306 M 83, 31 P3d 340 (2001), followed in St. v. Finley, 2003 MT 239, 317 M 268, 77 P3d 193 (2003), and in St. v. Van Haele, 2005 MT 153, 327 M 400, 114 P3d 225 (2005).

Failure of District Court to Properly Consider Prior Supreme Court Decision Regarding Suppression of Evidence as Law of Case — Grant of Request for Further Evidentiary Hearing Reversible Error: In St. v. Gilder, 1999 MT 207, 295 M 483, 985 P2d 147 (1999) (Gilder I), the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred when it denied Gilder's motion to suppress evidence obtained during the stop of Gilder's vehicle because the investigating officer did not have a particularized suspicion to justify the stop; however, the Supreme Court did not remand for further proceedings. Following the issuance of remittitur in Gilder I, the state requested an evidentiary hearing to present additional evidence to meet its burden of establishing particularized suspicion, arguing that a hearing was appropriate because Gilder I had referenced the District Court's failure to conduct an evidentiary hearing prior to its original denial of the motion to suppress. The request for an evidentiary hearing was granted over Gilder's objection, and the arresting officer was allowed to testify and supplement the evidence offered by the state in Gilder I. The District Court then issued an order again denying Gilder's motion to suppress, and Gilder appealed. The state's interpretation of Gilder I as an invitation for further proceedings on the suppression issue was incorrect. Although the District Court could have properly revisited factual determinations in regard to other issues, the suppression issue in Gilder I was foreclosed from further consideration. Gilder I constituted the law of the case regarding the lack of particularized suspicion for the investigative stop and the suppression of evidence obtained from the stop, and the District Court abused its discretion by not properly treating Gilder I as the law of the case and by conducting further evidentiary hearings on a matter that was conclusively decided by the Supreme Court in the previous proceedings. St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), following Zavarelli v. Might, 239 M 120, 779 P2d 489 (1989).

Postconviction Reconsideration Untimely: Petitioner, sentenced to two terms of 100 years plus 3 years for use of a weapon and to two 10-year terms plus 2 years for use of a weapon, filed a motion requesting that the Montana Supreme Court reconsider its order denying his second amended petition for postconviction relief. In denying the motion, the Supreme Court ruled that the petitioner's reconsideration motion was untimely because it was filed more than 10 days after the court entered its denial order. Hans v. St., 1998 MT 255, 291 M 227, 967 P2d 396, 55 St. Rep. 1052 (1998).

Court Invested With Full Jurisdiction on Remand Except for Issues Controlled by Law of Case: In a dispute concerning the common boundary line between parcels of real property, defendant argued that the District Court erred in allowing a new affirmative defense of mutual mistake when the court received the case again upon remand. Under the doctrine of the law of the case, the District Court was properly reinvested with full jurisdiction of the cause and the issues raised in the cause are generally open for the court's decision, except for the legal conclusions controlled by the law of the case established in the reversal. The general principle of the doctrine of the law of the case applies only to determinations of questions of law identical to those on the former appeal and not to questions of fact. Zavarelli v. Might, 239 M 120, 779 P2d 489, 46 St. Rep. 1558 (1989), followed in Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), Trustees, Carbon County School District No. 28 v. Spivey, 262 M 513, 866 P2d 208, 50 St. Rep. 1664 (1993), in which the County Superintendent had latitude beyond the parameters of the first county decision to terminate a teacher, Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632, 51 St. Rep. 514 (1994), AgAmerica, FCB v. Robson, 272 M 413, 901 P2d 100, 52 St. Rep. 800 (1995), and St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001).

Appeal of Prior Issue — Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal raising the same issue of attorney fees that was addressed in a prior determination of the court that constituted a final adjudication. Belgrade St. Bank v. Swainson, 176 M 444, 578 P2d 1166 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Gies, 218 M 433, 709 P2d 635, 42 St. Rep. 1715 (1985).

Who May Participate in Rehearing Decisions: Only those Justices participating in the original decision and substituting District Judges may decide whether or not a case may be reheard. Record on Appeal — Lack of Transcript: Arguments on the sufficiency of the evidence in action on charges of unfair labor practices could not be considered without a transcript of the testimony at the original administrative hearing. The cause was remanded to the trial court for election by the employee either to order and pay for the transcript so the trial court could receive it and enter further judgment or to accept affirmation of the trial court's decision. NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

In many cases previously the clerk of the supreme court has not been notified of dismissals by the district courts thereby enabling him to clear the supreme court docket.

Compiler's Comments

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, inserted last sentence providing that a copy of the order of dismissal be sent to the Clerk of the Supreme Court.

Case Notes

Perfected Appeal — No District Court Jurisdiction Unless Properly Dismissed: The father filed a notice of appeal after the District Court denied his motion for a change of custody. He then filed a document entitled "Withdrawal of Appeal" with the District Court. Later the father filed a petition for change of custody and a motion to consolidate his petition with a dependency and neglect action filed by the State. After a trial, the mother appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that when a notice of appeal has been filed, jurisdiction passes to the Supreme Court. All that is required to perfect an appeal is the timely filing of a notice of appeal. The District Court could have dismissed the appeal before it was docketed upon motion and notice. The record discloses no motion or notice. The District Court was therefore without jurisdiction to hear the case. In re M.L.Y. & M.Y., 201 M 467, 655 P2d 499, 39 St. Rep. 2238 (1982).

Case Notes

Death of Defendant in Criminal Case Abates Case Entirely — Prior Cases Clarified: Holland was convicted in District Court of criminal syndicalism by accountability and other offenses and appealed his conviction. Holland died after the case had been briefed to the Supreme Court but before it was decided, so the state moved to dismiss. Holland's counsel opposed the motion to dismiss, arguing that it was in the best interests of society and the judicial system to allow the appeal to be decided on its merits. The Supreme Court noted that its earlier opinions in the cases of St. v. Lawrence, 122 M 277, 201 P2d 756 (1949), St. v. Pichette, 125 M 327, 237 P2d 1076 (1951), St. v. Hale, 128 M 116, 270 P2d 993 (1954), St. v. Koble, 129 M 605, 285 P2d 837 (1955), St. v. Clark-Kotarski, 156 M 527, 486 P2d 876 (1971), and St. v. Cripps, 177 M 410, 582 P2d 312 (1978), all held that the death of a defendant abates an appeal. The Supreme Court pointed out that 37-61-401(2) requires that a civil case go forward notwithstanding the death of a party but that in criminal cases, no case or controversy remains when a defendant dies and that if a deceased defendant's sentence were affirmed on appeal, it would be impossible to execute the sentence. The Supreme Court also noted, citing State ex rel. Fletcher v. District Court, 260 M 410, 859 P2d 992 (1993), that it does not render advisory opinions and that the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure provide for substitution of a personal representative in the case of the death of a party in a civil action, but there is no such provision for criminal cases. The Supreme Court held that upon the death of the defendant, the prosecution of a criminal case, including fines, abates in its entirety. The Supreme Court's prior opinions were clarified to the extent that opinions in those cases were not consistent with its present opinion. St. v. Holland, 1998 MT 67, 288 M 164, 955 P2d 1360, 55 St. Rep. 282 (1998).

Appellate Review Upon Death of Respondent: Under the authority of this rule, the Supreme Court rendered an opinion upon appellate review even though the respondent had died since submission of the case. Absent a motion for substitution of a personal representative, the court assumed there was no representative and proceeded as if respondent were still living. Bieber v. Broadwater County, 232 M 487, 759 P2d 145, 45 St. Rep. 1218 (1988).

Rule 38. Cases involving constitutional questions where the state is not a party.

Advisory Committee Notes

This rule is patterned after Rule 44 of the Federal Draft.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In first sentence, after "duty of", substituted "a party" for "counsel", after "in any" inserted "action", after "to which" substituted "neither the state nor any agency" for "the state of Montana, or any agency thereof", after "employee, is" deleted "not", after "party" deleted "upon the filing of the record", and at end substituted "notice to the supreme court and to the Montana attorney general of the existence of the constitutional issue" for "immediate notice in writing to the court of the existence of said question"; at beginning of second sentence inserted "This notice shall be in writing" and at end inserted "and shall be given contemporaneously with the filing of the notice of appeal or with the filing of an original proceeding in the supreme court"; and deleted former last sentence that read: "The clerk shall thereupon certify such fact to the attorney general of the state of Montana." Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

Failure to Give Notice of Constitutional Challenge to Landowner's Liability Law — Consideration of Constitutional Challenge Precluded: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. Plaintiff contended that legislation that provided immunity to landowners was defective because the title did not mention that liability was also extended to governmental units, including municipalities. However, plaintiff failed to give notice to the Supreme Court or to the Attorney General, pursuant to this rule, that an action in which neither the state nor a state agency or employee was a party was being challenged for constitutionality. The municipality was not a state agency, so the rule applied, and absent plaintiff's compliance with the notice requirements, the Supreme Court declined to address the constitutional issue. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

Failure to Comply With Immediate Notice Requirements Precluding Consideration of Constitutional Issue on Appeal: Haider filed a wrongful discharge action against her former employer. During negotiations, Haider offered to submit the case to arbitration, but the employer refused to arbitrate. The matter went to a jury, which awarded Haider $44,995.26. After a subsequent evidentiary hearing, the District Court determined that Haider was the prevailing party and awarded her $15,000 in attorney fees pursuant to 39-2-915. The employer filed a notice of appeal seeking to challenge the constitutionality of 39-2-915 and, nearly 3 months later, filed its notice of challenge to the constitutionality of the statute pursuant to this rule. The employer failed to comply both with the immediate notice requirement of this rule that was in effect in 1997 when the action arose and with the contemporaneous notice requirement of the rule in effect since October 1, 1997. Because notice was not timely, the Supreme Court was precluded from reaching the constitutional challenge and dismissed the appeal with prejudice. Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000).

Delay of Twenty Days Not Constituting Immediate Notice: Appellant sought to test the constitutionality of 40-8-111 (now repealed), which allows the termination of parental rights based on nonpayment of support for a 1-year period, on the grounds that a liberty interest is taken away without the showing of a compelling state interest. However, he failed to file notice of a constitutional challenge until 20 days after filing of the record and offered no explanation for the delay. The Supreme Court declined to consider the constitutional question because a 20-day delay was not considered "immediate notice" as required by this rule. In re Adoption of C.J.H., W.L.H., & T.A.H., 246 M 52, 803 P2d 214, 47 St. Rep. 2258 (1990).

Challenge to Constitutionality of Statute — Failure to Provide Notice — Issue Not Before Supreme Court: In an action involving Workers' Compensation coverage but without any state parties, the appellant raised the constitutionality of 39-71-2905 for the first time in briefs to the Supreme Court. Appellant failed to comply with the notice provisions of this rule. The Supreme Court held that this rule precludes the challenge to the constitutionality of the statute from properly being before the court. Billings Deaconess Hosp. v. Angel, 219 M 490, 712 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 115 (1986), followed in Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000).

When Issue of Constitutionality Not Properly Before Court: The issue of constitutionality of 3-1-523 was not properly before the Supreme Court when it was not first raised in the District Court and when a notice of constitutional challenge was not properly filed as required by Rule 38, M.R.App.P. In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

Attorney General Not Required to Appear: Where petitioner, in his case on appeal, challenged the constitutionality of a Statute of Limitations and the Attorney General failed to appear to argue the constitutionality of the statute, the Supreme Court held that this rule has never been interpreted as meaning that the State of Montana has an absolute duty to appear whenever a constitutional challenge arises. The Rule only requires notice of the challenge to the Attorney General. In re W.C., 206 M 432, 671 P2d 621, 40 St. Rep. 1762 (1983).

Constitutional Questions — Early Presentation: A question of constitutionality will not be considered on appeal if it has not been raised initially. A constitutional issue is waived if not presented at the earliest possible opportunity. Dodd v. East Helena, 180 M 518, 591 P2d 241 (1979), following Johnson v. Doran, 167 M 501, 540 P2d 306 (1975), and followed in Billings Deaconess Hosp. v. Angel, 219 M 490, 712 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 115 (1986). Billings Deaconess was followed in Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000).

Spirit and Intent of Rule Met: While this rule was not strictly complied with, the spirit and intent were met by filing of a "notice of existence of constitutional question" in an earlier proceeding; therefore, the constitutional issue was properly before the Supreme Court. State ex rel. Morales v. City Comm'n, 174 M 237, 570 P2d 887 (1977).

Constitutionality Challenge on Appeal — Noncompliance With Rule: A challenge to the constitutionality of certain statutes was not properly before the Supreme Court because of noncompliance with Rule 38, M.R.App.P. Bradbrook v. Billings, 174 M 27, 568 P2d 527 (1977).

Notice to Attorney General — Time: Notice to Attorney General in compliance with this rule, given on the same day the case was certified to the Supreme Court, was sufficient to allow adequate preparation for the hearing, set 2 ½ months later, and satisfied the "immediate notice" requirement. U.S. Mfg. & Distrib. Corp. v. Great Falls, 169 M 298, 546 P2d 522 (1976).

Constitutional Questions Not Considered: Constitutional questions presented for review on appeal which were not raised in the trial court and were not certified to the Supreme Court with notice to the Attorney General will not be considered by the court. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 166 M 312, 533 P2d 1079 (1975).

Notice to Attorney General Required: If the procedures of Rule 38 have not been followed and there has been no notice to the Attorney General that a legislative act is being challenged on constitutional grounds, the issue is not properly before the court. Clontz v. Clontz, 166 M 206, 531 P2d 1003 (1975); Grant v. Grant, 166 M 229, 531 P2d 1007 (1975).

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

Montana Supreme Court Rules XIII and XVI have been substituted for the provisions of Rule 45 of the Federal Draft.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

The amendments bring the provisions up-to-date and differentiate between civil and criminal appeals.

Compiler's Comments

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (a) substituted present language (for text see 1987 MCA) for "Thirty days after the appellant's brief has been filed, the cause shall be placed on the calendar as ready for oral argument"; in (b), at beginning of first sentence, deleted "As often as found convenient", inserted "upon which oral argument is allowed", and made minor grammatical change; and in (c), at beginning of first sentence, substituted "In calendaring appeals of civil cases" for "Appeals" and inserted second sentence concerning calendar priorities among criminal cases.

Case Notes

Mootness — No Appeal Absent District Court Ruling on Declaratory Judgment: The high school sports association decided that Grabow was ineligible to play basketball because his eligibility pursuant to the semester rule had elapsed while Grabow was an exchange student in Germany. Grabow filed a complaint in District Court asking for a declaratory ruling that the association lacked rulemaking and adjudicatory authority and requested a hearing on whether a preliminary injunction should be issued precluding enforcement of the association rule until the case could be adjudicated on its merits. After deciding that it was unlikely that Grabow would ultimately prevail, the District Court denied the injunction. Grabow appealed. The Supreme Court granted the injunction pending final disposition of the appeal, and Grabow played basketball during his senior year. The Supreme Court found that the 1999-2000 season was the only one in which Grabow claimed that he had a right to participate and that because the season was completed, the initial grounds for application of the mootness doctrine to the preliminary injunction issue were met. The declaratory judgment issue was not one capable of repetition, but was one that would evade review, so the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of Grabow's complaint for declaratory judgment, which would then be subject to appeal following final judgment by the District Court. Grabow v. Mont. High School Assn., 2000 MT 159, 300 M 227, 3 P3d 650, 57 St. Rep. 654 (2000). See also Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150 (1999).

Rule 44. Certification of questions of law.

Advisory Committee Notes

The rule is entirely new and is based upon Rule I of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Montana dated January 31, 1967, which heretofore has covered certification of questions of law in Montana, and upon the Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Rule promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. For comments as to subdivisions (c), (d), (e), (g) and (h) see the Uniform Rule. (Uniform Certification of Questions of Law Act; 12 Uniform Laws Annotated, p. 52.)

Case Notes

Insufficient Facts in Certification Order to Render Precedential Opinion — Dismissal Without Prejudice: The Supreme Court accepted a certified question from the U.S. District Court regarding the constitutionality of 39-71-413. However, after receiving briefs, including amicus curiae briefs, and conducting an oral hearing, the court determined that it had improvidently accepted the certified question and that there were not sufficient relevant facts in the certification order to permit a decision on the important constitutional issues presented. The matter was dismissed without prejudice. Brady v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2003 MT 262, 317 M 425, 77 P3d 523 (2003).

Accidental Death Coverage Considered Life Insurance for Purposes of Conversion Rights: Golt worked as a civilian employee of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) until he was discharged from employment in 1994 for cause. Thirty days after termination, Golt died of carbon monoxide poisoning. As a benefit of employment, Golt was covered by an accident insurance policy issued by General American Life Insurance Company (General), which provided that if he died while covered by the policy, his estate was eligible to receive $200,000. The policy also provided that coverage would terminate on the first premium due date after Golt ceased to be an employee, which in this case was 6 days after Golt was terminated from employment. The General policy also allowed the group accident policy to be converted to an individual policy within 31 days of discharge upon written application and payment of the first premium. In addition to the General policy, Golt was also insured by Aetna Life Insurance Company (Aetna) under a group life and accident and health insurance policy, which provided a life insurance benefit of $32,000 if Golt died from any cause while insured, plus an accidental death benefit of $32,000 in the event of Golt's accidental death. The Aetna policy provided that coverage ceased upon termination of employment, but allowed the group life insurance policy to be converted to individual life insurance within 31 days of discharge and provided that if Golt died during that period, benefits would be payable. AAFES transmitted the Aetna claim, which paid $32,000 under the life insurance provisions but denied the claim for accidental death benefits on grounds that the coverage ended when employment was terminated. AAFES did not transmit the General claim. A subsequent request for benefits from General was denied because the claim was not submitted within 20 days after the covered loss occurred. Golt's wife commenced an action in 1996 in federal court, seeking accidental death benefits from both Aetna and General. The federal District Court concluded that there was no coverage under either policy and entered final judgment in favor of the insurers. In 1999, the Supreme Court agreed to address three questions certified by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to this rule regarding the Montana statutory definitions of life insurance for purposes of determining an insured's conversions rights. The Supreme Court held that under 33-1-205, an insurance coverage may come within the definition of two kinds of insurance. Therefore, although accidental death coverage is disability insurance, for purposes of conversion rights, it is also life insurance as defined in 33-1-208. As life insurance, accidental death coverage is subject to a 31-day conversion right upon termination of coverage pursuant to 33-20-1209 and, in the event of death within the 31-day conversion period, is subject to automatic conversion under 33-20-1211. With regard to Golt's policies, the accidental death policy remained in effect, even when Golt died during the 31-day grace period without exercising the right to convert the policy by making application and paying the first premium. Golt v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 155, 300 M 142, 2 P3d 841, 57 St. Rep. 613 (2000).

Rule 51. Statutes and rules amended.

Advisory Committee Notes

Because of the addition of substantive Rule 44 in the amendments, Rule 41 has been renumbered to Rule 51, Rule 42 to Rule 52, and Rule 43 to Rule 53 for editorial convenience and in order to reserve numbers 45 through 50 for future substantive rules.

Rule 52. Applicability in general.

Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This Rule is patterned after Rule 81 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. It excepts inconsistent special statutory proceedings and appeals to and reviews by the district courts to the extent that they are governed by inconsistent statutes and it is impracticable to incorporate procedures provided by these rules. But statutes such as sections 93-9302, 93-9303, 93-9718, 93-9719, and 93-9922[, R.C.M. 1947; see Table of Corresponding Code Sections, R.C.M. to MCA], which contain catch-all references to the applicability of statutes which have been superseded, are brought into line with these rules in so far as practicable.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

See advisory commission note on Rule 51.

Compiler's Comments

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (c) deleted references to "civil" before "proceeding" and "action".

Table A: The Code Commissioner has not reprinted Table A in the MCA because it was never intended to be a complete listing, has not been updated since 1963, contains a high percentage of repealed sections, and is generally obsolete and not very useful. Advisory Committee Notes

NOTE TO ORIGINAL RULE

This rule incorporates provisions similar to those contained in Rules 85 and 86 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Subdivision (c) refers to statutes and rules only in so far as they relate to civil proceedings, to make it clear that criminal proceedings are in no way affected by these rules.

NOTE TO JUNE 16, 1986, AMENDMENT

Compiler's Comments

1986 Amendment: The Supreme Court Order of June 16, 1986, in (a) deleted references to "civil" before "procedure"; and in (c) substituted "Tables A, B, C, and D" for "Tables A, B, and C, insofar as they relate to civil proceedings".

Supreme Court Rules Amended: The order of the Montana Supreme Court of December 17, 1965, effective January 1, 1966, which ordered that the Rules of the Supreme Court of Montana (R.S.C.M.) would be embodied in the M.R.App.P. also adopted Rule I, R.S.C.M., which rule contained the language ordering the R.S.C.M. superseded by the M.R.App.P. and also renumbered Rule XXV, concerning licensing of attorneys, as Rule VI, and then amended the renumbered Rule VI.

Rule I of the R.S.C.M. was again amended by the order of the Montana Supreme Court of January 31, 1967, effective March 1, 1967. The text of Rule I, entitled "Civil Matters", now provides as follows:

"All rules with respect to the operation of this Court, procedure and practice therein, are contained in the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure, except that whenever in an action pending in a United States court it shall appear that there is a controlling question of Montana law as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion, a party to such action may institute suit in the Montana Supreme Court for a declaratory judgment or decree, and, if the judge of the United States court wherein the action is pending shall certify that the question upon which adjudication is sought is controlling in the federal litigation and the adjudication by the Montana Supreme Court will materially advance ultimate termination of the federal litigation, a declaratory judgment or decree may be rendered. Rendition of a declaratory judgment or decree is discretionary with the Montana Supreme Court, and it may refuse to render such a judgment or decree if it appears that there is another ground for determination of the case pending in the United States court, or if the question for adjudication is not clearly defined, or if the question is not adequately briefed or argued.

This amended Rule shall be in full force and effect from and after the first day of March, 1967."

Rule 54. Mandatory appellate alternative dispute resolution procedures.

Commission Notes

COMMITTEE ON APPELLATE ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION — COMMENTS TO RULE 54, MONTANA RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE

Rule 54

Committee Comment to Rule 54(a): The categories were selected based on substantial discussion of the types of appeals amenable to the alternative dispute resolution/mediation process. The selection of these categories was also based on the number of these types of cases appealed to the Montana Supreme Court.

The Workers' Compensation and Domestic Relations categories are specifically defined in the Rule. The Money Judgments category includes appeals in all civil cases in which money damages or monetary recovery are sought.

Rule 54(b)

Committee Comment to Rule 54(b): A time limitation of seventy-five days was provided to complete the process and to avoid unreasonable delay in using the appellate alternative dispute resolution process. A shorter (sixty-day) period was originally contemplated, but would have resulted in timelines for each portion of the process which were simply too short to be workable.

Rule 54(c)

Committee Comment to Rule 54(c): The process is supplemental to the existing appeal process and will not delay the ordinary appeal process absent agreement of the parties. The timelines established by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure are applicable and must be met unless the parties stipulate otherwise.

Rule 54(d)

Committee Comment to Rule 54(d): The selection/appointment procedures for mediators strongly encourage voluntary selection of a mediator by the parties and their counsel. Absent voluntary selection, a listing of Montana attorneys who meet minimal requirements to participate in the program as mediators, and who have identified themselves as willing to mediate in one or more of the listed categories, will be maintained and the next mediator on the list automatically will be appointed to mediate the appeal.

The pilot mediation program is a "users pay" system. In the ordinary appeal involving one appellant and one respondent, each will be responsible for 50% of the mediator's fee and incidental expenses. In appeals involving multiple appellants and/or respondents, the Committee's intent is that each "side" will pay 50%, with the respective appellants/respondents apportioning the 50% on a pro rata basis.

Considerable discussion centered on setting or strongly encouraging a maximum hourly or per mediation charge; ultimately, the potential problems in doing so outweighed other concerns. In addition, the Committee was certain that the ethics and professionalism of Montana lawyers would keep fees well within reasonable bounds and, in this regard, the Committee specifically intends that the fee-related standards set forth in the Rules of Professional Conduct apply to mediation services provided under Rule 54. With regard to in forma pauperis appeals, Rule 18, M.R.App.P., appears sufficient to clarify that a party proceeding in forma pauperis will not be responsible for paying its share of the mediator's fee and incidental expenses.

Rule 54(e)

Committee Comment to Rule 54(e): The mediation process is to encourage both the parties and their counsel to examine and evaluate prospects for success and for settlement in the appellate process in a meaningful manner. The mediator's role is to assist with this examination or evaluation via an expeditious mediation process. The Statements of Position to be submitted by the parties are in a format encouraging a brief written narrative; the Rule also contemplates a separate and confidential submission to the mediator of other information and factors impacting on settlement.

Rule 54(f)

Committee Comment to Rule 54(f): The proceedings are an opportunity for the parties and their counsel to reach a settlement or resolution of their disputes. The proceedings and discussions constitute offers to compromise and will be treated as such. If settlement is not reached, the discussions are not admissible for any purpose, or to be used in any way, during the appeal.

Rule 54(g)

Committee Comment to Rule 54(g): This subsection is intended to provide a means for proceeding to full and final settlement and dismissal where a mediation is successful and, where resolution is not reached, for re-entering the case into the usual appeal stream if the parties have stipulated to hold other appellate timelines in abeyance. The forms, notices and mediator's report which the rule requires to be filed are to be used for statistical and process-oriented purposes only, and intentionally do not contain substantive information.

1997 Amendment: In (c), in first sentence after "filed with the", deleted reference to Clerk of the Supreme Court and inserted second sentence concerning filing stipulation with Clerk of the Supreme Court; in (d), near end, inserted clause requiring mailing of copy of notice of selection or order of appointment; and in (d)(5) inserted second and third sentences concerning pro bono appointments. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

Mediation Failure Because of Parties Being Too Far Apart Not Grounds for Dismissal: Marks argued that Marcher's appeal should be dismissed on the grounds that Marcher had not engaged in meaningful arbitration as required by rule. The Supreme Court disagreed, pointing out that Marcher was represented at the mediation hearing by his attorney and that the attorney's affidavit indicated that Marks' attorney offered only a take-it-or-leave-it offer and therefore arbitration failed because the two parties were too far apart to negotiate. Marcher v. Bonzell, 2004 MT 294, 323 M 364, 104 P3d 436 (2004).

Mandatory Dispute Resolution on Appeal — No Remand: While a jurisdictional question was pending in a civil action seeking monetary damages in Nielsen v. Brocksmith Land & Livestock, Inc., 2004 MT 101, 321 M 37, 88 P3d 1269 (2004) (Nielsen I), the parties entered mandatory alternative dispute resolution pursuant to this rule. Nielsen contended that a settlement agreement was reached and filed a complaint in District Court to enforce the alleged agreement. The Brocksmiths disagreed that a settlement agreement was reached and moved to dismiss on grounds that the District Court did not have jurisdiction because Nielsen I was still pending on appeal. Nielsen moved the Supreme Court to remand the pending appeal to the District Court for adjudication of the settlement agreement, but that motion was denied. The District Court then dismissed the present action because Nielsen I was still pending, and Nielsen appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Jurisdiction passes from District Court to the Supreme Court when a notice of appeal is filed. Although Nielsen contended that the matter was resolved in mediation and that a settlement was reached, the Supreme Court cannot consider a matter resolved until a stipulation for dismissal is filed in either the Supreme Court or the trial court. The only stipulation filed here was that the parties were unable to complete and close the tentative agreement, and this rule does not provide for remand to the District Court when there is a disagreement whether a settlement was reached because returning the case to trial court before resolution would delay finality. Nielsen v. Brocksmith, 2004 MT 259, 323 M 98, 99 P3d 181 (2004).

Appellate Mediation Rule Mandatory and Self-Executing in Actions for Money Damages: Plaintiff sued for money damages, and the District Court issued an order on motion for a change of venue. Plaintiff's notice of appeal from that order stated that the appeal was subject to mediation required under this rule. Nevertheless, 5 days later, plaintiff filed an unopposed motion to dispense with mediation. The Supreme Court dismissed the motion to dispense with mediation and ordered mediation. It is the nature of the underlying action, not the type of order or judgment on appeal, that determines whether the appeal is subject to mediation under this rule, and because the underlying action sought money damages, which is clearly within the rule, mediation was mandatory. This rule is self-executing, and the Supreme Court will not entertain motion practices on the rule. Liang v. Lai, 2003 MT 281, 317 M 524, 78 P3d 1212 (2003), following Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000).

Allowance of Additional Time After Service by Mail Applicable Only to Response-Type Pleadings — Inapplicable When Filing Deadline Specified: The Supreme Court entered an opinion in this case on December 31, 2002. On January 16, 2003, remittitur was entered, and the next day, defendants filed a petition for rehearing. After being advised that the petition was beyond the 10 days allowed under this rule, defendants claimed that Rule 21(3), M.R.App.P., provided an additional 3 days for timely filing. The Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the application of Rule 21(e), M.R.App.P., holding that the rule applies only to response-type pleadings when parties are required or permitted to file a document or brief after having been served with a document or brief. When a filing deadline is specified by the Supreme Court or when a document is required to be filed with the court within a specified time, the rule does not apply and the party does not get the benefit of an extra 3 days for mailing. This rule allows petitions for rehearing to be filed within 10 days after a Supreme Court decision is rendered. Because this time period is specified by court rule, and because the petition for rehearing was not a response-type pleading, defendants' petition was not timely. However, defendants did not have the benefit of this interpretation when their petition was filed, so in the interest of fairness, the court applied this holding prospectively only and decided to entertain defendants' petition in this instance. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003).

Failure to Address Applicability of Alternative Dispute Resolution Process in Appeal of Child Support Case Not Grounds for Automatic Dismissal — Complicity of Clerk of District Court in Appellant's Failure to Follow Statutory Requirements: A father appealed a District Court determination of past-due child support amounts, but failed to address the applicability of alternative dispute resolution in the appeal notice, as provided in Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P., and this rule. The Clerk of the District Court subsequently failed to notify the father of the necessity to file an amended notice of appeal within 7 days. The mother contended that the appeal should be dismissed, citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), for the proposition that failure to comply with applicable appellate rules will result in dismissal. The Supreme Court held that a court may dismiss an appeal for failure to comply with Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P., and this rule, but overruled Dobrocke to the extent that failure to comply will result in automatic dismissal. The court found the Dobrocke rule to be too severe, particularly when the Clerk of Court is complicit in the appellant's failure to abide by the statutory requirements, because it is unfair for all the consequences to fall on the appellant when the Clerk of Court also fails to adhere to the statutes. Rather, the Supreme Court will look at all circumstances surrounding the appeal before deciding whether to dismiss for failure to comply with Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P., and this rule. In this case, dismissal was not proper because the Clerk of Court never issued the father the proper notice to file an amended appeal. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002).

Submission of Matter to Mediation Not Assisting in Resolution of Appeal — Motion to Dismiss for Failure to Mediate Denied: The third-party plaintiff respondents to a counterclaim sought to dismiss an appeal on grounds that the third-party defendant failed to comply with the mediation requirements of this rule. In the notice of appeal, the third-party defendant certified that the appeal was not subject to the mediation process and opposed the motion to dismiss. The third-party plaintiffs contended otherwise, stating that because the cause of action appealed from was one in which monetary damages were sought, the appeal was subject to mediation. The third-party defendant noted that the appeal centered on the three primary issues of whether the District Court erred when it: (1) created an easement by grant in favor of the original plaintiff and across property owned by the third-party plaintiffs; (2) failed to recognize the real property interest of the plaintiff in maintaining a utility easement; and (3) issued an injunctive order and found both the plaintiff and third-party defendant in violation of the order. The third-party defendant further maintained that the money award portion of the judgment was incidental to and entirely dependent on the court's rulings related to the easement interests and injunctive relief and that this rule does not require parties to mediate matters that are totally incidental to the outcome of the substantive issues on appeal. The Supreme Court agreed and relied on McDonald v. Cosman, 1999 MT 294, 297 M 108, 995 P2d 922 (1999), in holding that, given the subjects of the appeal and the fact that the money judgment aspect was merely incidental, submission of the matter to mediation would not hasten or assist resolution of the appeal. The parties were advised that they did not have to comply with the mediation requirements of this rule, and the motion to dismiss for failure to mediate was denied. Hanley v. Lanier, 2001 MT 91, 305 M 175, 24 P3d 206 (2001).

Rule Inapplicable to Appeal Seeking Performance of Contract or Lease Term: McDonald received a favorable judgment for specific performance of an option to purchase land pursuant to a lease agreement, which also provided for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in the event of a dispute. Cosman moved for clarification regarding the applicability of this rule to the appeal. The mediation requirements of this rule apply inter alia to appeals in actions seeking monetary damages or recovery. The action underlying the appeal sought attorney fees as a matter incidental to the primary thrust of the action, but neither the award of the fees nor the amount of fees awarded was directly at issue in the appeal. An appeal seeking specific performance of a contract or lease term does not fall within any of the categories of appeals set forth in this rule, so this rule does not apply in those cases. The fact that the lease also provided for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action not otherwise subject to this rule did not render the appeal subject to the rule requirements. To conclude otherwise would require parties to mediate a matter totally incidental to the outcome of the substantive issue on appeal without providing a concomitant opportunity to resolve the substantive issue, which would delay ultimate resolution of the appeal. McDonald v. Cosman, 1999 MT 294, 297 M 108, 995 P2d 922, 56 St. Rep. 1179 (1999).

Failure to Attend Mediation in Person Not Violative of Rule if Party Participates Through Authorized Representative: Although his counsel appeared at a mediation meeting on his behalf, Moon did not personally attend the mediation conference. Plaintiff sought to have Moon's appeal dismissed and Moon sanctioned for failure to comply with the mandatory mediation requirements of this rule. Although in-person meetings are the preferred medium of communication for mediation conferences, subsection (e)(3) of this rule addresses only the means by which the conference may be conducted, not who is required to attend. That requirement is addressed in subsection (e)(8) of this rule, which provides that each party or a representative of each party is required to participate in the conference. Moon was represented by an attorney with full authority to engage in settlement negotiations and thus was within the bounds permitted by this rule, notwithstanding his failure to appear in person. Because there was no rule violation, the Supreme Court did not address whether a party may be sanctioned under this rule for failure to participate in mandatory alternative dispute resolution. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

Object of Mandatory Arbitration Is to Hold Down Parties' Expenses and Ease Caseload of Supreme Court: The parties failed to agree to a mediator within 15 days of the filing of notice of appeal, and subsequently, the court appointed a mediator for them. Thereafter, the parties agreed to an alternative mediator and moved the Supreme Court for an order allowing them to select their own mediator. The Supreme Court denied the motion and stated that the reason for the rule was to allow parties to resolve their differences without incurring the high cost of appeals and to ease the Supreme Court's caseload. The Supreme Court held that the rule was self-executing and that the result would be self-defeating if the Supreme Court heard appeals concerning the rule except under unusual or extraordinary circumstances. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 282 M 38, 939 P2d 981, 54 St. Rep. 89 (1997), followed in In re Marriage of Nagra, 283 M 339, 943 P2d 82, 54 St. Rep. 280 (1997).

1997 Amendment: In second sentence, after "construed", inserted "and administered" and inserted third sentence concerning consulting other appropriate rules and statutes. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

Client Bound by Attorney's Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial — Purpose of Statute: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that he, the defendant, was not bound by his attorney's waiver. Defendant asserted that 37-61-401 makes the waiver binding only if it was entered with the defendant's knowledge or upon the record in open court. Citing Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913), the Supreme Court ruled that 37-61-401 has been applied only as to agreements between attorneys and that the purpose of that section is to relieve the presiding judge of the burden of determining disputes between attorneys concerning their unexecuted agreements. The Supreme Court stated that it would not apply 37-61-401 literally as to agreements between an attorney and the court; to do so would lead to absurd consequences and greatly retard the business of the courts. The Supreme Court held that the defendant was thus bound by his counsel's waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Clock to Start With Date of De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because the clock should have started with the date of his arrest, not the date of appeal to District Court. Citing St. v. Sanders, 163 M 209, 516 P2d 372 (1973), the Supreme Court noted that it had adopted Standard 12-2.2(c) of the American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice. The standard provides that in cases of appeal or an order for a new trial, the time for trial should begin running with the order granting the new trial or, in this case, the date of appeal to District Court. The Supreme Court determined not to abandon that standard and therefore held that defendant's trial was within the 6-month limitation of 46-13-401. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Not Denied by Application of Six-Month Speedy Trial Limitation to De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because it is prejudicial to apply the speedy trial standards of 46-13-401 to an appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The Supreme Court held that the argument was without merit because the 6-month limit was met in this case, both in the time for trial in Justice's Court and in the time for trial de novo in District Court. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Uncertain Testimony of Defense Counsel Insufficient to Disprove Oral Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial: At the time scheduled for defendant's trial in Justice's Court on a DUI charge, the Justice of the Peace called defense counsel into his chambers and informed him that a different date for trial was necessary because of another trial then in progress. The Justice of the Peace then issued a written order reciting the fact that an oral motion for a continuance was made by defense counsel, along with an oral waiver of defendant's right to a speedy trial. Trial was then set for a date beyond the 6-month limitation provided for in 46-13-401. In a de novo appeal to District Court, defendant raised the issue of his right to a speedy trial, and defense counsel testified he could not remember whether he made an oral motion for continuance and a waiver. The Supreme Court found that the Justice's Court's order was presumed correct under 26-1-602(17) and that the testimony of defense counsel did not demonstrate that the order was in error in reciting the waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Rule 2. Commencement of action.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Renumbered former Rule 3 as Rule 2; in (a) deleted former third sentence that read: "The party filing or the party's attorney shall sign the complaint" and inserted third through sixth sentences concerning who must file or sign complaint and requirements for complaint; inserted (b) concerning filing fees; and moved substance of remainder of section concerning place of trial or venue to Rule 3. (Former Rule 2 was deleted by the same order.)

Rule 3. Place of trial or venue.

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

PLACE OF TRIAL

Agreement to Send Deposit to New Address — Special Contract: The plaintiffs brought an action in the county where they resided to recover their rental deposit from the defendant. The defendant moved for a change of venue to the county where he resided and the property was located. The Supreme Court held that the provision in the lease requiring the defendant to forward the deposit to the new address of the plaintiffs constituted a special contract and that proper venue was the county in which the money was to be paid. Olson v. Long, 245 M 492, 801 P2d 1340, 47 St. Rep. 2216 (1990).

Certiorari to Review Jurisdiction: Since the District Court on appeal from a Justice's Court would have no jurisdiction of a cause over which the latter court had none, certiorari is available to annul a default judgment rendered by a Justice in a cause over which he had no jurisdiction because commenced in the wrong county. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Contractual Obligations: An action to recover money due may not be maintained in a Justice's Court of a county other than that in which the contract was made or the obligation incurred and in which the defendant resides, unless there is a special agreement as to the place of performance or payment. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Jurisdiction Not Presumed: A Justice's Court is one of limited jurisdiction, and there are no presumptions in favor of its jurisdiction; all facts necessary to confer it must appear affirmatively from the docket. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Lack of Jurisdiction — Change of Venue Improper: If an action is commenced in a Justice's Court of a county other than the one fixed by 25-31-201 through 25-31-204 (all repealed), the court acquires no jurisdiction, and in such a case, 25-31-301 (now repealed), enumerating the cases in which a change of place of trial may be had, has no application. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Foreign Corporation as Nonresident: In the absence of statute giving foreign corporations a domestic residence, they remain nonresidents of the state and may, under section 93-6601(5), R.C.M. 1947 (prior to the 1973 amendment providing for suits in any county), be sued in a Justice's Court in any township of the state. Pue v. N. Pac. Ry., 78 M 40, 252 P 313 (1926).

Jurisdiction by Service Upon Resident Agent: Plaintiff performed work for defendant railway company in Lewis and Clark County, where defendant's principal place of business was located and where the agent designated for service of process resided; the defendant also did business and had an agent in Silver Bow County. A Justice's Court in the latter county had jurisdiction of a suit brought there, summons being served on the agent there. Pue v. N. Pac. Ry., 78 M 40, 252 P 313 (1926).

IMPROPER PLACE OF TRIAL

Docket Entries — Jurisdiction to Be Shown: The docket of a Justice of the Peace must show affirmatively all the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction. Such Justice cannot enter a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff unless the docket shows that he was present at the time specified or within 1 hour thereafter. State ex rel. Kenyon v. Laurendeau, 21 M 216, 53 P 536 (1898). See also Driscoll v. Creighton, 24 M 140, 60 P 989 (1900).

CHANGE OF VENUE

Refusal to Pay Costs: Where defendant on being granted a change of venue refused to pay the accrued costs, as provided by 25-31-306 (now repealed), it was the duty of the original Justice of the Peace to proceed with the trial. Taney v. Vollenweider, 28 M 147, 72 P 415 (1903).

Rule 4. Persons — jurisdiction — process — service.

Compiler's Comments

2002 Amendment: Adopted civil summons form as an appendix to C. Amendment effective February 26, 2002.

1997 Amendment: In A(3), D(1)(b)(i), two places in D(2)(b)(iv), and D(2)(b)(iv)(C) substituted "limited liability company" for "unincorporated association"; in B(1), after "who", inserted "reside or" and at end substituted "State of Montana" for "county or city, respectively, or who can be served as provided in these rules"; in B(2), near end of first sentence after "attorney or", deleted "through" and inserted second sentence concerning separate service; in C(2)(b), after "day of service", inserted "or such other period as may be specified by law"; in D(2)(b)(v), after "city", deleted "village"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

JURISDICTION OF PERSONS

Waiver Allowed by Appearance and Pleading: Under 25-31-403 (now repealed), defendant in a Justice's Court may waive issuance of summons by appearance and pleading. State ex rel. St. George v. Justice Court, 84 M 173, 274 P 495 (1929).

Answer and Motion as Waiver of Summons: Where defendant in an action on an account before a Justice of the Peace filed an answer to the merits coupling it with a counterclaim, making an offer at the same time to allow judgment to be taken against him for a stated amount with costs, and thereafter on appeal to the District Court asked leave to amend his answer, he waived irregularity of service of summons by his general appearance and was precluded from challenging the court's jurisdiction over his person or the subject matter of the action. Stoffels v. Cherry, 67 M 443, 215 P 1098 (1923).

Motion to Dismiss as Waiver of Summons: By joining with his codefendant in a motion to dismiss an action against them in a Justice's Court, a party waives service of summons and appears for all purposes. State ex rel. Beadle v. Smith, 42 M 492, 113 P 294 (1911).

PROCESS

Simulation of Legal Process Condemned: The practice of a collection agency of addressing to debtors, on regular legal paper used in court proceedings bearing the names of the parties as plaintiff and defendant, what was designated "final notice" containing the legend "original to the defendant, and duplicate to the clerk of the court", before any action was commenced, thus simulating legal process, is condemned. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Rule 5. Service and filing of pleadings and other papers, excluding summons.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A, in first sentence after "20 days", inserted "unless otherwise provided by law" and at end, inserted "M.J.R.Civ.P." and inserted second through fourth sentences concerning filing and service of pleadings; in B(2) substituted "if not represented by an attorney" for "if so ordered, by mailing it to the attorney or party at the last-known address or, if no address is known, by delivering it to the judge"; in B(2)(a), after "copy", inserted "to an attorney"; in B(2)(a)(i), after "attorney", deleted "or the party if so ordered"; in B(2)(a)(iii), before "office", inserted "attorney's"; substituted B(2)(a)(iv) concerning mailing to attorney for former text that read: "if the office is closed or the person to be served has no office, by leaving it at the defendant's place of residence with a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there"; inserted B(2)(b) concerning meaning of delivery of copy to a party; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 6. Time.

Case Notes

Time of Filing Appeal Running From Date of Rendition of Judgment: Under 25-33-102, the time for filing an appeal does not run from the date of service of a notice of the judgment. It runs from the date of rendition of the judgment. This rule does not extend the time allowed by statute when that time begins to run upon rendition of judgment instead of upon service of a notice or other paper. NW. Collectors, Inc. v. Vanorio, 1998 MT 80, 288 M 225, 956 P2d 1375, 55 St. Rep. 342 (1998). See also Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576 (1990).

Notice of Appeal Timely Filed: Defendant was convicted by a City Court jury of driving under the influence of alcohol and resisting arrest. Defendant's notice of appeal was filed 14 days after conviction and sentencing. The appeal was dismissed on the basis that the appeal was not timely filed. The District Court erred in dismissing the appeal because it failed to exclude intermediate weekend days and legal holidays as required by rule. St. v. Price, 271 M 409, 897 P2d 1084, 52 St. Rep. 527 (1995).

Rule 7. Pleadings allowed.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In introductory clause, at end of first sentence, inserted reference to reply to a counterclaim and at end of second sentence deleted reference to a counterclaim; in A, at end, inserted reference to type and amount of relief requested; in B, near beginning of first sentence, substituted "must contain a denial" for "may contain a general denial", before "a defense" substituted "constituting" for "containing", and after "defense" deleted "or counterclaim upon which an action might be brought by the defendant against the plaintiff in a justice or city court" and inserted second sentence concerning matter not denied and third sentence concerning entry of default; in C, at end of first sentence, deleted "arising out of an action or occurrence", inserted second sentence concerning required counterclaims, at end of third sentence substituted "the type or amount of relief requested" for "must be stated or the defendant waives the right to maintain an action for it against the plaintiff at a later time", deleted former third sentence that read: "However, the claim need not be stated if it is the subject of another pending action", and inserted fourth sentence concerning dismissal without prejudice of counterclaim that exceeds the jurisdiction of the court; inserted C(2) concerning filing of dismissed counterclaim in District Court; inserted D concerning reply to counterclaim; inserted E concerning cross claims; in F(3), after "answer or", inserted "reply to" and at end substituted "opposing party" for "plaintiff"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

COMPLAINT

Contractual Actions — Complaint to Be Liberally Construed: Under the rule that complaints filed in Justices' Courts must be construed with great liberality and upheld if a person of common understanding is able to know therefrom what is intended, a complaint stating that plaintiff wrote and delivered to defendants a fire insurance policy the premium on which was $42, which defendants agreed to pay, was sufficient as against the contention that it failed to set out the terms of the contract. Coover v. Davis, 112 M 605, 121 P2d 985 (1941).

Cause of Action for Conversion Not Stated: A "supplemental" complaint, as distinguished from an amended one, has no place in Justice's Court proceedings, there being no provision of law therefor. In conversion, an allegation that the plaintiff is the owner or entitled to the possession of the property in question and that the defendant has converted it to his own use must be shown. In tort, for damages, a duty on the part of the defendant must be shown, a violation of which resulted in an injury to plaintiff. When such facts are not stated and cannot be inferred from the facts stated, the complaint is insufficient. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Complaint for Conversion Insufficient: The language in 25-31-401 (now repealed) is almost exactly the same as used in section 93-3202(2), R.C.M. 1947 (repealed in 1961), dealing with complaint in District Courts, requiring that the complaint contain "a statement of facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language"; a complaint framed in the form of an account but including items alleged to have been converted or misappropriated, but containing no allegations as to ownership, possession, or the circumstances of the conversion, was insufficient no matter how liberal a rule of construction was applied. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Nature of Demand to Be Shown: The pleadings in Justices' Courts are not required to be in any particular form; a complaint filed in such a Court must be construed with great liberality, the plaintiff being required only to state facts sufficient to show the nature of his demand so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Rhule v. Thrasher, 88 M 468, 295 P 266 (1930).

Liberal Construction of Pleadings on Appeal: On appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court, the sufficiency of the complaint must be tested by the rules applicable to the former and construed with great liberality, plaintiff being required only to state facts sufficient to show the nature of his demand in such a way as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Woody v. Sec. St. Bank, 67 M 109, 214 P 1096 (1923).

Account Action — Complaint Sufficient: A complaint in an action brought in a Justice's Court to recover the balance of an account for goods, wares, and merchandise, reading as follows: "E. to M. & W., Dr. To balance for merchandise (describing it), $255.12", was sufficient under 25-31-501 and 25-31-504 (both repealed). Moran v. Ebey, 39 M 517, 104 P 522 (1909).

Complaint Required for Further Action: Since an action can be instituted only by the filing of a formal complaint or its equivalent, by the filing of a copy of the account, bill, bond, or instrument upon which the action is brought, with a statement of the amount due thereon, a Justice cannot issue an attachment or proceed to judgment without this prerequisite. Shandy v. McDonald, 38 M 393, 100 P 203 (1909).

ANSWER

No Waiver of Jurisdictional Defects: A defendant in an action in a Justice's Court does not waive objection to want of jurisdiction over his person by presenting an answer containing a counterclaim, where he insists at every stage of the proceedings that the Justice has no jurisdiction. Wilcox v. Toston St. Bank, 53 M 490, 165 P 292 (1917).

COUNTERCLAIM

Counterclaim Required: Where the defendant in an action before a Justice of the Peace failed to set up a then subsisting counterclaim upon which an action might have been brought in that court, he could not under 25-31-505 and 25-31-506 (both repealed), thereafter, on appeal to the District Court, have it adjudicated. Walter v. Cox, 36 M 20, 91 P 1063 (1907).

Policy of Legislature: Sections 25-31-505 and 25-31-506 (both repealed) demonstrate that it was the policy and purpose of the Legislature in enacting them that all petty claims existing between the parties and falling within the limited jurisdiction of Justices' Courts should be adjusted in one action. Walter v. Cox, 36 M 20, 91 P 1063 (1907).

GENERAL RULES OF PLEADING

Complaint on Account — Insufficient and Confusing: Where a Justice's Court complaint consisted of an "account", concededly without any of the elements of an account involving the relationship of debtor and creditor, a memorandum filed in response to a demand for a bill of particulars, including items not set forth in the account, and a "supplemental complaint" substantially amounting to a complaint in conversion coupled with an action for damages as for tort were fatally defective and so confusing that a person of common understanding would not know what the pleader meant. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Essential Facts Omitted From Pleadings: While pleadings in Justice's Court are not required to be in a particular form and technical rules of pleading are not to be applied, nevertheless, under 3-10-501, 25-31-501 (now repealed), and 25-31-504 (now repealed), where there is an absolute omission to state a fact essential to a cause of action and such fact is not deducible from those stated, the defect is fatal if proper objection be made to the sufficiency of the pleading. The complaint must disclose the presence of all of the elements necessary to make out the nature of the cause of action, whether brought in Justice's or District Court. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Joinder of Parties as Sharp Practice: Joining of husband and wife by a collection agency in all actions where a claim against either was involved, although the facts in nowise justified the practice under 40-2-106 on the necessity of life theory, at least amounted to sharp practice. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Simulation of Legal Process Condemned: The practice of a collection agency of addressing to debtors, on regular legal paper used in Court proceedings bearing the names of the parties as plaintiff and defendant, what was designated "Final Notice" containing the legend "Original to the defendant, and duplicate to the clerk of the court", before any action was commenced, thus simulating legal process, is condemned. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Inferences From Pleadings: Under the liberal construction of pleadings required by the Code, whatever is necessarily implied from allegations directly or reasonably to be inferred therefrom is to be treated as averred directly. Rhule v. Thrasher, 88 M 468, 295 P 266 (1930).

Confession of Judgment: Where defendant, in an action to recover a debt, in response to a summons out of a Justice's Court appeared in person on the day set for trial and orally "acknowledged" judgment, he in effect admitted the allegations of the complaint and the judgment entered thereon was to all intents and purposes a judgment on the pleadings and not open to the objection that as a "confession of judgment" it was void because not evidenced by a writing executed by defendant as required by 27-9-101(part) through 27-9-104. State ex rel. Kennedy v. Hubbard, 77 M 170, 253 P 271 (1926), overruling Hunter v. Eddy, 11 M 251, 28 P 296 (1891).

Docket Entry — Pleadings Liberally Construed: Under the rule that the pleadings in a Justice's Court as well as the statutory requirements with relation thereto must be liberally construed, 3-10-501 and 25-31-501 (now repealed), declaring that the Justice must enter in the docket a concise statement of the material parts of all oral pleadings, mean no more than that he shall enter such a recital thereof as would advise a person of common understanding of the nature of the pleadings. Malano v. Bressan, 76 M 366, 245 P 871 (1926).

Technical Rules Not to Be Applied: Technical rules of pleading should not be applied in a Justice's Court, and a complaint filed therein must be construed with great liberality. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

Statute of Frauds Defense: The filing of an amendment to defendant's answer pleading the Statute of Frauds to an action to recover the price of certain land sold did not require a replication. Duane v. Molinak, 31 M 343, 78 P 588 (1904).

Rule 8. Amendment of pleadings.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Substituted A concerning when amendment of pleadings is allowed for former text that read: "Amendment of pleadings is allowed by written motion at the discretion of the court"; inserted C concerning reply to amended counterclaim; in D, at end, deleted "or counterclaim"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 10. Naming of parties to action.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Substituted B concerning amendment and dismissal of pleadings with regard to naming real party in interest for former text that read: "Until 5 days have passed from the date upon which a party is served with an order of the justice or city court requiring an amendment, an action may not be dismissed for the reason that the real party in interest is not named in the pleadings. A dismissal for failure to name the real party in interest must be without prejudice." Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 11. Substitution of parties.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In B substituted 20 days for "a reasonable time"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 12. Joinder of claims and parties necessary for just adjudication.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A(2), at end, inserted "without being named"; in A(3), after "obligations", inserted "incurred"; and in C, in first sentence after "add or", substituted "dismiss" for "drop" and after "at any" substituted "stage" for "state" and in second sentence, after "may be", inserted "added or" and after "proceed to" inserted "joint or". Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 13. Discovery.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A substituted introductory clause for former text that read: "Unless otherwise limited by order of the court in accordance with these rules, the scope of discovery is as follows"; in A(1), at beginning of first sentence, substituted "Either party may make a motion for an order to obtain discovery through the use of requests for production, depositions and written interrogatories" for "Parties may move for a hearing to obtain discovery through the use of motions to produce or through written interrogatories, or both"; inserted A(2) concerning request for formal discovery; in A(4), at end of first sentence, deleted "at the hearing" and inserted second sentence concerning hearing on discovery motion; deleted former B that read: "B. DEPOSITIONS. Depositions to be used in justice or city courts must be taken as provided in Rules 26 and 28 through 30, M.R.Civ.P."; inserted B concerning sanctions; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 14. Pretrial conferences.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A(5) inserted sentence concerning scheduling; inserted B concerning subject matter of pretrial conferences; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 15. Right to jury trial.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A inserted reference to United States Constitution; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 16. Failure to appear or proceed.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A, after "defendant", inserted "who has been properly served". Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 17. Costs.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In two places inserted "M.C.A."; deleted reference to part 2 of Title 25, chapter 10; and at end inserted last clause concerning procedures. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 19. Order of trial.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In (5) inserted last sentence concerning instructions ordered at pretrial conference. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 20. Notice of trial.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Taking Under Advisement: Where a Justice of the Peace, after submission of a cause to him for determination, took it under advisement without the consent of the parties, appointing neither time nor place for the rendition of judgment, he lost jurisdiction and the judgment, rendered about a month thereafter without notice to the parties, was void. State ex rel. Collier v. Houston, 36 M 178, 92 P 476 (1907), distinguished in In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907).

Rule 21. Entry of judgment.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Substituted A(2)(c) concerning improper venue under Rule 3B for "when it is objected at the trial and appears by the evidence that the action is brought in the wrong county"; in A(4), at beginning of second sentence, deleted "If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings", substituted "may not be presented to" for "are presented to and not excluded by", and after "court" deleted "the motion must be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P.", deleted former third sentence that read: "All parties must be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to a motion by Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P.", and inserted third and fourth sentences concerning judgment on the pleadings for either party and basis for judgment; inserted A(5) concerning summary judgment; in A(8)(a)(1), after "failed to", substituted "answer or reply" for "plead or otherwise defend", after "rules" deleted "the judge", and substituted "written motion by the plaintiff or counterclaiming defendant, the judge or clerk" for "written application or motion by the plaintiff"; in A(8)(a)(2), near beginning, substituted "answer" for "appear and it is otherwise proper under these rules", after "certain" deleted "the judge", and after "due" inserted "the judge or clerk" and deleted second sentence that read: "In all cases the party entitled to a judgment of default shall apply to the court for the judgment"; in A(8)(2)(b), after "necessary", deleted "to take an account or", after "any" substituted "allegation" for "averment", after "evidence" deleted "or to make an investigation of any other matter", after "hearings" deleted "or order references", and at end deleted "and shall accord a right of trial by jury to the parties as required by statute"; inserted A(8)(2)(c) concerning kind and amount of default judgment; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Disapproval of Rules: Section 3, Ch. 285, L. 1991, provided: "Pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution, Rules 21C and 23(2), Montana Justice and City Court Rules of Civil Procedure, are disapproved."

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Failure of Plaintiff to Appear — Record Required: The record of a Justice's Court must affirmatively show all jurisdictional facts and particularly that plaintiff appeared at the time set for hearing of the case or within an hour thereafter; if he did not then appear, the Justice lost jurisdiction for all purposes, save to dismiss the action without prejudice. Peterson v. Feely, 88 M 459, 293 P 667 (1930).

Failure to Appear at Trial — Judgment Not in Default: A Justice of the Peace could not enter judgment by default on failure of defendant to appear at the time set for trial, when defendant had filed an answer putting in issue the allegations of the complaint. Where the record showed that such Justice tried the issues and entered judgment on proof adduced by plaintiff, the judgment was not one by default, although the Justice's docket recited the notice and entry of defendant's default. State ex rel. Grissom v. Justice Court, 31 M 258, 78 P 498 (1904); Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904).

Rule 22. Relief from judgment.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A. in first sentence after "judgment" inserted "or other order". Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Challenge of Justice's Court Judgment as Void Not Allowed — No Recourse Under Justice's Court Rules Once Time for Applying for Relief Passes: The Justice's Court entered a default judgment in favor of plaintiff, and 64 days later, plaintiff executed judgment against defendant. Defendant moved to quash the judgment 14 days later on due process grounds of lack of notice, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the District Court affirmed, reasoning that defendant had only 30 days after judgment during which to apply for relief. On appeal to the Supreme Court, defendant essentially contended that the Justice's Court judgment was void because defendant was not given notice of the judgment. However, Justice's Court procedural rules do not allow a party to challenge a Justice's Court judgment as being void, so once the 30-day time for seeking relief from the judgment expired, defendant could not challenge the judgment. The Supreme Court did note that defendant could still file an independent action collaterally attacking the Justice's Court judgment for lack of personal jurisdiction. CBM Collections, Inc. v. Ferreira, 2005 MT 170, 327 M 479, 115 P3d 211 (2005).

Default Judgment Set Aside: The record shows the plaintiff took a default after the defendant felt she had been assured she would be given time to negotiate a settlement, and the judgment entered exceeds by $150 the amount defendant owed plaintiff at the time the Court entered judgment. The default judgment was, therefore, set aside because it is preferable to dispose of cases on their merits than to maintain too strict a regard for technical rules of procedure. Little Horn St. Bank v. Real Bird, 183 M 208, 598 P2d 1109 (1979).

Modification of Judgment: A Justice of the Peace who, upon the return of a verdict for plaintiff for the amount of a note and interest, and for defendant for the costs of the action, has rendered a judgment in accordance with such verdict immediately, has no jurisdiction 8 days afterward to set aside such judgment as to the defendant and to add to the judgment for plaintiff an attorney's fee and the costs of suit. State ex rel. Johnson v. Case, 14 M 520, 37 P 95 (1894).

Rule 23. Execution.

Compiler's Comments

2002 Amendment: In C in form at end of last full paragraph substituted "120 days after the date of receipt" for "60 days after the date of issuance subscribed thereon, with a record of your actions endorsed thereon"; and in D near middle of first sentence substituted "120 days from the date of receipt by the sheriff or levying officer" for "60 days from the date of issuance". Amendment effective February 26, 2002.

2001 Amendment: In B in second sentence increased time from 6 years to 10 years and after "entry of judgment" deleted "or within the time extended pursuant to 25-13-102"; in C in form substituted "120 days" for "60 days" and in two places substituted "20.." for "19.." to reflect new millennium; and in D in first sentence and in D.(1) increased time from 60 days to 120 days. Amendment effective October 16, 2001.

1998 Amendment: In A(1) at end inserted "or the clerk thereof"; in B near end after "office" inserted "or the clerk"; in C in second sentence after "judge" inserted "or clerk"; and in form in signature block after "Justice of the Peace" and "City Judge" inserted "or Clerk". Amendment effective June 25, 1998.

1997 Amendment: In A(1) substituted "boundaries of the state" for "county or city in which the judgment was obtained"; in A(2), in two places before "clerk", inserted "judge or", substituted "justice or city court" for "justice's court", and after "sheriff" inserted "constable, or levying officer"; in form, in paragraph following amounts, after "writ", inserted "not less than 10 days nor more than 60" and after "days after" substituted "the date of issuance subscribed thereon with a record of your actions" for "your receipt of it, with what you have done", inserted D concerning return of execution, and near end of last sentence of E, before "court", inserted "justice or city"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Disapproval of Rules: Section 3, Ch. 285, L. 1991, provided: "Pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution, Rules 21C and 23(2), Montana Justice and City Court Rules of Civil Procedure, are disapproved."

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Control of Execution: Though the Clerk of the District Court may issue the execution, he issues it upon the judgment of the Justice, as such, made such by transformation of the Justice's judgment. The fact that the Clerk issues the execution does not divest the Justice of his control over it, for the statute does not so provide. Since the control of its process is vested exclusively in the court upon whose authority it issues, the Justice has exclusive control of the execution, whether issued by himself or by the Clerk of the District Court. Pierson v. Daly, 49 M 478, 143 P 957 (1914).

Rule 21. Time computation.

Case Notes

Period of Time Prescribed or Allowed — Ten Days or Less: The Justice's Court sentenced Schindler on March 4, 1994. On appeal, the state contended that Schindler's notice of appeal filed by fax on March 14, 1994, was untimely. The Supreme Court applied this rule, in interpreting 46-17-311 to mean that when the period of time prescribed or allowed is 10 days or less, intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays are excluded from the calculations. St. v. Schindler, 268 M 489, 886 P2d 978, 51 St. Rep. 1421 (1994), distinguishing St. v. Arthur, 234 M 75, 761 P2d 806 (1988).

MONTANA UNIFORM MUNICIPAL COURT RULES OF APPEAL TO DISTRICT COURT

Part 2100
Applicability of Rules

Part Compiler's Comments

Source of Compiler's Notes: The compiler's comments for this part are derived from endnotes prepared for a draft copy of the rules as promulgated by the Montana supreme court. The compiler has modified the endnotes for the compiler's comments format.

Rule 1. Scope of rules—limitation of appeal.

Compiler's Comments

Compiler's Note: Section 46-17-404 uses the term "amount in controversy" in criminal actions to mean a fine or restitution.

Case Notes

No District Court Jurisdiction of Appeal From Municipal Court When Defendant Not Incarcerated and Fine Less Than $300: Koestner was convicted in Municipal Court of reckless driving and was fined $175, court costs of $20, and a witness fee of $10, and no jail time was ordered. Koestner appealed the conviction and the denial of a request for a jury trial to District Court, but that court concluded that it did not have jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Koestner appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that under the Montana Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal to District Court (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2100), a city must have an ordinance in place to trigger the statutory amount necessary to bring an appeal and that because the city never presented evidence that such an ordinance existed, the District Court had jurisdiction under 3-6-110 to review the Municipal Court decision. The Supreme Court agreed that because Koestner was not incarcerated and the fine imposed was less than $300, the District Court properly concluded that it was bound by subsection (b)(2) of this rule which limits appeals in criminal cases to those in which the minimum amount in controversy is greater than $300, unless jail time is ordered. Although Koestner, under Rule 3, U.M.C.R.App., could have petitioned the District Court to hear the appeal in the interests of justice, no petition was filed. Koestner's arguments regarding lack of a city ordinance were not raised before the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to address the issue for the first time on appeal. Kalispell v. Koestner, 2001 MT 53, 304 M 315, 21 P3d 622 (2001).

Rule 5. Time for filing notice of appeal.

Compiler's Comments

Compiler's Note: Subsection (a), see 25-30-101 and 25-33-102. Subsection (a)(2), see 25-33-201 and Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), holding that an undertaking is required in municipal court to perfect an appeal. Subsection (a)(3), see 40-4-124 and 40-15-302. Rule 7. Stay of judgment pending appeal.

Compiler's Comments

Compiler's Note: Subsection (a), see 25-30-101. Title 25, ch. 33, applies to municipal courts. Subsection (a)(1), see Rules 6 and 7, M.R.App.P., and 25-30-101. Subsection (a)(3), see 25-33-204. Subsection (a)(4), see Rule 7(c), M.R.App.P. Title 25, ch. 33, does not specifically address perishable property. Rule 7(c) would appear to be the appropriate rule. Subsection (b), see 46-17-401. Proceedings in criminal cases are the same in municipal court as district court unless provided otherwise in Title 3, ch. 6. Scope of appeal and stay of sentence in criminal actions are not specifically addressed in statutes. It would appear that under 46-17-401, the statutes relating to scope of appeal and stays in appeals from district court to the supreme court would logically apply. Subsection (b)(1), see 46-20-204(2). Subsection (b)(2), see 46-20-204(3). Subsection (b)(4), see 46-20-205.

Failure to File Brief Within Fifteen Days of Municipal Court Judgment — Summary Judgment Not Abuse of Discretion: Frazier was convicted of speeding in Justice's Court. Frazier filed a timely appeal to District Court, but failed to file a brief within 15 days after the record was filed with the District Court, as required by Rule 14(a), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2400). The District Court summarily dismissed the appeal, and Frazier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under 25-33-304, the District Court has discretion to order an appeal to be dismissed for failure to prosecute an appeal or for unnecessary delay in bringing an appeal to a hearing. The Supreme Court declined to reverse the District Court for insisting that parties comply with statutory directives and rules of civil procedure, holding that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss Frazier's appeal for failure to file a timely brief. St. v. Frazier, 2005 MT 99, 326 M 524, 111 P3d 215 (2005).

Failure to File Brief Within Fifteen Days of Municipal Court Judgment — Summary Judgment Not Abuse of Discretion: Frazier was convicted of speeding in Justice's Court. Frazier filed a timely appeal to District Court, but failed to file a brief within 15 days after the record was filed with the District Court, as required by Rule 14(a), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2400). The District Court summarily dismissed the appeal, and Frazier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under 25-33-304, the District Court has discretion to order an appeal to be dismissed for failure to prosecute an appeal or for unnecessary delay in bringing an appeal to a hearing. Part 1
General Provisions

25-31-101. Issues which cannot be presented in justice's court.

Case Notes

Evidence of Title Admissible in Unlawful Detainer Action: Where defendants unlawfully entered and took possession of the plaintiff's mining claim, evidence of title to the claim in question was admissible in Justice's Court as evidence of the plaintiff's right to possession where it appeared that such right would be disputed in plaintiff's action for forcible entry and unlawful detainer. Hamshaw v. Justice's Court, 108 M 12, 88 P2d 1 (1939).

Allegations as Surplusage: Since allegations relating to title to or possession of real property are not pertinent to forcible entry and unlawful detainer cases and if pleaded are surplusage, such an action is not subject to certification to the District Court under this section. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer — Jurisdiction Proper: If the question of title is not raised in an action in unlawful detainer, all allegations respecting it in the pleadings are surplusage and the Justice's Court has jurisdiction to hear the cause, of which jurisdiction it cannot divest itself by certifying the cause to the District Court. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

Case Notes

Remedy for Criminal Prosecution of Public Nuisance: Panasuk, convicted in City Court of misdemeanor criminal public nuisance charges under 45-8-111, contended that because 3-10-301, Rule 4(B), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and this section preclude a nonrecord court from hearing actions involving the title to or possession of real property, jurisdiction for prosecution of the public nuisance charge must lie with the District Court. He cited 45-8-112 as authority that any action to abate a nuisance must be brought in the name of the state and that because abatement is a form of injunctive relief, the District Court has exclusive jurisdiction. He also argued that 27-30-202 provides the exclusive civil and criminal remedies for public nuisance. His claims were dismissed for the following reasons: (1) charges filed under 45-8-111 were criminal rather than related to a civil action involving title to or possession of real property, which is regulated by the sections cited by Panasuk; (2) the remedy created by 27-30-202 has been supplemented by subsequent legislative action regarding a City Court's jurisdiction over misdemeanors and by the enactment of 46-17-101, which requires that all prosecutions brought in City Court be commenced by a sworn complaint; and (3) because Panasuk's interpretation would result in a direct contradiction between 27-30-202 and statutes subsequently enacted, the argument that 27-30-202 provides the exclusive remedies for public nuisance is erroneous. Billings v. Panasuk, 253 M 403, 833 P2d 1050, 49 St. Rep. 499 (1992).

Allegations as Surplusage: Since allegations relating to title to or possession of real property are not pertinent to forcible entry and unlawful detainer cases and if pleaded are surplusage, such an action is not subject to certification to the District Court under this section. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

Complaint Beyond Justice's Jurisdiction: A complaint filed in a Justice's Court, if stating a cause of action in ejectment, does not give the Justice jurisdiction for any purpose, and he cannot confer jurisdiction on the District Court by certifying the case to it. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer: If the question of title is not raised in an action in unlawful detainer, all allegations respecting it in the pleadings are surplusage and the Justice's Court has jurisdiction to hear the cause, of which jurisdiction it cannot divest itself by certifying the cause to the District Court. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

Undertaking for Costs: If the question of title to real estate is raised in an action in unlawful detainer, a Justice cannot certify the cause to the District Court without the bond required by this section having been filed. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

Case Notes

Denial of Lay Counsel in City Court — Any Prejudice Cured by Trial De Novo on Appeal: Henry was charged with driving under the influence and was tried in City Court. The City Court refused to permit a family friend to represent Henry in the trial. Henry then appealed to the District Court for a trial de novo in which Henry was represented by counsel. The Supreme Court refused to address the merits of Henry's claim of violation of the right to counsel. The trial de novo on appeal to the District Court cured any prejudice that may have resulted from the City Court's decision regarding representation. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

Limitation on Lay Representation in Courts of Limited Jurisdiction: Petitioners sought a declaration by the Supreme Court that under 37-61-210 and this section, nonattorneys have the right to represent clients in Montana courts of limited jurisdiction on a regular and recurring basis. After accepting original jurisdiction of the petition, the Supreme Court held that only practice before courts of limited jurisdiction as is specifically authorized by statute or court rule may be undertaken by lay people. This representation does not extend to criminal proceedings in any court or to representation in any jurisdiction on a regular and recurring basis. This section provides for a one-time only grant of the privilege in Justice Court civil cases to enable a friend or relative to assist and speak on behalf of a party at one proceeding. Recurring representation constitutes the unauthorized practice of law. Sparks v. Johnson, 252 M 39, 826 P2d 928, 49 St. Rep. 124 (1992).

Corporations Not "Person": The word "person" as used in this section does not include a corporation. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Fee for Appearance of Unlicensed Person: The allowance of an attorney's fee by any court is unlawful in an action where the party to whom allowed is represented by one other than a duly licensed attorney; demand for such allowance by one not an attorney in a Justice's Court amounts to an unlawful practice of law. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 40, Ch. 490, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1981 Amendment: Substituted "minor or seriously mentally ill" for "infant, insane" in the first sentence, (1), and (2); in (1)(a) substituted "in the case of a minor who is 14 or more years old, upon the application of the minor" for "upon application of the infant, if he be of the age of 14 years"; in (1)(b) substituted "in the case of a minor who is less then 14 years old or a seriously mentally ill or incompetent person" for "if under that age or if insane or incompetent"; inserted (1)(c) allowing appointment on motion of Justice; in (2)(a) substituted "in the case of a minor who is 14 or more years old and who applies before the summons is returned or at the time of the return, upon the application of the minor" for "upon the application of the infant, if he be of the age of 14 years and apply at the time or before the summons is returned"; in (2)(b) substituted "in the case of a minor who is less than 14 years old or a seriously mentally ill or incompetent person, upon the application of a relative or friend or any other party to the action" for "if he be under the age of 14 years or be insane or incompetent or neglect so to apply, then upon the application of a relative or friend or any other party to the action, or by the justice, on his own motion"; inserted (2)(c) allowing appointment on motion of Justice; and made minor changes in grammar, punctuation, and phraseology.

Part 7
Time of Trial — Postponements

Part Case Notes

Client Bound by Attorney's Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial — Purpose of Statute: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that he, the defendant, was not bound by his attorney's waiver. Defendant asserted that 37-61-401 makes the waiver binding only if it was entered with the defendant's knowledge or upon the record in open court. Citing Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913), the Supreme Court ruled that 37-61-401 has been applied only as to agreements between attorneys and that the purpose of that section is to relieve the presiding judge of the burden of determining disputes between attorneys concerning their unexecuted agreements. The Supreme Court stated that it would not apply 37-61-401 literally as to agreements between an attorney and the court; to do so would lead to absurd consequences and greatly retard the business of the courts. The Supreme Court held that the defendant was thus bound by his counsel's waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Clock to Start With Date of De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because the clock should have started with the date of his arrest, not the date of appeal to District Court. Citing St. v. Sanders, 163 M 209, 516 P2d 372 (1973), the Supreme Court noted that it had adopted Standard 12-2.2(c) of the American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice. The standard provides that in cases of appeal or an order for a new trial, the time for trial should begin running with the order granting the new trial or, in this case, the date of appeal to District Court. The Supreme Court determined not to abandon that standard and therefore held that defendant's trial was within the 6-month limitation of 46-13-401. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Not Denied by Application of Six-Month Speedy Trial Limitation to De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because it is prejudicial to apply the speedy trial standards of 46-13-401 to an appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The Supreme Court held that the argument was without merit because the 6-month limit was met in this case, both in the time for trial in Justice's Court and in the time for trial de novo in District Court. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Uncertain Testimony of Defense Counsel Insufficient to Disprove Oral Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial: At the time scheduled for defendant's trial in Justice's Court on a DUI charge, the Justice of the Peace called defense counsel into his chambers and informed him that a different date for trial was necessary because of another trial then in progress. The Justice of the Peace then issued a written order reciting the fact that an oral motion for a continuance was made by defense counsel, along with an oral waiver of defendant's right to a speedy trial. Trial was then set for a date beyond the 6-month limitation provided for in 46-13-401. In a de novo appeal to District Court, defendant raised the issue of his right to a speedy trial, and defense counsel testified he could not remember whether he made an oral motion for continuance and a waiver. The Supreme Court found that the Justice's Court's order was presumed correct under 26-1-602(17) and that the testimony of defense counsel did not demonstrate that the order was in error in reciting the waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Justice Hearing Another Case: The Justice has the power to postpone a case when he is hearing another one at the time set for hearing. State ex rel. Beadle v. Smith, 42 M 492, 113 P 294 (1911).

Docket Entry of Adjournment Required: While it appears that a Justice of the Peace may, with the consent of the parties, take a case under advisement, the adjournment of the trial, so brought about by stipulation, must be to a time and place appointed for that purpose and an order to that effect entered upon his docket. State ex rel. Collier v. Houston, 36 M 178, 92 P 476 (1907), distinguished in In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907).

25-31-705. Postponement upon application of a party — proof required.

Case Notes

Improper Continuance — Judgment Void: Where a Justice of the Peace continued a cause upon the oral application of plaintiff, made out of court without a showing such as required by this section, and refused to dispose of the cause at the time originally set for hearing, he lost jurisdiction and a judgment entered by him, after hearing testimony in support of the complaint at the time to which the cause had been continued, was void. Filing Abstracts of Judgment in Another County: An abstract of a Justice's Court judgment may be filed in the office of the Clerk of any District Court. Alternatively, the abstract may be filed and docketed in the county in which the judgment was rendered and may then be issued and filed with the District Court Clerk of another county pursuant to 25-9-302. Case Notes

Dismissal of Appeal From City Court to District Court — No Final Judgment: Appellant sought to appeal from City Court to District Court a decision made at a show cause hearing regarding forfeiture of bail bonds. However, because no order or final judgment issued out of the hearing, there was no right of appeal from that hearing. Helena v. Buck, 247 M 313, 806 P2d 27, 48 St. Rep. 213 (1991).

Rendition of Judgment as Commencement of Time for Appeal From Justice's to District Court: Section 25-33-102 and this section, rather than Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), or a former rule of the Justice's Court, exclusively govern the time for filing a notice of appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The time for appeal commences with rendition of the judgment of the Justice's Court and runs for 30 days, as provided in 25-33-102. Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576, 47 St. Rep. 1536 (1990).

Party Aggrieved: Appellant was permitted to present his counterclaim in Justice's Court and prevailed. He then moved to file the counterclaim in District Court. The District Court denied the motion and dismissed the action. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court on appeal. Having prevailed on his counterclaim in Justice's Court, appellant was not a "party aggrieved" entitled to appeal to District Court. Mont. Agri-Chem., Inc. v. Jacobson, 225 M 119, 731 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 87 (1987).

Justice's Court Appeals: The Supreme Court does not have jurisdiction to review directly the judgments or orders of the Justices' Courts of this state. State ex rel. Estes v. Justice Court, 129 M 136, 284 P2d 249 (1955).

Jurisdictional Limitations: This statute is both prohibitory and jurisdictional, and it prohibits an appeal after expiration of the time prescribed by this chapter. McVay v. McVay, 128 M 31, 270 P2d 393 (1954).

Judgment or Order Required: The right of appeal is purely statutory and is not available for review of findings and conclusions of law in a condemnation case where there has been no order. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Anhalt, 127 M 71, 257 P2d 889 (1953).

Case Notes

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under 25-33-301, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), with Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P.(Title 25, ch. 20), and 25-33-301 in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in 25-33-301, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of Rule 81(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), requires that Rules 3 and 38 be given meanings that are consistent with 25-33-301 and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-103 and this section. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Time of Filing Appeal Running From Date of Rendition of Judgment: Under this section, the time for filing an appeal does not run from the date of service of a notice of the judgment. It runs from the date of rendition of the judgment. Rule 6, M.J.C.C.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 23), does not extend the time allowed by statute when that time begins to run upon rendition of judgment instead of upon service of a notice or other paper. NW. Collectors, Inc. v. Vanorio, 1998 MT 80, 288 M 225, 956 P2d 1375, 55 St. Rep. 342 (1998). See also Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576 (1990).

Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), that the undertaking must be filed within the statutorily prescribed time provided for taking the appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

former rule of the Justice's Court, exclusively govern the time for filing a notice of appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The time for appeal commences with rendition of the judgment of the Justice's Court and runs for 30 days, as provided in this section. Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576, 47 St. Rep. 1536 (1990).

Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment — Time for Appeal Suspended: On a motion to set aside a default judgment in a Justice's Court, the judgment was suspended until the motion to set it aside was disposed of and the time for taking the appeal commenced to run from the date on which the motion was denied. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936), overruling State ex rel. Cobban v. District Court, 30 M 93, 75 P 862 (1904).

Time for Appeal as Statute of Limitations: The provisions of this section are a Statute of Limitations and unless the appeal is taken within the time prescribed, the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction and the appeal must be dismissed. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Levy of Execution Not Covered: Under this section and 25-33-301, an appeal lies to the District Court only from a judgment of a Justice's Court or from an order of the Justice setting aside or refusing to set aside a default judgment and not from an order setting aside a levy of execution. White v. Corbett, 101 M 1, 52 P2d 156 (1935).

Statute to Be Followed: Appeals are statutory, and the appellant must proceed as the statute requires, particularly with respect to appeals from such bodies as a Board of County Commissioners. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914); In re Searles, 46 M 322, 127 P 902 (1912).

Setting Aside Dismissal — Certiorari Improper: An appeal lies to the District Court, from a judgment of the Justice's Court, setting aside an order of dismissal; for this reason, such order cannot be reviewed on certiorari. State ex rel. Beadle v. Smith, 42 M 492, 113 P 294 (1911).

Statutory Basis for Appeal: Appeals from Justice of the Peace to District Courts are matters of statutory regulation, and the provisions of the law relative to the method to be pursued in taking such appeals must be strictly followed in order to divest the former of and invest the latter with jurisdiction. State ex rel. Hall v. District Court, 34 M 112, 85 P 872 (1906).

Scope of Review: Only such questions as were raised and presented in the Justice's Court can be tried on appeal in the District Court. Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904).

Failure to Perfect Appeal: Where it appears that appellant, without any excuse for his delay, did not demand the transcript until 29 days after judgment with the result that the transcript was not filed with the District Court until 32 days after judgment and 31 days after notice of the appeal, an order dismissing the appeal was properly granted and was not an abuse of discretion. Meyers v. Gregans, 20 M 450, 52 P 83 (1898), distinguished in Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Attorney General's Opinions

Court Reporter Filing Fee — Clerk of District Court to Collect Fee in Appeal From Justice's Court or City Court — Appeal Is "Civil Action" Under Statutes: The Attorney General was asked whether a Clerk of District Court must collect the $20 filing fee, required by 25-1-202 and used to help pay the salary of the court reporter, in appeals filed in District Court from judgments of a Justice's or City Court. The Attorney General concluded that: (1) a private legal action in a Justice's or City Court is a civil action; (2) an appeal from a Justice's or City Court may include appeal of a civil action; (3) an appeal from either of those courts results in most cases in a new trial in District Court and that the need for a court reporter in that instance is obvious; and (4) the payment of the additional $20 filing fee required by 25-1-202 is mandatory. 48 A.G. Op. 1 (1999).

Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Proof of Service Not Required: Under this section an appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court is perfected by service of the notice of appeal upon the adverse party or his attorney and the filing thereof with the Justice, proof of service not being made a jurisdictional requirement; therefore dismissal of such an appeal because the record did not show that service had been made upon the adverse party was error. Farmers' & Miners' St. Bank v. Probst, 76 M 284, 246 P 249 (1926).

Order of Service and Filing: The appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court is taken by serving a copy of the notice of appeal on the adverse party or his attorney and by filing the original notice of appeal with the Justice or Judge. The order in which these acts are done is not important. State ex rel. Hackshaw v. District Court, 48 M 477, 138 P 1100 (1914).

Description of Judgment Appealed From: The notice of appeal must describe the particular judgment or order appealed from by reference to the court that rendered it, to the parties litigant, and to the date and amount or character of the judgment, in terms sufficiently specific to identify it, without resort to extrinsic evidence. State ex rel. Rosenstein v. District Court, 41 M 100, 108 P 580 (1910), distinguished in Krause v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 73 M 169, 235 P 406 (1925). See also Valadon v. Lohman, 46 M 144, 127 P 88 (1912); Stephens v. Conley, 48 M 352, 138 P 189 (1914).

Purpose and Contents of Notice of Appeal: The notice of appeal has a purpose to fulfill. It performs the office of a summons; and, if it fails to inform the adverse party of what he is to meet, as where the date of the judgment is not given so that the judgment can be identified, the notice of appeal is insufficient to give the District Court jurisdiction. State ex rel. Rosenstein v. District Court, 41 M 100, 108 P 580 (1910), distinguished in Krause v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 73 M 169, 235 P 406 (1925). See also Valadon v. Lohman, 46 M 144, 127 P 88 (1912); Stephens v. Conley, 48 M 352, 138 P 189 (1914).

"Adverse Party" Defined: An adverse party is one who has an interest in opposing the object sought to be accomplished by the appeal; but it does not follow that one who is neither a necessary nor a proper party to the action must be considered adverse merely because he appears as such upon the record. Anderson v. Red Metal Min. Co., 36 M 312, 93 P 44 (1907).

Assignor Not Adverse Party: Where in an action before a Justice of the Peace brought by an assignee on an account, the debtor interpleaded the assignor, who admitted the assignment and disclaimed any interest in the subject matter of the controversy, the latter was not an adverse party, within the meaning of this section, upon whom it was necessary to serve notice of an appeal to the District Court. Anderson v. Red Metal Min. Co., 36 M 312, 93 P 44 (1907). See also Mettler v. Adamson, 38 M 198, 99 P 441 (1909).

Presumption of Service of Notice: In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it is to be presumed that a notice filed with the Justice was properly served. Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Case Notes

Compelling Preparation of Transcript: One who appeals from a Justice's to the District Court and has paid the Justice his fee for transmitting the transcript of the cause to the District Court may, if without fault himself, upon failure of the Justice so to do within 10 days after perfection of the appeal, compel the performance of such duty, and in a flagrant case, the court may impose a fine for dereliction on the part of the Justice. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Delay in Filing of Transcript — Penalty: Prompt action is required of the appellant insofar as he is responsible for the filing of the papers. He is subject to the penalty of having his appeal dismissed if, without excuse, he is guilty of laches. He cannot hold the appeal in abeyance and prevent the adverse party from bringing the case to a hearing in the District Court. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Fees of Justice to Be Tendered: A Justice of the Peace is not obliged to make out papers on appeal until his fees have been paid or tendered. Meyers v. Gregans, 20 M 450, 52 P 83 (1898).

Case Notes

Statutory Requirement for at Least Two Sureties for Filing Valid Undertaking Not Met When One of Two Sureties Is Person Acting as Own Surety: Following a Justice's Court award of attorney fees and costs against Miller in a lease action, Miller filed an appeal and an undertaking in District Court. Under this section, two or more sureties are required to validate an undertaking. As defined in 28-11-401, a surety is one who becomes responsible for performance by another or hypothecates property as security for another; so by definition, a person may not act as surety for oneself. The undertaking in this case listed only Miller and another person as sureties. Therefore, the undertaking did not meet the requirement for two or more sureties and was deficient. The District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider the appeal because the undertaking was invalid, and the appeal was properly dismissed. Miller's contention that the provisions of 25-33-205 worked as an alternative to filing the undertaking on appeal also failed because there was no money that could be considered as a deposit filed within 10 days after notice of appeal. Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001). See also Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497 (1984).

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-35-807 and this section in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, this section applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under 25-35-804. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under 25-35-804 and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), that the undertaking must be filed within the statutorily prescribed time provided for taking the appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Statutory Requirements for Filing Undertaking Not Met — Appeal Not Perfected: The District Court did not err in dismissing an appeal from a Justice's Court decision when appellant failed to comply with the statutory requirements for filing an undertaking. The undertaking was defective on its face, so the appeal was not perfected and the District Court therefore did not obtain jurisdiction over the action. Berry v. Seman, 245 M 335, 801 P2d 589, 47 St. Rep. 2169 (1990).

Undertaking Insufficient but Not Void — Appeal Preserved: The District Court dismissed an appeal from Justice's Court on the grounds that appellant's undertaking failed to meet the requirements of this section, because it was filed with only one surety, or 25-33-205, because the certificate of deposit filed with the Clerk of Court was not properly assigned and the amount was insufficient. On appeal to the Supreme Court, it was found that 25-33-205 controlled and that, although the deposit of money in lieu of the undertaking was $28.36 short, the undertaking was merely insufficient but was in substantial compliance with the statute. Therefore, the appeal from Justice's Court was improperly dismissed. The case was remanded pending deposit of the correct amount with the Clerk of Court. Franklin v. Swenson, 244 M 446, 798 P2d 122, 47 St. Rep. 1712 (1990).

No Determination of Indigency: The Supreme Court held that from the sparse record in front of it, the case should be remanded so that the lower court could determine if the appellants were indigent. The court stated that if indigency was found, the case would be governed by Merchants Ass'n v. Conger, 185 M 552, 606 P2d 125 (1979), which held that the requirement that the appellant post an undertaking in an amount equal to twice the judgment is unconstitutional when applied to indigents. Credit Associates, Inc. v. Harp, 243 M 281, 794 P2d 343, 47 St. Rep. 1222 (1990).

Until Undertaking Filed, No Question of Sufficiency: A void undertaking is the functional equivalent of no undertaking. The question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of an undertaking cannot arise until the undertaking has been filed. Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306, 44 St. Rep. 705 (1987), overruled on other grounds in Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Failure to Perfect Appeal — Appeal Dismissed: The defendant appealed a default judgment entered in Justice Court. Defendant filed an undertaking, but the undertaking was defective. Plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to perfect the appeal. Defendant had adequate time to cure the defect prior to the hearing on plaintiff's motion but failed to do so. Since defendant failed to cure the defect, the District Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal and properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal. Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497, 41 St. Rep. 1338 (1984). See also Roche v. Sabo, 259 M 76, 853 P2d 1258, 50 St. Rep. 689 (1993), and Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001).

Constitutionality of Double Undertaking Requirement: Section 25-33-201(1), as applied to the indigent appellant, violates her 14th amendment equal protection rights based on the traditional equal protection test. The classification established by the double undertaking requirement for an appeal to District Court is arbitrary and rests on grounds wholly irrelevant to the achievement of the state's objectives in enactment of this provision. Merchants Ass'n v. Conger, 185 M 552, 606 P2d 125 (1979).

Contents of Undertaking: On appeal from a money judgment from a Justice's to the District Court, the appellant must file an undertaking agreeing to pay the amount of the judgment appealed from together with all the costs if the appeal be withdrawn or dismissed or the amount of any judgment and all costs that may be recovered against him in the District Court. State ex rel. Gregory v. District Court, 86 M 396, 284 P 537 (1930).

Real Property Actions: On appeal from a judgment directing the delivery of possession of real property, the undertaking on appeal must be conditioned that the appellant will pay any judgment and costs that may be recovered against him in the District Court, not exceeding a sum to be fixed by the Justice, and specified in the undertaking; and where a stay is desired the undertaking must set forth that during the possession of the property by appellant he will not commit or suffer to be committed any waste thereon, and that if the appeal be dismissed or withdrawn or the judgment affirmed or judgment recovered against him in the District Court, he will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property for the time of the appeal until the delivery of possession thereof. State ex rel. Gregory v. District Court, 86 M 396, 284 P 537 (1930).

District Court Costs Taxed by District Court: This section impliedly authorized the District Court to tax against the unsuccessful party in that court the costs incurred in the trial of the cause in the Justice's Court, where they were included in the cost bill, although the Justice of the Peace had failed to make entry of costs on his docket. Duckett v. Biggs, 57 M 443, 188 P 938 (1920).

Stages of Appeal: An appeal from a Justice's Court presents three defined stages. First, the taking of the appeal, which occurs when notice of the proper character is properly filed and served; second, the perfecting of the appeal or rendering it effectual, which occurs upon the filing of the undertaking; third, the hearing, which occurs when the trial de novo is had in the District Court. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914).

Taking and Perfection of Appeal Distinguished: There is a clear distinction between the taking and the perfecting of an appeal. An appeal is taken when a notice of appeal is served and filed. The filing of an undertaking perfects the appeal, but it is not a part of the taking in the statutory sense. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914).

Requirements for Effective Appeal: To make an appeal from a Justice's Court effective, a notice of appeal, as provided in 25-33-103, as well as an undertaking, provided for in this section, must be filed with the Justice; and, within 10 days after receiving the notice and the undertaking, the Justice must, as required by 25-32-104 (now repealed), transmit all the papers to the Clerk of the District Court. State ex rel. Hackshaw v. District Court, 48 M 477, 138 P 1100 (1914).

Conditions in Undertaking — Surplusage: An undertaking on appeal to the District Court which meets all the requirements of this section relative to amount and conditions is not rendered invalid by the insertion of additional conditions not in anywise affecting the liability of the sureties under the statute. Marlowe v. Mich. Stove Co., 48 M 342, 137 P 539 (1913).

Notice Ineffectual Without Undertaking: The appeal is taken by filing and serving the notice of appeal, but it is ineffectual for any purpose unless the required undertaking is filed. State ex rel. Rosenstein v. District Court, 41 M 100, 108 P 580 (1910).

Statute Controlling — Dismissal Required: Unless an appeal from a Justice's Court is taken within the time and effectuated in accordance with the regulations prescribed by law, the District Court has no jurisdiction of the appeal except to dismiss it. State ex rel. Cobban v. District Court, 30 M 93, 75 P 862 (1904).

25-33-203. Justification of sureties.

Case Notes

Type of Notice Required: This section not specifying the character of notice, whether written or oral, that must be given by appellant to the adverse party as to when and where the sureties on the undertaking on appeal will justify, 3 days' oral notice given by appellant's counsel to counsel for adverse party was sufficient. State ex rel. Strunk v. District Court, 113 M 58, 120 P2d 831 (1942).

Waiver of Irregularities as to Sureties: Where counsel for the successful party to an action in a Justice's Court had orally agreed that, owing to illness of opposing counsel, justification of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal to the District Court should be deemed sufficient, even though not made strictly within the time prescribed by this section, and where, after the sureties had been examined and the undertaking approved, no objection was offered, he will be held to have waived any irregularity in this respect. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Waiver of Sureties: The right to require sureties on an undertaking on appeal from a Justice's to the District Court to justify is personal to the exceptant and may therefore be waived by him. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Exceptions to Sureties — Waiver: An exception to the sureties does not divest the jurisdiction of the District Court of the appeal; the requirement of the statute concerning the justification of the sureties is directory, for appellee's benefit, and he may waive his privilege of excepting to the sureties or may except to the sureties and afterward withdraw such exception; the statute is mandatory only where the appellee insists that the sureties justify within 5 days. Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Extension of Time by Stipulation: Where appellee excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties and they failed to justify within the statutory period, counsel for the parties had the right to stipulate for an extension of time within which the sureties might justify or a new undertaking be furnished. Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Notice on Qualification of Sureties: The notice required to be given the adverse party is not notice of the filing of a new undertaking but notice of the time and place when and where the sureties will be examined touching their qualifications. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900).

25-33-205. Deposit of money in lieu of undertaking.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: Deleted former subsection (1) relating to deposit of money equivalent to undertaking; substituted "Whenever" for "In all cases where"; substituted "plus $300 . . . order of the court" for "and $300 in addition shall be equivalent to filing the undertaking".

Case Notes

Statutory Requirement for at Least Two Sureties for Filing Valid Undertaking Not Met When One of Two Sureties Is Person Acting as Own Surety: Following a Justice's Court award of attorney fees and costs against Miller in a lease action, Miller filed an appeal and an undertaking in District Court. Under 25-33-201, two or more sureties are required to validate an undertaking. As defined in 28-11-401, a surety is one who becomes responsible for performance by another or hypothecates property as security for another; so by definition, a person may not act as surety for oneself. The undertaking in this case listed only Miller and another person as sureties. Therefore, the undertaking did not meet the requirement for two or more sureties and was deficient. The District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider the appeal because the undertaking was invalid, and the appeal was properly dismissed. Miller's contention that the provisions of this section worked as an alternative to filing the undertaking on appeal also failed because there was no money that could be considered as a deposit filed within 10 days after notice of appeal. Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001). See also Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497 (1984).

Undertaking Insufficient but Not Void — Appeal Preserved: The District Court dismissed an appeal from Justice's Court on the grounds that appellant's undertaking failed to meet the requirements of 25-33-201, because it was filed with only one surety, or this section, because the certificate of deposit filed with the Clerk of Court was not properly assigned and the amount was insufficient. On appeal to the Supreme Court, it was found that this section controlled and that, although the deposit of money in lieu of the undertaking was $28.36 short, the undertaking was merely insufficient but was in substantial compliance with the statute. Therefore, the appeal from Justice's Court was improperly dismissed. The case was remanded pending deposit of the correct amount with the Clerk of Court. Franklin v. Swenson, 244 M 446, 798 P2d 122, 47 St. Rep. 1712 (1990).

Deposit in Lieu of Undertaking: Section 25-31-115 has application to all undertakings other than those on appeal, and this section (prior to the 1981 amendment), so far as it permitted a deposit in lieu of cash in the amount of the judgment plus costs in the Justice's Court, is a special statute relating to undertakings on appeal and is controlling as to them; where appellant deposited with the Justice a cashier's check, treated by both parties as cash, it may not be required that the deposit cover costs incurred in the District Court. The statute secures respondent in the judgment he holds, including costs already incurred in the Justice's Court, without securing against costs in the District Court. Ross v. Greenwald, 112 M 324, 115 P2d 290 (1941).

25-33-207. Defective undertaking.

Case Notes

Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), that the undertaking must be filed within the statutorily prescribed time provided for taking the appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Failure to Perfect Appeal — Appeal Dismissed: The defendant appealed a default judgment entered in Justice Court. Defendant filed an undertaking, but the undertaking was defective. Plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to perfect the appeal. Defendant had adequate time to cure the defect prior to the hearing on plaintiff's motion but failed to do so. Since defendant failed to cure the defect, the District Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal and properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal. Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497, 41 St. Rep. 1338 (1984). See also Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001).

Motion to Dismiss Appeal With Substituted Undertaking: As against the contention of relator that an appeal to District Court from a Justice's Court judgment should be dismissed unless a new undertaking be filed within 30 days after the filing of the notice of appeal, for insufficiency of the first undertaking, under this section, all that is required is that it be filed at or before the hearing of the motion to dismiss the appeal, and in any event, where the appeal has otherwise been perfected, relator cannot object to the filing of the new undertaking given for his own benefit and protection. State ex rel. Strunk v. District Court, 113 M 58, 120 P2d 831 (1942).

Time of Taking Appeal With Substituted Undertaking: The filing of the undertaking is no part of the taking of the appeal. The appeal may be preserved, notwithstanding the undertaking is defective or irregular, if a good one is substituted at or before the hearing of the motion to dismiss. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914).

Substituted Undertakings: The rule that where the original undertaking on appeal to the Supreme Court is not wholly void but merely defective and therefore amendable, the filing of a substituted one preserves the appeal if approved by a Justice of the Supreme Court under section 93-8019, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 4, 6, 9, 10, 11, 25, M.R.App.P.), is applicable to substituted undertakings on appeals to District Courts, filed and approved as provided by this section. Marlowe v. Mich. Stove Co., 48 M 342, 137 P 539 (1913).

Default Judgment 1378

GENERAL

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under this section, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial

de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), with Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P.(Title 25, ch. 20), and this section in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in this section, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of Rule 81(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), requires that Rules 3 and 38 be given meanings that are consistent with this section and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-102 and 25-33-103. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Denial of Lay Counsel in City Court — Any Prejudice Cured by Trial De Novo on Appeal: Henry was charged with driving under the influence and was tried in City Court. The City Court refused to permit a family friend to represent Henry in the trial. Henry then appealed to the District Court for a trial de novo in which Henry was represented by counsel. The Supreme Court refused to address the merits of Henry's claim of violation of the right to counsel. The trial de novo on appeal to the District Court cured any prejudice that may have resulted from the City Court's decision regarding representation. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

Failure to Raise Claim of Erroneous Denial of Counsel in City Court Not Deficient Performance — District Court Not Court of Review: Henry was convicted of driving under the influence, first in City Court and then in District Court. Henry appealed the District Court conviction, claiming ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to present Henry's claim of erroneous denial of counsel by the City Court. The Supreme Court held that the District Court does not sit as a court of review on appeal from City Court proceedings. There was no legal basis to present the claim of error, and failure to present it cannot constitute deficient performance. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

City Court Error to Refuse Waiver of Jury Trial — Error Waived by De Novo Appeal: McCarvel was charged with DUI within the city limits of Billings and scheduled for trial in the City Court. The city demanded a jury trial, but McCarvel waived his right to trial by jury. The City Court refused to accept the waiver, and the jury convicted McCarvel. On appeal to the District Court, McCarvel moved to dismiss on the grounds that the City Court committed error. The District Court refused to dismiss, and McCarvel changed his plea to guilty. Citing St. v. O'Brien, 35 M 482, 90 P 514 (1907), the Supreme Court held that because the trial in District Court is a trial de novo, in which a defendant has an opportunity for a trial without a jury, the opportunity for a District Court trial cured whatever prejudice resulted from the City Court's refusal to grant the right to a waiver provided under the provisions of 46-17-201. Billings v. McCarvel, 262 M 96, 863 P2d 441, 50 St. Rep. 1460 (1993).

Dismissal of Appeal for Unnecessary Delay: Where defendant filed notice of appeal of adverse verdict in Justice's Court with an undertaking on May 8, 1969, but took no further action, District Court properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss for unnecessary delay on July 1, 1970, since it was appellant's burden as moving party to bring appeal on for hearing. Eide Ins. v. Correll, 156 M 167, 478 P2d 272 (1970).

Time for Appeal Following Motion: In order to bring this section into harmony with the mandate of Art. VIII, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. VII, sec. 4(2), 1972 Mont. Const.), providing for appeals from Justices' Courts "in all cases", on timely motion to set aside a default judgment in a Justice's Court, the judgment is suspended and the time for taking an appeal therefrom begins to run from the time the motion is disposed of. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Trial de Novo in Misdemeanor Case: On appeal from a Justice's Court in a misdemeanor case, the cause must be tried de novo in the District Court on the papers and files in the former, unless the latter court allows other or amended pleadings, and each party has the benefit of all legal objections made in the Justice's Court. St. v. Benson, 91 M 109, 5 P2d 1045 (1931).

Appeal as Trial de Novo: The District Court does not, on appeal from a Justice's Court, sit as a court of review but tries the cause de novo. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914); Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910); In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907); St. v. O'Brien, 35 M 482, 90 P 514 (1907); Duane v. Molinak, 31 M 343, 78 P 588 (1904); State ex rel. Seres v.

District Court, 19 M 501, 48 P 1104 (1897); St. v. Deslauries, 13 M 398, 34 P 490 (1893); Missoula Elec. Light Co. v. Morgan, 13 M 394, 34 P 488 (1893); State ex rel. Gleim v. Evans, 13 M 239, 33 P 1010 (1893).

Irregularities Waived by Appeal: Since the District Court does not, on appeal from a Justice's Court, sit as a court of review but tries the cause de novo, any irregularities attending the rendition of the judgment in a case in which the Justice had jurisdiction are waived by taking the appeal. Hosoda v. Neville, 45 M 310, 123 P 20 (1912); In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907); St. v. O'Brien, 35 M 482, 90 P 514 (1907).

Appellate Jurisdiction to Affirmatively Appear: On appeal from a Justice's Court the trial is de novo, but the District Court, though proceeding with the trial as in other cases, acquires its jurisdiction by appeal under the statute, and its jurisdiction must affirmatively appear. Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Attachment of Jurisdiction — When: Until the notice of appeal is filed and served as prescribed and the undertaking given and, if required, the sureties thereon, or others in their stead, justify after notice and within 5 days, the District Court does not acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter or of the parties. Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Jurisdictional Defects — Statutory Requirements Exclusive: If any of the necessary steps in taking an appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court are omitted, the District Court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. Such appeals, though provided for by the Constitution, are subject to statutory regulation, and the mode prescribed for taking them is exclusive. Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Rule Applicable in Criminal Cases: The rule of practice under this section applies in criminal cases. In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907).

Jurisdiction on Appeal: The District Court on appeal sits as a Justice's Court, and with no greater jurisdiction, and either party may have reviewed any question of law or fact which was raised before the Justice and presented to the District Court. State ex rel. Grissom v. Justice Court, 31 M 258, 78 P 498 (1904).

Motion to Dismiss Not Properly Before District Court: Only such questions as were raised and presented in the Justice's Court can be tried on appeal in the District Court, and where there was no showing that a motion was made in the Justice's Court to set aside the judgment and dismiss the cause but the record showed that the case was tried on issues of fact raised by the answer, it was proper for the District Court, on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, to overrule a motion to dismiss the cause and to try the issues of fact that had been raised before the Justice. Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904).

Scope of Review: Only such questions as were raised and presented in the Justice's Court can be tried in the District Court. Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904); State el rel. Shanahan v. Lindsay, 22 M 398, 56 P 827 (1899).

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

Questions of Law — Review by Appeal: The District Court properly sustained a motion to quash a Writ of Certiorari where the only questions sought to be raised to annul a default judgment entered by Justice's Court were questions of law, appealable under this section. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

Discretion Determined by Review: Under this section there is no appeal from a default judgment in a Justice's Court except where the court has abused its discretion in refusing to set it aside; on such appeal the District Court can go no further than to determine whether discretion was abused, its action on appeal being a review rather than a trial de novo. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Denial of Motion — Review by Certiorari: Where a Justice overruled a motion to vacate a default judgment, this section authorized an appeal and the judgment could not be reviewed by certiorari. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903).

Discretion of Justice Determined on Appeal: Where a Justice refuses to set aside a judgment by default, an appeal lies, and it is for the court to determine on the papers filed in the Justice's Court as to whether the discretion of the Justice has been abused. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903); State ex rel. Shanahan v. Lindsay, 22 M 398, 56 P 827 (1899).

Conditions for Affirmance of Default: A judgment by default will be affirmed, on appeal, where no motion was made in the Justice's Court to set aside the default, or other appropriate relief sought, if the complaint was sufficient for the court in which it was originally filed. Gage v. Maryatt, 9 M 265, 23 P 337 (1890).

Attorney General's Opinions

Court Reporter Filing Fee — Clerk of District Court to Collect Fee in Appeal From Justice's Court or City Court — Appeal Is "Civil Action" Under Statutes: The Attorney General was asked whether a Clerk of District Court must collect the $20 filing fee, required by 25-1-202 and used to help pay the salary of the court reporter, in appeals filed in District Court from judgments of a Justice's or City Court. The Attorney General concluded that: (1) a private legal action in a Justice's or City Court is a civil action; (2) an appeal from a Justice's or City Court may include appeal of a civil action; (3) an appeal from either of those courts results in most cases in a new trial in District Court and that the need for a court reporter in that instance is obvious; and (4) the payment of the additional $20 filing fee required by 25-1-202 is mandatory. 48 A.G. Op. 1 (1999).

Case Notes

Failure to File Brief Within Fifteen Days of Municipal Court Judgment — Summary Judgment Not Abuse of Discretion: Frazier was convicted of speeding in Justice's Court. Frazier filed a timely appeal to District Court, but failed to file a brief within 15 days after the record was filed with the District Court, as required by Rule 14(a), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2400). The District Court summarily dismissed the appeal, and Frazier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under this section, the District Court has discretion to order an appeal to be dismissed for failure to prosecute an appeal or for unnecessary delay in bringing an appeal to a hearing. The Supreme Court declined to reverse the District Court for insisting that parties comply with statutory directives and rules of civil procedure, holding that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss Frazier's appeal for failure to file a timely brief. St. v. Frazier, 2005 MT 99, 326 M 524, 111 P3d 215 (2005).

Remand of Criminal Case Not Authorized: A District Court may dismiss the appeal of a civil case under this section, but the remand of a criminal case is not authorized. Rickett v. Billings, 262 M 339, 864 P2d 793, 50 St. Rep. 1586 (1993), affirming Hardin v. Myers, 194 M 248, 633 P2d 677 (1981).

Unnecessary Delay: Where defendant filed notice of appeal of adverse verdict in Justice's Court with an undertaking on May 8, 1969, but took no further action, District Court properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss for unnecessary delay on July 1, 1970, since it was appellant's burden as moving party to bring appeal on for hearing. Eide Ins. v. Correll, 156 M 167, 478 P2d 272 (1970).

Discretionary Power — Reasons for Dismissal: The power, discretionary in its nature, lodged by this section in the District Court, to dismiss an appeal from a Justice's Court for delay in bringing it to a hearing, should not be exercised where there is a reasonable excuse for the delay and where it is apparent that the adverse party has not suffered prejudice by reason of the delay. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Dismissal as Abuse — Acquiescence in Delay: The District Court abused the discretionary power given it by this section, in dismissing on motion an appeal from a Justice's Court for alleged lack of diligence in prosecuting it, where counsel for appellant, by reason of illness, was prevented from attending to matters of business, respondent having suffered no detriment or inconvenience from the delay, but rather, by allowing the case to rest for over 3 months without any effort to have it brought to trial, tacitly acquiesced in the delinquency of the appellant. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

CHAPTER 35
SMALL CLAIMS PROCEDURE — JUSTICE'S COURT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble to SB 485 (Ch. 586, L. 1981) read:

"WHEREAS, in 1977 the Montana Legislature enacted the provisions of Chapter 572, Laws of 1977, creating a small claims court within justices' courts in Montana, which provisions are codified as Title 25, chapter 35, MCA; and

WHEREAS, the small claims procedure makes no provision for a jury trial, provides that one party may not be represented by an attorney if the other party is not so represented, and provides that an appeal from the small claims court is to be tried on the record of the case and is not to be tried as a trial de novo; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court has held in the case of North Central Services, Inc. v. Hafdahl, 191 Mont. 440, 625 P2d 56 [38 St. Rep. 372], (Civil No. 80-228, decided March 11, 1981), that the cumulative effect of these provisions is to deny the right to a jury trial and the right to counsel at every stage of the factual determination of a case in small claims court; and

WHEREAS, the Supreme Court therefore held section 25-35-403(2), MCA, to be unconstitutional and also held the remainder of Title 25, chapter 35, unconstitutional and void for the reason that it could not be severed from section 25-35-403(2), MCA.

THEREFORE, it is the intent of the Legislature to cure the unconstitutionality of Title 25, chapter 35, by repealing and reenacting those provisions with such changes as to cure the unconstitutionality of those provisions."

Chapter Case Notes

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. Thornton complained of problems with the modular home necessitating $500 in repairs, and stopped payment on the downpayment check. Upon taking possession of Thornton's trade-in, Alpine discovered damage to the trade-in in the amount of $3,450, and also discovered that Thornton owed $210.09 in back taxes on the trade-in. Alpine subsequently filed a complaint in Small Claims Court for $3,000. The Small Claims Court offset the cost of Thornton's repairs against the amount of damages suffered by Alpine and awarded Alpine $2,500. Thornton did not appeal the judgment, but instead filed a complaint in District Court alleging numerous theories for relief and seeking $65,000 for consequential damages, $100,000 for punitive damages, and general damages to be determined by the District Court. The District Court dismissed Thornton's claim on grounds that the action was barred by res judicata. Thornton appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of res judicata as set out in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), concluding that the issues raised by Thornton in District Court were different from the claims raised in Small Claims Court, and pointed out that the issues could not have been raised in the lower court in any case because 25-35-502 limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000. The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Constitutionality — Severance Not Possible: Where the Supreme Court held that the small claims procedure in Justices' Courts was unconstitutional because it denied a litigant both the right to a jury trial and the right to counsel, the unconstitutional portions of the small claims statutes could not be severed from other portions of the small claims procedure, so the entire procedure was held unconstitutional and void. If severance of the unconstitutional provisions from the constitutional provisions would leave a complete procedure and if severance could be accomplished while honoring legislative intent, then severance should be made. Because an incomplete and incompatible appeal procedure would have resulted and because the Supreme Court could not ascertain legislative intent, no severance was made and the entire procedure was held unconstitutional. N. Cent. Serv., Inc. v. Hafdahl, 191 M 440, 625 P2d 56, 38 St. Rep. 372 (1981), distinguished, as to dicta stating that the constitutional right to a jury trial was satisfied if a trial was available at the District Court level, in Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998). (Annotator's note: This case was decided prior to 1981 repeal and enactment. See "Preamble" compiler's comment under Title 25, ch. 35, table of contents.)

Constitutionality — Small Claims Procedure as Denial of Right to Counsel and Trial by Jury: Where the plaintiff brought an action in Small Claims Court before a Justice of the Peace and, upon appeal to the District Court, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was affirmed but the defendant was prohibited from appearing through counsel since the law provides only for appeal of questions of law, the District Court erred in holding the small claims procedure in Justice's Court constitutional. The small claims procedure makes no provision for a jury trial, prohibits a trial de novo in the District Court, and prohibits a party from being represented by counsel unless all parties are so represented. These provisions are unconstitutional because they effectively deny a litigant the right to counsel and the right to a jury trial at all stages of the factfinding process. N. Cent. Serv., Inc. v. Hafdahl, 191 M 440, 625 P2d 56, 38 St. Rep. 372 (1981), distinguished, as to dicta stating that the constitutional right to a jury trial was satisfied if a trial was available at the District Court level, in Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998). (Annotator's note: This case was decided prior to 1981 repeal and enactment. Part 5 25-35-501. Purpose.
General Provisions

Case Notes

Admitting Exhibits Without Proper Evidentiary Foundation: Capital Ford Garage argued that the Small Claims Court erred in allowing the plaintiff to introduce exhibits without laying a proper foundation. The Supreme Court held that the Small Claims Court had not abused its discretion because the purpose of that court was to provide for the informal disposition of claims. Johnson v. Capital Ford Garage, 250 M 430, 820 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 992 (1991).

25-35-502. Jurisdiction.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 10 throughout section increased Small Claims Court jurisdiction from $2,500 to $3,000.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (2) setting amount applicable to jurisdiction of small claims court over an interpleader.

1989 Amendment: Increased amount of claims that may be heard by Small Claims Court from $1,500 to $2,500.

Case Notes

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. Thornton complained of problems with the modular home necessitating $500 in repairs, and stopped payment on the downpayment check. Upon taking possession of Thornton's trade-in, Alpine discovered damage to the trade-in in the amount of $3,450, and also discovered that Thornton owed $210.09 in back taxes on the trade-in. Alpine subsequently filed a complaint in Small Claims Court for $3,000. The Small Claims Court offset the cost of Thornton's repairs against the amount of damages suffered by Alpine and awarded Alpine $2,500. Thornton did not appeal the judgment, but instead filed a complaint in District Court alleging numerous theories for relief and seeking $65,000 for consequential damages, $100,000 for punitive damages, and general damages to be determined by the District Court. The District Court dismissed Thornton's claim on grounds that the action was barred by res judicata. Thornton appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of res judicata as set out in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), concluding that the issues raised by Thornton in District Court were different from the claims raised in Small Claims Court, and pointed out that the issues could not have been raised in the lower court in any case because this section limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000. The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Lack of Small Claims Court Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Corporation Whose Managing Agent Could Not Be Served: Under this section, the Small Claims Court has jurisdiction of certain claims if the defendant can be served in the county where the action commenced. Here, Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), a Washington corporation with no office or registered agent in Montana, could not be served in Lincoln County, Montana, so the Small Claims Court lacked jurisdiction. Petersen's argument that process could have been served in Lincoln County on Aladdin's warranty service representative or sales representative failed for lack of evidence that either of those representatives was a managing agent or general agent for purposes of service of process. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999), following State ex rel. Schmidt v. District Court, 111 M 16, 105 P2d 677 (1940).

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-33-201 and 25-35-807 in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, 25-33-201 applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under 25-35-804. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under 25-35-804 and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

25-35-503. Removal from district court.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 10 at end of first sentence increased Small Claims Court jurisdiction from $2,500 to $3,000.

1989 Amendment: Increased maximum amount of claims that may be removed to Small Claims Court from $1,500 to $2,500.

25-35-505. Parties — representation.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 207 in (3) near end of third sentence inserted "directors, officers, or". Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 135 at beginning of (4) inserted exception clause; at end of (5) inserted "unless it has been assigned pursuant to 27-1-718"; at beginning of (6) inserted exception clause; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 135, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to claims for civil penalties for shoplifting based on events occurring after [the effective date of this act]." Effective October 1, 1997.

1985 Amendment: In (6) increased number of claims a party may file in a year from three to ten claims.

Case Notes

Lack of Small Claims Court Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Corporation Whose Managing Agent Could Not Be Served: Under 25-35-502, the Small Claims Court has jurisdiction of certain claims if the defendant can be served in the county where the action commenced. Here, Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), a Washington corporation with no office or registered agent in Montana, could not be served in Lincoln County, Montana, so the Small Claims Court lacked jurisdiction. Petersen's argument that process could have been served in Lincoln County on Aladdin's warranty service representative or sales representative failed for lack of evidence that either of those representatives was a managing agent or general agent for purposes of service of process. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999), following State ex rel. Schmidt v. District Court, 111 M 16, 105 P2d 677 (1940).

Partnerships — Capacity to Sue in Own Name: On certification from the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, the Montana Supreme Court held that a joint venture between two out-of-state corporations had the capacity to bring suit as a plaintiff against a corporation under Montana law. Relying on the Uniform Partnership Act and Montana statutes that allow a partnership to be sued in its own name and to sue in Small Claims Court, the Supreme Court found clear legislative intent to treat partnerships as distinct entities with the power to sue. Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 220 M 251, 714 P2d 155, 43 St. Rep. 337 (1986).

1983 Amendment: In first sentence of (1), substituted "10 days" for "40 days"; and in (2) near beginning of second sentence, inserted "except rules of pleading but".

25-35-606. Defendant's counterclaim.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 51 in (3) in counterclaim form in two places after "day of....." substituted "20..." for "19..."; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2000.

1989 Amendment: In two places in (2) increased maximum amount of a counterclaim that may be determined in Small Claims Court from $1,500 to $2,500.

25-35-608. Fees.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: In (1)(a) increased from $5 to $10 the fee to be paid by plaintiff upon filing of a sworn complaint; in (1)(b) clarified that a $5 fee must be paid by defendant upon appearance and contesting the complaint or execution of counterclaim; and made minor change in style.

Proper District Court Review of Small Claims Court Decision Precluded by Loss of Electronic Record — Reversible Error: When the electronically recorded proceedings of a Small Claims Court trial were lost, the District Court had no basis or record upon which to determine whether the findings of fact were clearly erroneous. A trial de novo was precluded by 25-35-803. Without the opportunity to review the record, it was reversible error for the District Court to affirm the judgment of the Small Claims Court. The Supreme Court remanded to the Small Claims Court for a new hearing. Spence v. Ortloff, 271 M 533, 898 P2d 1232, 52 St. Rep. 606 (1995), following Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. 25-35-803. Appeal to district court — commencement and scope.

Case Notes

Weekends and Holidays Included in Statutory Time Applicable to Appeal From Small Claims Court: This section allows a party 10 days after entry of judgment to file a notice of appeal from a judgment of a Small Claims Court. Hubbard contended that the 10-day statutory period should not include weekends or holidays in the calculation, similar to the calculations in Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and Rule 21, M.U.R.J.C.C. (Title 25, ch. 24). The Supreme Court disagreed. If the Legislature had wanted to exclude weekends and holidays from the time allowed for Small Claims Court appeals, it could have done so, as in the case of the other rules of procedure. However, the language of this section is clear and unambiguous, and does not exclude weekends or holidays from the calculation of the 10-day appeal period. Allen v. Hubbard, 2002 MT 95, 309 M 375, 46 P3d 639 (2002).

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. Thornton complained of problems with the modular home necessitating $500 in repairs, and stopped payment on the downpayment check. Upon taking possession of Thornton's trade-in, Alpine discovered damage to the trade-in in the amount of $3,450, and also discovered that Thornton owed $210.09 in back taxes on the trade-in. Thornton did not appeal the judgment, but instead filed a complaint in District Court alleging numerous theories for relief and seeking $65,000 for consequential damages, $100,000 for punitive damages, and general damages to be determined by the District Court. The District Court dismissed Thornton's claim on grounds that the action was barred by res judicata. Thornton appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of res judicata as set out in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), concluding that the issues raised by Thornton in District Court were different from the claims raised in Small Claims Court, and pointed out that the issues could not have been raised in the lower court in any case because 25-35-502 limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000. The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Proper District Court Review of Small Claims Court Decision Precluded by Loss of Electronic Record — Reversible Error: When the electronically recorded proceedings of a Small Claims Court trial were lost, the District Court had no basis or record upon which to determine whether the findings of fact were clearly erroneous. A trial de novo was precluded by this section. Without the opportunity to review the record, it was reversible error for the District Court to affirm the judgment of the Small Claims Court. The Supreme Court remanded to the Small Claims Court for a new hearing. Spence v. Ortloff, 271 M 533, 898 P2d 1232, 52 St. Rep. 606 (1995), following Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991).

No Extension of Time Authorized for Filing Notice of Appeal — Appeal to Address Question of Law: Eagle brought an action in the small claims division of District Court, alleging that Russiff failed to properly repair Eagle's vehicle, causing further damage to the engine. Twenty days after judgment was entered against him, Eagle filed a notice of appeal, explaining that he was unable to get his mail. The clerk allowed the filing of the notice of appeal because of excusable neglect. The District Court dismissed the appeal as untimely. The Supreme Court held that there was no provision in the statute for an extension of the 10-day period in which to file the notice of appeal and that even if Justice Court did have such authority, Eagle's appeal was faulty in that it failed to specify any legal issues. Eagle v. Russiff Auto Repair, 254 M 422, 838 P2d 426, 49 St. Rep. 836 (1992).

Prohibition of Trial De Novo Constitutional: Capital Ford Garage argued that the statute limiting appeals from a Small Claims Court to questions of law rather than trial de novo with representation by counsel denied the garage its right to due process. The Supreme Court held that the statute was constitutional because a defendant had the right to remove the case to District Court or waive the rights to trial by jury and representation by counsel by proceeding in a Small Claims Court. The Supreme Court further held that limiting the appeal in District Court to questions of law was constitutional. Johnson v. Capital Ford Garage, 250 M 430, 820 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 992 (1991).

25-35-804. Record on appeal.

Case Notes

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-33-201 and 25-35-807 in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, 25-33-201 applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under this section. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under this section and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

25-35-806. Attorney's fees upon appeal or removal.

Case Notes

Statute Allowing Attorney Fees in Appeal From Small Claims Court Not Applicable to Appeal From District Court: Plaintiffs prevailed in an appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court, which began as an appeal from Small Claims Court, and sought attorney fees and costs related to the appeal, citing this section. The Supreme Court held that this section applies only to appeals from Small Claims Court to District Court, and declined to award plaintiffs their attorney fees incurred during the appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court. However, as the prevailing party in the Supreme Court appeal, plaintiffs were entitled to costs under Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21). Allen v. However, 25-33-201 applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and this section concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under 25-35-804. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under 25-35-804 and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court.
